DECISION AND DIRECTION OF SECOND ELECTION

23 February 1987

BY MEMBERS JOHANSEN, BABSON, AND STEPHENS

The National Labor Relations Board, by a three-member panel, has considered objections to an election held 16 January 1986[1] and the hearing officer's report recommending disposition of them.[2] The election was conducted pursuant to a Stipulated Election Agreement. The tally of ballots shows 73 for and 93 against the Petitioner, with 1 challenged ballot, an insufficient number to affect the results.

The Board has reviewed the record in light of the exceptions and brief, has adopted the hearing officer's findings and recommendations, and finds that the election must be set aside and a second election held.

In adopting the hearing officer's recommendation that the election be set aside, we agree with the conclusion that a material or prejudicial breach of the election stipulation occurred, preventing the holding of a fair election. The stipulation provided that "Each party hereto will be allowed to station an equal number of authorized observers . . . at the polling places during the election . . . ." At no time prior to the day of the election was the Petitioner informed that the Employer would be stationing more than one election observer at any of the three polling places used in the election.[3] The Petitioner first learned of the Employer's intention to use two observers at one of the polling places when its business representative arrived at the site in question, and discovered 15 to 30 minutes before the polls opened that the Employer had two observers at that location.[4] When the business representative protested the fact that the Employer had stationed a second observer at this site, the Board agent merely stated that the Board agent in charge of the election was at another polling site and that the Petitioner could file an objection if he objected to the extra observer.

On this evidence, we find that the Petitioner was not "allowed to station an equal number of authorized observers . . . at the polling places during the election," as provided in the stipulation, and that this breach was sufficiently material or prejudicial to require the setting aside of the election.[5]

We find the instant case distinguishable from Best Products Co., 269 NLRB 578 (1984), affd. 765 F.2d 903 (9th Cir. 1985), in that the objecting party there was informed approximately 15 to 30 minutes prior to the opening of the polls that it could select an additional observer but declined to do so. Although here, too, the Petitioner's business representative learned some 15 to 30 minutes before the election that the Employer would use a second observer at one of the sites, he was only offered the recourse of filing an objection. He was not offered the option of seeking to obtain a second observer for the Petitioner, and he could reasonably have believed that the only course of action mentioned to him—filing an objection—was all that was afforded to him under the circumstances.[6] Accordingly, we shall order that the election be set aside and a new election conducted.

[2] On 18 July this three-member panel issued an unpublished Decision and Order, adopting the Regional Director's 6 February recommendation that Objections 1, 3, and 4 be overruled in the absence of exceptions and remanding the case to the Regional Director for a hearing on Objection 2.

[3] The Board's Regional Office had sent to the parties a cover letter attached to copies of the stipulation, indicating that each party was permitted one observer per polling place.

[4] The Petitioner's agents earlier had arrived late for the preelection conference, which was held at another facility and polling site. There is no evidence that the Board agent remaining at this site informed them that more than one observer would be used at any of the polling places.

[5] See Sonicraft, Inc., 276 NLRB 407 (1985). In reaching this conclusion, we do not find that the imbalance in the number of observers itself, independent of a material or prejudicial breach of the election stipulation, prevented the holding of a fair election.

Oil, Chemical and Atomic Workers International Union, AFL–CIO and Oil, Chemical and Atomic Workers International Union, Local 1–591, AFL–CIO (Texaco Refining and Marketing, Inc.) and Michael Davenport. Case 19–CB–5822

DECISION AND ORDER

23 February 1987

BY CHAIRMAN DOTSON AND MEMBERS JOHANSEN AND STEPHENS

Upon a charge filed by Michael Davenport, an individual, on 1 May 1986 and amended charges filed on 16 and 23 May 1986, the General Counsel of the National Labor Relations Board issued a complaint on 20 May 1986 against the Respondents, which, as amended on 5 June 1986, alleges that the Respondents have violated Section 8(b)(1)(A) of the National Labor Relations Act.

The amended complaint alleges, and the Respondents in their answer admit, that at all times material the Respondents have maintained a constitutional provision restricting resignations.[1]

> Any member may resign his or her membership provided all indebtedness is satisfied and no charges are pending against such member and further provided that notice of such resignation is submitted in writing by such member to the President of the Local Union of which he or she is a member within ten days preceding contract expiration date.

Notwithstanding their admission of the above allegation, the Respondents deny that they have committed the unfair labor practice alleged in the complaint, i.e., that by maintaining the constitutional restriction on their members' right to resign from the Respondents, the Respondents have violated Section 8(b)(1)(A) of the Act.

On 23 July 1986 the General Counsel filed with the Board a Motion for Summary Judgment, with exhibits attached, asserting that the Respondents' answer to the amended complaint raises no genuine or material issues of fact which require an evidentiary hearing and urging that the Board issue a Decision and Order against the Respondents containing findings of fact and conclusions of law in accordance with allegations in the complaint. On 28 July 1986 the Board issued an order transferring the proceeding to the Board and a Notice to Show Cause why the General Counsel's Motion for Summary Judgment should not be granted. The Respondents filed a response to the Notice to Show Cause in the form of a Cross-Motion for Summary Judgment, with exhibits attached, and a brief in support of its motion and in opposition to the General Counsel's motion.

The National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

Ruling on the Motions for Summary Judgment

The Respondents' admissions to all the factual allegations in the complaint establish that they maintained constitutional restrictions on their members' right to resign from the Union. The General Counsel cites Engineers & Scientists Guild (Lockheed-California), 268 NLRB 311 (1983), in support of the contention that maintenance alone of unlawful restrictions on resignation restrains and coerces employees who may be unaware of the constitutional provision's unenforceability and thus violates Section 8(b)(1)(A) of the Act. The Respondents contend, after admitting the facts as alleged, that summary judgment should be granted in their favor and the complaint dismissed because (1) unlike some previous cases finding 8(b)(1)(A) violations, the constitutional restrictions at issue do not specifically refer to a member's right to resign during a strike or work stoppage or to possible discipline for exercising Section 7 rights associated with such activities; (2) it is not alleged, nor would any evidence show, that the Respondents have attempted any disciplinary action against any former member pursuant to a resignation proscribed by the restriction; and (3) an expunction remedy has not previously been ordered by the Board unless the union had attempted to enforce an unlawful restriction.

With respect to a union's authority in this area, the Board has found that a union may not place restrictions on the right of its members to resign from membership. Machinists Local 1414 (Neufeld Porsche-Audi), 270 NLRB 1330 (1984). In Pattern Makers League v. NLRB, 473 U.S. 95 (1985), the Supreme Court essentially affirmed that principle. Although both Neufeld Porsche-Audi and Pattern Makers League concerned restrictions on resignations during or immediately prior to strikes, the reasoning of both the Board and the Court was sufficiently broad that restrictions not linked to strikes would also be deemed unlawful. Thus, after considering the significance of the proviso to Section 8(b)(1)(A), the Court, quoting Neufeld Porsche-Audi (270 NLRB at 1333), observed that "allowing unions to 'extend an employee's membership obligation through restrictions on resignation' would 'expan[d] the definition of internal action' beyond the contours envisioned by the Taft-Hartley Congress." Pattern Makers League, 473 U.S. at 103. The Court further stated, in relating the Board's holding on resignation restrictions to the policies underlying Section 8(a)(3) of the Act (id. at 107):

> Congress in 1947 sought to eliminate completely any requirement that the employee maintain full union membership. Therefore, the Board was justified in concluding that by restricting the right of employees to resign, League Law 13 impairs the policy of voluntary unionism [emphasis added].

Consistent with those principles, in Sheet Metal Workers Local 16 (Salem Heating), 274 NLRB 41 (1985), the Board found unlawful a constitutional restriction on resignation that was not related to strikes or strike activity. Further, in Salem Heating, even where no enforcement or attempted enforcement by the union was alleged, the Board ruled that maintenance of a restriction on resignation is a violation of Section 8(b)(1)(A) and that expunction is the appropriate remedy.

Because the Respondents have admitted all the facts material to the resolution of the unfair labor practices issue raised by the complaint, we shall grant the General Counsel's Motion for Summary Judgment in the absence of any material facts in dispute or any authority to the contrary having been shown by the Respondents. Accordingly, we shall also deny the Respondents' cross-motion.

On the entire record, the Board makes the following findings.

I. JURISDICTION

The Employer, Texaco Refining and Marketing, Inc., is a corporation engaged in the business of refining and marketing petroleum worldwide and in the State of Washington. During the 12 months preceding issuance of the complaint, a representative period, the Employer had gross sales of goods and services valued in excess of $500,000. In addition, the Employer during that period sold and shipped goods or provided services from its facilities within the State of Washington to customers outside that State or to customers within the State of Washington, which customers were themselves engaged in interstate commerce by other than indirect means of a total value in excess of $50,000. Further, the Employer during the past 12 months purchased and caused to be transferred and delivered to its facilities within the State of Washington goods and materials valued in excess of $50,000 directly from sources outside the State or from suppliers within the State which in turn obtained the goods and materials directly from sources outside the State of Washington. We find that the Employer is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

The Respondents admit, and we find, that they are labor organizations within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

II. THE UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICE

The Respondents have maintained constitutional provisions restricting union resignations. By such conduct we find that the Respondents have violated Section 8(b)(1)(A) of the Act. Pattern Makers League v. NLRB, supra; Machinists Local 1414 (Neufeld Porsche-Audi), supra; Sheet Metal Workers Local 16 (Salem Heating), supra.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. Texaco Refining and Marketing, Inc., Anacortes, Washington, is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.
2. The Respondents are labor organizations within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.
3. By maintaining constitutional provisions restricting their members' right to resign from the Respondents, the Respondents violated Section 8(b)(1)(A) of the Act.
4. The aforesaid unfair labor practice is an unfair labor practice affecting commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

REMEDY

Having found that the Respondents engaged in an unfair labor practice in violation of Section 8(b)(1)(A) of the Act, we shall order that they cease and desist and take certain affirmative action necessary to effectuate the policies of the Act.[2] Specifically, we shall order the Respondents to cease and desist from maintaining the restriction on resignations found invalid and to expunge the provisions from their governing documents. Engineers & Scientists Guild (Lockheed-California), 268 NLRB 311 (1983).

ORDER

The National Labor Relations Board orders that the Respondents, Oil, Chemical and Atomic Workers International Union, AFL–CIO and Oil, Chemical and Atomic Workers International Union, Local 1–591, AFL–CIO, their officers, agents, and representatives, shall

1. Cease and desist from

[2] As part of the remedy the General Counsel seeks an order which will include a visitatorial clause authorizing the Board, for compliance purposes, to obtain discovery from the Respondents under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure under the supervision of the United States court of appeals enforcing the order. We have concluded that under the circumstances of this case such a clause is not warranted.

(a) Maintaining in their governing documents the constitutional provision reading:

> Any member may resign his or her membership provided all indebtedness is satisfied and no charges are pending against such member and further provided that notice of such resignation is submitted in writing by such member to the President of the Local Union of which he or she is a member within ten days preceding contract expiration date.

(b) In any like or related manner restraining or coercing employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them by Section 7 of the Act.

2. Take the following affirmative action necessary to effectuate the policies of the Act.

(a) Remove from their governing documents those portions of article I, section 6, of the Respondent International's constitution and of article III, section 2, of the Respondent Local's constitution set forth above.

(b) Post at their business offices and meeting halls copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix."[3] Copies of the notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 19, after being signed by the Respondent's authorized representative, shall be posted by the Respondents immediately upon receipt and maintained for 60 consecutive days in conspicuous places including all places where notices to members are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by the Respondents to ensure that the notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(c) Sign and return to the Regional Director sufficient copies of the notice for posting by Texaco Refining and Marketing, Inc., if willing, at all places where notices to employees are customarily posted.

(d) Notify the Regional Director in writing within 20 days from the date of this Order what steps the Respondents have taken to comply.

APPENDIX

NOTICE TO EMPLOYEES AND MEMBERS POSTED BY ORDER OF THE NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD An Agency of the United States Government

The National Labor Relations Board has found that we violated the National Labor Relations Act and has ordered us to post and abide by this notice.

WE WILL NOT maintain in our governing documents those portions of article I, section 6, of the International's constitution and of article III, section 2, of the Local's constitution reading:

> Any member may resign his or her membership provided all indebtedness is satisfied and no charges are pending against such member and further provided that notice of such resignation is submitted in writing by such member to the President of the Local Union of which he or she is a member within ten days preceding contract expiration date.

WE WILL NOT in any like or related manner restrain or coerce you in the exercise of the rights guaranteed you by Section 7 of the Act.

WE WILL remove from our governing documents those portions of our constitutions set forth above.

Oil, Chemical and Atomic Workers International Union, Local 1-591, AFL-CIO (Texaco Refining and Marketing, Inc.) and Michael Davenport. Case 19-CB-5952

23 February 1987

DECISION AND ORDER

BY CHAIRMAN DOTSON AND MEMBERS JOHANSEN AND STEPHENS

Upon a charge filed by Michael Davenport, an individual, on 15 September 1986, the General Counsel of the National Labor Relations Board issued a complaint on 22 October 1986 against the Respondent alleging that the Respondent violated Section 8(b)(1)(A) of the National Labor Relations Act.

The Respondent denies that it has committed the specific unfair labor practice alleged in the complaint, i.e., that by refusing to accept or give immediate effect to a resignation from union membership tendered by the Charging Party, the Respondent has violated Section 8(b)(1)(A) of the Act.

On 24 November 1986 the General Counsel filed with the Board a Motion for Summary Judgment, with exhibits attached, and a motion to consolidate this case with Case 19-CB-5822. In the latter case the Board has considered the General Counsel's Motion for Summary Judgment on a complaint allegation that the Respondent, as well as its parent International, has violated Section 8(b)(1)(A) by maintaining constitutional provisions restricting resignations from union membership. The General Counsel asserts in the instant proceeding that the Respondent's answer to the complaint, read in light of her Exhibit 2,[1] raises no material issues of fact which require an evidentiary hearing and urges that the Board issue a Decision and Order against the Respondent in accordance with the allegations in the complaint. The Respondent filed a response to the General Counsel's motions in the form of objections to a motion to consolidate cases and its own Motion for Summary Judgment with exhibits attached including its brief to the Board in Case 19-CB-5822.

The National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

Ruling on Motion to Consolidate Cases and Motion for Summary Judgment

The Board has decided Case 19-CB-5822 and found that the Respondent has violated Section 8(b)(1)(A) of the Act by maintaining a constitutional restriction on its members' right to resign from the Union. The Board also has ordered that the offending provision of the Respondent's constitution, article III, section 2, be expunged. Oil Workers Local 1-591 (Texaco Refining), 283 NLRB 2,[2] issued today.

The Respondent does not deny that its financial secretary, on union letterhead, sent the Charging Party the letter summarized in footnote 1, above. The Respondent first contends, reiterating its argument made in Case 19-CB-5822, that the provision is lawful. The Respondent therefore argues that it did not violate the Act in refusing to give effect to Davenport's resignation until such time as it met the timeliness condition set forth in article III, section 2, of its constitution. Because the Board has found the maintenance of this provision unlawful in Case 19-CB-5822, it follows that its enforcement is likewise violative of Section 8(b)(1)(A) of the Act. Machinists Local 1414 (Neufeld Porsche-Audi), 270 NLRB 1330 (1984); Hearst Corp., 281 NLRB 764 (1986).[3] Because there are no material facts in dispute,[4] we grant the General Counsel's Motion for Summary Judgment and, correspondingly, we deny the Respondent's Cross-Motion for Summary Judgment.

On the entire record, the Board makes the following findings.

I. JURISDICTION

The Employer, Texaco Refining and Marketing, Inc., is a corporation engaged in the business of refining and marketing petroleum worldwide and in the State of Washington. During the 12 months preceding insuance of the complaint, a representative period, the Employer had gross sales of goods and services valued in excess of $500,000. In addition, the Employer during that period sold and shipped goods or provided services from its facilities within the State of Washington to customers outside the State or to customers within the State of Washington, which customers were themselves

[1] Exh. 2 is a letter dated 22 August 1986 from the Respondent's financial secretary to the Charging Party. The letter acknowledges receipt of Davenport's 9 July 1986 request to resign his union membership. The letter further states that the request does not comply as to timeliness with the constitutional restriction on resignation, the same provision at issue in Case 19-CB-5822. The letter concludes by stating that the resignation could not be accepted and would not be processed until the date provided for by the constitution, namely, 10 days preceding the contract expiration date.

[2] In issuing this case on this date, we also deny the General Counsel's motion to consolidate Cases 19-CB-5822 and 19-CB-5952. Further, given our expunction order in Case 19-CB-5822 it is not necessary to repeat that order here.

[3] Indeed, as held in the cited cases, any restrictions placed by a union on the right to resign membership would be unlawful. See Pattern Makers v. NLRB, 473 U.S. 95 (1985).

[4] We find no merit in the Respondent's denial that its own financial secretary is its agent.

engaged in interstate commerce by other than indirect means, of a total value in excess of $50,000. Further, the Employer during the past 12 months purchased and caused to be transferred and delivered to its facilities within the State of Washington goods and materials valued in excess of $50,000 directly from sources outside the State or from suppliers within the State which, in turn, obtained the goods and materials directly from sources outside the State of Washington. We find that the Employer is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

The Respondent admits, and we find, that the Respondent is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

II. THE UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES

The Respondent has refused to accept or give effect to a resignation from union membership and has also given effect to a constitutional provision restricting union resignations. By such conduct we find that Respondent has violated Section 8(b)(1)(A) of the Act. Machinists Local 1414 (Neufeld Porsche-Audi), supra; Hearst Corp., supra.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. Texaco Refining and Marketing, Inc., Anacortes, Washington, is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

2. The Respondent is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

3. By refusing to accept or give immediate effect to Michael Davenport's resignation from union membership and by giving effect to a constitutional provision restricting its members' rights to resign from Respondent, the Respondent violated Section 8(b)(1)(A) of the Act.

4. The foregoing unfair labor practices are unfair labor practices affecting commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

REMEDY

Having found that the Respondent engaged in unfair labor practices in violation of Section 8(b)(1)(A) of the Act, we shall order that it cease and desist and take certain affirmative action necessary to effectuate the policies of the Act.[5] Specifically, we shall order the Respondent to cease and desist from refusing to accept or give immediate effect to resignations from union membership. Further, we shall order the Respondent to notify Michael Davenport that his resignation was effective and to make him whole, with interest,[6] for any losses he may have suffered by reason of the Respondent's unlawful enforcement of its restriction on resignation.

ORDER

The National Labor Relations Board orders that the Respondent Oil, Chemical and Atomic Workers International Union, Local 1-591, AFL-CIO, its officers, agents, and representatives, shall

1. Cease and desist from

(a) Refusing to accept or give immediate effect to resignations from union membership of employees of Texaco Refining and Marketing, Inc.

(b) Giving effect to article III, section 2, of its constitution which restricts a member's right to resign from the Union.

(c) In any like or related manner restraining or coercing employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them by Section 7 of the Act.

2. Take the following affirmative action necessary to effectuate the policies of the Act.

(a) Notify Michael Davenport that his resignation from union membership was effective.

(b) Make whole Michael Davenport for any losses he may have suffered by reason of the Respondent's enforcement of its restriction on resignations as set forth in the remedy section of this Decision and Order.

(c) Post at its business and meeting halls copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix."[7] Copies of the notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 19, after being signed by the Respondent's authorized representative, shall be posted by the Respondent immediately upon receipt and maintained for 60 consecutive days in conspicuous places including all places where notices to members are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by the Respondent to ensure that the notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(d) Sign and return to the Regional Director sufficient copies of the notice for posting by Texaco Refining and Marketing, Inc., if willing, at all places where notices to employees are customarily posted.

[5] As part of the remedy, the General Counsel seeks an order that will include a visitatorial clause authorizing the Board, for compliance purposes, to obtain discovery from the Respondent under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure under the supervision of the United States court of appeals enforcing the order. We have concluded that under the circumstances of this case such a clause is not warranted.

[6] See Florida Steel Corp., 231 NLRB 651 (1977).

[7] If this Order is enforced by a judgment of a United States court of appeals, the words in the notice reading "Posted by Order of the National Labor Relations Board" shall read "Posted Pursuant to a Judgment of the United States Court of Appeals Enforcing an Order of the National Labor Relations Board."

(e) Notify the Regional Director in writing within 20 days from the date of this Order what steps the Respondent has taken to comply.

OIL, CHEMICAL AND ATOMIC WORKERS INTERNATIONAL UNION, LOCAL 1-591, AFL-CIO

U.S. Postal Service and Thomas Lott. Case 27–CA–9168–P

26 February 1987

DECISION AND ORDER

BY MEMBERS BABSON, STEPHENS, AND CRACRAFT

On 30 October 1986 Administrative Law Judge Joan Wieder issued the attached decision. The Charging Party filed exceptions.

The National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the decision and the record in light of the exceptions and has decided to affirm the judge's rulings, findings,[1] and conclusions and to adopt the recommended Order.

ORDER

The recommended Order of the administrative law judge is adopted and the complaint is dismissed.

[1] The Charging Party has excepted to some of the judge's credibility findings. The Board's established policy is not to overrule an administrative law judge's credibility resolutions unless the clear preponderance of all the relevant evidence convinces us that they are incorrect. Standard Dry Wall Products, 91 NLRB 544 (1950), enfd. 188 F.2d 362 (3d Cir. 1951). We have carefully examined the record and find no basis for reversing the findings.

We also find totally without merit the Charging Party's allegations of bias and prejudice on the part of the judge. On our full consideration of the record and the decision, we perceive no evidence that the judge prejudged the case, made prejudicial rulings, or demonstrated a bias against the Charging Party in her analysis or discussion of the evidence.

Member Babson, based on the particular facts here, adopts the judge's finding that employee Lott was not shown to have had a reasonable expectation that his 18 March 1985 interview with Supervisor Martinez might have resulted in disciplinary action against him. In so doing, Member Babson considers it unnecessary to pass on the Board's holding in Postal Service, 256 NLRB 78 (1981), enf. denied in relevant part 689 F.2d 835 (9th Cir. 1982), that the employee there had a reasonable belief that discipline might result from the interview because he finds that case is factually distinguishable from the present case.

Barbara E. Young, Esq., for the General Counsel.
Jesse L. Butler, for the Respondent.

DECISION

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

JOAN WIEDER, Administrative Law Judge. This case was tried in Denver, Colorado, on 19 and 20 August 1986. The charge was filed on 18 March 1985 by Thomas Lott. The complaint, which issued 24 May 1985[1] and was amended at trial, alleges that the U.S. Postal Service (Respondent) violated Section 8(a)(1) and (4) of the National Labor Relations Act. Specifically, the complaint alleges Respondent, acting through admitted Supervisor Ernest Martinez, called Lott a "cheap nigger lawyer"; threatened Lott with discharge, and denied Lott's request for union representation at a "disciplinary-investigatory" interview because Lott filed charges or gave testimony under the Act. Respondent filed an answer to the complaint denying the commission of the alleged unfair labor practices.[2]

On the entire record, from my observation of the demeanor of the witnesses, and having considered the posthearing briefs, I make the following

Preliminary Matters

Respondent argues that the Board is barred from considering the allegations contained in the complaint for some of the same matters were considered by a complaints examiner appointed by the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission. Respondent has an established equal opportunity complaint procedure that is directed to the informal adjustment of charges. If attempts at informal adjustment fail, the matter is referred to the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission which holds a hearing. The hearing is conducted, as indicated above, by a complaints examiner. The complaints examiner recommends a disposition to the Postal Service. The Respondent is free to accept or reject the complaints examiner's recommendation. If the Respondent denies the complaint, the employee can appeal the decision to the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission.

The complaints examiner rendered a bench decision finding that Lott failed to bear his burden of proving his allegations that "because of his race, and color (black) because of prior EEO activity" he was disciplined by: the issuance of a letter of warning on 21 August 1984; a 7-day suspension about 13 September 1984; and other retaliation allegedly visited on him for his activities in filing or pursuing EEO charges during October through December 1984. Respondent adopted the complaint examiner's decision. Lott has appealed this adverse decision. There is no indication when the appeal will be considered by the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission. The Postal Service's action of adopting the decision has not been shown to constitute a final decision. However, even assuming arguendo that the complaints examiner was acting in a judicial capacity and that the parties had an adequate opportunity to litigate the issues and resolve the issues before it,[3] the Board is not collaterally estopped from considering the allegation of the complaint issued in the instant proceeding.

I find that the criteria of Montana v. U.S., 440 U.S. 147, 153–154 (1979), have not been met. The instant complaint alleges that the violations occurred on 18 March 1985, a time period not considered by the complaints examiner; he did not consider the events of that day in reaching his decision. Although many of the matters considered in the EEO proceeding were raised in the instant case as background evidence, the key to resolution of this dispute, as admitted by the parties in their respective briefs, are the credibility determinations of what occurred on 18 March; an event not considered in the EEO proceeding. Further, the operative law in the EEO proceeding was not shown to involve the same definitions, policies, and purposes as the NLRA. Accordingly, I conclude that collateral estoppel is not appropriate in these circumstances. See United Technologies Corp., 706 F.2d 1254 (2d Cir. 1983), and Plumbers Local 198 v. NLRB, 747 F.2d 326 (5th Cir. 1985). The record of the proceedings before the complaints examiner has been considered but it is not found to be dispositive of the issues herein.

[2] Respondent admits in its answer that it meets one of the Board's applicable jurisdictional standards and is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Sec. 2(6) and (7) of the Act. Respondent also admits in its answer that the American Postal Workers Union is a labor organization within the meaning of Sec. 2(5) of the Act.

[3] See Lightsey v. Harding, Dahm & Co., 623 F.2d 1219 (7th Cir. 1980), cert. denied 449 U.S. 1077 (1981).

Respondent also argues that Lott's entry into a written resolution of EEO charges he filed regarding the events of 18 March preclude consideration of some if not all the allegations in the instant complaint. This position is found to be without merit. The agreement specifically and exclusively referred to Lott's pre-EEO complaint, not the charge filed with the Board.

FINDINGS OF FACT

I. THE ALLEGED UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES

Lott has worked for Respondent for more than 8 years as a janitor in the building services section. At the time here pertinent, he worked a tour or shift that ran from 7 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. Lott's supervisor on tour 2 was Ernest Martinez. Another supervisor on this tour is Dan Servantez. These supervisors were assisted by line employees who act as temporary supervisors and are called 204(b) supervisors by Respondent. The 204(b) supervisors, as here pertinent, were Guinn Webb and Paul Mefford. Martinez' supervisors are Plant Manager Al Apuzzo and Superintendent Donna Mulkin.

Lott worked under Martinez for approximately 5 years. The record in this proceeding indicates that commencing in late 1983, Lott commenced filing a series of EEO charges, grievances, and unfair labor practice charges against Respondent, and Respondent imposed a variety of disciplines against Lott. The General Counsel asserts that as a result of all the charges and complaints filed by Lott, Martinez became upset with him and in a meeting held on 18 March, Martinez called Lott a "cheap nigger lawyer," threatened him with discharge for his filing of the various charges and grievances, and denied his request for a union representative at a "disciplinary-investigatory" interview. Respondent denies Martinez made any racial slurs, threatened discharge, or that the meeting of 18 March was an investigatory interview. I find that the General Counsel has failed to show by a preponderance of the credible evidence that the alleged violations occurred.

As indicated above, Lott filed a series of charges, grievances, and complaints. The initial filing mentioned in this case is Lott's filing of an EEO charge alleging that Martinez failed to take action against the employee that struck him. The EEO complaint or charge was not placed in evidence. The nature of the action taken against the employee who assertedly struck Lott was not placed in evidence. The progressive disciplinary procedure used by Respondent requires Martinez to recommend discipline. The recommendation is then reviewed by Martinez' supervisor, Mulkin, who then refers it to Apuzzo. Mulkin and Apuzzo have the authority to decide if the recommended discipline is to go forward, needs additional basis, or is not imposed. This review procedure could have been the basis for the delay, if any, in the imposition of any discipline in the incident. The record fails to establish that any delay in disciplining the wrongdoer was caused by improper animus and/or motive.

Lott received a letter of warning in January 1984 apparently for poor work performance. Lott filed an EEO complaint and it is undisputed that the resolution of the complaint resulted in the removal of the letter from his file. In March 1984 Lott received another warning letter for poor work performance and he again responded by filing an EEO complaint, which resulted in the removal of the disciplinary letter from his file. I find these EEO charges and the resolutions of removal from Lott's personnel file are not facts probative of wrongful motive. The basis for the decisions to remove the disciplinary letters was not placed in evidence and such action, standing alone, fails to establish by probative evidence that the warning letters were unlawfully based or would lead to later action which was violative of the Act. The resolution of the EEO complaints may have included accommodations that were indicative of good cause for the issuance of the disciplines.

Lott testified that he was denied a light-duty assignment after heart surgery that included a triple bypass, while a white employee, who broke his ankle on a golf course, was given a desk job. The General Counsel did not refute Respondent's evidence that its injury compensation office found Lott a light-duty assignment that comported with the limitations imposed by Lott's physician. The assignment was checked by a union steward at Lott's request and was found to meet these medical limitations.

On 29 August 1984 another letter of warning for poor work performance was issued to Lott. The incident leading to the issuance of the letter was that Lott had left a pile of rubbish in the middle of the floor in the area where he was assigned to work on 21 August. The area supervisor called Martinez to complain about what she considered to be a safety hazard. Martinez and Servantez went to investigate the complaint, consonant with established practice. Initially, they could not find Lott, but when he appeared, Martinez asked him where he had been. Lott asserts that "Mr. Martinez said he didn't give a damn about no nigger like me or a nigger investigator. He was going to give me a letter of warning and a 14 day suspension and, sooner or later, he was going to get something to stick in my file."

This uncorroborated assertion is not credited based principally on Lott's demeanor. Lott did not appear to be trying to be candid and helpful during the proceeding. On the contrary, he had to be repeatedly instructed to respond to questions and not to volunteer information. Often Lott engaged in hyperbole and attempted to tailor his testimony to place his claims in a light most favorable to his cause rather than attempting to be forthright. At times, he exhibited reticence in responding to questions that apparently were perceived as harmful to his case. This tendency to tailor testimony was demonstrated in Lott's preparation of a memorandum that he had two coworkers sign. The missive, dated 22 August 1984, states: "I witness Thomas Lott-Pl-3 sweeping the 3rd floor T.A. from 07:00-to 3:30 PM-8-22-84 EXC for lunch. I witness Martinez E. call Lott T. a nigger also say nigger inspector."

The two witnesses to the missive, David Herrera and Roscoe Dyle, testified convincingly that when they signed the document, the second sentence alleging the use of racial epithets was not on the document, it was added after they signed. Herrera and Dyle testified credibly and convincingly; they were direct and appeared forthright.

Martinez denied making these alleged racial slurs, and his testimony was corroborated by Servantez. This corroborated testimony is credited. Martinez testified that when he tried to talk to Lott, Lott turned his back to the supervisors and walked away. According to Martinez' unrefuted testimony, Lott often failed to respond to him by turning his back and walking away. As Lott was walking away, Martinez informed him, as Lott admitted, that he would be disciplined for the incident. Lott filed another EEO complaint and a grievance over the incident. The resolution of the matter was the issuance of a letter of warning rather than the suspension recommended by Martinez.

On 6 September, Webb, an acting supervisor, gave Lott a 5-day suspension for poor work performance. The notice of disciplinary action stated:

> On September 6, 1984, you were assigned to clean Special Delivery and Finance from 0715-1515. At approximately 0955 and 1300 I gave you specific instructions on performance of your assignment. However, at 1500, when I went back to check on your progress I noticed that the floors you were assigned to do were either in the same condition as earlier noticed or not completed. When questioned about the above, you stated you could not read my mind on what I wanted you to do.

Lott did not deny the accuracy of Webb's charge, rather he asserted that Webb told him that if Martinez could not get him, Webb would. Lott filed a grievance, an EEO charge, and a charge with the Board over the matter. It appears the discipline was imposed. The Board did not issue a complaint on this charge. The General Counsel failed to prove that Martinez knew Lott filed this charge.

On 14 January Lott was again informed that he would be suspended for 14 days because of poor work performance. Lott again filed a grievance and an EEO charge which resulted in the reduction of the discipline to a 7-day suspension.

A notice of disciplinary action was issued to Lott on 11 March 1985. A 14-day suspension was imposed for not responding to a page while assigned duties to sweep a floor, when Martinez searched for Lott, he found him in a breakroom drinking milk at a time other than than Lott's authorized breaktime. When questioned, Lott refused to reply until exiting the room when Lott said he was on medication. On the same day, 22 February, Lott was observed smoking while working in clear sight of a no smoking sign, which Lott claimed he did not see. On 25 February Lott was again cited for smoking in a no smoking area. Lott denied knowledge that it was a no smoking area.

In response to this discipline, Lott filed a grievance, an EEO charge, and a charge with the Board. The discipline was reduced to a warning letter.

Lott claims he was again discriminated against on 18 March 1985. This claim is unsupported by the record. It appears that on 18 March, after commencing work, Lott asked Paul Mefford, an asserted acting supervisor, for 2 hours annual leave to go to the EEO office as well as the Board's Regional Office. Lott claims that Mefford gave him permission. The record failed to clearly establish that Mefford was an acting supervisor on 18 March. On his return, Lott asserts:

> Martinez told me—he had an official discussion with me. He asked Mefford to leave the office. . . . At this time, Martinez told me, 'I'm getting sick and tired of you running around here to these different organizations. You act like a cheap nigger lawyer. You're going to the EEO Commission. You're going to the union. You're going to [Congresswoman] Schroeder. You're going to all these different damn people. So, you ain't going to nobody else. The post office hired you to work and, goddamnit, I'm going to see that you work.' So I told him I didn't have to listen to this kind of crap. I wanted a union representative or somebody in the office with me to hear this kind of stuff. He [Martinez] said 'You ain't seeing nobody from here on out. You are not seeing no representative. Nobody. We've got you here to work and you're going to work and I'm going to see that you work or I'm going to see that you get fired.

Lott subsequently testified that Martinez said, "I was acting like a cheap nigger lawyer. He was sick of me going to the APWU [American Postal Workers Union], the Equal Employment [Opportunity] Commission, and the National Labor Relations Board. . . . You think your [sic] the smartest one in the Janitor's department. . . . I'm going to see that we get rid of you."

Lott returned to work and later filed a grievance. In addition to filing grievances in his disputes with Respondent, Lott filed charges with the Board, the Postal Service's EEO office, and contacted the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, Congresswoman Schroeder, Congressman Schafter, Senator Gary Hart, and the Division of Human Resources.

Mefford testified that Lott informed him on 18 March that he had an appointment at the EEO office. Lott did not seek nor get his permission to take annual leave. Mefford completed a leave form but did not indicate that the leave was approved. To ensure the propriety of the leavetaking, Mefford checked with Martinez. Martinez said he had not been informed of the leavetaking. Lott was paid for the 2 hours he was absent and was not disciplined for his failure to request leave in a timely manner by informing supervisors before they made the daily assignments that he planned to take 2 hours' leave. Employees are expected to give notice when taking leave as soon as possible to permit supervisors to take that fact into consideration when making the daily work assignments. Mefford refuted Lott's testimony that he spoke with him on his return to work. Martinez' testimony that he had no knowledge Lott went to the Board's Regional Office to file a charge in credited based principally on demeanor. Martinez testified in a manner bespeaking candor and appeared to be trying to testify accurately.

Martinez denied Lott's allegations of wrongdoing. Martinez claims, credibly, that he observed Lott at the elevator on his return to work and asked him where he had been. Lott did not reply so Martinez directed Lott to follow him to the office. Lott initially refused to follow Martinez until he got representation. Martinez then informed Lott that he was going to conduct an official discussion that does not require witnesses. Article 16, section 2 of the applicable collective-bargaining agreement provides for private discussions on minor offenses between management and unit members.[4] Martinez also told Lott that no disciplinary action would result from the meeting. Martinez then informed Lott that in order to meet his responsibilities in cleaning the building, he had to know when employees were going to be absent to permit the making of assignments in a manner that permits him to meet this charge. Lott did not reply other than to inquire if the discussion was finished and could he go.

On 28 March Lott submitted an EEO complaint over the meeting that was settled on 11 April by the entry into the previously referenced agreement. The agreement provides for withdrawal of the EEO complaint by Lott, and Martinez agreed to make a written note every time he has an official discussion with Lott and to permit Lott to have representation during any other type of discussion. The agreement further provides that Lott and Martinez agree that harassment and racial slurs are not to be tolerated. The record does not demonstrate that this agreement admits wrongdoing or requires Martinez to curtail his supervision of Lott or any other employee.

[4] Specifically, this section provides:

> For minor offenses by an employee, management has responsibility to discuss such matters with the employee. Discussions of this type shall be held in private between the employee and the supervisor. Such discussions are not considered discipline and are not grievable. Following such discussions, there is no prohibition against the supervisor and/or the employee making a personal notation of the date and subject matter for their own personal record(s). However, no notation or other information pertaining to such discussion shall be included in the employee's personnel folder. While such discussions may not be cited as an element for prior adverse action against an employee, they may be, where relevant and timely, relied upon to establish that employees have been made aware of their obligations and responsibilities.

Analysis and Conclusions

I find that the General Counsel has not proved by a preponderance of the credible evidence that Respondent violated the Act in any regard and conclude that the complaint should be dismissed in its entirety.

The allegation that Martinez called Lott a "cheap nigger lawyer" or used other racial epithets is clearly and convincingly disputed by Respondent's witnesses. Lott was the only witness that claimed the slurs were cast. Lott, as found above, was not a credible witness. The evidence also fails to prove that Martinez threatened Lott with discharge for filing charges and grievances with the National Labor Relations Board, the American Postal Workers Union, and the Postal Service's Equal Employment Opportunity office.

The evidence also fails to establish that Respondent denied Lott's request for union representation at a "disciplinary-investigatory" interview. It is undisputed that Lott requested a union representative and Lott admitted that, in response to this request, Martinez informed him that they were going to have a discussion. Martinez' testimony that he told Lott it would be an official discussion under the collective-bargaining agreement that would not result in discipline was unrefuted. The necessary elements of proving a violation of the Act, as set forth in NLRB v. J. Weingarten, 420 U.S. 251 (1975), is that the employee must request a union representative at an employer's investigatory interview, which the employee reasonably believes might result in disciplinary action against him. Lott was not shown to have held a reasonable expectation that the interview might have resulted in disciplinary action against him.[5]

As indicated above, I find that the General Counsel has failed to demonstrate with a preponderance of the credible evidence that Respondent threatened to discipline Lott because he filed charges, grievances, and/or complaints with the Board, the Union, and Respondent's Equal Employment Opportunity office. Although Lott grieved and filed charges over the various disciplines imposed on him, as described above, he did not clearly and convincingly refute the validity of their imposition. He did leave a pile of trash on the floor and did not respond to his supervisors when questioned about the incident, rather, he turned his back and walked away. This insubordination was not shown to have been excused by any mitigating factors. On the contrary, such insubordination was a clear and established pattern of conduct engaged in by Lott.

The General Counsel has failed to show by a preponderance of the credible evidence that Martinez or the other supervisors here involved knew that Lott filed a charge with the Board until after 18 March. There is no reasonable basis to conclude that any threat of discipline or other act was taken against Lott in response to his filing a charge with the Board or because he engaged in any other conduct protected by Section 8(a)(4) and (1) of the Act.

[5] Based on this finding that Lott did not hold a reasonable expectation that the interview would result in discipline, I find it unnecessary to discuss the possibility that the Union's agreement to the holding of such discussions without the right to a union representative constituted a waiver of the employee's Weingarten rights. Postal Service, 256 NLRB 78 (1981), enf. granted in part and denied in part 689 F.2d 835 (9th Cir. 1982).

In sum, the total lack of corroboration of Lott, who is found to be not credible, contrasted to the credible denials of Respondent's witnesses, lead me to find that the General Counsel has failed to meet her burden of proving by a preponderance of credible evidence that the alleged violations have occurred and the complaint should be dismissed.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. Respondent United States Postal Service is an employer within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

2. American Postal Workers Union is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

3. The General Counsel has failed to show by a preponderance of the credible evidence that Respondent committed any violation of the Act.

On these findings of fact and conclusions of law and on the entire record, I issue the following recommended[6]

ORDER

It having been found and concluded the Respondent, U.S. Postal Service, has not engaged in unfair labor practices, the complaint is dismissed in its entirety.

---

[6] If no exceptions are filed as provided by Sec. 102.46 of the Board's Rules and Regulations, the findings, conclusions, and recommended Order shall, as provided in Sec. 102.48 of the Rules, be adopted by the Board and all objections to them shall be deemed waived for all purposes.

26 February 1987

DECISION AND ORDER

BY MEMBERS JOHANSEN, BABSON, AND STEPHENS

On 11 January 1984 Administrative Law Judge Richard J. Boyce issued the attached decision. The Respondent filed exceptions and a supporting brief, and the General Counsel filed an answering brief.

The National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the decision and the record in light of the exceptions and briefs and has decided to affirm the judge's rulings, findings,[1] and conclusions and to adopt the recommended Order.

ORDER

The National Labor Relations Board adopts the recommended Order of the administrative law judge and orders that the Respondent, Robert's Tours & Transportation, Inc., Honolulu, Hawaii, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall take the action set forth in the Order, except that the attached notice is substituted for that of the administrative law judge.

[1] The Respondent has excepted to some of the judge's credibility findings. The Board's established policy is not to overrule an administrative law judge's credibility resolutions unless the clear preponderance of all the relevant evidence convinces us that they are incorrect. Standard Dry Wall Products, 91 NLRB 544 (1950), enfd. 188 F.2d 362 (3d Cir. 1951). We have carefully examined the record and find no basis for reversing the findings.

APPENDIX

NOTICE TO EMPLOYEES POSTED BY ORDER OF THE NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD An Agency of the United States Government

The National Labor Relations Board has found that we violated the National Labor Relations Act and has ordered us to post and abide by this notice.

Section 7 of the Act gives employees these rights.

To organize

To form, join, or assist any union

To bargain collectively through representatives of their own choice

To act together for other mutual aid or protection

To choose not to engage in any of these protected concerted activities.

WE WILL NOT discharge, withhold driving assignments from, or otherwise discriminate against our employees because of their activities protected by the Act.

WE WILL NOT threaten employees with job loss or other adverse action should they engage in activities protected by the Act.

WE WILL NOT in any like or related manner interfere with, restrain, or coerce you in the exercise of your rights under the Act.

WE WILL offer to David Speelman immediate and full reinstatement to his former job or, if that job no longer exists, to a substantially equivalent job, without prejudice to his seniority and other rights and privileges and We will make him whole for any loss of earnings or benefits suffered by reason of his unlawful discharge, with interest on lost earnings.

WE WILL restore Bella Gouveia to her job duties as they existed before we began unlawfully withholding tour-bus assignments from her about January 8, 1982; and We will make her whole for any loss of earnings (including tips) or benefits suffered by reason of that unlawful withholding, with interest on lost earnings.

DECISION

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

RICHARD J. BOYCE, Administrative Law Judge. This matter was tried in Kahului, Maui, Hawaii, on March 1, 1983. The charge in Case 37–CA–1889 was filed on April 12, 1982, and amended on July 20, by David Speelman. The charge in Case 37–CA–1918 was filed on July 2, 1982, by Isabella Gouveia. The complaint issued on July 26, 1982, and alleges that Robert's Tours & Transportation, Inc. (Respondent) violated Section 8(a)(1) of the National Labor Relations Act (Act) in each of these respects:[1]

1. Since November 1981, by promulgating and maintaining an impermissibly broad no-solicitation rule.

[1] Sec. 8(a)(1) makes it unlawful for an employer "to interfere with, restrain, or coerce employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed in Section 7." Sec. 7 gives employees "the right to self-organization, to form, join, or assist labor organizations, to bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing, and to engage in other concerted activities for the purpose of collective bargaining or other mutual aid or protection, and . . . also . . . the right to refrain from any or all such activities . . . ."

2. On January 7, 1982, by discharging Speelman and adversely changing Gouveia's terms and conditions of employment because of their engagement in activities protected by the Act.

3. On January 7 and 8, 1982, acting through Gerald Hayashi, an admitted supervisor and agent, by interrogating employees concerning their engagement in protected activities and threatening them with discharge for same.

II. JURISDICTION

Respondent, incorporated in Hawaii, provides tour bus and other transportation services in that State. Its annual revenues exceed $500,000, of which over $50,000 derives from services for firms situated in other States and countries. It is undisputed that Respondent is an employer engaged in and affecting commerce within Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

II. BACKGROUND

Respondent operates on five of the Hawaiian Islands—in order of business volume, Oahu, Kauai, Hawaii, Maui, and Molokai. Its overall manager is Robert Iwamoto Jr. (Robert), who is headquartered in Honolulu, Oahu. His son Scott is the nominal manager of the Maui operation, having been elevated to that position in late December 1981. Scott was 21 at the time of trial. "Overseeing everything I did," Scott testified, was Gerald Hayashi, manager on the Island of Hawaii.

Except for the allegedly unlawful no-solicitation rule, which has been of systemwide application, this case concerns Maui.

III. THE ALLEGED MISCONDUCT

A. The No-Solicitation Rule

1. Facts

The parties stipulated that Respondent promulgated this rule on May 15, 1981:

> Solicitation: RHT drivers are prohibited from allowing themselves to be solicited while on duty, since any time thusly involved would be an unauthorized use of company time. Furthermore, it is prohibited for RHT drivers who are on duty to solicit other RHT drivers regardless of whether the latter are on-duty or off-duty. Failure to comply with the preceding will be regarded as cause for the company to take disciplinary action.

Hayashi testified that the rule appears in a handbook of rules and regulations which, until the supply was exhausted, was given to each of Respondent's drivers. The rule was in effect "all during 1981 and 1982," he added, and "would still be the policy" had Respondent not "run out of those handbooks."

Concerning the reasons for the rule, Hayashi testified:

> The company is afraid of the solicitation of drivers or the drivers soliciting other drivers or people in regards to keeping their attention to what they're supposed to be doing. And we didn't want our drivers selling or promoting puka shells or Kona liquor, or to be solicited by vendors or concessions that might offer them kickbacks or some form of gratuity for stopping at these stops.

Hayashi continued that, "in the past," there had been "specific problems with respect to [Respondent's] drivers in terms of soliciting or kickbacks or selling and buying things while drivers were on duty." He elaborated:

> In the 1974, 1972 to 1974 area, where puka shells were a big craze around the islands, the drivers would sell puka shells to Japanese tourists. Buy them cheap and sell them for a marked-up price. That created some difficulty with our company where the agents that brought these people in didn't want us soliciting them. So somehow our company had to cut it out.

Hayashi further elaborated that "the type of solicitation that our drivers would be subject to" were "concessions that would solicit [them] and say, 'If you bring your people here, we'll give you $2 for each person that walks through our door.'" Asked by Respondent's counsel if he knew of any instance in which the rule had "ever been applied to actions taken by people during their own time, including breaks and mealtime," Hayashi testified: "No."

2. Conclusion

In Our Way, Inc., 268 NLRB 394 (1983), the Board announced that rules against solicitation during "working time," as distinguished from "working hours," are presumptively valid. So doing, it revived the distinction made in Essex International, 211 NLRB 749 (1974), overruling the case on which the General Counsel places principal reliance herein—T.R.W. Bearings, 257 NLRB 442 (1981).

It is concluded that a rule, such as Respondent's, against soliciting or being solicited while "on duty" is the functional equivalent of the presumptively valid one in Our Way against soliciting during working time.[2] It is further concluded, therefore, there being no evidence to defeat the presumption, that Respondent's rule does not violate Section 8(a)(1) as alleged.

[2] The equivalency of while "on duty" and during "working time" is suggested by Medical Center of Beaver County, 266 NLRB 429 (1983). An issue in that case was the legality of a ban against the wearing of insignia "while on duty." The administrative law judge concluded that the ban was impermissibly broad because it failed to "contain a clear statement as to its nonapplication (1) during break periods, meal periods, and other similar periods, and (2) in nonpatient areas." Id. at 430. A three-member Board panel affirmed the administrative law judge's ultimate conclusion. Two of the three took the position, however, that the ban was overly broad only "because it does not apply solely to patient care areas," and that they "would find it valid in terms of time since it states that employees are only restricted 'while on duty.'" Id. at 429 fn. 1. The two seemingly reached that position not by distinguishing between "on duty" and "working time," but in disagreement with T.R.W. Bearings. Ibid.

B. The Alleged Violations of January 7–8, 1982

1. Evidence

Speelman was a driver for Respondent from September 1976 until discharged January 7, 1982. The discharge was effected by Hayashi, acting on Robert's orders.

The morning of January 5—2 days before the discharge—Speelman's tour bus was involved in an accident. It struck a branch overhanging a narrow road into Maui's Iao Valley. The branch thrust through the windshield, necessitating that the tour be completed with a replacement bus. No one was injured. Speelman testified that, the road being partially in shadow, he was unable to see the branch in time to stop before impact, although "going real slow;[3] and that he was prevented from otherwise avoiding it by an oncoming vehicle. By his reckoning, "the accident was unavoidable."

Scott accompanied the replacement bus to the scene. Once there, he questioned Speelman about the accident and took some pictures. Speelman finished the tour.

That afternoon, on Speelman's return to Respondent's "base" at the Kahului airport, Scott pressed him for "more details" about the accident; and the two of them returned to the accident site, taking with them Bobby (Wipa) Purdy, described by Scott as Respondent's fleet safety examiner and driver trainer on Maui.[4] Scott took more pictures and assertedly concluded that there was "no reason why [the branch] should have been hit."

That night, returning to the base from his last assignment for the day, Speelman had yet another encounter with Scott. Scott declared that the accident called for "some kind of disciplinary action," elaborating that Respondent was "trying to clean up" its Maui operation and that, this being his first such situation as Maui manager, his handling of it "was going to set an example." Scott added that, should he let Speelman off "easy, then everybody . . . was going to take advantage of [him]." He continued that he did not "feel that just the accident alone was sufficient for . . . termination," and, noting that Speelman had only recently suffered a 1-week suspension because of a baggage oversight,[5] asked him what he thought would be a "fair" penalty. Speelman proposed a 2-week suspension. Scott responded, "Fine, you've got it." Scott appended that Speelman need not "worry about this accident"; that he would "talk to" his father, Robert, and they would "work it out."[6]

During the same conversation, Scott asked that Speelman name Respondent's best Maui drivers, of whom there were three working full time and seven or eight working part-time. Speelman offered that Gouveia was "number one," and that Purdy conducted "fantastic tours." Scott responded that he was "going to get rid of Bella Gouveia the first time she calls Honolulu"—an allusion to her sometimes enlisting the intervention of Scott's father and grandfather with regard to problems of employee concern on Maui;[7] and that he was "going to fire" another driver, Kimo Gapero, "the first time" he complained about an assignment. Scott also chided Speelman for exaggerating the size of King Kamehameha and native Hawaiians in general in his tour narrations. Speelman denied exaggerating, arguing that the Hawaiians "were large people" and that, with "a Hawaiian-Tahitian mix, you've got a tall mix of people."

The morning of the next day, January 6, Speelman made two visits to the base. On the first, he asked Scott for something in writing to reflect the suspension just meted out. Scott obliged with this memorandum:

> Memo To: David Speelman
> Date: January 06, 1982
> From: Scott Iwamoto
> Subject: 2 Weeks Suspension
> Effective Wednesday, January 6, 1982 through January 19, 1982. The reason for this suspension is due to the accident you had involving the tree branch at Iao Valley and your motorcoach.

Also on January 6, Speelman testified, apparently during his first visit, he had a clandestine—"where nobody could see us"—conversation with Gouveia, apprising her of Scott's intention to terminate her and Gapero. Gouveia's response, as related by Speelman, was, "We've got to go union for job protection."[8]

Leaving the base for a time, Speelman reported the accident to the police and accompanied an officer to the scene; called on an office of the Hawaii Department of Labor, where he complained about his suspension, and was told that the Department was powerless to look into the matter; and went to the hall of the Longshoremen's Union, speaking to an official there about the suspension and how Respondent's drivers might obtain representation.[9]

Back on the base later in the morning of January 6, Speelman broached his suspension to Gouveia in the drivers' lounge, then pursued the subject with her in her parked bus. They presently were joined in the bus by Purdy, Gapero, and Stanley Sato, who runs Respondent's Japanese-language tours on Maui.[10] Gouveia testified that gatherings of this sort are "an everyday routine—every morning we get into the bus and listen to the radio while we're cooling off ourselves." But in this instance Speelman complained about his suspension, and there were complaints, as well, about dispatching procedures that were depriving the "oldtimers" of assignments in favor of "the new drivers" absorbed from a tour company that recently had gone out of business.

Gouveia recalled Speelman's advocating, when the State Department of Labor declined to intervene con-

[4] Also going to the scene was one Herman Naole.

[5] As a consequence of neglecting to offload several pieces of luggage after driving a tour group from its hotel to the airport on October 31, 1981, Speelman was suspended from November 4 through 10. The suspension was administered by Scott's predecessor, Albert Fukutomi.

[6] This rendition of the exchange between Scott and Speelman is extracted from an amalgam of their essentially nonconflicting testimony.

[7] Speelman testified: "If we couldn't talk to management, we talked to [Gouveia] and she'd call Honolulu [headquarters] and they'd come in for a meeting and hash it out, settle it out."

cerning his suspension, it was "about time" the drivers "see what the union can do for us." Gouveia recounted that Sato, hearing this, "stomped out of the bus" while proclaiming that the drivers and narrators did not "need a union." To like effect, Speelman testified that Sato "walked out of the bus . . . as soon a I said 'union.'" Speelman, however, assigned no parting rhetoric to Sato, averring that disapproval was apparent from "the way his face was."

Speelman testified that with the exception of Sato it was agreed during this gathering that the employees had "to go union . . . for job protection"; and that he should call Hayashi "to have an emergency drivers' meeting . . . to discuss what had happened to" him. Hayashi had told the Maui drivers, in a meeting at the time Scott became manager, that they were free to "contact" him concerning "problems" that could not be resolved locally. Gouveia testified, on the other hand, that those in the bus after Sato's departure agreed with Purdy's suggestion that, while the union was "a good idea," they "should give" Scott "another month . . . [to] . . . see how dispatching would be" before deciding "to do anything else"; and that she proposed to Speelman, after the gathering had broken up, that he call Hayashi to see if he "could help" with regard to the suspension.

In the immediate aftermath of the gathering in the bus, Gouveia testified, she confronted Scott, telling him that she had been "on that road, too, that morning"—i.e., the Iao Valley road, the morning of the accident—and that she thought Speelman's suspension was "stiff," especially as he had been suspended shortly before. Scott countered, according to Gouveia, "If my drivers think they're good drivers, they have to observe everything that's on the highway," whereupon she uttered Scott's name, as if in dismay, and broke off the conversation. Scott in essence denied that this conversation took place, testifying that Gouveia never spoke to him about Speelman's suspension.

Whether pursuant to a consensus reached in the bus or to a subsequent suggestion from Gouveia, Speelman called Hayashi's office in Hawaii about noon on January 6. Hayashi's secretary answered, saying he was out, and offering to take a message. Speelman assertedly left word that the Maui drivers felt the accident was not his fault and that they sought "an emergency drivers' meeting" with Hayashi to "discuss" the matter. Hayashi testified that his first knowledge of the accident and the suspension came with receipt of the secretary's message.

Scott testified that he tried, unsuccessfully, to reach Hayashi between the time of the accident and the next day's issuance of the suspension memorandum. Scott continued that, sometime after issuing the memorandum, he informed his father, by telephone, of the accident and the suspension. Scott avowedly was "not sure" who initiated this call, nor "of the exact day" it was made. He ventured at one point that it was "the day after" the accident; at another, that "it was either the day of or the day after"; and, at yet another, that "it was either one or two days after." Robert, less tentative, testified that Scott called him, "probably in the morning" of January 6, having been unable to "get ahold of" Robert on January 5.

Regarding the content of his conversation with Robert, Scott testified that after he had related what had happened, Robert remarked that buses "are not supposed to be going so fast" in the area of the accident, and asked if any other tour drivers had been in the Iao Valley the day it happened. Scott replied, so he testified, that Nelson Waikiki of Grayline Tours had, prompting Robert to direct that he "contact" Waikiki "as soon as possible," ascertaining if he had seen the branch and was able to avoid it, and then "get back to" Robert.

Robert's version of the conversation was, after Scott told him about the accident and the suspension, he said he wanted "more back-up information" to determine "if it was a true accident or . . . an avoidable accident," and instructed Scott to "check further if there was any other tour companies up in that area when the accident occurred or before Speelman had his accident." Robert concededly had in mind overriding the suspension with a "more extreme" sanction; and assertedly counseled Scott that, Speelman having been with Respondent "for a number of years," it would be "unfair to jump to conclusions" and take that "kind of action [without] more back-up information."

Following this conversation, Scott testified, he located Waikiki having lunch in Lahaina; was told that Waikiki had seen the branch and had gone "into the left lane not to hit it;[11] and promptly called Robert—"I think it was from Lahaina"—to report that Waikiki "saw the tree and he didn't hit it." Robert's only response was an "okay," according to Scott, and the conversation was over.[12] Robert testified that Scott did not report back until the morning of the next day, January 7, when he told Robert he had spoken with a driver for another company who had "avoided the branch."

Robert testified that the morning of January 7, before Scott's return call, he called Lora Warren, vice president of Grand Circle Travel Western (Grand Circle) in Long Beach, California. Grand Circle accounts for about 5 percent of Respondent's tour business in Maui.[13] Warren previously had complained "about baggage mishaps" involving Speelman and Gouveia, according to Robert;[14] and the purpose of this call, "prompted" by Scott's revelations about the accident, was to ask Warren "to reconfirm the complaint and put it in writing."[15]"She told

[11] Waikiki testified that he saw the tree "sticking out at least about two feet," and "had to go on the left side of the road to avoid the branches." "About two days after that incident," Waikiki added, later amending that "it was the same day," Scott asked him if he had seen the tree, and he said he had and "just avoid[ed] it and continue[d] on [the] tour."

[12] Ostensibly seeking to impart plausibility to Robert's telephonic brevity, as depicted by Scott, Respondent's counsel asked Scott if Robert was "a busy man" and if his telephone conversations often were "abrupt." Scott answered both questions in the affirmative.

[13] Hayashi testified that Respondent had 60 to 65 tour groups on Maui in January 1982, of which three were from Grand Circle.

[14] The baggage oversight leading to Speelman's suspension in November 1981 involved a Grand Circle group. Gouveia also had neglected to offload a bag involving Grand Circle about that time. She paid $27 from her own pocket to enable the bag to catch up with its owner, on Molokai, the next day.

[15] Robert testified that although his call to Warren was prompted by word of Speelman's accident, "sometime during that month I would have me," Robert stated in description of the call, "that she definitely did not want both of these drivers on any more of her tours," and he asked her "to put something in writing" to that effect. Explaining why he wanted something in writing, Robert admitted that he was "thinking in terms of discharge or at least the possibility of discharge." He expanded:

> [I]f I got any more back-up regarding [Speelman's] accident, I wanted things in writing, more definite things with, I guess, more proof for my discharging him if Scott came back with an answer like he did.

Following this conversation, Robert dispatched this memorandum to the Maui base:

> I have just received a call from Grand Circle Travel (Laura [sic] Warren) who operates NRTA/AARP complaining about Speelman and Bella. The complaint is that, recently, these drivers have forgotten bags on their bus and in the past she complained to me about them [Speelman & Bella] compared to the other drivers on the rest of the islands. She has requested that they no longer be assigned to her tours.
> Therefore, effective immediately, both of these drivers will not handle any Grand Circle tours. I will send you a copy of the complaint letter when I receive it.[16]

After calling Warren and then receiving Scott's report the morning of January 7, Robert testified, he called Hayashi in Hawaii, directing that he go to Maui "as soon as possible, preferably that day, and terminate Speelman." Robert explained, so he related, that Speelman had "had an accident a couple days before," that he "apparently . . . just ran into the branch and could have injured our passengers," that another driver had "avoided hitting the branch," and that "it was an accident that our driver could have avoided." Robert also adverted, as he recalled, to Speelman's November suspension over the baggage matter. Hayashi replied, according to Robert, that he would go to Maui immediately, and mentioned in passing that he had just received a complaint call from Speelman that the latest suspension was "harsh and unfair" and that Speelman wanted a meeting about it.[17]

Hayashi's version of Robert's call was that Robert cited "a combination of three factors" in support of the discharge decision—Respondent "had a problem in Maui and . . . [Robert] wanted to clean up the operation," Speelman "had a serious avoidable accident," and "the complaint letter from Grand Circle Tours."[18]

Robert averred that he called on Hayashi to effect the discharge, rather than Scott, because of Scott's "age and inexperience . . . [and] . . . to relieve him of the burden and, I guess, not having him be the bad guy." Hayashi admitted that he "thought it was pretty funny that Robert would be calling [him] a couple hours after [Hayashi's secretary had] received [the] call from Speelman."

Hayashi flew to Maui the afternoon of January 7. On arrival, he obtained Speelman's and Gouveia's personnel files and telephone numbers from Scott, then called Speelman, arranging for them to meet later in the day. Scott testified that his first knowledge of the impending discharge came when Hayashi told him he had been "sent" to "swing his ax" on Speelman and to talk to Gouveia about the matters raised in Robert's memorandum of the Warren telephone conversation.[19] Scott's immediate reaction to this disclosure, he testified, was to shake his head and walk away. Asked why he did this, Scott testified, "I felt like the bad guy, you know." Scott recalled that he shortly asked Hayashi, "How can you guys come over here, after I suspend somebody, and fire him?" Hayashi's answer, as related by Scott, was that "it was out of his hands."

Hayashi and Speelman met in the late afternoon of January 7. As remembered by Speelman, Hayashi showed him the memorandum of Robert's conversation with Warren, along with a 1979 letter, never before seen by Speelman, attributing a baggage mixup to Speelman.[20] Speelman assertedly defended: "Well, what about my record? Where is all the over a hundred letters, complimentary letters that I had from tour groups, agents, people on the bus?"[21] Whether Hayashi acknowledged this query was not disclosed in Speelman's account. Speelman went on that Hayashi, citing the accident and Warren's reported request that he no longer be assigned to Grand Circle groups, declared, "We cannot work around you, and you are terminated this night."

Speelman's version proceeded that, seeing Gouveia's name as well as his own in Robert's memorandum of the Warren conversation, he asked what was going to happen to her; and that Hayashi said she was to be discharged "tomorrow morning."[22] Speelman also re-had to call her back . . . because she had already told me that she wanted an answer from me as to what actions we were going to take to better our services on . . . Maui."

[16] Accommodating Robert's request for "something in writing," Warren sent him a letter, dated January 8, in which she stated:

> We are again receiving many complaints about your drivers David Spellman [sic] and Bella on the island of Maui. I had spoken to you before about this matter and we had decided to wait until we received some more complaints. Which we have and I now feel that I must request that our groups do not get these drivers anymore, effective immediately. Thank you for your help in this matter and do hope my request doesn't cause you too many problems.

[17] Robert testified that Hayashi, although saying that Speelman wanted a meeting, did not say Speelman wanted a drivers' meeting. Hayashi testified that the message relayed by his secretary was that Speelman wanted his suspension reconsidered; and that he knew nothing about Speelman's wanting a drivers' meeting.

[18] As earlier noted, the letter solicited from Warren was dated January 8.

[19] Scott to the contrary, Hayashi testified that his only purpose in going to Maui was to terminate Speelman.

[20] This letter is not in evidence, nor is there any evidence of the alleged underlying incident.

[21] Speelman testified that letters complimenting the drivers are posted in the drivers' lounge "for three or four days, then they take these letters down and they're supposed to put [them] in the driver's file." None is in evidence.

[22] It will be remembered that Speelman testified, elsewhere, that Scott told him, January 5, that he intended to "get rid of" Gouveia the first time she called Honolulu. Arguing in its brief that Speelman is generally marked, so he recounted: "[Y]our drivers are the ones who told me to call you up to have an emergency meeting. What about our meeting?" Hayashi answered, per Speelman: "You're not with Robert's anymore and you can't hold a meeting. There will be no meeting."

Hayashi's account of the meeting was that he invited Speelman, "at the beginning," to tell him "about his situation regarding the accident"; and that Speelman "raised some unhappiness toward the two weeks' suspension, feeling it was severe." Hayashi related that he then showed Speelman a complaint letter and Robert's memorandum of the Warren conversation, in addition citing "specific examples" of which he was aware of complaints about Speelman from Grand Circle ("in particular the statement about King Kamehameha's height and his weight"), after which he announced that Speelman had "no future with the company as a result of a complaint and of the accident." With that, Hayashi continued, Speelman raised the prospect of causing a work stoppage—"the context was that he was going to have the drivers walk out." Hayashi denied that Speelman said anything about Hayashi's having a meeting with the drivers.

The next day, January 8, Speelman returned to the base, "insisting," as Hayashi put it, "on a letter of termination." Hayashi acceded, himself typing this letter:

> Dear David,
> You have been employed with Roberts [sic] since Sept, 1976. On 8/14/79 Maui office received a letter of complaint concerning handling of passengers and baggage by you at the airport on 8/14/79 at 0800.
> On 11/4/81, you were suspended 7 days for failure to drop off baggage on a Grand Circle group. At that time you were warned about further repercussion from the mainland agent that further dissiplinary [sic] action will be taken.
> On 1/5/82 you had an accident involving a tree at Iao Valley where the front windshield was hit and cracked, and luckily no one was injured.
> On 1/7/82, Roberts [sic] Hawaii Honolulu office received a complaint from Grand Circle Travel, one of our most valued accounts. The complaint was in regards to service rendered by David Speelman on Maui. Mentioned was a specific incident in Oct. 1981, when bags were forgotten on a bus, and your inability to compare with the rest of the islands [sic] drivers. The complaint went on, and requested that we no longer use David on their tours.
> As a result of the above, inconvenience to our passengers and agents, willful disreguard [sic] for company equiptment [sic] and safety of passengers, and the problems created for scheduling, your employment with Roberts [sic] Tours is terminated effective Jan. 5, 1982.
> Regretfully,
> /s/ Gerald Hayashi

It is undisputed that the second and fourth paragraphs of the letter refer to the same incident.

On January 8, as well, Hayashi met with Gouveia, having called her the previous evening to request it. The meeting began, Gouveia testified, with Hayashi's asking if she knew why she had been called in. She answered in the negative, as she recalled, and Hayashi asked if she knew about Speelman's discharge. She assertedly replied that she did not, that she had "heard" only that he had been suspended. Hayashi rejoined, according to Gouveia, that Speelman had "wanted to call a drivers' meeting" and was terminated. Hayashi expanded, as told by Gouveia:

> We don't call no meeting for no David Speelman, a special drivers' meeting. Do you know that Robert's don't like to have union in the company? Do you know that was a threatening thing when David says that he will call the drivers together and do not move the equipment?

Gouveia testified that Hayashi then "mentioned about" Speelman's accident and Robert's memorandum of the Warren conversation, with its reference to Gouveia, and stated that she "couldn't handle those groups anymore because of" Warren's request.

Hayashi's version of his meeting with Gouveia was that he "made Bella aware that Speelman was terminated, and . . . brought it to her attention that she had received a complaint similar to the complaint that David Speelman had received"—that she "was mentioned on the very same inter-office memo" from Robert. Hayashi professedly then asked why Warren did not want Gouveia on Grand Circle tours and why Respondent was not "getting what [it] expect[ed] out of [its] senior drivers." Gouveia answered, Hayashi continued, that she was "trying her best," thought she was "doing a good job," "enjoyed her job," and "was willing to do anything in terms of work to keep her job—to accept transfers, Japanese tours, whatever was available." Transfers are shuttles between the airport and various hotels, as opposed to tours. Gouveia "understood," according to Hayashi, that she no longer would be assigned to Grand Circle groups.

Hayashi testified that he could not remember mentioning Speelman's "remarks about pulling out the drivers," and that he did not say "anything . . . that related to the union . . . [or] . . . regarding Robert's attitude toward unionization."

Scott testified that he had a conversation with Gouveia "a day or two" after Speelman's discharge in which she said she was "willing to do anything"; that, citing "as an example" Grayline's use of "lady bus drivers" to drive transfers, she was willing to "come in early and do transfers."

The parties stipulated that Gouveia's "opportunity for work in conducting tours was reduced" as of this time.

unworthy of belief, Respondent notes that he answered "yes" when asked if Hayashi's January 7 remark about Gouveia's imminent dismissal was "the first time that any management person told [him] that Bella's job was in jeopardy." Respondent fails to mention Speelman's answer to the very next question—whether Hayashi's remark was "the first time that any management person told [him] that Bella was going to lose her job." (Emphasis added.) He not only answered in the negative, but mentioned Scott's January 5 comment.

Gouveia testified that she since has been assigned no tours, instead being used solely as a transfer driver. This apparently has not affected her base pay, but, as she put it, "the difference is tip-wise." She has driven for Respondent since 1969.

Robert testified that, because of Scott's report that others had avoided the branch, he "determined that [Speelman] willfully disregarded the safety of passengers" at the time of the accident. He added, "I probably feel [that Speelman] purposely put the lives of those passengers in danger." Similarly, Hayashi professed to believe, from "the speed of [Speelman's] bus" and from "the conditions that he described," that Speelman "had willful disregard for the safety of his passengers." Scott disagreed, testifying that, while the accident resulted from "the driver's negligence," Speelman did not "purposely disregard the safety of the passengers." Scott further testified, echoing his comment to Speelman the evening of January 5, that he did not think the accident warranted discharge, and that he did not feel the 2-week suspension amounted to letting Speelman "off easy."

Hayashi acknowledged that Respondent's drivers "do occasionally get involved in accidents." In fact, its Maui drivers had 19 accidents in 1982, counting Speelman's; and, except for Speelman, there is no evidence that discharge followed. In 1976 and again in 1978, Hayashi terminated drivers on Hawaii, in part because of their accident records. The termination letter concerning the 1976 action cited three accidents in less than 1 month, plus two instances of insubordination,[23] and that relating to the 1978 action referred to three accidents in a 4-month span, together with one complaint about tour quality. There is no evidence of other accident-related discharges, nor is there convincing evidence that Speelman was in other than the one accident.[24]

Robert testified that Respondent's main problem on Maui around the time of the events in question was "customer complaints because of the quality of drivers. "I would guess we had about two or three complaints a week," he enlarged, "not only on Speelman, but a number of drivers." He continued that tour groups had lodged "a number of complaints" about Speelman, "about his service," but that he had no verifying documentation. Hayashi averred that he "personally" had received "a lot of complaints about" Speelman, particularizing that he had received two of "a verbal nature"; and that they "led us to believe" that Speelman's tour narrations betrayed a weakness in his knowledge of "Hawaiiana." Hayashi admittedly did nothing to document such complaints, nor did he mention them to Speelman before the meeting in which Speelman's discharge was announced. Scott's testimony concerning complaints about Speelman was ambiguous, if not contradictory, it finally becoming evident that the only predischarge complaint of which he had heard was that leading to the suspension in November 1981.

Robert denied that he knew about "any union activity or interest" by Speelman, or that Speelman was seeking a drivers' meeting, before he made the discharge decision. Hayashi and Scott made similar disclaimers.

2. Conclusions

Speelman. It is concluded that Speelman's discharge violated Section 8(a)(1) as alleged.

The bases for this conclusion are:

1. Speelman had driven for Respondent for over 4 years, which indicates that his overall performance was satisfactory.

2. The day before the discharge, and after Speelman had been suspended over the accident, he was the focal point of the gathering in the bus in which he and other employees discussed not only the suspension, but their anxieties about dispatching procedures and job security, and the feasibility of their consequently seeking union representation.[25] This plainly was protected activity, both because it dealt with matters of shared employee concern in the context of the workplace and because union representation was considered as a recourse.

3. Also discussed, either during the postsuspension gathering in the bus, or just after between Speelman and Gouveia, was the desirability of a meeting with Hayashi, after which Speelman left word with Hayashi's office that the drivers felt the accident was not his fault and that a meeting was wanted.[26] Speelman's call to the office likewise was protected, flowing as it did from the protected activity on the bus and because it sought a meeting with Hayashi about at least one matter of common employee concern—Respondent's treatment of him following the accident.

4. That Respondent somehow had learned about these protected activities and was motivated by them to discharge Speelman is indicated by: (a) Hayashi's testimony that he "thought it was pretty funny" that Robert would call him to take the action only "a couple hours after" Speelman's call to Hayashi's office, and (b) Hayashi's January 8 remarks to Gouveia, while telling her about the discharge, that Speelman had "wanted to call a drivers' meeting," and that Respondent "don't like to have union in the company."[27]

5. That the accident was a pretext rather than a true reason for the discharge is revealed, most graphically, by Respondent's already having imposed discipline—the 2-week suspension—for it. The testimony of management witnesses—Scott, Robert, and Hayashi—was unpersuasive that Scott alone knew about the accident until after the suspension was handed out. It is altogether improbable that Scott, little more than a cypher in the management of the Maui operation, would have dealt with such

[24] Scott's testimony that he knew of Speelman's being in "a couple accidents" before that on January 5 was devoid of particulars and unpersuasive.

[25] Speelman and Gouveia are credited that the discussion in the bus embraced the named subjects.

[26] Speelman is credited that this was the substance of his message. Hayashi's secretary did not testify.

[27] Hayashi's denials notwithstanding, Gouveia is credited that Hayashi made the remarks attributed to him. Gouveia had the more convincing demeanor.

a situation and taken such action independently.[28] Moreover, Scott's testimony about the timing of his first postaccident conversation with Robert, while so laced with equivocation as to suggest historical revisionism, at one point allowed that it could have been "the day of" the accident; and Nelson Waikiki, supposedly interviewed by Scott after that first conversation, testified that the interview was "the same day" as the accident.

6. Other compelling indicia that the accident was a pretext are: (a) Robert's perceived need to dredge up other of Speelman's misfortunes, as witness his solicitation of Warren to submit a complaint against Speelman, the avowed purpose being to build a case in aid of Robert's predisposition to terminate Speelman,[29] (b) the rank absurdity of Robert's professed belief that Speelman "purposely put the lives of those passengers in danger," and of Hayashi's stated opinion that Speelman "had willful disregard for the safety of his passengers," (c) Scott's testimony that he did not think the accident warranted discharge and that, by imposing the 2-week suspension, he did not feel he was letting Speelman "off easy," and (d) Scott's reaction of shaking his head and walking away when he learned from Hayashi that discharge was forthcoming, and Hayashi's nonresponse that it was "out of his hands" when challenged by Scott how Speelman could be fired after already having been suspended for the same offense,[30] which betrayed the visceral feeling of both that discharge was disproportionate to any accident-related misconduct.

7. The accident as pretext is additionally shown by: (a) the considerable incidence, otherwise, of accidents involving Respondent's Maui drivers, without discharge resulting, (b) the absence of convincing evidence that Speelman was in other than the one accident, and (c) the fact that the only other accident-related discharges of which there is evidence were in response to circumstances far more aggravated—three accidents in less than a month in one instance, and three accidents within 4 months in the other.

8. That the other reason prominently advanced for the discharge—Warren's complaint—likewise was pretextuous is revealed by: (a) Robert's having solicited it, admittedly preparatory to discharging Speelman,[31] (b) the speciousness of Hayashi's statement to Speelman, when effecting the discharge, that Respondent could not "work around" him in making assignments in view of Warren's request that he no longer be assigned to Grand Circle groups, when Grand Circle represented only about 5 percent of Respondent's Maui business, (c) Respondent's customary failure, apparently, to discharge or otherwise penalize its Maui drivers despite its receipt, as Robert testified, of two or three complaints a week against "a number of" the drivers, and (d) the fact that the testimony of the management witnesses about complaints against Speelman, other than the one solicited from Warren, was so devoid of substantiating detail as to indicate testimonial bad faith.

Gouveia. It is concluded that the denial to Gouveia of tour-group assignments, roughly coincident with Speelman's discharge, also violated Section 8(a)(1) as alleged.

This conclusion is grounded on these factors:

1. Gouveia had driven for Respondent since 1969—a powerful indication that her performance was generally acceptable.

2. She participated in the same January 6 protected activities in the bus as did Speelman, after and as a manifest outgrowth of which she confronted Scott about the harshness of Speelman's suspension.[32]

3. As earlier observed, Respondent revealed its knowledge of and hostility to the protected activities, in part, by Hayashi's January 8 remarks to Gouveia.

4. The inference is unavoidable that the action against Gouveia was prompted by the same improper motivation that underlay Speelman's discharge. Beyond coinciding in time with the discharge, its purported justification was the same complaint-soliciting call from Robert. Common motive is inferable, as well, from Hayashi's having gone to Maui for the express purpose, stated to Scott, of dealing with both Speelman and Gouveia;[33] and from Hayashi's prefacing his January 8 disclosure to Gouveia of her reduced status with a pointed discussion of Speelman's discharge, Speelman's having "wanted to call a drivers' meeting," and Respondent's not wanting "to have union in the company."

The allegedly unlawful threats and interrogation. Crediting Gouveia, Hayashi asked her, on January 8, if she had heard about Speelman's discharge, and exclaimed, later in the same encounter:

> Do you know that Robert's don't like to have union in the company? Do you know that was a threatening thing when David says that he will call the drivers together and do not move the equipment?

The two comments just set forth, while in question form, obviously were designed less to interrogate than to impart information. Uttered in the context of Speelman's discharge, they necessarily conveyed the message that employees promoting union representation or a concerted work stoppage to protest conditions of employment would be placing themselves at risk of Speelman's fate. That the message was not lost on Gouveia is revealed by her ensuing verbal genuflections to Hayashi and to Scott that she was "willing to do anything" to keep her job.

It is concluded that Hayashi, by thus threatening Gouveia with regard to protected activity, violated Section 8(a)(1) substantially as alleged.

[28] Scott's being manager in name but not much more was demonstrated by his admission that Hayashi oversaw "everything" he did; by Hayashi's bald invitation to the Maui drivers, when Scott was named manager, to take their problems to him if they could not be settled locally; and by the cavalier circumvention of Scott to effect Speelman's discharge.

[29] Robert's self-serving testimony is not credited that he would have called Warren "sometime during that month" in any event.

[31] Robert having solicited Warren's complaint with a specific purpose in mind, an inference is in order that her subsequent letter was written as an accommodation and not from conviction.

[32] Gouveia, her demeanor more convincing than Scott's, is credited that this confrontation occurred and was as described by her.

[33] Scott is credited that Hayashi said he was on Maui for the dual purpose.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

Respondent violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act, as found herein, by:

1. Discharging David Speelman on January 7, 1982.
2. Denying group-tour assignments to Bella Gouveia beginning about January 8, 1982.
3. Threatening Gouveia with job loss or other adverse action should she engage in certain activities protected by the Act.

Respondent did not otherwise violate the Act as alleged.

On these findings of fact and conclusions of law and on the entire record, I issue the following recommended[34]

ORDER

Respondent, Robert's Tours & Transportation, Inc., its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall

1. Cease and desist from

(a) Discharging, withholding driving assignments from, or otherwise discriminating against its employees because of their activities protected by the Act.

(b) Threatening employees with job loss or other adverse action should they engage in activities protected by the Act.

(c) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in their exercise of rights under the Act.

2. Take the affirmative action necessary to effective the purposes of the Act.

(a) Offer to David Speelman immediate and full reinstatement to his former job or, if that job no longer exists, to a substantially equivalent job, without prejudice to his seniority and other rights and privileges; and make him whole for any loss of earnings or benefits suffered by reason of his unlawful discharge, with interest on lost earnings.[35]

(b) Restore Bella Gouveia to her job duties as they existed before we began unlawfully withholding tour-bus assignments from her on about January 8, 1982; and make her whole for any loss of earnings (including tips) or benefits suffered by reason of that unlawful withholding, with interest on lost earnings.[36]

(c) Preserve and make available, on request, to the Board or its agents, for examination and copying, all payroll records, social security payment records, timecards, personnel records and reports, and all records necessary to analyze the amounts of backpay and benefits owing under the terms of this Order.

(d) Post at its place of business on Maui, Hawaii, the attached notice marked "Appendix."[37] Copies of the notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 20, after being duly signed by Respondent's authorized representative, shall be posted by Respondent immediately upon receipt thereof, and be maintained for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all places where notices to employees customarily are posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by Respondent to ensure that the notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(e) Notify the Regional Director in writing within 20 days from the date of this Order what steps Respondent has taken to comply.

IT IS FURTHER RECOMMENDED that the allegation concluded to be without merit is dismissed.

[34] All outstanding motions inconsistent with this recommended Order are denied. Cablevision Industries, Finger Lakes Division and Communication Workers of America. Cases 3–CA–12830 and 3–CA–13080

26 February 1987

DECISION AND ORDER

BY CHAIRMAN DOTSON AND MEMBERS JOHANSEN AND BABSON

On 30 October 1986 Administrative Law Judge Robert T. Snyder issued the attached decision. The Respondent filed exceptions and a supporting brief. The General Counsel and the Charging Party filed answering briefs.

The National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the decision and the record in light of the exceptions and briefs and has decided to affirm the judge's rulings, findings,[1] and conclusions and to adopt the recommended Order.

ORDER

The National Labor Relations Board adopts the recommended Order of the administrative law judge and orders that the Respondent, Cablevision Industries, Finger Lakes Division, Geneva, New York, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall take the action set forth in the Order.

[1] The Respondent has excepted to some of the judge's credibility findings. The Board's established policy is not to overrule an administrative law judge's credibility resolutions unless the clear preponderance of all the relevant evidence convinces us that they are incorrect. Standard Dry Wall Products, 91 NLRB 544 (1950), enfd. 188 F.2d 362 (3d Cir. 1951). We have carefully examined the record and find no basis for reversing the findings.

Michael Cooperman, Esq., for the General Counsel.
Sheldon Rosenberg, Esq. (Rosenberg & Ufberg, Esqs.), of Scranton, Pennsylvania, for the Respondent.
Stuart M. Pohl, Esq. (Lipsitz, Green, Fahringer, Roll, Schuller & James, Esqs.), of Buffalo, New York, for the Charging Party.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

ROBERT T. SNYDER, Administrative Law Judge. This case was heard by me on 14 and 15 May 1986 at Geneva, New York. The consolidated amended complaint, which issued on 2 July 1986, alleges that Cablevision Industries, Finger Lakes Division (Respondent, the Company, or Cablevision) failed and refused to execute a written contract embodying an agreement arrived at with the Communication Workers of America (the Union or CWA) as certified bargaining agent for an appropriate unit of its employees, and thereafter unilaterally granted pay increases not in conformity with the agreement and new clothing and shoe benefits, in violation of Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act. The consolidated amended complaint also alleges that Respondent threatened employees with the loss of profit-sharing plan benefits because they chose to be represented by the Union for purposes of collective bargaining, through specific language in its profit-sharing plan coerced employees in their activities on behalf of the Union by conditioning participation in the plan or being unrepresented by any union, and told union employees they would be granted wage increases less than they would have received if they had not selected the Union to represent them, in violation of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act.

In an answer filed 10 March 1986, Respondent denied the conclusionary allegations of the consolidated amended complaint. The parties were each represented by counsel at the hearing and were provided full opportunity to introduce relevant evidence, to examine and cross-examine witnesses, to make opening and closing statements, and to file briefs with me. The parties have filed timely briefs which have been carefully considered.

On my observation of the witnesses, the entire record in this proceeding, and the briefs filed herein, I make the following

FINDINGS OF FACT

I. JURISDICTIONAL FACTS

At all material times, Respondent, a New York State corporation with an office and place of business in Geneva, New York (Respondent's facility), has been engaged in the business of providing cable television services to the Finger Lakes Region of New York. Annually, Respondent, in the course and conduct of its business operations, receives gross revenues in excess of $100,000 and purchases services valued in excess of $50,000 which are furnished to Respondent at its Geneva, New York facility directly from points outside the State of New York. Respondent admits, and I find, that at all times material, it has been an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

II. THE LABOR ORGANIZATION INVOLVED

Respondent concedes, and I find, that at all times material the Union has been a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

III. THE ALLEGED UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES

A. Respondent's Refusal to Execute a Written Contract Embodying an Alleged Collective-Bargaining Agreement and its Subsequent Unilateral Grants of Benefits

A Stipulation for Certification Upon Consent Election having been executed by the parties on 30 July 1984, a representation election was conducted among Respondent's employees on 5 September 1984 in a unit consisting of all regular full-time installers, technicians, converter control employees, construction employees, and dispatchers. The Union won the election by a vote of 14 to 13 and, on 13 September 1984, was certified by the Regional Director as exclusive collective-bargaining representative of the employees in the unit described.

Collective-bargaining negotiations commenced in October 1984, and continued at the rate of approximately one meeting a month until June 1985. The union-negotiating team included CWA Representatives Tim Dailor and Ron Woods and employees Jeff Stowell and Tom Deane, with Dailor at first and then Woods, who missed some of the earlier meetings, serving as chief spokesman. The Cablevision negotiating team consisted of Attorney Sheldon Rosenberg and Director of Personnel Brain Connors, with Rosenberg acting as chief spokesman. In response to inquiries about his authority posed by Woods, Rosenberg explained that he was the chief negotiator and the person with the authority to reach tentative agreement.

According to the uncontradicted testimony of Woods, from time to time during the negotiations, Rosenberg made it clear that the only person he had to answer to at Cablevision was Alan Gerry, its president. On occasion, when the Union made specific proposals, Rosenberg responded that he would discuss the demand with Gerry, and when Rosenberg rejected union demands he noted that he had a discussion with Gerry on the matter.

Gerry was the sole incorporator of the Respondent corporation in 1974, and at all times material to this proceeding has been the sole shareholder, director, and chief executive officer of the Respondent primarily responsible for all the operations of the Company. Until removed by Gerry, by resolution he adopted on 13 March 1986 as sole shareholder, the other two directors of the Respondent corporation were Bette Nichols, his personal secretary and the corporate secretary, and John O'Neill, the Respondent's treasurer and chief financial officer. On 28 February 1985 Gerry arranged by resolution for the creation of the office of chairman and chief executive officer, which would excercise all powers formally exercised by the president. Gerry, previously president, was not elected to the new post, and Roger Turner was elected president. Another individual, Rodney Cornelius, was elected executive vice president.

During the course of negotiations, various proposals and counterproposals were exchanged. A union proposal submitted on 26 February 1985 included a provision for retention by employees of all existing benefits by providing for continuation of all rights and privileges now existing and not specifically altered, amended, or deleted by this agreement. This provision was not accepted by Respondent. The Company did propose to continue the present health, hospital, dental, and life insurance coverage or their equivalent.

According to Woods, the Cablevision negotiators were insisting on inclusion of their language in any contract to which they would agree. Rosenberg had also stated he was going to put all the Company's proposals together in one package. By the meeting held in April 1985, when Rosenberg advised that he would not be available during May, at Woods' insistence, Rosenberg agreed to submit a package to the Union through the mail.

A ninth negotiation session was held on 2 May 1985, attended by the persons previously described, as well as Federal Mediator Robert Bowling. According to Connors' typewritten notes of this session, the Union, through Bowling, asked for a complete contract by the following day. When Rosenberg advised this was not possible, Bowling advised that the Union was prepared to accept from the Respondent a final offer. A verbatim transcript of the notes at this point follows:

> Mr. Rosenberg advised the mediator that we would, in fact do this, and we therefore cancelled the meeting scheduled for 5/3/85. Mr. Rosenberg stated he would return to his office and prepare this document. He also advised the mediator that he would have to meet with the representatives from Cablevision to see if this particular package was satisfactory to them. A tentative meeting is set for Monday, 5/6/85 at 1:30 p.m. Assuming that the drafted copy is available at this time and is approved by the Cablevision representatives, the item will be mailed to the union and federal mediator on Tuesday. Subsequent to their receiving this document, another date will then be set for a negotiation session. Mr. Rosenberg will be out of the country during the next month, however, his partner, Mr. Ufsberg, [sic] will be available to come to this session. The mediator was advised that if this is to be our final offer, we will not change any items in the document which is to be prepared. [Emphasis added.]

Rosenberg had the document prepared and submitted it to the Union on 7 May 1985. It is entitled "Final Offer." In a letter dated 7 May 1985, which accompanied the submission, Rosenberg, after stating that he was enclosing the Company's final offer in accordance with the Federal mediator's statement to him on 2 May that the Union wanted a complete and final offer to take to the employees, goes on to note that the offer is for a 3-year contract and contains a large increase in the first year. That increase was described by Woods as being at least two times the industry average and by Connors as 3-1/2 times larger than general wage increases in the country at that time. The proposal's average increase was between 16 and 17 percent in the first year and 1-1/2 percent in each of the next 2 years. Connors described this offer as being high to buy the working clauses of the Company's proposal. The management-rights clause in particular, among others, appears to have been very broad and comprehensive. In another clause, the Company retained the right to contract out all or part of the work performed by bargaining unit employees. Neither did the final offer contain a union-security or dues-checkoff clause. Paragraph 29 entitled "Duration" provides, in part: "This Agreement shall go into full force and effect when it is ratified by the Union and the Company."

The next bargaining session was held on 20 June 1985. Woods, Dailor, and Stowell attended for the Union, Rosenberg and Connors attended for the Company, and Mediator Bowling was also present. The parties were in separate rooms. According to Woods' uncontradicted testimony, through the mediator Woods inquired of the company team if there was any room for continued negotiations or if they felt as though this was it. Bowling and Rosenberg came into the Union's room. Rosenberg said this was a final offer, and as far as he was concerned, as the chief spokesman for the Company, negotiations were concluded. Woods then signed the final offer document and said, "[It] looks like we have agreed and that we are prepared to put that into effect." Rosenberg asked what he meant by that. Woods replied, "[W]ell as far as we were concerned, you're not going to go any further, we're willing to accept this agreement." Rosenberg then asked if in fact the membership was going to have this ratified. After first disputing Rosenberg's right to that information, the necessity of membership approval and its relevance, Woods did inform Rosenberg that it was the Union's policy to take the agreement to the membership for ratification. Rosenberg said fine, got up, and started out of the room. Woods asked "[W]here are you going?" Rosenberg said, "[C]all me when you get it ratified." Woods said, "[L]ook you've given the Union a final offer. I signed that final offer. I'm not leaving here without your signature on here as a final offer or a joint signed stipulation as to what this agreement represents."

Rosenberg then agreed to sign the document. He wrote "Tentative agreement subject to ratification by Union membership & Co B of D" and signed his name below. Again Rosenberg got up to leave. Woods said "[W]ait a minute, what does this mean?" Rosenberg said, "[I]t means exactly what it says." Woods then said, "[W]ell, as far as I'm concerned, this is news. You've told us all through these negotiations that you were empowered to sign and reach tentative agreement for the Company and now you're saying it has to be ratified by the Board of Directors?" Rosenberg said, "[T]hat is Alan." Woods asked, "Alan meaning Alan Gerry, President of the Company?" Rosenberg said,"[Y]es." Woods asked, "[W]ell, but why? You told me that prior to putting this package together that it was your intent to meet with Mr. Gerry before you gave it to us. It's no different. Why are you taking it back to Mr. Gerry." Rosenberg said, "[D]on't worry. That's a mere formality. I'm going to recommend it and as far as I am concerned, that's all that's necessary." And with that, the meeting concluded.

Woods then explained his comment about Rosenberg having previously mentioned taking the package to Alan Gerry. Prior to Rosenberg sending him the final offer, when Rosenberg said he was going to put it together, he said he would then show it to Alan Gerry first before he sent it to the Union to get Gerry's okay on it as a collective document. Rosenberg said that most of the items he had discussed with President Gerry in the past, but Gerry wanted to see them as a collective document.

According to Woods, the meeting of 20 June 1985 was the first time that either Rosenberg or Connors had ever mentioned the board of directors. Although Woods was aware of paragraph 29 of the final offer, which referred, inter alia, to ratification by the Company as a condition precedent to its going into full force and effect, it was his understanding based on Rosenberg's statements during negotiations that the reference was to Gerry's approval, and that such approval or ratification was already completed prior to submission of the final offer to the Union.

Rosenberg did not testify at the hearing. Woods impressed me as a thorough and thoughtful person who made every effort to be as careful and accurate as he could be in the presentation of his narrative and in his responses on cross-examination. I credit his attribution of comments to Rosenberg on 20 June and earlier meetings that Rosenberg had or would discuss the Company's proposals, in particular the Company's final offer, with Alan Gerry. To a large extent, Connors' notes of the 2 May negotiation session corroborate that Rosenberg planned to obtain preliminary approval of that offer from the responsible company representatives. I infer that the key representative whose approval was necessary was Gerry and that, in conformity with Woods' testimony, Rosenberg did clear the proposal with Gerry.

A few days after the 20 June meeting the employees in the bargaining unit met and voted to reject the agreement which Woods and Rosenberg had signed. Woods telephoned Connors to inform him of the rejection. Connors stated he was very disappointed, he wanted to get the negotiations over with, and he asked what could be done specifically to get the negotiations completed. Woods told him about the two items which had led to the rejection. One was the Company's proposal on subcontracting of their work and the second was the absence of a payroll deduction of dues for those employees who chose to be members of the Union. Connors asked what was the next move. Woods said to get back to the bargaining table. Connors said, "[L]et's do that as quickly as we can, let's get a meeting and get this contract completed."

Mediator Bowling set up another meeting for 27 June. At this meeting, attended by the same parties as on 20 June, Woods and the other union people were in a separate room. Woods asked the mediator to take the two items he had previously discussed with Connors to the management team. Rosenberg and Connors then came back and Rosenberg said, "I've got the message from the Mediator and the answer is no. A final offer is a final offer, because once I give you my final offer. I don't change my final offer." Woods replied that he understood that but "there's been a rejection and what we're proposing is something that we feel will get the contract ratified and accepted." Rosenberg said, "I repeat, I never change my final offer; that's not the way I negotiate." Woods said, "[N]ever is a long time," and Rosenberg said, "[O]h well, if there's been a prolonged strike, then I may, but under these circumstances I never change my final offer." Woods then said, "[L]ook, this is a first contract, there's been this rejection, what we're trying to do is get it completed. From the Union's standpoint, this language, this contract is totally one-sided anyway, it's all of your proposals, the record reflects this with very minor exceptions, and, as far as this Union is concerned, you got the language you wanted and we should put this into effect with these minor changes. And I'm very seriously requesting that you do that." Connors interrupted and asked for a company caucus and the two left.

They shortly returned and Rosenberg said, "[O]kay, we'll take your two items back to Alan to see what he says and then we will get back to you." Woods said, "[W]ell, look, why don't you call Alan on the phone and talk to him about it so that we can get this wrapped up." Rosenberg said, "Alan is in Florida, and he's out of telephone contact." However, he would be back by the following Monday, 1 July, and they would meet with him and Rosenberg agreed to give a call as to what the Company's response was. Woods said that the Union had a meeting scheduled for 2 July when they intended to put the results of this meeting up to another ratification vote and they would really appreciate his answer before then. Rosenberg said, "[D]on't worry, I'll get back to you Monday."

Woods did not hear from Rosenberg on either Monday, 1 July, or Tuesday, 2 July. He was in Buffalo on negotiations and was unsuccessful in reaching Rosenberg and Connors. Woods did learn on 2 July from President Robert Flavin of Local 1170, CWA, who had received a phone call from Connors just prior to the ratification meeting, that the Company had rejected the two items and was also unilaterally going to put the wage portion of its proposal into effect and would only be available to continue negotiations on other items in their final offer.

At the union meeting on 2 July, the Union ratified the Company's final offer. The next day Woods called Connors to tell him that the contract was ratified. Woods contacted Connors because in his experience Connors was easier to reach then Rosenberg, who was away from his office a lot. Connors responded, "[G]ood, that means its over, it's completed, we can put this to bed." Connors asked, "[W]hat was the next step." Woods said, "[J]ust send me two signed copies of the complete document, by Alan, Sheldon, or yourself, whoever is going to sign for the Company. I will sign both and return one to you." Connors asked Woods to call Sheldon (Rosenberg) for those kind of details. Woods suggested they both call Rosenberg and Connors agreed. When Woods was unsuccessful in reaching Rosenberg by telephone he sent a letter. In the letter, dated 8 July 1985 and addressed to Connors, Woods confirmed their telephone conversation of 3 July and the fact of membership ratification of the tentative agreement on 2 July, advising that the effective date should be 1 July, and requesting that two signed copies of the agreement, to be executed by Respondent, be returned to Woods.

Woods had no further conversations with either Connors or Rosenberg. About 14 July 1985, Woods received a letter dated 12 July with an attachment from Rosenberg informing him that Rosenberg had received a communication from Cablevision's board of directors advising him that they had rejected and would not ratify the Company's final offer made on 7 May 1985 until the following changes (set forth in the attachment) to the final offer were made and agreed upon and ratified by the union membership and company board of directors. In the letter Rosenberg asked Woods to let him know if and when the membership ratifies the amended final offer. He also advised of the Company's availability for continued negotiations and to explain the board of directors' resolution. Attached to the letter were 2-1/3 pages of changes to be made to the final offer. Among them were changes removing the clause permitting contracting out of all bargaining unit work from the grievance and arbitration procedure; restricting job classification seniority for purposes, among others, of layoff and recall to only one of the three locations encompassed by the certified bargaining unit, i.e., wherever the employee works as a regular full-time employee; adding a right to make all transfers of employees to other jobs and locations, now including permanent transfers, irrespective of seniority; severely restricting the jurisdiction of the arbitrator to review company disciplinary actions; and adding a fourth year to the agreement during which wages would increase only minimally.

No further meetings were held and, ultimately, the Union filed its initial unfair labor charge in Case 3–CA–12830 on 6 August 1985 alleging a refusal to bargain in good faith by the foregoing conduct.

Respondent's sole witness was Personnel Director Connors. Attorney Rosenberg did not testify. Neither did Alan Gerry. Connors, initially called as a witness by the General Counsel, acknowledged that, on occasion during the course of negotiations, he reported back to Alan Gerry what was going on at negotiations. Connors also noted that at the beginning of negotiations a meeting was held, attended by Ed Whalen, at the time Cablevision vice president and the company official to whom he reported,[1] Gerry, Rosenberg, and himself, to review the Company's position. Asked twice whether the Company's proposals were formulated and discussed at this meeting or drafted based on the outcome of the meeting, Connors was evasive, first responding that "there was a meeting to discuss how we would proceed" (Tr. 178) and then responding that "Mr. Rosenberg subsequently drafted some proposals." (Tr. 179.)

It was Connors' testimony that Gerry was informed as to the status of negotiations not only by himself, but he assumed Gerry was kept apprised by his superiors, Fred Schulte and Roger Turner, president since 28 February 1985, including about the wage package in the Company's 7 May final offer, because "that's what they normally do." (Tr. 220.) But also according to Connors, Turner probably was aware of the contents of the Company's final offer but "not necessarily" Gerry. Connors also agreed, after reviewing his notes of the negotiation meeting of 27 June 1985, that he met with Gerry on 30 June to discuss, inter alia, the state of contract negotiations.

During his telephone conversation with Ron Woods on 3 July, when Woods told him the Company's final offer had been ratified, Connors made no reference to that proposal having been withdrawn. Connors also agreed that the Company's wage package, which was unilaterally put into effect on 2 July, had to be approved by Gerry before it was implemented.

On his examination by Respondent's counsel, Connors testified that during April, May, June, and July 1985, Gerry was involved in negotiations for the purchase by [1] At the time of the hearing, Connors reported to Fred Schulte, director of operations, Whalen having left the Company in the interim.

Respondent of cable systems located in Florida, Maryland, and Michigan, and more recently systems in Pennsylvania and Tennessee. Those involved in the negotiations for the Company have been Gerry and Rodney Cornelius, executive vice president.

Although Connors at first claimed on redirect examination by the General Counsel that at the very first negotiation session, in October 1984 when the parties made their ground rules for negotiations, the Company mentioned that any agreement reached was subject to ratification by a board of directors (Tr. 257), later on recross-examination by Respondent's counsel, Connors, in contradiction of his earlier claim, said that the understanding reached at the first meeting was that "anything we decided between us was tentative pending ratification by the Company and by the employees." (Tr. 267.) This was similar to the language which was later incorporated as article 29 into the Company's final offer.

Respondent's minutes related to company rejection of its own proposal following union ratification disclose the following: At a special meeting of the board of directors held at the Company's headquarters in Liberty, New York, on 8 July 1985 at 10 a.m. with Gerry, O'Neill, Cornelius, and Nichols in attendance, a resolution was adopted that, for matters pertaining to the operational activities of the Company and, in particular, any matters involving the negotiations being conducted in regard to the C.W.A. and Finger Lakes Division of the Company, Roger Turner, president, and Fred Schulte, director of operations, shall sit as members of the board of directors. Then, at another special meeting of the board of directors held later in the day, on motion made by Turner and seconded by Schulte, a resolution was unanimously passed rejecting the Company's final offer because a union official offered Dave Johnson, an employee, a $5000 bribe to vote for ratification of the final offer at the Union's meeting on 2 July 1985, and because the Company's negotiating team went beyond their authority. The resolution then went on to list those changes, previously described, which would be required to be made, agreed upon, and ratified by the union membership before the board of directors would ratify the final offer.

Among "facts" given the board of directors, recited early in the resolution, was one reporting that the Company's negotiating team did not report regularly and in detail about the offers and counteroffers made by them and the Union in contract negotiations. Another recited that on 1 July 1985 after the board of directors met for the purpose of examining the final offer, only discussing the wage and fringe benefits parts of the offer, it agreed that because there was no disagreement on the wage and fringe benefits items, the board would unilaterally implement those elements, but would reserve the right to examine and ratify, or not ratify, the remaining details of the final offer. A third recited that both members of the Company's team, Rosenberg and Connors, strongly recommended that every detail of the final offer of 7 May 1985 be ratified by the board.

Other conduct on the part of Respondent alleged as violative of its bargaining duty includes certain unilateral changes in wages and terms and conditions of employment which followed the Company's refusal to execute the final offer.

According to employees Stowell and Deane, some of the unit employees, approximately half of them, received a wage increase in January 1986. Neither of them received a raise at that time. They believed the raises were only provided to those employees who were not yet at the top of their scale for their particular job classification. Under cross-examination, Deane, employed since 1979, testified that if an employee was due a raise under the Company's wage plan, it was received in January. A review of the General Counsel's exhibit documenting employee salary history shows that, effective 8 July 1985, each of the unit employees received an increase and, effective either 3 or 13 January 1986, 15 of the 26 employees received another raise.

Under article 25, entitled "Wages," of the Company's final offer, ratified by the union members in the bargaining unit on 2 July, each job position had a rate shown for each of 3 years with three different rates shown for each year depending on whether the employee in the position was in the first, second, or third year on job. As explained by Woods, without contradiction, the increase each year would take effect for each employee in a particular position on his anniversary date in that job. Although the Company did put the different increases due employees in each position under its final offer into effect in or close to what would have been the first year of the contract, near the beginning of July 1985, it gave further increases to certain of its employees uniformly in January 1986, and not on their anniversary dates of employment as called for in the final offer. In the cases of Deane, Stowell, and a few other employees, because of their length of employment, the raises they received in July 1985 placed them immediately at the third-year-in-job top rate, and the Company refrained from granting the second-year increase to them in January 1986, unlike all other employees who were not yet at the third-year rate. By granting raises in January 1986 to 15 employees the Company apparently continued but modified a practice predating its bargaining relationship[2] and failed to comply with the terms of its final offer.

Stowell and Deane also testified to their receipt, along with all other unit employees, in January or February 1986 of winter outerwear jackets for use while working for the Company, but which they kept at their homes. The Company had never previously supplied any work clothes to its employees. In response to a General Counsel subpoena, Connors noted in writing that winter jackets were purchased in these months for the Company's northern system field personnel employed at 10 different locations, including 26 employed at Finger Lakes, at a total cost of $6055.

Stowell also testified without contradiction that in January 1986 the Company started to supply the unit employees with a boot allowance by giving $50 a year toward the purchase of a pair of work boots to any employee who wanted it.

[2] According to Connors, prior to 1986 the Company had a practice of giving employees wage increases twice a year, including one in January, but in January 1986 this was changed to once a year in January.

The evidence showed that at an employee meeting called by the Company in early November 1984, at the office garage in Geneva near the end of the workday, addressed by Connors and attended by another management official, Connors asked if there were any questions about what the Company could do for them. An unidentified employee asked if the Company would supply jackets and Connors said that he would look into it and get back to them at a later time. At a subsequent meeting of the employees called in January 1986, Connors, accompanied by another management official, said the Company was going to supply jackets and took down the sizes of the employees who wrote their names on a list.

Connors disputed the statement attributed to him by Deane asking employees what the Company could do for them, claiming that he asked "if there were any problems or something like that I'd be happy to help them" (Tr. 259), but Deane stood by it during vigorous cross-examination, even concluding emphatically in response to one question asked about what he had gathered from Connors' remark that "they had something for us." (Tr. 106.) Connors, as noted previously, was evasive and contradictory in his testimony, he also testified in conclusionary form instead of reciting the substance of conversations as he recalled them (see, e.g., Tr. 298–300), and I credit Deane in his recital of this matter.

The Company's final offer contained no provisions pursuant to which the Company agreed to provide clothing for use on the job. Neither did the Company offer any evidence, nor does the record show, that Respondent gave prior notice to or offered to bargain with the Union about these benefits.

B. Respondent's Alleged Threats of Loss of Benefits

Independent of its alleged refusal to execute the proposal ratified by the Union's members and the unilateral changes it made in terms and conditions of employment, Respondent is alleged to have engaged in certain other conduct coercive of employee rights under Section 8(a)(1).

At the November meeting previously described, employee Stowell testified, Connors told the assembled employees that the contract negotiations were stalled because of the Union. He went on to say that if an employee were to be covered by a union contract the Company would no longer make him a participant in its profit-sharing plan. When Stowell asked Connors to explain this further, Connors said that the employee covered by a union contract would retain his share in the plan and interest on that share would continue to be added but that the Company would no longer put yearly contributions on his behalf into the profit-sharing plan. Deane corroborated Stowell as to these remarks by Connors at the November meeting.

According to a composite of testimony by Stowell and Deane, at another employee meeting called by the Company in the first or second week of December 1985, addressed this time by Alan Gerry and also attended by Connors and another management official, Gerry mentioned that it had been quite a while since he had been up to talk to them.[3] He said he had to be careful what he said because he did not want any problems with the Union and any lawsuit. He was there against the wishes of the company attorney but he wanted to come up and talk to them anyway, face to face, and have an informational-type meeting. Stowell could not recall specific remarks, but Deane said Gerry talked of the 5-percent increase that other people in the Company were getting versus the 1-1/2 percent that they, the unit employees, were not getting because of the Union. After Gerry's general remarks, Deane, in a group with other employees, asked Gerry about the profit-sharing plan. Gerry said that once, a long time ago, he wrote a clause in the profit-sharing plan that if anyone was represented by a union-type situation he could not have them be a participant in the plan.

The Cablevision Industries profit-sharing plan and trust, in full force and effect at all times material to this proceeding, in article 3.1 entitled "Eligibility" provides: "Members of a collective bargaining unit will not be eligible for participation in this Plan."

According to Stowell, at the company meeting held early in January 1986, Connors repeated his earlier remarks about the profit-sharing plan, saying that "if you're covered by a union contract you will not be a participant in the plan." The other company official, who was probably Schulte, read figures from a piece of paper he was holding, comparing the 5-percent raise the rest of the employees in the Company were getting with the 1-1/2 percent listed in the Company's final offer. This official said the average employee would be losing around $530. He also said, "[I]f you're not a participant in the profit sharing plan you would lose approximately eight hundred and some dollars a year because you're part of a contract in the Union."

Connors acknowleged that he spoke with the employees in the bargaining unit concerning the profit-sharing plan. At first recalling his remarks as having been made shortly after the bargaining session of 27 June 1985, after being refreshed that they probably occurred at the meeting at which there was a discussion of jackets and/or boots, Connors then said he dealt with the plan at employee meetings in November 1985 and January 1986. It was Connors' testimony that the subject came up for the very first time during the course of the negotiations by way of a question by one of the employees. He was asked what the status of the profit-sharing plan was with the contract, and he told the employees at that time that it had never been brought up, that it was not part of the package, that it had not been incorporated into the proposed contract being negotiated, and that the way it stood anybody in the bargaining unit would not be receiving future profit-sharing contributions. They would not lose any moneys that were in the plan for them and the accrued interest that their shares were earning would be given to them. Although Connors agreed there was further discussion following his remark, his testimony here was vague. Connors further testified that at the January 1986 meeting, a similar question from an employee elicited a similar response. When asked if he had made any reference to the profit-sharing plan article which excludes bargaining unit employees from coverage, Connors said he did not know whether he had, he did not remember, he was aware of that article at the time, but he did not feel it was necessary to do so because the subject matter had never been raised in the negotiations.

Connors also testified that the company meeting called among employees in January 1986 was held after raises to some employees in the unit, as well as to other employees, had been received. According to Connors, one of the unit employees present said he understood that some of the other employees received a 5-percent increase if they had been at maximum status on their step on their scale. Connors explained that this in fact did happen; the other employees of the Company did receive a 5-percent adjusted wage increase. Another employee asked what would happen if the contract was in effect and Connors said that there was no provision for the 5-percent increase in the contract. The first year there was a very large increase; the second year of the contract called for a 1-1/2-percent increase.

I credit the employee witnesses, Stowell and Deane, who corroborated each other that Connors, in November 1985 and January 1986, told employees that if they were covered by a union contract they would lose their continued participation in the Company's profit-sharing plan. Gerry did not testify. Accordingly, the remarks attributed to him by Deane at a December 1985 meeting, in which Gerry referred to the clause excluding members of a collective-bargaining unit from participation in the profit-sharing plan, are credited. They show that the basis for Connors' and the other company official's remarks dealing with the unit employees' exclusion from further participation in the plan made at both the November 1985 and January 1986 meetings was the plan's written prohibition and not the alleged failure of the union negotiators to raise the issue of continued coverage during the negotiation sessions. Connors, in particular, who at first failed to deal with the anomaly that the Company offered and granted certain benefits, jackets, and a work shoe allowance, not provided for in the Company's final offer, while it refused to continue participation in the profit-sharing plan allegedly because it was not included in the final offer, finally relied on the plan's written exclusion for the Company's announcements at the three employee meetings that employees would no longer be receiving the plan's benefits. (Tr. 314, LL. 13–17.)

It is also clear, and I find, contrary to Connors' interpretation, that the company spokesmen at the January 1986 meeting in particular, independent of employee questions, contrasted the minimal increases unit employees would receive under the Company's final offer with the more generous increases nonunit employees not represented by the union were then being granted. The remarks attributed to Gerry at the December meeting, and to the company official at the January 1986 meeting, who graphically portrayed the financial losses unit employees were incurring by adhering to the Union through the negotiations and its breakdown since July 1985, reinforce my findings in this regard.

C. Analysis and Conclusions

Dealing first with the Company's alleged refusal to bargain, the basic issue in this case is whether the parties had arrived at a collective-bargaining agreement when the union membership ratified the Company's final offer on 2 July 1985 before the Company had removed any portion of its offer from the bargaining table. So long as the Company's offer remained outstanding, the Union's acceptance of it, evidenced by the 2 July ratification by its membership, would, under normal principles of contract law applicable here, ripen into a fully enforceable agreement, provided the Company's offer was not subject to any condition subsequent of which the respective parties had notice. The condition subsequent which, Respondent urges, forstalled agreement was the known requirement that the Company's offer was subject to approval by its board of directors. Respondent argues that once that board rejected the tentative accord, agreement was not achieved and the Company could insist on union acquiescence with changes in certain paragraphs of the offer contained in the board's resolution of 8 July 1985. The Union having refused to agree to the changes insisted upon, Respondent finally argues it has not violated its duty to bargain.

The General Counsel and the Union counter Respondent's defense by urging that the actions of the Company's negotiators bound Respondent to the terms of its final offer by evidence that the Union's negotiators were led to believe by the Company's negotiators that final approval of the terms of the final offer had been obtained from the necessary company principal and, accordingly, that the negotiators' approval thus represented final approval of the agreement.

These countervailing contentions thus place in issue whether the Company's negotiators bound Respondent under the doctrine of apparent authority. Notwithstanding prior reservations by Attorney Rosenberg of the right of Respondent's board of directors—in reality Respondent's chief executive officer and chairman, Alan Gerry—to approve and ratify any tentative agreement reached by Rosenberg, Rosenberg and Connors did manifest by their actions that such approval had indeed been obtained when Rosenberg executed the agreement.

The Board has recently enunciated the governing principles in the following language:

> It is well established that a principal may limit its agent's negotiating authority by affirmative, clear, and timely notice to the other party that any tentative agreement is contingent upon subsequent ratification. E.g., University of Bridgeport, 229 NLRB 1074 (1977); Aptos Seascape Corp., 194 NLRB 540 (1971). An agent whose authority depends upon such a contingency may have the apparent authority, however, to convey its satisfaction. Walnut Hill Convalescent Center, 260 NLRB 258 (1982).

Ben Franklin National Bank, 278 NLRB 986 fn. 2 (1986).

How may an agent become clothed with apparent authority? "Apparent authority results when the principal does something or permits the agent to do something which reasonably leads another to believe that the agent had the authority he purported to have." Hawaiian Paradise Park Corp. v. Friendly Broadcasting Co., 414 F.2d 750, 756 (9th Cir. 1969).

Applying these principles to the facts found herein, I conclude that under the circumstances of this case Rosenberg had the apparent authority to convey the Company's final offer, which was not withdrawn before the union membership subsequently ratified it, thereby resulting in a binding agreement.

Preliminarily, I conclude that the principal for Respondent, on whose behalf Rosenberg and Connors were employed as agents to negotiate the collective-bargaining agreement, was Alan Gerry and not the board of directors. The evidence is convincing that it was Gerry who controlled and determined the company positions in bargaining and whose approval was necessary before an agreement could be obtained. Rosenberg clarified his use of the term "Company" at the first bargaining session and in the company offer a number of times, most significantly at the 20 June session when Woods sought such clarification. The "Company" in article 29 and the "Co B of D" written in by Rosenberg above his signature on the Company's 7 May 1985 proposal in June both meant Gerry, the sole shareholder and chief operating officer. Neither Nichols nor O'Neill, the other two company directors until their removal by Gerry in March 1986, seemingly played any role in the preparation of the Company's proposals or negotiating posture or strategy. Although Roger Turner was elected president on 28 February 1985, Gerry, then as chairman, retained all the powers he previously exercised as president, and was clearly the decisive figure in Respondent's decision-making process, which Rosenberg repeatedly acknowledged.

I further conclude that Rosenberg, by his statements and conduct during the bargaining sessions, as well as Connors in his conversations with Woods, reasonably led Woods and the other union representatives to believe that Rosenberg had the authority from Gerry to conclude the agreement by submission of the Company's final offer. Woods, whose testimony has been credited, reported that Rosenberg, who did not testify, told him from time to time he had discussed various union demands with Gerry. Connors testified that Gerry participated in the meeting at which company proposals were first discussed and personally approved the wage portion of the Company's final offer, which was unilaterally implemented in early July 1985. Connors also briefed Gerry periodically and, significantly, met with him on 30 June to discuss recent developments with the Union. Connors also regularly reported on the negotiations to his immediate superiors, Turner and Schulte, who, in turn, would have kept Gerry apprised as they would "normally do." Woods also testified credibly and without contradiction that at the 2 May 1985 bargaining session Rosenberg informed him that he would obtain Gerry's prior approval of the Company's final offer as a collective document before forwarding it to the Union. Connors' own bargaining notes essentially corroborate this conversation by referring to "Cablevision representatives" whose prior approval was a condition of the company package being forwarded to the Union and the Federal mediator. When, at the 20 June 1985 meeting, Rosenberg acknowledged that he had expressed such an intent to Woods and then assured Woods there was no problem in obtaining Gerry's approval, Woods acted reasonably in expressing on the record his understanding that Gerry's approval or ratification was already completed prior to Rosenberg's submission of the final offer to the Union.

Against this array of testimony, Respondent's counsel would have the Board believe that, because Gerry was involved in personally negotiating acquisitions of new out-of-state cable operations, he had no time to review the Company's offer prior to 8 July 1985. I am not prepared to so find. At their 20 June 1985 session Rosenberg did not dispute Woods' attributing to him a statement that he had intended to meet with Gerry before giving the final offer to the Union. Neither did Connors or Rosenberg in subsequent conversations with Woods convey any sense that the Company had either withdrawn or changed any provision of its offer. At the 27 June session, Rosenberg finally said he would take the two items involving subcontracting and dues checkoff back to Gerry; Rosenberg said nothing about the Company's reexamination or rejection of any other portion of its final offer. None of these conversations would have led Woods to believe that Gerry had not been, or would not continue to be, available to review the agents' conduct at the bargaining table. By seeking to create a factual ambiguity at the hearing as to the authority of its negotiators to reach agreement because of a supposed inability of Respondent's principal to timely consult its agents, which it failed to raise during the material evidentiary interchanges between the parties, Respondent's defense must fail. Absent clear notice to the contrary, Rosenberg, as agent, must be deemed to have had apparent authority to bind his principal to the terms of the Company's final offer. See University of Bridgeport, supra.

Apart from the foregoing, all of the circumstances surrounding Respondent's withdrawal from the tentative agreement its negotiators had reached are convincing that permitting Gerry to disapprove the agreement would undermine collective bargaining, and permit Respondent to effectively undermine the Union's support and destroy its majority status.[4] Although Respondent admittedly obtained the contract language it wanted at the cost of a large first-year increase in wages, it subsequently reneged on putting the language into effect but unilaterally granted the onerous increases and other fringe benefits and then, in January 1986, pointedly contrasted the extremely limited second-year contract increases it granted only in part with the more generous percentage increases it distributed to all of the nonunion complement. In its 8 July 1985 resolution, Respondent's board of directors not only reneged on its negotiators' prior agreement, but it retrogressed to proposals which were substantially more onerous than the ones it had insisted on since early in the negotiation process, from restricting and limiting resort to arbitration and seniority rights in significant areas to adding a fourth contract year at nominal increases. Respondent could have reasonably anticipated union rejection of these changes and the resulting encouragement of employee dissatisfaction with the Union's bargaining role which these company actions would induce. Even the reasons the board of directors advanced for rejecting the tentative agreement evidence a lack of legitimacy. Reliance was placed on a claim of a bribe for the vote of a single employee at the Union's ratification meeting and the company negotiating team having exceeded its authority. At the hearing, and in its brief, the Respondent did not assert or argue either ground in its defense to the complaint. The first would appear to be irrelevant to the issues framed at trial and there is no claim that the company negotiators ever made the Union aware of any limitation on their authority to enter a tentative agreement.

Finally, two officials who previously had no formal role in the negotiations were added on 8 July 1985 to Respondent's board for the sole purpose of reviewing the final offer in what appears to have been an attempt to insulate Gerry from the consequences of company rejection of its final offer. Connors' credible testimony about his regular consultations with and reports to these two officials, Turner and Schulte, during negotiations also conflicts with the factual claim made in the resolution of this special meeting that the company negotiating team failed to report regularly as to the progress of the negotiations.

As noted by the Board under similar circumstances, to fail to find that Rosenberg as agent had the apparent authority to bind Gerry as his principal to the terms of the Company's final offer "would effectively mean that an undisputed negotiator for the Respondent had made a comprehensive, unconditional final contract offer in bad faith, without any intention to be bound thereby." Ben Franklin National Bank, supra.

Accordingly, I conclude as alleged that the parties reached full and complete agreement with respect to terms and conditions of employment of the unit employees, embodied in the Company's final offer, when the union membership ratified that offer on 2 July 1985.[5]

The Union continued to remain the certified bargaining representative of the unit employees after Respondent reneged on its own final offer in violation of its obligation under the Act. The certification year could not terminate while that agreement remained unexecuted and rejected. Neither has Respondent claimed in this proceeding that the Union has lost its majority support although there was a hint that such a claim might be advanced. (See Tr. 225.) Such a claim, of course, would be unavailing given the Company's refusal to bargain. Thus, when the Company granted wage increases to unit employees in early January 1986, not in conformity with the terms of the agreement by which I have concluded it was bound, and granted clothing benefits and shoe allowances to the unit employees in January and February 1986, all without prior notice to, or consultation with, the Union, Respondent committed further violations of its bargaining duty under Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act. It is no defense to these acts to claim, as the Company does, that the jackets were purchased for all of its northern system field personnel or that it was an employee inquiry which instigated their purchase and distribution. Respondent owed a duty not to undermine the Union's status as exclusive bargaining agent by continuing to negotiate with it on items which were not part of its final offer.

Respondent also restrained and coerced its employees in their activities on behalf of the Union in violation of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act by threatening them with the loss of continued participation in the Company's profit-sharing plan because they had chosen the Union to represent them in collective bargaining and were seeking a union contract, and by maintaining language in its profit-sharing plan which precludes, on its face, participation by "members of a collective-bargaining unit." Precision Founders, 278 NLRB 544 (1986); Niagara Wire, 240 NLRB 1326, 1327–1328 (1979). As noted, the plan restriction, conditioning eligibility on the unrepresented status of employees, was relied on in remarks to employees in November 1985 and January 1986 and was publicized by Gerry himself at a December 1985 meeting at which, on one of his rare visits to the Company's Geneva facility, Gerry also stressed the contrast in salary increases between the generous 5-percent increases being granted nonunit employees and the much lower 1-1/2-percent contract increase contained in the Company's final proposal not yet in place because of the breakdown in negotiations.

This emphasis on the losses in salary the employees were suffering because of their union adherence was also stressed in the Company's January 1986 meeting when figures were presented to them so the employees could see clearly how much their union affiliation was costing them. Such comments interfered with the employees' rights to select and retain the Union as their collective-bargaining representative under Section 7 of the Act, in violation of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. The Respondent, Cablevision Industries, Finger Lakes Division, is an employer within the meaning of Section 2(2) of the Act, engaged in commerce and in an industry affecting commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

2. Communication Workers of America is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

[5] Although the complaint alleges that agreement was reached about 20 June 1985, rather than 2 July 1985 as I have concluded herein, that discrepancy is not a material deviation between the complaint and the proofs, Respondent has not objected and, most important, Respondent is on notice that the union membership's ratification and Woods' subsequent request for execution of the agreement are key elements in the General Counsel's claim of a refusal to bargain.

3. On 13 September 1984 the Union was certified as the exclusive bargaining representative of the employees employed in the following described unit appropriate for the purposes of collective bargaining:

> All regular full-time installers, technicians, converter control employees, construction employees and dispatchers employed by the Employer at R.D.2, Route 5 and 20, Geneva, New York, and 5585 Buffalo Extension, Canandaigua, New York and 515 No. Main Street, Newark, New York; excluding all engineers, customer service representatives, outside sales employees, clerical employees, and professional employees, guards and supervisors as defined in the Act, and all other employees of the Employer.

4. On 2 July 1985 Respondent and the Union reached agreement on the terms of a collective-bargaining agreement covering the terms and conditions of employment of the employees of Respondent in the above-described bargaining unit.

5. As a consequence of the agreement reached by the parties, Respondent incurred the statutory obligation to execute a written contract incorporating that agreement but, since about 12 July 1985 and at all times thereafter, has failed and refused to do so.

6. By refusing since about 12 July 1985 to execute the written contract incorporating the agreement reached between it and the Union, Respondent has failed and refused to bargain collectively and in good faith with the certified representative of its employees, and thereby has engaged in, and is engaging in, unfair labor practices within the meaning of Sections 8(a)(1) and (5) and 8(d) of the Act.

7. By granting pay increases to unit employees about 7 January 1986 not calculated in accordance with the terms of the agreement reached with the Union, by granting a new benefit to unit employees consisting of a winter jacket in January and February 1986, and by granting another new benefit to unit employees consisting of an allowance for the purchase of work boots in January 1986, all granted without prior notice to the Union and without having afforded the Union an opportunity to negotiate and bargain with respect to such benefits and their effects on the unit employees, Respondent has engaged in, and is engaging in, unfair labor practices within the meaning of Section 8(a)(1) and (5) of the Act.

8. By threatening employees in the bargaining unit described above with the loss of profit-sharing plan benefits because they chose to be represented by the Union for purposes of collective bargaining, by maintaining and continuing a provision in its profit-sharing plan and trust conditioning participation in the plan on being unrepresented by any union, and by informing its unit employees that they would be granted wage increases less than they would have been granted had they not selected the Union as their collective-bargaining representative because the agreement reached with the Union provides for a lesser increase than would be granted to employees employed outside the bargaining unit, Respondent has engaged in, and is engaging in, unfair labor practices within the meaning of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act.

THE REMEDY

Having found that Respondent has engaged in certain unfair labor practices, I shall recommend that Respondent be ordered to cease and desist and to take certain affirmative action necessary to effectuate the purposes and policies of the Act.

Having further found that Respondent has engaged in and is engaging in unfair labor practices within the meaning of Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act by, inter alia, failing and refusing to execute a written agreement reached, I shall recommend that Respondent be ordered to cease and desist and to sign the agreement forthwith. I shall also recommend further that Respondent be ordered to give effect to the terms of the agreement retroactive to 1 July 1985, and that the employees shall be made whole for losses they may have suffered by reason of the failure of Respondent to sign the agreement,[6] with interest thereon, to be computed in the manner prescribed in F. W. Woolworth Co., 90 NLRB 298 (1950), plus interest as set forth in Isis Plumbing Co., 138 NLRB 716 (1962), and Florida Steel Corp., 231 NLRB 651 (1977).

Having found that Respondent violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act by, inter alia, continuing to maintain a provision in its profit-sharing plan and trust which by its terms unlawfully excludes from participation therein otherwise eligible employees who are members of a collective-bargaining unit, I shall recommend that Respondent be ordered to amend the profit-sharing plan and trust so as to clearly eliminate the unlawful eligibility restriction.[7]

On these findings of fact and conclusions of law and on the entire record,[8] I issue the following recommended[9]

ORDER

The Respondent, Cablevision Industries, Finger Lakes Division, Geneva, New York, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall

1. Cease and desist from

(a) Refusing to bargain collectively and in good faith with Communication Workers of America by declining to execute a written agreement embodying the terms of the contract fully agreed to on 2 July 1985, and which covers its employees in the following appropriate unit:

[6] "The Board may properly prevent the Respondents from gaining an advantage by their unlawful conduct. An order requiring that the employees be made whole for the unlawful repudiation of a collective bargaining agreement serves this end." NLRB v. DMR Corp., 795 F.2d 472, 477 (5th Cir. 1986).

[7] The General Counsel requests a visitatorial clause authorizing the Board, for compliance purposes, to obtain discovery from the Respondent under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure under the supervision of the United States court of appeals enforcing an eventual Board order. Absent special circumstances, which are not present here, this request is denied. See Nathan's Furniture Store, 278 NLRB 268 (1986); O. L. Willis, Inc., 278 NLRB 203 (1986).

[8] In an Order Correcting Record which I issued on 22 October 1986, I ordered corrections to the record in certain limited respects.

[9] If no exceptions are filed as provided by Sec. 102.46 of the Board's Rules and Regulations, the findings, conclusions, and recommended Order shall, as provided in Sec. 102.48 of the Rules, be adopted by the Board and all objections to them shall be deemed waived for all purposes.

> All regular full-time installers, technicians, converter control employees, construction employees and dispatchers employed by the Employer at R.D.2, Route 5 and 20, Geneva, New York, and 5585 Buffalo Extension, Canandaigua, New York and 515 No. Main Street, Newark, New York; excluding all engineers, customer service representatives, outside sales employees, clerical employees, and professional employees, guards and supervisors as defined in the Act, and all other employees of the Employer.

(b) Refusing to bargain collectively and in good faith with the Union by granting pay increases to unit employees not calculated in accordance with the terms of the agreement reached with the Union, and by granting new benefits to unit employees, without prior notice to the Union and without having afforded the Union an opportunity to negotiate and bargain with respect to such benefits and their effects on the unit employees.

(c) Threatening employees in the bargaining unit with the loss of profit-sharing plan benefits because they chose to be represented by the Union for purposes of collective bargaining; maintaining and continuing a provision in its profit-sharing plan and trust which excludes from participation therein otherwise eligible employees who are members of a collective-bargaining unit; and informing its unit employees that they would be granted wage increases less than they would have been granted had they not selected the Union as their collective-bargaining representative because the agreement reached with the Union provides for a lesser increase than would be granted to its employees employed outside the bargaining unit.

(d) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them by Section 7 of the Act.

2. Take the following affirmative action necessary to effectuate the policies of the Act.

(a) Sign the collective-bargaining agreement containing the terms and conditions of employment agreed to between the Respondent and the Union on 2 July 1985, give retroactive effect to its terms and conditions, and make its employees whole for losses, if any, they may have suffered as a result of its refusal to sign such an agreement, in the manner set forth above.

(b) Amend its profit-sharing plan and trust by eliminating therefrom the provision which by its terms excludes from participation in the plan otherwise eligible employees who are members of a collective-bargaining unit.

(c) Preserve and, on request, make available to the Board or its agents for examination and copying, all payroll records, social security payment records, timecards, personnel records and reports, and all other records necessary to analyze the amount of backpay due under the terms of this Order.

(d) Post at its Geneva, Canandaigua, and Newark, New York facilities and branches copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix."[10] Copies of the notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 3, after being signed by the Respondent's authorized representative, shall be posted by the Respondent immediately upon receipt and maintained for 60 consecutive days in conspicuous places including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by the Respondent to ensure that the notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(e) Notify the Regional Director in writing within 20 days from the date of this Order what steps the Respondent has taken to comply.

NOTICE TO EMPLOYEES
POSTED BY ORDER OF THE
NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD
An Agency of the United States Government

The National Labor Relations Board has found that we violated the National Labor Relations Act and has ordered us to post and abide by this notice.

WE WILL NOT refuse to bargain collectively regarding wages, hours, or other terms and conditions of employment with Communication Workers of America as the exclusive representative of our employees in the following unit:

> All regular full-time installers, technicians, converter control employees, construction employees and dispatchers employed by the Employer at R.D.2, Route 5 and 20, Geneva, New York, and 5585 Buffalo Extension, Canandaigua, New York and 515 No. Main Street, Newark, New York; excluding all engineers, customer service representatives, outside sales employees, clerical employees, and professional employees, guards and supervisors as defined in the Act, and all other employees of the Employer.

WE WILL NOT refuse to execute the contract with the Union which was agreed upon on 2 July 1985.

WE WILL NOT fail and refuse to give effect to the terms and provisions of the agreed-on contract with the Union.

WE WILL NOT grant pay increases to unit employees not calculated in accordance with the terms of the agreement we reached with the Union, or grant new benefits to unit employees, without prior notice to the Union and having afforded the Union an opportunity to negotiate and bargain with respect to such benefits and their effects on them.

WE WILL NOT threaten employees in the bargaining unit with the loss of profit-sharing plan benefits because they chose to be represented by the Union for purposes of collective bargaining; maintain and continue a provision in our profit-sharing plan and trust which excludes from participation therein otherwise eligible employees who are members of a collective-bargaining unit; and inform our unit employees that they would be granted wage increases less than they would have been granted had they not selected the Union as their collective-bargaining representative because the agreement reached with the Union provides for a lesser increase than would be granted to our employees employed outside the bargaining unit.

WE WILL NOT in any like or related manner interfere with, restrain, or coerce employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them by Section 7 of the Act.

WE WILL sign the collective-bargaining agreement containing the terms and conditions of employment agreed to between us and the Union on 2 July 1985.

WE WILL give retroactive effect to its terms and conditions and make our employees whole for losses, if any, which they may have suffered as a result of our refusal to sign a contract, with interest.

WE WILL amend our profit-sharing plan and trust by eliminating therefrom the provision which by its terms excludes from participation in the plan otherwise eligible employees who are members of a collective-bargaining unit.

CABLEVISION INDUSTRIES, FINGER LAKES DIVISION

Daniel Gerhardi d/b/a Daniel's Pallet Service and Kenneth Early and David Crist. Cases 7–CA–24270(1) and 7–CA–24270(2)

26 February 1987

DECISION AND ORDER

BY CHAIRMAN DOTSON AND MEMBERS JOHANSEN AND BABSON

On 12 August 1986 Administrative Law Judge Irwin H. Socoloff issued the attached decision. The Respondent filed exceptions, a supporting brief, and a brief opposing the General Counsel's cross-exception. The General Counsel filed a cross-exception and a supporting brief.

The National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the decision and the record in light of the exceptions and briefs and has decided to affirm the judge's rulings, findings,[1] and conclusions and to adopt the recommended Order as modified.[2]

ORDER

The National Labor Relations Board adopts the recommended Order of the administrative law judge as modified below and orders that the Respondent, Daniel Gerhardi d/b/a Daniel's Pallet Service, Flat Rock, Michigan, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall take the action set forth in the Order as modified.

1. Substitute the following for paragraph 2(a).

"(a) Offer to Kenneth Earley and David Crist immediate and full reinstatement to their former positions or, if those positions no longer exist, to substantially equivalent positions, without prejudice to their seniority or any other rights and privileges previously enjoyed, and make them whole for any loss of earnings and other benefits suffered as a result of the discrimination against them by payment to each of them a sum of money equal to that which each normally would have earned as wages or received as benefits, from the date of the discrimination to the date of the Respondent's offer of reinstatement, less net earnings during such period, with backpay to be computed in the manner prescribed in F. W. Woolworth Co., 90 NLRB 289 (1950), with interest as set forth in Florida Steel Corp., 231 NLRB 651 (1977)."

2. Substitute the attached notice for that of the administrative law judge.

APPENDIX

NOTICE TO EMPLOYEES
POSTED BY ORDER OF THE
NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD
An Agency of the United States Government

The National Labor Relations Board has found that we violated the National Labor Relations Act and has ordered us to post and abide by this notice.

WE WILL NOT interrogate you about your union activities and sympathies, or threaten you with more onerous working conditions because you support the Union.

WE WILL NOT harass, change the working conditions of, or constructively discharge you because of your activities on behalf of the Union.

WE WILL NOT in any like or related manner interfere with, restrain, or coerce you in the exercise of the rights guaranteed you by Section 7 of the Act.

WE WILL offer to Kenneth Earley and David Crist immediate and full reinstatement to their former positions or, if those positions no longer exist, to substantially equivalent positions, without prejudice to their seniority or any other rights and privileges previously enjoyed.

WE WILL make them whole for any loss of earnings and other benefits they may have suffered because of the discrimination against them, plus interest.

WE WILL notify each of them that we have removed from our files any reference to his discharge and that the discharge will not be used against him in any way.

[1] We note that, in addition to the incidents mentioned by the judge, several other incidents occurred in which the Respondent harassed employee Earley. On 2 February 1985, immediately after cursing Earley for having signed an authorization card, the Respondent ordered him, for the first time, to have his blood tested for intoxicants. On the same day, the Respondent's owner, again for the first time, visited Earley's house at 11:30 p.m. and ordered him to report to work on Saturday morning. On 4 February, during a mandatory employee meeting, a supervisor passed out written reprimands to Earley and employee Crist, cursed them, and remarked, "You guys want a union that bad, take these." During the same meeting, Earley complained about having been previously cursed by the Respondent for having signed an authorization card. The owner's wife, a supervisor, replied, "You are low lives, fucker. You no-good son-of-a-bitch." On 5 February, as Earley was punching out, the same supervisor yelled, "Have a good day, you motherfucker." Two days later, the Respondent's owner, complaining about a low payroll, approached Crist and asked him to inspect the books because Crist "knew all the answers." The Respondent then approached Earley, who was working nearby, took Earley's hammer, shouted, "I want rock and roll," and smashed an adjacent stereo to pieces. Earley testified that he was frightened by this incident and that he quit the next day because, with Crist having quit, he thought that the Respondent's harassment would be directed solely at him.

[2] It appears from the record that the Respondent may have denied Crist and Earley employment-related benefits, as well as wages, because of their union activities. To require the Respondent to compensate the discriminatees for such losses of benefits, if any, we have modified the judge's recommended Order accordingly. Member Johansen also notes that the Respondent's removal of Crist's firewood, not found to be a separate unfair labor practice by the judge, was mentioned in the charge and litigated at the hearing, but was not specifically alleged in the complaint.

All our employees are free to join and support Cylinder Gas, Chemical, Petroleum, Distillery, Auto Service and Accessory Drivers Local Union No. 283, International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen and Helpers of America, or any other labor organization of their choosing.

DANIEL GERHARDI D/B/A DANIEL'S PALLET SERVICE

Richard Connolly, Esq., for the General Counsel.
Paul Richards, Esq. and Craig W. Lange, Esq., of Troy, Michigan, for the Respondent.

DECISION

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

IRWIN H. SOCOLOFF, Administrative Law Judge. On charges filed on 8 February and 25 March 1985, by Kenneth Earley and David Crist, against Daniel Gerhardi d/b/a Daniels Pallet Service (the Respondent), the General Counsel of the National Labor Relations Board, by the Regional Director for Region 7, issued a consolidated complaint 27 March 1985, alleging violations by Respondent of Section 8(a)(3) and (1) and Section 2(6) and (7) of the National Labor Relations Act. Respondent, by its answer, denied the commission of any unfair labor practices.

Pursuant to notice, trial was held before me in Detroit, Michigan, on 10 and 11 July, 1985, at which the General Counsel and the Respondent were represented by counsel and were afforded full opportunity to be heard, to examine and cross-examine witnesses, and to introduce evidence. Thereafter, the parties filed briefs which have been duly considered.

On the entire record in this case, and from my observations of the witnesses, I make the following

FINDINGS OF FACT

I. JURISDICTION

Respondent, a sole proprietorship, is engaged, at its Flat Rock, Michigan place of business, in the repair, nonretail sale, and distribution of wood pallets and related products. During the year ending 31 December 1984, a representative period, Respondent, in the course and conduct of its business operations, repaired, sold, and distributed products valued in excess of $50,000 to Borman's, Inc., d/b/a Farmer Jack's, a Detroit, Michigan business, engaged in commerce within the meaning of the Act. I find that Respondent is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

II. LABOR ORGANIZATION

Cylinder Gas, Chemical, Petroleum, Distillery, Auto Service and Accessory Drivers Local Union No. 283, International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen and Helpers of America (the Union) is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

III. THE UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES

A. Background

Daniel's Pallet Service is a small family owned and operated wood pallet repair and wholesale distribution business employing some 10 or fewer laborers. The business was founded by Daniel Gerhardi and is run by Gerhardi, with the assistance of his wife, Shirley, and his sister, Cheryl Ouellette.[1]

On 31 January 1985 employee David Crist asked his fellow laborers to visit his home at the conclusion of the workday. At that time, Crist distributed cards designating the Union as the employees' collective-bargaining representative and the authorization cards were signed by Crist, Kenneth Earley, and others. On 1 February 1985 Respondent received a telegram, sent by the Union, demanding recognition. Crist and Early terminated their employment 8 February.

In the instant case, the General Counsel contends that Crist and Earley were constructively discharged because of their union activities and that, during the week preceding the constructive discharges, Respondent harassed those employees and changed their working conditions, for the same unlawful reasons. Respondent denies that it so acted in violation of Section 8(a)(3) of the Act and further contends that, in any event, and at all material times, Crist was a statutory supervisor. Also at issue is whether Respondent, during the 1 through 8 February period, violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act by interrogating employees about their union activities and sympathies; threatening employees with more onerous working conditions because of their support of the Union; threatening employees with plant closure it they selected the Union to represent them; informing employees that it would be futile for them to designate the Union as their representative.

B. Facts[2]

During 1984, Respondent tolerated an undisciplined workplace environment and its work rules were not enforced. Beginning in January 1985, it sought to change that situation and it reposted its work rules and instituted a progressive disciplinary system to deal with tardiness and absenteeism. Pursuant thereto, Respondent, in January, sent written disciplinary notices to employee Tom Powell. Late in the month, Daniel Gerhardi met with the unit employees to express his concern about employee tardiness and unexcused absences. In this time period,

[1] Daniel Gerhardi and Shirley Gerhardi are, concededly, statutory supervisors. In light of the uncontradicted record evidence concerning Ouellette's authority to hire, assign work, and responsibly direct employees in their work, I find that Ouellette, too, is a supervisor within the meaning of the Act.

[2] The factfindings contained herein are based on a composite of the documentary and testimonial evidence introduced at trial. Where necessary to do so in order to resolve significant testimonial conflict, credibility resolutions have been set forth, infra.

Respondent also acted to shorten the duration of the employees' breaks and lunch periods.

Near the end of January 1985, David Crist expressed to his fellow employees Crist's dissatisfaction with the new rules. Crist was Respondent's most senior employee, having worked for it "off and on" for a period of 7 years. In the course of his last period of employment, beginning July 1984, Crist spent part of his worktime doing the basic unit work, repair and construction of pallets, and the remainder of the time driving a hi-lo by operation of which pallets were moved to and from the work area. At those times when Daniel Gerhardi was present at the worksite, he generally drove the hi-lo himself and Crist worked on pallets.

On 29 January 1985 Crist contacted the Union and discussed organization. In the next few days, he talked about that possibility to the unit employees. Crist obtained union authorization cards on the morning of 31 January and, that day, asked the employees to come to his house, after work, for the purpose of signing the cards. Crist lived in a house adjacent to the workplace which he rented from Gerhardi.

Before the end of the workday, on 31 January, Daniel Gerhardi gave Crist a written reprimand for leaving work early on 18 January, failing to report for work at all on 21 January, and arriving late for work on 22, 28, 29, and 30 January. Crist did not protest that matter. After work, he held the employee meeting as scheduled and obtained signed authorization cards which he delivered to the Union.

At 1:47 p.m. on 1 February, Shirley Gerhardi received a telephonic mail-a-gram from the Union, advising that a majority of the unit employees had designated the Union as their collective-bargaining representative and demanding recognition. It is undisputed that Shirley Gerhardi then went to the work area and asked Crist if he knew anything about the Union. Crist said that he had done it on his own time. Shirley Gerhardi then began to curse at Crist, in the presence of the other employees. When Daniel Gerhardi arrived, Shirley told him that "this asshole is trying to get a union in." She turned to the working employees and asked, "[H]ow many other fucking assholes are involved in the Union?" The Gerhardis took Crist out of the hi-lo and told him to work at "prepping," that is, construction and repair of pallets. Shirley Gerhardi stated that it was lucky that she did not have a gun and she told Crist to "prep his fucking ass off." Daniel Gerhardi said that he wanted Crist out of the house that he, Crist, was renting from Gerhardi and asked Crist who, beside himself and employee Earley, was involved in the Union. Later that day, Gerhardi served Crist with a notice of termination of tenancy and retrieved firewood he had earlier given to Crist for use in heating the house. That night, Gerhardi placed a telephone call to Crist at 2:45 a.m. and told him to report for work on the next day, Saturday, 2 February.

Employee Kenneth Earley signed an authorization card on 31 January, but was not present for the events of the afternoon of Friday, 1 February. Earley, who had worked for Respondent "off and on" for a period of 2 years and, continuously, since 22 August 1984, generally divided his time between working on pallets and loading and unloading some onto and off of a trailer. During the morining of 1 February, Early asked Daniel Gerhardi for permission to take part or all of the afternoon off so that he could make payment on his gas bill and prevent a shut off. The request was granted. Earley later told Gerhardi that, after paying the bill, he spent the rest of the afternoon at the bar. At 11:30 that night, Gerhardi went to Earley's house and told him to report for work on the next day, Saturday, 2 February.

Earley arrived at work on 2 February, as instructed, but told Gerhardi that he again needed time off to make payment on a utility bill, this time to prevent a shut off of electricity. Before Earley left, Gerhardi approached him and, according to Earley's uncontradicted testimony, asked if he, Early, had signed one of the union cards. Early said, "yes." Gerhardi stated that "there will be no fucking union here." When Earley asked, "[W]ell, what are you going to do, close down the doors," Gerhardi called Earley a "low life son of a bitch" and said, again, that there would not be a union.

The uncontradicted testimony of Crist and Early reveals that, on Monday, 4 February, employee Tim Lizyness delivered instructions from Gerhardi that Crist and Earley were to do pallet work only, and were not to drive the hi-lo or load or unload the trailer. Thereafter, Crist and Earley did pallet work almost exclusively which, the record evidence suggests, was more arduous and less desirable work. At the end of the workday on 4 February, Daniel and Shirley Gerhardi gathered the employees together and handed written reprimands to Crist and Earley for lateness and absence during the month of January. According to the corroborated testimony of Crist and Earley, Shirley Gerhardi, at this meeting, cursed at the two employees, called them backstabbers, and asked why they wanted a union.[3] It is undisputed that Daniel Gerhardi stated to the employees that a union would not do them any good. Gerhardi said that, on one occasion, he, Gerhardi, had been fired from a job and had sought, but did not receive, aid from a union.

The essentially uncontradicted testimony of Crist and Earley reveals that, in addition to the change of duties which they suffered beginning on 4 February, the two employees and, particularly, Crist, became the objects of a campaign of ridicule and harassment conducted by the Gerhardis and Ouellette during the week of 4 to 8 February. In particular, Shirley Gerhardi, in the presence of the other employees, continually cursed at Crist and called him a "backstabber" as Crist performed his assigned pallet work duties. Crist and Earley, who had not received previous criticism concerning the speed at which they worked, were constantly told they were "dogging" it and that they were to pick up the pace of their work. On 7 February, Daniel Gerhardi, a very physically imposing man, approached the work area. Gerhardi went to a stereo set located in the workplace and, in the presence of the employees, picked it up, threw it to the ground and repeatedly struck it with a hammer until it was destroyed. Later that day, Ouellette cursed at Crist and demanded to know why she had not been told about the Union. Ouellette told Crist that he "would get his" and that she would ride him and make him "work his ass off." Later that day, Daniel Gerhardi gave Crist a written reprimand for returning 4 minutes late from a break on 5 February, and for disturbing other employees.

About 1:30 p.m. on Friday, 8 February, Crist told Shirley Gerhardi that he was quitting as he "just couldn't handle it anymore." Shortly thereafter, Earley informed the Gerhardis that he, too, was quitting. Shirley Gerhardi started clapping her hands and said: "Yeay, we got rid of both of them fuckers now."

Gerhardi testified that his action of 4 February, removing Crist and Earley from their hi-lo and trailer duties, was taken for safety reasons. Thus, Gerhardi claimed that he believed that Crist and Earley were under the influence of illegal drugs and he did not want them to handle power equipment. However, Gerhardi further testified that he believed that the two employees worked, while under the influence, during the month of January 1985, yet, Gerhardi made no change in their assigned duties until 4 February, immediately after the advent of the Union. Respondent offered no evidence in support of Gerhardi's claimed belief that Crist and Earley worked while under the influence of drugs.

Gerhardi also testified that, at the end of October 1984, he conducted a meeting of the employees, at which time he told them that Crist was being "placed on supervision." According to Gerhardi, the employees were further advised that, while Crist would not have authority to hire, fire, or discipline employees, he could bring matters pertaining to discipline to Gerhardi's attention. Crist was also empowered to deal with emergency situations.

Crist, in his testimony, denied that he was ever given the authority to hire, fire, grant pay increases, grant time off, discipline employees, or direct them it their work. He testified that, in the absence of the Gerhardis, the day-shift workers functioned under the supervision of Ouellette. In light of Crist's credible testimony in this regard, and in the absence of corroboration of Gerhardi's testimony concerning the October 1984 employee meeting, I find that the claimed delegation of supervisory authority, in October 1984, did not, in fact, take place. This conclusion is further buttressed by the confused and self-contradictory state of Gerhardi's testimony concerning the weight he accorded to Crist's views, in late January and early February 1985, about certain disciplinary matters. Although there is record evidence that Crist, in the fall of 1984 to the winter of 1985 period, as Respondent's most senior employee, gave occasional and incidental instruction and direction to fellow workers, and particularly new workers, and answered their questions based on his experience, there is an entire absence of evidence that he, at any time, exercised independent judgment in that regard. Rather, there is substantial evidence that the jobs of the laborers were routine in nature; that "everybody pretty much knew their own job," and that the employees frequently instructed and directed each other. At times, Respondent's supervisory officials did choose to transmit their instructions through Crist.

C. Conclusions

As shown in the statement of facts, Respondent, through the Gerhardis and Ouellette, during the 1 through 8 February period, engaged in repeated interrogations of its employees concerning their union activities and sympathies. On 1 February Shirley Gerhardi asked Crist if he knew anything about a union. She then turned to the other employees and asked who else was involved in the Union. On 2 February Daniel Gerhardi asked Early if he had signed a union card. At the 4 February employee meeting, Shirley Gerhardi demanded to know why the employees wanted a union. On 7 February Ouellette questioned Crist concerning why he had not told her about the Union. I find and conclude, as alleged in the complaint, that Respondent, by its interrogations of employees concerning their union activities and sympathies, violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act. I further conclude, as alleged in the complaint, that on 7 February Respondent threatened employees with more onerous working conditions because of their support of the Union, in violation of Section 8(a)(1). On that date, Ouellette, after interrogating Crist about the Union, told him that he "would get his" and that she, Ouellette, would ride him and make him "work his ass off."

The complaint further alleges that Respondent, through Daniel Gerhardi, threatened employees with plant closure if they selected the Union to represent them. This allegation, apparently, is based on Gerhardi's conversation with Earley on 2 February. However, the record evidence reveals that, during that conversation, it was Earley, not Gerhardi, who introduced the subject of "closing down the doors" and that Gerhardi did not comment on that suggestion. Accordingly, this allegation must be dismissed. I likewise find no record evidence to support the complaint allegation that, on 4 February, Respondent informed its employees that it would be futile for them to select the Union as their bargaining agent. At the employee meeting on that date, Daniel Gerhardi opined that a union would not do the employees any good. Gerhardi made this statement while relating to the employees the facts surrounding an incident in which Gerhardi, as an employee, had sought, but did not receive, aid from a union. The totality of his remarks were not coercive.

As detailed in the statement of facts, the record evidence fully supports the complaint allegations that Crist and Earley were constructively discharged, in violation of Section 8(a)(3) of the Act, on 8 February 1985, 1 week after Respondent received the Union's demand for recognition. Through its unlawful interrogations of 1 and 2 February, Respondent learned that Crist had launched the union movement and that Earley was a union supporter. Respondent reacted quickly, removing those employees from their duties and assigning them to less desirable work. During the week of 4 through 8 February, Respondent, through the Gerhardis and Ouellette, repeatedly cursed at them and called them "backstabbers" in the presence of the other employees. Amidst an antiunion diatribe, Respondent continually warned Crist and Earley to pick up their work pace and accused them of "dogging" it. Crist was told that he "would get his"

and that he would be made to "work his ass off." Respondent made clear to the employees that the change in work assignments and the campaign of harassment were in retaliation for their union activities and I find and conclude that, by those actions, Respondent further violated Section 8(a)(3) of the Act. The new working conditions imposed on Crist and Earley, because of their union activities, were highly oppressive and were designed to cause, and did cause, their resignations.

IV. THE EFFECT OF THE UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES UPON COMMERCE

The activities of Respondent set forth in section III, above, occurring in connection with its operations described in section I, above, have a close, intimate, and substantial relationship to trade, traffic, and commerce among the several States and tend to lead to labor disputes burdening and obstructing commerce and the free flow of commerce.

V. THE REMEDY

Having found that Respondent has engaged in certain unfair labor practice conduct in violation of Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act, I shall recommend that it be ordered to cease and desist therefrom and to take certain affirmative action designed to effectuate the policies of the Act.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. Respondent Daniel Gerhardi d/b/a Daniel's Pallet Service is an employer engaged in commerce and in operations affecting commerce, within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

2. Cylinder Gas, Chemical, Petroleum, Distillery, Auto Service and Accessory Drivers Local Union No. 283, International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen and Helpers of America is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

3. By interrogating employees about their union activities and sympathies and threatening employees with more onerous working conditions because of their support of the Union, Respondent has engaged in unfair labor practice conduct within the meaning of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act.

4. By harassing, changing the working conditions, and constructively discharging employees Kenneth Earley and David Crist because of their union activities, Respondent has engaged in unfair labor practice conduct within the meaning of Section 8(a)(3) of the Act.

5. The aforesaid unfair labor practices affect commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

On these findings of fact and conclusions of law and on the entire record, I issue the following recommended[4]

ORDER

The Respondent, Daniel Gerhardi d/b/a Daniel's Pallet Service, Flat Rock, Michigan, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall

1. Cease and desist from

(a) Interrogating employees about their union activities and sympathies and threatening employees with more onerous working conditions because of their support of the Union.

(b) Harassing, changing the working conditions, and constructively discharging employees because of their activities on behalf of the Union.

(c) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them in Section 7 of the Act.

2. Take the following affirmative action necessary to effectuate the policies of the Act.

(a) Offer to Kenneth Earley and David Crist immediate and full reinstatement to their former positions or, if those positions no longer exist, to substantially equivalent positions, without prejudice to their seniority and other rights and privileges. Make them whole for any loss of pay they may have suffered by reason of the discrimination against them by payment to each of them of a sum of money equal to that which each normally would have earned as wages, from the date of the discrimination to the date of Respondent's offer of reinstatement, less net earnings during such period, with backpay to be computed in the manner prescribed in F. W. Woolworth Co., 90 NLRB 289 (1950), with interest as set forth in Florida Steel Corp., 231 NLRB 651 (1977); (see generally Isis Plumbing Co., 138 NLRB 716 (1962)).

(b) Remove from its files any reference to the constructive discharges and notify the employees that this has been done and that the discharges will not be used against them in any way.

(c) Preserve and, on request, make available to the Board or its agents, for examination and copying, all payroll records, social security payment records, timecards, personnel records and reports, and all other records necessary to analyze the amounts of backpay due under the terms of this Order.

(d) Post at its Flat Rock, Michigan locale, copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix."[5] Copies of the notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 7, after being signed by the Respondent's authorized representative, shall be posted by the Respondent immediately upon receipt and maintained for 60 consecutive days in conspicuous places including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by the Respondent to ensure that the notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(e) Notify the Regional Director in writing within 20 days from the date of this Order what steps Respondent has taken to comply.

[4] If no exceptions are filed as provided by Sec. 102.46 of the Board's Rules and Regulations, the findings, conclusions, and recommended Order shall, as provided in Sec. 102.48 of the Rules, be adopted by the Board and all objections to them shall be deemed waived for all purposes.

[5] If this Order is enforced by a judgment of a United States court of appeals, the words in the notice reading "Posted by Order of the National Labor Relations Board" shall read "Posted Pursuant to a Judgment of the United States Court of Appeals Enforcing an Order of the National Labor Relations Board."

International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, Local 113 (Pride Electric, Inc.) and Daniel S. Robertson. Case 27–CB–2284

26 February 1987

DECISION AND ORDER

BY MEMBERS JOHANSEN, BABSON, AND STEPHENS

On 11 July 1986 Administrative Law Judge Richard J. Boyce issued the attached decision. The Respondent filed exceptions and a supporting brief, and the General Counsel filed an answering brief.

The National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the decision and the record in light of the exceptions and briefs and has decided to affirm the judge's rulings, findings,[1] and conclusions[2] and to adopt the recommended Order.

ORDER

The National Labor Relations Board adopts the recommended Order of the administrative law judge and orders that the Respondent, International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, Local 113, Colorado Springs, Colorado, its officers, agents, and representatives, shall take the action set forth in the Order.

A. E. Roybal and Albert A. Metz, Esqs., of Denver, Colorado, for the General Counsel.
Dennis E. Valentine, Esq. (Brauer & Buescher), of Denver, Colorado, for the Respondent.

DECISION

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

RICHARD J. BOYCE, Administrative Law Judge. This matter was tried in Colorado Springs, Colorado, on 18 March 1986,[1] based on a complaint[2] alleging that International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, Local 113 (Respondent) violated Section 8(b)(1)(B) of the National Labor Relations Act (Act) about 12 June 1985 by assessing a disciplinary fine of $4000 against Daniel S. Robertson, a supervisor for Pride Electric, Inc. (Pride), and, about 25 September 1985, by bringing civil suit against Robertson to collect the fine.[3]

As is later concluded, after an examination of the relevant evidence and applicable legal principles, Respondent violated the Act both as alleged and by coincidentally expelling Robertson from membership in the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers.

I. JURISDICTION

The parties stipulate that Pride meets specified jurisdictional standards of the National Labor Relations Board, and thus is an employer engaged in and affecting commerce within Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

II. LABOR ORGANIZATION

Respondent concededly is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

III. THE ALLEGED MISCONDUCT

A. Facts

From mid-February to about 20 April 1985, Pride was the electrical subcontractor in the construction of seven Royal Fork restaurants—five in the Denver area, two in Colorado Springs. Its complement—about 16 people split between two shifts—spent a week or so at each site, finishing its work there before moving to the next site. The complement was not represented by any labor organization.

Robertson, hired by Pride in February to serve as its foreman in this undertaking, was the ranking person in the complement at all but one of the sites. He credibly testified that his role was "to run the job, to supervise

[1] The Respondent has excepted to some of the judge's credibility findings. The Board's established policy is not to overrule an administrative law judge's credibility resolutions unless the clear preponderance of all the relevant evidence convinces us that they are incorrect. Standard Dry Wall Products, 91 NLRB 544 (1950), enfd. 188 F.2d 362 (3d Cir. 1951). We have carefully examined the record and find no basis for reversing the findings.

In adopting the judge's finding that Robertson was a management representative within the meaning of Sec. 8(b)(1)(B) of the Act, we particularly rely on the judge's finding that Robertson in fact was authorized to adjust grievances on the job. In this regard, we further note that it is not necessary for a supervisor to handle "contractual" grievances to be considered an 8(b)(1)(B) representative. Elevator Constructors Local 1 (Otis Elevator), 281 NLRB 907 fn. 1 (Sept. 30, 1986); Typographical Union 529 (Hour Publishing), 241 NLRB 310, 315 (1979).

[2] The Respondent contends, relying on NLRB v. Electrical Workers IBEW Local 340, 780 F.2d 1489 (9th Cir. 1986), denying enf. 271 NLRB 995 (1984), that it did not violate Sec. 8(b)(1)(B) by disciplining Robertson for working for Pride Electric, a nonsignatory employer, because the Respondent neither represents nor has demonstrated an intent to represent the employees of Pride Electric. We adhere to the Board's decision reported at 271 NLRB 995, and further note that the Supreme Court granted the Board's petition for certiorari in that case on 6 October 1986.

Finally, in adopting the judge's conclusion that the Respondent's filing of a lawsuit against Robertson to collect the $4000 fine violated Sec. 8(b)(1)(B), we reject the Respondent's contention that the filing of the lawsuit cannot be an unfair labor practice in light of Bill Johnson's Restaurants v. NLRB, 461 U.S. 731 (1983). In Bill Johnson's, the Court observed that its holding did not apply to a suit that "has an objective that is illegal under federal law," and gave as an example "Board orders enjoining unions from prosecuting court suits for enforcement of fines that could not lawfully be imposed under the Act." Id. at fn. 5. We therefore conclude that Bill Johnson's does not preclude a finding that the Respondent's court action is unlawful. Laundry Workers Local 3 (Virginia Cleaners), 275 NLRB 697 (1985).

[2] The underlying charge was filed on 11 December 1985, and amended on 21 January 1986, followed by an amended complaint on 26 February and an amendment to the latter at the start of the trial.

[3] Sec. 8(b)(1)(B) makes it "an unfair labor practice for a labor organization . . . to restrain or coerce . . . an employer in the selection of his representatives for the purposes of collective bargaining or the adjustment of grievances."

the men," and that he did not work with the tools of the electrical trade while so doing.[4] Similarly, Pride's president, Margaret Harrison, credibly testified that Robertson was hired to "run a crew," not to do electricians' work. Both elaborated, convincingly and without refutation, that he possessed sundry specific indicia of supervisory authority.

Thus, Robertson averred, "it was [his] responsibility to take care of the time . . . to discipline the men and to settle any grievances that the men had on the job . . . to authorize overtime as [he] saw fit . . . to give [the journeymen] their particular job assignment, and to make sure that their apprentices had enough work to keep them busy." Robertson added that he transferred employees "from job to job within the project . . . all the time," that he transferred employees "off the project . . . several times," and that he received a higher wage because of his position.

To like effect, Harrison particularized that Robertson "kept track of all of the working hours on the job"; that he "was in charge of running overtime if it was necessary to get the job completed on time"; that, while he did not actually hire, he "picked the crew" from among Pride's existing employees; that, although he never discharged anyone outright, he "laid [employees] off from the project and sent them into the shop"; that he "had the authority" to "fire" anyone showing a "blatant disregard for safety"; and that, "if somebody came to him sick or injured or just . . . plain didn't want to work, he had the authority to allow them to leave the job or to dismiss them at that point."

Robertson did not belong to Respondent at any relevant time. He was a member, however, of a sister local, Electrical Workers Local No. 68, through March 1985, after which he apparently resigned. He obtained the job with Pride by pursuing a newspaper advertisement, and without being cleared through the hiring halls of these or any other labor organizations. He left Pride on its completion of the Royal Fork projects in April.

On 29 March 1985, three officials of Respondent visited the Colorado Springs site where Pride was then engaged. One of the three, Lyndon Zak, a member of its executive board and an acting hiring hall dispatcher, had a brief exchange with Robertson, asking him if it was "a union job" and if he was "a union member." Robertson answered no to the first question; and, in response to the second, presented his Local No. 68 membership card showing his dues to be paid through March. Zak and his companions then confronted other of Pride's employees. "They said," according to Zak, "that they were all apprentices . . . or helpers." Zak added, "There was only one there that had any kind of registration with the state electrical board."

Later on 29 March, Zak brought internal union charges against Robertson by means of a letter to Respondent stating:

> I, L. J. Zak, Card No. D-315891, a member of Local Union #113, IBEW, hereby prefer charges against Brother Daniel S. Robertson, Card no. D-105787, member of Local Union No. 68, I.B.E.W., whose last known mailing address is 1530 Sheridan Avenue, Denver, CO for violation of the following:
> AGREEMENT—Article All—Section—All—Subsection—All
> BY-LAWS—Article XIV—Section—11
> CONSTITUTION Article XXVII—Section—1—Subsection 5, 6 & 17
> The violation occurred on March 29, 1985, at approximately 9:55 A.M., at King's Table/Royal Fork, 3020 E. Platte Avenue, Colorado Springs, Colorado 80909.
> The violation occurred as follows:
> I went in and found Daniel S. Robertson working without a clearance from Local Union #113, I.B.E.W. and working three (3) apprentices. Apprentices were not members of any Locals.

Respondent informed Robertson of the charges against him by letter dated 9 May, enclosing a copy of Zak's letter and advising him to appear before its trial board on 12 June at 5:30 p.m. to answer them.

The trial board convened on 12 June as scheduled, and informed Robertson of its decision by this letter, dated 24 June:

> Please be advised the Executive Board, sitting as the Trial Board of Local Union #113, IBEW on June 12, 1985, after due consideration of the evidence presented has acted upon the charges filed against you by Brother Lyndon J. Zak.
> Violation of the I.B.E.W. Local Union #113, Agreement:
> 1. All Articles All Sections; Decision of guilty and assessed $1,000.00 for this violation
> Violation of the I.B.E.W. Constitution:
> 1. Article XXVII, Section 1, Subsection 5; Decision of guilty and assessed $500.00 for this violation.
> 2. Article XXVII, Section 1, Subsection 6: Decision of guilty and assessed $1,000.00 for this violation and expulsion from the I.B.E.W.
> 3. Article XXVII, Section 1, Subsection 17; Decision of guilty and assessed $500.00 for this violation
> Violation of the IBEW Local Union #113, By-Laws:
> 1. Article XVI, Section 11; Decision of guilty and assessed $1,000.00 for this violation
> The total assessments levied [on] you for the above violations amount to $4,000.00 plus expulsion from the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers.
> You are hereby notified of your right of appeal of the above findings as described in Article 27, Section 12-15 of the IBEW Constitution.

[4] The record indicates that Robertson sometimes wore a tool belt. He testified that this was "so that someone else could use [his] tools."

On 25 September 1985, Respondent brought suit against Robertson in Denver County to collect the $4000, plus interest and costs. The complaint alleges that the claim arose from "the following event or transaction":

> The Defendant worked for and was employed by a contractor in violation of the collective bargaining agreement; Article XIV, Section 11 of the By-Laws of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, Local 113 ("IBEW, Local 113") and Article XXVII, Section 1, Subsections 5, 6 and 17 of the Constitution of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers ("IBEW"). Defendant was obligated and bound by the collective bargaining agreement, IBEW, Local 113 By-Laws and IBEW Constitution at the time of these events as a result of his membership in IBEW and his work and employment within the area of jurisdiction of IBEW, Local 113 in accordance with the By-Laws and Constitution which placing [sic] him under the jurisdiction of IBEW, Local 113.

The trial was to be held on 8 April 1986. The "agreement" the trial board found Robertson to have violated in totality ("All Articles All Sections") is the collective-bargaining contract between Respondent and the Southern Colorado Chapter of the National Electrical Contractors Association. It provides, among other things, that "the Union shall be the sole and exclusive source of referral of applicants for employment," and that an employer is to have no more than one apprentice for from one to three journeymen, and no more than two apprentices, for from four to six journeymen.

Those subsections of article 27, section 1, of the constitution Robertson was found to have violated provide that a member "may be penalized" for:

> (5) Engaging in any act or acts which are contrary to the member's responsibility toward the I.B.E.W., or any of its [Local Unions], as an institution, or which interfere with the performance by the I.B.E.W. or a L.U. with its legal or contractual obligations.
> (6) Working for, or on behalf of, any employer, employer-supported organization, or other union, or the representatives of any of the foregoing, whose position is adverse or detrimental to the I.B.E.W.
> . . . .
> (17) Working for any individual or company declared in difficulty with a L.U. or the I.B.E.W., in accordance with this Constitution.

That section of article 14 of the bylaws found to have been violated states:

> Sec. 11. The handling of jobs for unemployed members shall be under the full supervision and direction of the Business Manager. He shall devise such means as are considered practical and fair in distributing available jobs to qualified members. Members violating any rule or plan established shall be penalized as decided by the Executive Board.

B. Conclusions

The testimony of Robertson and Margaret Harrison, previously detailed and credited, establishes that Robertson's duties required that he exercise substantial amounts of independent judgment in handling Pride's employees. The conclusion necessarily follows that he was a supervisor as defined by Section 2(11) of the Act.[5]

The Board takes the view that "persons who are supervisors within the meaning of the Act are employer representatives within the meaning of Section 8(b)(1)(B)" even if not "actually vested with authority to act for [their] employer in collective bargaining or the adjustment of grievances."[6] It reasons that "such individuals form the logical 'reservoir' from which the employer is likely to select his representatives for collective bargaining or grievance adjustment."[7]

A union consequently violates Section 8(b)(1)(B), under Board law, when it visits disciplinary sanctions on a supervisor-member "unless the offense occasioning the discipline involves a matter purely of internal union administration, unrelated, either directly or indirectly, to any dispute between the union and the employer," or unless the "supervisor-member is disciplined after he has engaged in more than a minimal amount of rank-and-file work during a strike."[8] By matters of internal union administration, the Board contemplates such things as "failing to pay . . . union dues or . . . disturbing a union meeting."[9]

Further, the Board reads the word "grievances" in Section 8(b)(1)(B)—and in the Section 2(11) definition of supervisors—to embrace employee grievances unrelated to collective bargaining.[10] This means, the so-called reservoir doctrine aside, that a supervisor who deals with employee complaints or problems relating to job assignments, time off, etc., is an 8(b)(1)(B) grievance adjuster.[11]

The foregoing principles apply regardless of the existence of a collective-bargaining relationship.[12]

Applying the reservoir doctrine to the situation at hand, Robertson, as a supervisor, was a management representative under Section 8(b)(1)(B). Respondent's acts of fining him and expelling him from membership in the parent international did not involve a matter of internal union administration, moreover, nor were they prompted by his doing rank-and-file work during a strike. The fine, the expulsion, and the court action to collect the fine therefore violated Section 8(b)(1)(B) as alleged.[13]

Alternatively, given the credited testimony of Robertson and Harrison, respectively, that he was responsible for "settl[ing] any grievances that the men had on the job," and that, "if somebody came to him sick or injured or just . . . plain didn't want to work he had the authority to allow them to leave the job," Robertson in fact was authorized to adjust grievances within Section 8(b)(1)(B). The fine, the expulsion, and the lawsuit consequently violated that section by this approach, as well.[14]

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

By fining Robertson $4000 and expelling him from membership in the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers following a trial board hearing on 12 June 1985, and by suing him on 25 September 1985 to collect the fine, Respondent in each instance violated Section 8(b)(1)(B) of the Act.

On these findings of fact and conclusions of law and on the entire record, I issue the following recommended[15]

ORDER

The Respondent, International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, Local 113, its officers, agents, and representatives, shall

1. Cease and desist from

(a) Restraining or coercing Pride Electric, Inc., in the selection of its representatives for the purposes of collective bargaining or the adjustment of grievances by pressing charges, holding trial board hearings, fining, suing to collect such fines, expelling from membership in the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, or otherwise disciplining Daniel S. Robertson, or any other supervisor or representative of Pride Electric acting in that capacity, for allegedly violating the provisions of a collective-bargaining agreement, Respondent's bylaws, or the constitution of Respondent's parent international.

(b) In any like or related manner restraining or coercing Pride Electric in its selection of representatives for the purposes of collective bargaining or the adjustment of grievances.

2. Take the following affirmative action necessary to effectuate the purposes of the Act.

(a) Rescind the disciplinary action taken against Robertson for working as a supervisor and employer representative for Pride Electric, Inc., including the $4000 fine assessed against him and his expulsion from membership in the parent international; remove from its records all references to and evidence of those actions; notify him in writing that these steps have been taken; and make him whole for any loss of earnings and benefits he may have suffered, and for any travel and other expenses he may have incurred, to attend the trial board proceeding against him on 12 June 1985.[16]

(b) Withdraw with prejudice the lawsuit filed against Robertson to collect the fine; or if judgment adverse to him has been entered, cause it to be vacated with prejudice; make him whole for all expenses incurred in the defense of this suit; and also make him whole for any losses suffered and expenses incurred, in the manner set forth in the preceding paragraph, to attend the trial and any proceeding relating thereto.

(c) Return to Robertson, with interest, any moneys collected from him in satisfaction of the fine.[17]

(d) Reinstate Robertson, if he wishes, as a member in good standing of International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers.

(e) Notify Pride Electric, in writing, that Respondent has no objection to Robertson's working for it as a supervisor and representing it for the purposes of collective bargaining or the adjustment of grievances.

(f) Post at its business office and meeting halls copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix."[18] Copies of the notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 27, after being signed by the Respondent's authorized representative, shall be posted by the Respondent immediately upon receipt and maintained for 60 consecutive days in conspicuous places including all places where notices to members are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by the Respondent to ensure that the notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

[13] Although the complaint says nothing about Robertson's expulsion, the underlying disciplinary proceeding was fully litigated. The legality of the expulsion therefore is properly on the table. Expulsion in the circumstances is no less unlawful than is the fine. Electrical Workers IBEW Local 323 (Drexel Properties), 255 NLRB 1395 (1981), enfd. 703 F.2d 501 (11th Cir. 1983).

[14] Respondent's argument is rejected that its ignorance of Robertson's supervisory status is exonerative. Hulse Electric, supra at 438 fn. 24. Also rejected is Respondent's contention that, since Robertson—and presumably Pride—did not learn about the internal union charges herein, let alone the conduct in issue, until after he had left Pride, that conduct "logically . . . cannot coerce Pride" within the purport of Sec. 8(b)(1)(B). This ignores the inherently coercive effect of the conduct, prospectively, on Pride's selection of 8(b)(1)(B) representatives, not to mention the untoward diminution of Sec. 8(b)(1)(B), particularly in seasonal industries, were unions so easily to evade its prohibition.

Rejected, finally, is the defense raised in Respondent's answer (but not mentioned in its brief) that the conduct in issue is outside the 6-month limitation period prescribed by Sec. 10(b) of the Act. Although Robertson was informed of the charges against him over 6 months before he filed the present unfair labor practice charge, Respondent did not take the "unconditional and unequivocal" actions in question until well within the 10(b) period. Stage Employees IATSE Local 659 (Paramount Pictures), 276 NLRB 881 (1985); Wisconsin River Valley District Council (Skippy Enterprises), 211 NLRB 222, 226 (1974).

[15] If no exceptions are filed as provided by Sec. 102.46 of the Board's Rules and Regulations, the findings, conclusions, and recommended Order shall, as provided in Sec. 102.48 of the Rules, be adopted by the Board and all objections to them shall be deemed waived for all purposes.

[16] That Robertson is entitled to be made whole in this manner is established by Laborers Northern California Council (Baker Co.), 275 NLRB 278 (1985).

[17] Interest shall be computed in accordance with Florida Steel Corp., 231 NLRB 651 (1977).

[18] If this Order is enforced by a judgment of a United States court of appeals, the words in the notice reading "Posted by Order of the National Labor Relations Board" shall read "Posted Pursuant to a Judgment of the United States Court of Appeals Enforcing an Order of the National Labor Relations Board."

(g) Sign and return to the Regional Director sufficient copies of the notice for posting by Pride electric, Inc., if willing, at all places where notices to employees are customarily posted.

(h) Notify the Regional Director in writing within 20 days from the date of this Order what steps the Respondent has taken to comply.

DECISION AND ORDER

BY CHAIRMAN DOTSON AND MEMBERS BABSON AND STEPHENS

On 23 December 1985 Administrative Law Judge Joel P. Biblowitz issued the attached decision. The General Counsel, the Charging Party, and the Respondent filed exceptions and supporting briefs. The Respondent filed an answering brief to the General Counsel's exceptions, the Charging Party filed an answering brief to the Respondent's exceptions, and the General Counsel filed a response to the Respondent's exceptions.

The National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the decision and the record in light of the exceptions and briefs and has decided to affirm the judge's rulings, findings,[1] and conclusions[2] and to adopt the recommended Order as modified.[3]

We agree with the judge, for the reasons stated by him, that the Respondent violated Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act by instituting unilateral changes affecting the terms and conditions of employment of employees at its Flatbush Avenue location without bargaining with Local 32B–32J, Service Employees International Union (Local 32B). Contrary to the judge, however, we find that the Respondent further violated Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act by withdrawing recognition of Local 32B at Flatbush Avenue for the reasons set forth below.

Clifton Boone, an employee at the Respondent's Flatbush Avenue facility, testified that about 2 or 3 October 1984 the Respondent's area supervisor, Michael Metcalf, and Operations Manager Bernie Ross met with the employees at the facility. Ross told the employees that "as of today" the Respondent was no longer recognizing Local 32B and that

[1] The General Counsel and the Charging Party have excepted to some of the judge's credibility findings. The Board's established policy is not to overrule an administrative law judge's credibility resolutions unless the clear preponderance of all the relevant evidence convinces us that they are incorrect. Standard Dry Wall Products, 91 NLRB 544 (1950), enfd. 188 F.2d 362 (3d Cir. 1951). We have carefully examined the record and find no basis for reversing the findings.

We correct the judge's inadvertent error in stating that Local 32B–32J, Service Employees International Union (Local 32B) began organizing the employees at the Police Operations Bureau (POB) in mid-1984; it is clear from the record that such organizing actually began in mid-1983. We also correct the judge's inadvertent error in referring to Joseph Metcalf, the Respondent's director of operations, as the Respondent's area supervisor.

The General Counsel excepts, inter alia, to the judge's failure to find that the Respondent acquired the cleaning contracts for John F. Kennedy Airport Buildings 141, 80, and 20 as part of the same bid package with the International Arrivals Building (IAB) in 1982 and with the IAB and POB in 1984. We find, based on record evidence, that buildings 141, 80, and 20 were acquired by the Respondent as part of the IAB bid package in 1982 and as part of the IAB and POB bid package in 1984. We further find that the employees at buildings 141, 80, and 20 were represented by Local 32B, and that the Respondent recognized Local 32B at these buildings. These findings, however, do not affect the results of our decision regarding the Respondent's failure to hire the predecessor employer's employees at the POB and to recognize Local 32B at that location.

Finally, we do not rely on the judge's statement that the Respondent defended its transfer of IAB employees to the POB on the grounds that there was a large number of experienced employees at the IAB. The record indicates that the Respondent defended its actions at 111 Livingston Street on such grounds, but that it did not defend its actions at the POB on such grounds.

[2] In adopting the judge's conclusion that the Respondent did not violate Sec. 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act by failing and refusing to hire the predecessor employers' employees at the POB and 111 Livingston Street, we particularly rely on the lack of evidence that the Respondent's hiring practice was discriminatorily motivated.

The complaint also alleged that the Respondent violated Sec. 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act by its refusal to comply with established past practice and its contractual obligations as set forth in art. I of the Independent Contractor's Agreement (ICA), which provided for a citywide bargaining unit, when it failed to recognize Local 32B at its newly acquired sites at the POB and 111 Livingston Street and failed to hire the predecessor's employees at those sites. The judge did not address this allegation in his decision. Regarding the Respondent's alleged refusal to comply with ICA art. I, we note that the ICA had expired on 31 December 1983, i.e., before the alleged dates that the Respondent acquired the contracts at the two new sites. Since a recognition clause is not a mandatory subject of bargaining, NLRB v. Borg-Warner Corp., 356 U.S. 342 (1958), we find that the Respondent did not violate Sec. 8(a)(5) by not adhering to ICA art. I when it acquired the contracts at the two new sites. Chemical Workers v. Pittsburgh Glass, 404 U.S. 157 (1971). We also note that the practice of having an employer recognize Local 32B at any newly acquired site was not always followed. For example, when the Respondent acquired the contract for the IAB in 1982, Local 32B declined to represent the IAB employees because they were already represented by the Teamsters, with whom Local 32B had a no-raid pact. The no-raid pact was not referred to in the ICA, and there is no evidence that the Respondent had been aware of its existence. Furthermore, after obtaining the IAB contract, the Respondent was awarded the bid on Brooklyn Union Gas Service Stations. The Teamsters immediately organized the employees there, and the Respondent entered into a contract with the Teamsters for that job. There is no evidence that Local 32B objected to the Respondent's recognition of the Teamsters. Thus, we find that the Respondent's failure to follow the alleged past practice in the instant case does not warrant a finding that it violated Sec. 8(a)(5) and (1).

[3] The Charging Party excepts to the judge's failure to order that the Respondent make its employees whole for any losses suffered as a result of the cessation of payment for unused sick leave days at the end of each year. We find merit in this exception and shall modify the judge's recommended Order accordingly.

The General Counsel excepts to the judge's failure to order that the notice to employees be printed in Spanish and English. The General Counsel requested at the hearing that the notice be printed in both languages. The General Counsel has, however, failed to show that there are a substantial number of Spanish-speaking employees. Thus, we leave to the compliance stage of this proceeding the determination of whether the notice should also be printed in Spanish.

they were "no longer going by the same rules" as they had under Local 32B. Ross then proceeded to list various changes in the employees' benefits, including reductions in sick days, holidays, and vacation time. Later that day, Metcalf told Boone that some of the changes would apply only to new employees hired after 2 October 1984. The following day Metcalf distributed a document listing the changes in benefits, including, inter alia, that the Respondent would no longer contribute to the Local 32B welfare fund, that there would be a reduction in benefits for new hires, and that employees would no longer be paid for unused sick days at the end of the year.

Boone testified that shortly thereafter his paycheck stubs indicated that Local 32B dues were not being deducted from his pay, so he and his fellow employees paid their dues directly to Local 32B. Boone's employment with the Respondent terminated on 18 November 1984, but he learned from the employees still at Flatbush Avenue that at some later time the Respondent resumed deducting Local 32B dues.

Ronald Atkinson, the Respondent's president, testified that about 1 October 1984 Metcalf informed him that he had told the Flatbush Avenue employees that the Respondent no longer recognized Local 32B. Atkinson replied that he had never authorized Metcalf or anyone else to say that, that it was not true, and that they had always recognized Local 32B at that location and would continue to do so. Atkinson then prepared the document, referred to above, which was distributed to the Flatbush employees by Metcalf the day following their meeting with Metcalf and Ross.

Atkinson testified that the Respondent has continued to recognize Local 32B at the Flatbush Avenue location; has continued to contribute to the Local 32B pension fund for all the employees; and has continued to deduct Local 32B dues from its Flatbush Avenue employees, although there was a brief delay in these deductions in late September or early October 1984 due to a turnover of clerical and managerial employees. According to Atkinson, the dues deduction problem was corrected shortly thereafter, however, and any delinquencies were remitted to Local 32B.

The judge dismissed the allegation that the Respondent violated Section 8(a)(5) and (1) by withdrawing recognition of Local 32B. He found that Atkinson, on learning that Ross and Metcalf had told the employees that the Respondent was withdrawing recognition, had the remarks corrected and that the Respondent has since continued to recognize Local 32B at locations where it is the collective-bargaining representative of the Respondent's employees.

Contrary to the judge, we find that the Respondent withdrew recognition from Local 32B at its Flatbush Avenue location and thus violated Section 8(a)(5) and (1). Atkinson's alleged repudiation of the statement that the Respondent was withdrawing recognition was not effective under Passavant Memorial Area Hospital, 237 NLRB 138 (1978). Passavant holds that in order for a repudiation to be effective it must meet the following standards:

> [It] must be "timely," "unambiguous," "specific in nature to the coercive conduct," and "free from other proscribed illegal conduct." . . . Furthermore, there must be adequate publication of the repudiation to the employees involved and there must be no proscribed conduct on the employer's part after publication. . . . And, finally . . . such repudiation . . . should give assurances to employees that in the future their employer will not interfere with the exercise of their Section 7 rights.

Passavant, 237 NLRB at 138–139, quoting from Scott & Fetzer Co., 228 NLRB 1016, 1024 (1977) (and cases there cited).

In the instant case, there was no "adequate publication of the repudiation to the employees involved." Although Atkinson told Metcalf, a supervisor, that the Respondent was not withdrawing recognition from Local 32B, there is no evidence that the employees were ever so informed. The document prepared by Atkinson which was distributed to the employees failed to state that the Respondent was continuing to recognize Local 32B. Moreover, there was further proscribed conduct by the Respondent, i.e., various unlawful unilateral changes in terms and conditions of employment. Furthermore, such unilateral changes, as well as the cessation of dues checkoff, reinforced the statement that recognition had been withdrawn. Finally, there was no contact between the Respondent and Local 32B until 26 December 1984, when the Respondent wrote a letter to Local 32B suggesting that they meet. Under these circumstances, we find that the Respondent violated Section 8(a)(5) and (1) by withdrawing recognition from Local 32B at its Flatbush Avenue location from about 1 October to 26 December 1984.

ORDER

The National Labor Relations Board adopts the recommended Order of the administrative law judge as modified below and orders that the Respondent, Triple A Maintenance Corp., Brooklyn,

New York, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall take the action set forth in the Order as modified.

1. Insert the following as paragraph 1(a) and reletter the subsequent paragraphs.

"(a) Withdrawing recognition from Local 32B as the collective-bargaining representative of its employees at its Flatbush Avenue location."

2. Substitute the following for paragraph 2(c).

"(c) Make its employees whole for any losses suffered due to the reduction in vacation and sick leave days and to the discontinuance of payment for unused sick leave days at the end of the year in the manner set forth in the remedy section of the judge's decision."

3. Substitute the attached notice for that of the administrative law judge.

APPENDIX

NOTICE TO EMPLOYEES
POSTED BY ORDER OF THE
NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD
An Agency of the United States Government

The National Labor Relations Board has found that we violated the National Labor Relations Act and has ordered us to post and abide by this notice.

WE WILL NOT withdraw recognition from Local 32B–32J, Service Employees International Union, AFL–CIO as the collective-bargaining representative of our employees at our Flatbush Avenue location.

WE WILL NOT unilaterally change the terms and conditions of employment of our employees who are represented by Local 32B without prior consultation and negotiations with Local 32B, the collective-bargaining representative of those employees.

WE WILL NOT in any like or related manner interfere with, restrain, or coerce you in the exercise of the rights guaranteed you by Section 7 of the Act.

WE WILL rescind the unilateral changes made about 1 October 1984 and restore the terms and conditions of employment of our employees who are represented by Local 32B as they existed prior to 1 October 1984, and WE WILL make whole these employees for any losses they suffered due to our unilateral changes regarding their health and insurance coverage, paid leave for birthdays and health center visits, vacation and sick days, payment for unused sick leave, and starting salary.

DECISION

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

JOEL P. BIBLOWITZ, Administrative Law Judge. This case was tried before me in Brooklyn, New York, on 17, 18, 19, and 25 July 1985. The complaint in Case 29–CA–11100 issued on 22 October 1984,[1] and was based on an unfair labor practice charge filed by Local 32B–32J, Service Employees International Union, AFL–CIO (Local 32B) on 15 March; this complaint alleges that Triple A Maintenance Corp. (Respondent) violated Section 8(a)(1), (2), (3), and (5) of the Act when it engaged in the following conduct at two distinct locations—the Police Operations Bureau at J.F.K. International Airport (the POB) and 111 Livingston Street, Brooklyn, New York: refused to hire the employees of predecessor employers, and recognized and entered into and maintained collective-bargaining agreements with Local 732, International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen and Helpers of America (Local 732), rather than Local 32B, the recognized or certified representative of the employees at these locations. The complaint in Case 29–CA–11487, which issued on 30 November, was based on an unfair labor charge filed by Local 32B on 15 October; this complaint alleges that Respondent violated Section 8(a)(1) and (5) of the Act by demanding the exclusion of the above two locations as a condition of consummating a collective-bargaining agreement with Local 32B covering other of its locations with employees represented by Local 32B, by unilaterally changing existing wage rates, health and life insurance benefits, pension benefits, holidays, vacations, and sick day benefits without prior notice to Local 32B, and by withdrawing its recognition of Local 32B as the collective-bargaining representative of its other employees. On 16 January 1985 an order consolidating cases issued, consolidating the above two complaints. On the entire record, including my observation of the demeanor of the witnesses, and after consideration of the briefs filed by counsel for Respondent and Local 32B, I make the following

FINDINGS OF FACT

I. JURISDICTION AND LABOR ORGANIZATION STATUS

There being no dispute, I find that Respondent is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act, and Local 32B and Local 732 are each labor organizations within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

II. THE FACTS

A. Introduction

Respondent is engaged as a building maintenance contractor in the New York City area, more particularly in Brooklyn and Queens. In that regard, Respondent contracts with the owner or manager of commercial or residential buildings and, in exchange for a fee paid to it, supplies employees and supplies to clean, maintain, and/or repair the buildings. These contracts often contain 30-day cancellation clauses which contribute to the competitive and transient nature of the industry.

The Service Employers Association (SEA), an association of maintenance contractors, negotiates collective-bargaining agreements with Local 32B on behalf of its members; on completion of these negotiations, the independent maintenance contractors are informed by letter of the contents of this agreement and are given the choice of signing such an agreement with "exactly the same" economic terms as the SEA agreement (this is called the Independent Contractor's Agreement (the ICA) or negotiating a separate agreement. For a number of years, Respondent has executed the ICA, the last one being for the period 1 January 1981 through 31 December 1983. Some of the relevant provisions of this agreement are:

> Article I, Paragraph 2: This agreement shall apply to all service employees employed in any facility, including residential buildings, in the City of New York.
> Article XIII, Paragraph 1(c): With respect to all jobs contracted for by the employer where members of the union were employed when the contract was acquired, it is agreed that the employer shall retain at least the same number of employees, the same employees, under the same work schedule, and assignments including starting time of each employee.
> Article XIV, Paragraph 50: 3. The Employer shall make no agreements with any other union unless the Union and the Association agree otherwise in writing; such written agreements between the Union and the Association and the Employers presently in effect shall continue for the duration of this Agreement.

In addition, article II, paragraph 2, states:

> The Employer shall immediately notify the Union in writing on forms to be supplied by the Union as soon as a cancellation of an account becomes effective where Union members are employed. The Employer shall immediately notify the Union when he acquires a new job. The Employer shall be liable for any lost wages and/or damages sustained by employees as a result of the Employer's willful failure to comply with the job cancellation notice and/or new job notification provisions of this Agreement.

Local 32B's theory of recognition, based on the terms of the SEA and ICA agreements, together with many years of practice, can best be described as: "Once you sign a contract with us, we have all your employees, wherever they may be, unless we decide not to take them." Donald Mumm, Vice President of Local 32B, testified that when a signatory employer takes over the maintenance operation at a building where the employees of the predecessor employer were members of Local 32B, the successor employer must recognize Local 32B at that location, and > they must retain the exact same people that were on the job. Not just the same number. The same people that were there, the same hours, the same wages, the same benefits, everything. Absolute status quo when they take over a job where our members are employed.

The same is true when a Local 32B signatory employer takes over an operation where the predecessor's employees were not members of Local 32B. As Mumm testified: "Where the employees are non-union the contractor takes over the job under the agreement, within 30 days he has to put those people in the union and they are covered under our standard contract." These rules apply as long as the work locations are within the city of New York (which includes all the boroughs) through Nassau and Suffolk Counties. Mumm testified that the reason for these rules is to stabilize an otherwise turbulent industry; i.e., employers bidding on jobs know, in advance, the wages that they will pay their employees if their bid is successful, and this is the same wage that the present contractor is paying the employees. He also testified that about 1978, at a time when Ronald Atkinson, presently the president of Respondent, was employed elsewhere, he told Atkinson that the Local 32B contract requires that an employer acquiring a maintenance contract at a location where the maintenance employees are Local 32B members "must employ those people, retain their seniority, their hours and their benefits." The only exception to Local 32B's rules of jurisdiction is when the incumbent union at the acquired site is an AFL–CIO affiliated union or one which has a no-raiding pact with Local 32B; in that situation Local 32B will not accept jurisdiction over those employees. As will be seen, infra, this exception to the Local 32B jurisdiction rules was the genesis of the problem here.

B. JFK Airport

Sometime shortly prior to January 1982 the Port Authority of New York and New Jersey (the PA), the operator of JFK Airport, requested bids for maintenance work at the International Arrivals Building (IAB), the principal passenger facility at the airport, together with three small buildings. Maintenance work at the POB, approximately a mile away and substantially smaller, was not included in this bid. Respondent was the low bidder and obtained the contract for the IAB commencing about February 1982. The predecessor employer at the IAB was Triangle Maintenance, which had a collective-bargaining agreement with Local 732 covering its employees at that location. On learning that they were the successful bidder, Atkinson and his predecessor called Mumm and informed him that they were awarded the contract and they were prepared to recognize Local 32B for that location. However, about that time, Gus Bevona, Local 32B president, received a call from the Teamsters president informing him that Local 732 had a contract at the IAB. Because Local 32B had a no-raid pact with the Teamsters, Mumm advised Respondent that "we could not have jurisdiction on that job" because of the no-raiding pact between Local 32B and the Teamsters. Respondent never grieved this action. On 1 December 1982 Respondent and Local 732 entered into a collective-bargaining agreement covering this location. Approximately 100 employees are employed by Respondent at this location.

All Service Cleaning (All Service) was the maintenance contractor at the POB from 1 February 1983 through 31 January 1984; Respondent was unsuccessful in bidding on this contract. In mid-1984, Local 32B began organizing the All Service employees at this location, and, as a result of a Board-conducted election, was certified on 25 October 1983 as the representative of its employees in the following unit:

> Included: All full time and regular part time building service employees employed by the employer at its location at JFK International Airport.
> Excluded: All other employees, clerical employees, guards and supervisors as defined in the Act.

Representatives of Local 32B and All Service met for one bargaining session in November 1983; after receiving the Local 32B demands, Joseph Schlogel, one of the All Service partners, said that he could not afford the increases demanded by Local 32B, and he would speak to the PA to request increased renumeration so that he could afford the proposed increases. He never contacted Local 32B again and there were no further collective-bargaining sessions between them. Late in 1983 All Service was being penalized by the PA for poor work; the PA threatened to cancel the contract in October 1983, but did not. Schlogel testified that the contract was canceled because of the poor work of his employees, but the PA worded the cancellation letter (effective 31 January) in a more diplomatic way.

Atkinson testified that sometime in late 1983 the PA put out a bid package for the IAB and the POB together, unlike the previous separate bids for these locations. About November 1983 Respondent was informed that it was the low bidder and was awarded the PA contract for maintenance work at the IAB and POB effective 1 February 1984. Atkinson testified that "the building became a situation that was part of our original International Arrivals Building package"; because of that, Respondent observed the seniority and bumping provisions of its agreement with Local 732 at the IAB and allowed Local 732 members employed at the IAB to bid for the POB jobs. As a result, all five positions at the POB were initially filled by Local 732 members who had previously been employed at the IAB. Respondent defends this action on the grounds it had a pool of a large number of experienced employees nearby at the IAB, and that it was unaware of Local 32B's status at the POB at the time. As will be discussed, infra, one source of difficulty between Respondent and Local 32B was allegedly inaccurate information given by Local 32B representatives to Respondent in answer to queries regarding the staffing of facilities Respondent was considering bidding for. Atkinson testified that it was not necessary for him to get such information from Local 32B regarding the POB as he was not aware of its presence at the site and it was not necessary as the PA bid packages contain the square footage of the building, the number of stations, and the hours required.

Respondent's lack of knowledge of Local 32B's status at the POB is disputed by the testimony of Anthony Poccio, business agent for Local 32B. He testified that in December 1983 he had a telephone conversation with Atkinson, although he could not be sure whether he called Atkinson or Atkinson called him. In this conversation Atkinson told him that he had a good chance of being awarded the POB contract and he wanted to know "the staffing of the men there" and the rates of pay. Poccio told him that because Local 32B and SEA were then negotiating for a new agreement he could not tell him what the new rate would be, but the employees were then earning $5.60 an hour. Poccio testified that this was the average rate then being earned by the All Service employees at the POB; because All Service had not entered into a collective-bargaining agreement with Local 32B, this was not a contractual rate, nor was All Service paying the fringe benefits required by the contract.[2] On cross-examination, for the first time, Poccio testified that in this conversation he also informed Atkinson that Local 32B was certified at the POB. Shortly after this testimony, he testified:

> A. Maybe the certification wasn't mentioned, but we had won the election at the POB.
> Q. You are sure you mentioned that?
> A. I am pretty sure of that, yes.
> Q. Your mind is clear on that?
> A. Yes.

Poccio was then shown his affidavit given to the Board, which makes no mention of informing Atkinson of the election or certification. He then testified:

> Q. The question is, did you tell Mr. Atkinson you won the election?
> A. I can't answer that. To the best of my knowledge, no. I can't really answer that. I don't know.
> Q. Is your answer right now you simply don't recall whether you discussed election or certification with Mr. Atkinson?
> A. Yes.

Atkinson testified he never had any such conversation with Poccio or anybody else at Local 32B regarding the POB bid.

[2] The All Service payroll register for its last week at the POB is in evidence. This register does not separate regular hours from overtime hours, or indicate whether overtime is paid at a higher rate. In addition, for that period, it appears that the average hourly wage for these employees was approximately $5.50 an hour.

C. 111 Livingston Street

New York Telephone Company (the Telephone Company) owns a high rise building at 111 Livingston Street in Brooklyn, New York (Livingston Street). It occupies the lower 11 floors and leases space in the top half of the building. The Telephone Company contracts with a maintenance company to clean and maintain the space it occupies, together with the common areas, principally the lobby and the plaza. Beginning about 1981 the Telephone Company contracted with Organized Maintenance Inc. (Organized Maintenance) to provide the cleaning and maintenance of the floors it occupied and the common areas. Presumably, at that time the employees of Organized Maintenance, at least at that location, were not represented by any labor organization. About mid-1983, Local 32B organized the employees of Organized Maintenance employed at Livingston Street. Pursuant to a Board election, on 19 September 1983 Local 32B was certified as the representative of the full-time and regular part-time porters employed by Organized Maintenance at this location. On 7 December 1983 one inconclusive negotiating session between the parties took place; no further sessions were held. Leroy Walker, Local 32B's chairman for its Brooklyn district, testified that the reason no further negotiating sessions took place is that about a week after the sole session he received a telephone call from one of the Organized Maintenance employees at the site who told him that there was a rumor that Organized Maintenance might lose the contract at the site and be replaced by Respondent. Walker made no attempt to contact Organized Maintenance or the Telephone Company to verify this rumor. He testified that shortly after learning this he called Respondent and asked to speak to Atkinson; on learning that Atkinson was not in, he left a message for Atkinson to call him. A few days later, having received no call from Respondent, he called again and was connected with Joseph Metcalf, Respondent's area supervisor (who did not testify). He asked Metcalf if Respondent was going to get the contract for the maintenance work at Livingston Street; Metcalf said that he did not know. Walker said that he was certified at that building and "we were expecting him to pick up the employees in that building." Metcalf told him that he did not know but he would look into it and get back to Walker; he never did. The next Walker heard of the situation was about 9 January when one of the Organized Maintenance employees at Livingston Street came to his office and informed him that he was no longer employed there because "he was not picked up . . . . He was not hired." Respondent began maintaining Livingston Street about 8 January.

Mumm testified that about 10 or 11 January he called Atkinson and told him that Walker and Poccio had informed him that Respondent had taken over the POB and Livingston Street operations and had failed to employ the employees of the predecessor employers. He told Atkinson that he expected him to adhere to the contract and put those people back to work. Atkinson said that he did not know that Local 32B members were working on the job. Mumm replied that he did know about it because Walker had told Metcalf that Local 32B's members were employed at these sites. Atkinson then mentioned the IAB difficulty he had with Local 32B and said that he was caught in the middle of it and it was costly to him. Mumm said that he was sorry that it had happened that way, but there was nothing Local 32B could do about it because it was a Teamsters job.

Walker testified that on 31 January he received a call from Atkinson and in that call he asked Atkinson whether he was going to employ the Organized Maintenance employees at Livingston Street. Atkinson said that he had replaced them with his employees, and three-quarters of them were Local 732 members and the others had signed cards for Local 732. Walker said that he had "an overall agreement" with Respondent and Atkinson said that he had an overall agreement with Local 732.

Atkinson testified that the Telephone Company is Respondent's largest customer and that Respondent had originally bid on the Livingston Street contract, but was the second highest bidder to Organized Maintenance. He testified further that in the last week of December 1983 he received a telephone call from George Muhs, representative of the Telephone Company in charge of contracting (who did not testify), asking if he would be willing to take over cleaning Livingston Street; when Atkinson asked at what price, he said at the previous bid. Atkinson said that he would have to check with his office, but he would call him back. Atkinson met with some of Respondent's office employees and discussed the original bid; he called Muhs and told him that he would take the job on those terms. Atkinson testified:

> There was still some days lag because then he had to go back to—he meaning George Muhs had to go back to his people and see if it could be confirmed. At this point the holidays were around us. We're at the beginning of the year. If he's telling me that if I was to take over it was going to happen on or about January 8th. Within—I almost say it's a day, within a day or two I found out from George Muhs it's been confirmed. You have the job. You are to start January 8th. I had approximately one week to get on the job.

Atkinson then asked Muhs if the employees presently working in the building should be considered for employment. Muhs' response (according to Atkinson's testimony) was: "Ron, I'd like you to come over and look at the building." He testified that he inspected the building about 4 or 5 January although, of the three affidavits he gave to the Board regarding this matter, none mentions such a personal inspection. He inspected all the floors occupied by the Telephone Company to determine what would be needed to bring it to an acceptable standard and how many employees would be needed on a regular basis to maintain the area. Atkinson testified:

> I had an extremely dirty building. Not only was I going to have to go on with a complete complement of staffing, but I was also going to have to go on the job site with cleaning crews that were involved in special cleaning duties to bring the building up to par.

This survey of the building convinced him that the maintenance employees employed by Organized Maintenance were not properly performing their job; that is the reason he did not hire them; and it had nothing to do with the fact that they were members of Local 32B.[3]

Atkinson testified:

> So at that point I needed to move very quickly in terms of where I am going to get the personnel to clean this building. . . . I was dealing with the primary client of the company without question in terms of the percentage of business we do with them than with anyone else.
> As a result of that I have the largest crew of personnel that Triple A has anywhere is at the International Arrivals Building. If in fact a contractor is going to pull people from other locations to help service a new startup of an account you have to do so that it doesn't affect your overall operation. By example if I have a two man building in location I can't pull both of those people out of there. The continuity of cleaning will fall apart if I try to take two out of one building and put in two new.
> So the place where I could go that would least affect my overall operation was the largest pool I had, the International Arrivals Building. I called the Triple A manager at the I.A.B building and I told him that as rapidly as possibly he should contact the entire work force within the I.A.B. and ask does anyone . . . live in the Brooklyn area, anywhere around the Brooklyn Downtown area, and if so would they be willing to relocate to that building. He said he would do so.
> Within a day, if my memory serves me, I'm getting a call from a man by the name of Hank Habel, who was the then Business Agent for Local 732 I.B.T. which represented all of the people at the International Arrivals Building. His conversation was that I understand that you're asking for people to work in Brooklyn. I said yes. Where? 111 Livingston Street. I want you to understand if they go into that building those people are mine.
> I said, "Look, I just need people. I've got to get as many people as I can." He said, "Well nobody is forced to go over there." I said, "No, nobody is forced."
> So it was on a voluntary basis we pulled as many people as we could from the International Arrivals Building and put them in place in that building. Those were the operational modes that came up to starting the building on January 8th.

On 9 January, Respondent and Local 732 entered into a two-page "addendum" to the master collective-bargaining agreement between the parties, which is dated 1 May 1982 through 30 April 1985, covering Respondent's employees who are "engaged in custodial and cleaning operations." This addendum agreement was "for employees located at the New York Telephone Company facility at 111 Livingston Street, Brooklyn, New York." Respondent and Local 732 are also parties to another agreement, effective 1 December 1982 through 31 January 1986, covering building maintenance cleaners engaged in cleaning operations at John F. Kennedy International Airport, Jamaica, New York, and all airports in the New York-New Jersey metropolitan area.

Anthony Saraceno, district manager for the Telephone Company in its Building Management Division, testified that Organized Maintenance had been the maintenance contractor at Livingston Street since about 1981, having been the low bidder for the contract. In 1983, he and his colleagues at the Telephone Company had a number of conferences regarding the cleaning of the building by Organized Maintenance. There were a number of areas where they felt the contractor was deficient: the main hall and elevator were not swept or vacuumed in a timely manner; the washroom was occasionally dirty with paper towels missing; the spray buffing of the cafeteria was not performed at a proper level; and, on occasion, light bulbs were not changed. On 21 November 1983 the Telephone Company gave Organized Maintenance a final warning that if its work did not improve its contract would be terminated; there was no noticeable improvement after this warning was given. On 7 December 1983 the Telephone Company wrote to Organized Maintenance giving it 30 days' notice of the termination of its agreement. "Immediately after" receiving the return receipt of this letter Muhs called Respondent and proposed that it take the contract at the prior bid price, which Respondent accepted. The Telephone Company did this rather than requesting bids for the job because it had less than 30 days to locate a new contractor, and issuing new specifications and requesting bids on them would have required too much time. Saraceno also testified that he did not request that Respondent not hire any of the Organized Maintenance employees, nor did he inform Respondent of the reasons the Telephone Company terminated Organized Maintenance, although "I am sure they found out."

Joan Anderson, secretary-treasurer for Organized Maintenance, testified that the complaints regarding its work at Livingston Street were minor; lighting fixtures and paper towels were not changed fast enough. When she visited the premises she felt that it was being properly maintained.

D. Refusal to Bargain and Unilateral Changes

As stated, supra, prior to 1984 Respondent had always executed the ICA agreement, which was patterned after the SEA agreement. About January, in the course of complaining to Atkinson about his failure to reemploy the Local 32B members at the POB and Livingston Street, Mumm told Atkinson that Local 32B was in the process of negotiating a new agreement, but because Respondent's actions were "contrary to the practice of the industry and to the practice of Triple A in the past" the language in a new contract with Respondent would be "so crystal clear that there would . . . be no way that he could claim to misinterpret it again." Mumm testified:

[3] Atkinson testified that prior to 8 January "a few" of these employees filed applications to work for Respondent, but most applied to work at other sites after Respondent commenced its operation at Livingston Street.

> I think he told me at that time that they would be willing to sign the same contract that everybody else signed and I told him you really have the same contract now that everybody else has, but you are not interpreting the way everybody else interprets it. Since that is the case, then we are going to have to make it crystal clear in your case.

The General Counsel alleges three distinct 8(a)(5) violations regarding the negotiations that followed:

(a) During negotiations between about March and July, Respondent insisted on excluding the POB and Livingston Street units from the unit descriptions as a condition of consummating an agreement with Local 32B.

(b) About 3 October, Respondent made certain unilateral changes in its employees' benefits without prior notice to or consultation with Local 32B.

(c) About 3 October, Respondent withdrew its recognition of Local 32B in a citywide unit, as described supra.

The evidence regarding these allegations comes principally from the testimony of Ira Sturm, Esq., attorney for Local 32B. Atkinson also testified on the subject.

Sturm testified that at the negotiating sessions he was, basically, the spokesman for Local 32B. The first meeting took place about 8 March; present were he, Mumm, Thomas Latimer, contract director for Local 32B, Atkinson, and Stanley Israel, Esq., attorney for Respondent. Mumm began by saying that Local 32B had requested negotiations with Respondent to replace the expired contract. Atkinson asked why they were changing the former practice of simply sending him for signature the pattern agreement previously reached with the SEA and the other independents. Mumm said that Local 32B previously had problems with Respondent's interpretation of provisions in the expired contract and they wanted to clarify these provisions by bargaining separately with Respondent, which they had the right to do. Israel said that Respondent was willing to execute the standard independent agreement provided article XIII, paragraph 1(c), was eliminated and it did not apply to Long Island, Livingston Street, the POB, or any location Respondent acquired after the contract was executed. Sturm said that Respondent could not pick and choose what it liked and disliked in the standard independent agreement; he was there to negotiate an agreement "on the unit as it existed, which included 111 Livingston Street and the POB." Israel said that "under no circumstances would he negotiate to include 111 Livingston Street and the POB because he had a contractual relationship with another union, 732" and was caught in a dilemma. Sturm said that the unit he was negotiating for included Livingston Street and the POB; Israel said that they should continue bargaining and the unit would be decided by the Board pursuant to the unit clarification petition that he had filed. Local 32B gave Respondent an 18-page "Proposal . . . for Revision and Amendment" of the independent agreement. At this meeting, Atkinson also complained that when he called Local 32B for staffing information of locations on which he was going to bid (where Local 32B represented the incumbent contractor) he was often given erroneous information which, he felt, was done purposely. Latimer denied this, saying that Local 32B gave him the most accurate information it had. At this meeting and at later meetings of the parties, Israel suggested that the best way of settling the dispute involving the POB and Livingston Street was for the two Unions to meet and solve the problem (because only the Unions or the Board could solve the problem) and that Respondent would agree to whatever determination was made. Local 32B's response was, "[Y]ou created the problem, you resolve it."

The next meeting took place on 22 March with the same individuals, except Mumm, present. Atkinson again complained about receiving incorrect staffing information from Local 32B for jobs on which he was preparing to bid. Sturm then went over each of the items in Local 32B's proposal. Israel asked whether each of the items was in the SEA agreement and, when Sturm said that it was not, Israel said they would not accept it. Israel reiterated that the unit in the agreement should not include Livingston Street and the POB. Sturm insisted that Livingston Street and the POB were part of the negotiations. Israel objected to article XIII of the expired agreement alleging that it should only encompass those locations that Respondent acknowledged were Local 32B locations. Sturm answered that such a clause was necessary in the New York building maintenance industry. No agreement was reached at this meeting.

The next meeting was held about 3 May with the same participants. Atkinson, again, briefly complained about the information he received from Local 32B regarding jobs on which he was about to bid. Israel repeated that any contract should not include Livingston Street or the POB because he had an overall agreement with Local 732 covering these locations and others. Israel stated that the two Unions should decide the jurisdiction problem. Sturm asked for a copy of the agreement with Local 732 and was told that he would be supplied with one; he never was. Sturm then brought up one of Local 32B's proposals that there be no layoffs, reductions in force, or change of schedules or duties without Local 32B's prior approval; he felt this was necessary because of Respondent's actions earlier that year. Sturm testified:

> I took a position that if that were the case and he is in essence, he meaning Triple A. If Triple A is denying the existence of the reality of the cleaning service industry in New York where there is you know gains and loses [sic] on a daily basis, I would demand that there be absolutely no layoffs of any employees during the life of the contract, that there be absolutely no reduction in forces on any site that was acknowledged to be 32B during the life of the contract without prior written consent of the Union.

Respondent did not agree with this. At that point Israel said: "I guess we are at an impasse." Sturm testified:

> I looked at him and I said well I guess we are at an impasse . . . basically I considered us at being at > a position where I was not being able to negotiate with the then recognized unit . . . and I realized that I couldn't make any progress because . . . all the negotiations were being conditioned on Triple A's interpretation of what the unit was.

At that meeting, Sturm gave Israel a copy of the recently negotiated SEA agreement. The meeting concluded without agreement on any of the issues.

The next meeting took place about 17 July with the same participants plus an associate in Sturm's law firm. At either this meeting or, initially, at the 3 May meeting, Sturm recited Local 32B's demands, which were reduced to the following: the economics of the SEA agreement ("which really was never a problem"); no layoffs, discharges, or reductions in force without the prior consent of Local 32B, in the citywide unit (as discussed supra); a $10-a-week per employee contribution by Respondent for an annuity fund, in addition to the standard pension then in existence; no change in an employee's duties or work schedule without the prior consent of Local 32B; Respondent's assumption of the cost of an attorney to represent its employees in connection with any problem arising out of their employment; and 2 hours' leave four times a year for all employees to attend union meetings. Israel said that if these demands were included in the SEA agreement he would accept them; if not, he would not. No agreement was reached on any of these issues.

During early to mid-July, Local 32B struck and picketed Respondent without warning at three high rise commercial buildings in Manhattan; within hours of these strikes, Respondent lost all of these contracts, which had good profit margins and were the "mainstay of the contractor's business in the New York City area," according to Atkinson's testimony. At the time of the hearing, Respondent was the maintenance contractor at only one commercial building in Manhattan.

The next meeting took place about 19 July. Sturm testified that present, in addition to the usual participants, was Joe Sorotkin, who, Sturm was informed, was an owner of Respondent. Sorotkin asked Mumm what he wanted and Mumm said that he wanted a counterproposal. At that point Mumm and Atkinson spoke privately in Mumm's office for about a half hour. When Mumm emerged from the room he told Sturm that an agreement had been reached and Respondent would sign the standard independent agreement with two additions: it would agree that there would be no peremptory discharges and no reductions in force during the term of the contract. Additionally, Respondent agreed to withdraw its unit clarification petition and both sides would withdraw all unfair labor practice charges. The final (and crucial) aspect of this agreement was that the POB and Livingston Street would be within Local 32B's jurisdiction as long as Local 732 agreed to relinquish jurisdiction. Mumm told Sturm to prepare such a stipulation for the parties' signatures. About the following day Sturm was informed that this proposed agreement had collapsed.

Atkinson testified that Israel was not present at this meeting. Sorotkin asked how the strike could be settled; Mumm pointed to Atkinson and said that he knew what had to be done. At that point, everybody but Atkinson and Mumm left the room. Mumm told Atkinson that the issues that could settle the matter were Local 32B's jurisdiction at the POB and Livingston Street and the two proposals demanded by Local 32B providing for no layoffs without the consent of Local 32B and no discharges prior to an arbitrator's decision permitting it. As to the former, Atkinson told Mumm that he was not sure what, if anything, he could do about it, but he would speak to someone in Local 732 to see if this jurisdiction issue could be settled. As to the latter, he would speak to Respondent's owners and legal counsel about it. At that point they left the room and the meeting ended. They met the next day and Atkinson told Mumm that Local 732 refused to relinquish jurisdiction over either the POB or Livingston Street. Atkinson said: "It's not mine to give." They then rejoined the others and Mumm said that all of Local 32B's demands were back on the table. Mumm asked Israel if there was anything to talk about, he said no, and the meeting ended. There were no further meetings between the parties.

On Monday afternoon, 24 September, Atkinson called Sturm and asked to set up another meeting as Respondent had some proposals to make. Sturm said that it was a bad week for him because, being an Orthodox Jew, he would not be working late Wednesday, Thursday, or Friday of that week as it was Rosh Hashanah, but that he would be willing to meet anytime the following week and he would call Mumm to arrange such a meeting. When he did so, Mumm told Sturm that he would be attending a convention the following week, but he would be available the next following week, the week of 8 October. Sturm then called Atkinson and reiterated that he was not available that week because of the Jewish holiday and Mumm was not available the following week due to a convention, but they could meet on 8 October. Sturm testified that Atkinson's response was: "[T]hat was not in my instructions. My instructions were to make it before that." By letter to Atkinson, with a copy to Israel, dated 24 September, Sturm wrote:

> I would just like to confirm with you our conversation of this morning. I returned your call and you advised me that you would like to set up a negotiation session. I advised you that this week was difficult due to the fact that the Jewish Holiday falls on Thursday and Friday. Although I agreed to meet early next week, I called Mr. Mumm and he indicated that he would be out of town next week, but that we would be willing to meet on October 8th or during that week. After you called Stan Israel to find out about his availability, you advised me that your proposals would be delivered to me and that the matter could not wait until the week of the 8th. I asked if we could set up a meeting anyway and you indicated that such were not in accord with your instructions.
> I would like to formally advise you that the Union is prepared to meet and negotiate at mutually agreeable dates and times. Our offer remains open, subject to limitations that we all have as to getting our schedules to coincide.
> Should you wish to meet, please give me a call.

By letter to Sturm dated 1 October (which indicates that it was hand delivered), Israel wrote:

> As you are aware, we have been trying to set up a further negotiating session with you since Friday, September 21. We have been unable to do so because of your unavailability due to the Jewish holidays and Mr. Mumm's complete unavailability during the week of October 1.
> Mr. Atkinson and I, however, will be able to meet with you some time during the week of October 8. At this point I would suggest either October 10 or 11 at approximately 5:30 P.M.
> In the interim, however, I feel that it is incumbent upon me to present to you the Company's revised proposals for a new collective bargaining agreement. The prior offer of the Company, which consists of its willingness to enter into the Independent Contractors Agreement (excluding, of course, those jurisdictional clauses which we have previously objected to) continues in effect with the following modifications:
> (1) Effective October 1, 1984, the Company will no longer make contributions to the Local 32B-J Health Fund but rather will maintain a Blue Cross, Blue Shield (employee only) coverage, together with $2,500 group life insurance per employee. Existing employees will be covered under the Company's direct coverage immediately, whereas employees hired on and after October 2, 1984, will have to be with the Company for 180 days of continuous employment in order to be eligible for coverage.
> (3) Effective October 2, 1984, the two Health Center visits will be eliminated.
> (4) All employees hired on and after October 2, 1984, will receive the following paid vacation allowances:
> 1 year of service—1 week
> 3 years of service—2 weeks
> 8 years of service—3 weeks
> 15 years of service—4 weeks
> (5) Employees hired on and after October 2, 1984, will receive five (5) paid sick days per year. There shall be no payment for any unused sick leave, regardless of the date of hire of the employee.
> In view of the prolonged nature of our bargaining impasse and the job actions/strikes at 11 Broadway, 29 Broadway and 170 Broadway, resulting in the loss of these facilities, the above-described changes in the Company's proposal will be implemented effective as of the dates shown above, unless agreement with respect to each of the items and the contract as a whole, is reached at our proposed meeting during the week of October 8th.
> Your immediate response will be appreciated.

This was followed by another letter from Israel to Sturm dated 2 October, which states:

> We inadvertently omitted in our October 1 letter to you one further revision of the Company's proposal:
> The Company proposes that the hiring rate for employees hired on and after October 2, 1984, in Manhattan be $6.00 per hour.
> The foregoing should be considered as Modification #6 of the prior proposal.

Sturm was not in his office on Monday, 1 October. He was in his office for a short time on the following morning and on Wednesday, and after reading Israel's 1 October letter he called Israel and told him that the dates he suggested for negotiations, 10 and 11 October, were a Jewish holiday, Succoth, and he would not be working on those days. Israel told him that he would be receiving another letter from him (i.e., the 2 October letter, supra) supplementing the 1 October letter.

Sturm testified that he did not see any urgency to scheduling a bargaining session because "it was a moot point at that time" for two reasons: Israel's letter of 1 October was inconsistent and could be read to mean that these modifications would be put into effect on 1 and 2 October. In addition, concurrently with receiving these letters Walker told him that a Local 32B member who was employed by Respondent at 395 Flatbush Avenue, Brooklyn, New York (Flatbush Avenue), had informed him that Respondent had made changes in their conditions of employment and distributed a notice to the employees to that effect.

Clifton Boone, who had been employed by Respondent as a porter at Flatbush Avenue, in a unit represented by Local 32B, testified that about 2 or 3 October Metcalf (a supervisor whose area encompasses Flatbush Avenue) called the Flatbush Avenue location and told the crew not to leave until he spoke to them. About 3 p.m., Metcalf and Bernie Ross, Respondent's operations manager, arrived. Ross did all the talking (although he did not testify). He said that "as of today" Respondent was no longer recognizing Local 32B; they did not want to fire anybody but "we are no longer going by the same rules" as they had under Local 32B. He informed them of the following changes: 5 days' sick leave and 5 holidays instead of the 10 they had been receiving; 1 week's vacation after 5 years of employment, compared to the 3-week vacation they had been receiving after 5 years of employment; and Blue Cross would cover only the employee, not his family as well, which they had been receiving. Ross and Metcalf then left Flatbush Avenue. Shortly thereafter, Metcalf called and told Boone that he, Atkinson, and Ross met and they decided that the present employees would maintain their present sick days, holidays, and vacation time, but these items would not be provided to employees hired in the future. Metcalf told him that the following day he would bring the crew copies of the new rules and Blue Cross and life insurance forms. On the next day, Metcalf distributed the following form together with a Blue Cross application (under "Type of Contract" "Individual," the word "only" was handwritten) and a group life insurance enrollment card to each employee at Flatbush Avenue:

> If you stay please be advised that:
> A) Triple A will no longer contribute moneys to the 32B-32J Welfare Fund.
> A.1) Instead you will have a Blue Cross/Blue Shield Insurance plan covering yourself only and a company paid life insurance policy of $2500.
> B) Your current holidays stay the same.
> C) Triple A will no longer pay for a Birthday day off.
> D) Triple A will no longer pay for clinic days off.
> E) Your current vacation schedule based on your seniority will continue to be observed as usual.
> E.1) All employees hired after 10/2/84 will have the following VACATION ENTITLEMENT: After 1 year—5 days; 3 years—10 days; and 8 years—15 days
> G) Your pension will continue to be paid by Triple A.
> G.1) Employees hired after 10/2/84 will be provided no pension by Triple.
> H) Existing employees will continue to receive the Sick Day benefit of up to 10 days per calender year. However you will not be paid for unused sick days at the end of the year.
> H.1) New hires will only receive 5 sick days per year and are also excluded from sick day rebate for unused sickdays at the end of the year.[4]

Boone testified that shortly thereafter his paycheck stubs indicated that dues were not being deducted from his pay, so he and his fellow employees paid their dues directly to Local 32B to protect their benefits. His employment with Respondent terminated 6 weeks later, but he learned from the employees at that location that some later time Respondent resumed the checkoff of Local 32B dues.

Atkinson testified that shortly prior to 1 October Respondent was anticipating another strike of its operations by Local 32B; in that regard, Atkinson held a meeting with his supervisors (including Ross and Metcalf) and instructed them to tell the employees what their benefits would be in case they remained at work during such a strike. About 1 October, Metcalf told him that he had met with the Flatbush Avenue employees and told them that Respondent no longer recognized Local 32B. Atkinson told Metcalf that he had never authorized him or anyone else to say that, and that it was not so; they had always recognized Local 32B at that location and would continue to do so. Atkinson then prepared the above document, which was given to supervisors to inform employees of their benefits; it was not meant for distribution to employees. Atkinson testified:

> It was intended as a guide to supervisors as to a relationship that might develop with 32B-J. [If there were a strike] . . . if union members decided to stay to work versus going out on strike this is what the situation would be in the event that they stayed.

[4] Sturm testified that none of the proposed changes in this letter or the 1 October letter had been discussed between the parties at any of the earlier bargaining sessions.

These changes were implemented between 10 and 14 October. Atkinson testified that Respondent still recognizes Local 32B as the collective-bargaining representative of the employees at Flatbush Avenue, still contributes to the Local 32B pension fund for all its employees at that location and the others where Local 32B represents its employees, and continues to checkoff union dues for its employees at that location, although there was a brief delay in these checkoff remittances in late September or early October due to a turnover of clerical and managerial employees. This problem was corrected shortly thereafter and any delinquencies were remitted to Local 32B.

III. DISCUSSION AND ANALYSIS

The initial and paramount issue to be discussed is the legality of Respondent's recognition of (and subsequent execution of a collective-bargaining agreement with) Local 732, rather than Local 32B, for its employees at the POB and Livingston Street, and its failure to rehire the predecessor's employees at these locations. The General Counsel alleges that Respondent refused to rehire these employees because they were members of, and represented by, Local 32B, as well as to avoid its "collective-bargaining obligations" with Local 32B, in violation of Section 8(a)(1), (2), (3), and (5) of the Act. Respondent, on the other hand, defends that it had no knowledge that Local 32B was certified at these locations when it became the maintenance contractor at these locations, and the actions it took were good-faith business decisions unrelated to the employees' union affiliation.

The principal cases in this area are NLRB v. Burns Security Services, 406 U.S. 272 (1972), and Howard Johnson Co. v. Hotel & Restaurant Employees 417 U.S. 249 (1974). In Burns, the Court stated that "where the bargaining unit remains unchanged and a majority of the employees hired by the new employer are represented by a recently certified bargaining agent," the new employer may be ordered to bargain with the incumbent union; however, in the absence of consent to be bound, the successor employer is not obligated to assume the predecessor's collective-bargaining agreement with the union. In this decision, at footnote 5, the Court states:

> The Board has never held that the National Labor Relations Act itself requires that an employer who submits the winning bid for a service contract or who purchases the assets of a business be obligated to hire all of the employees of the predecessor though it is possible that such an obligation might be assumed by the employer. . . . However, an employer who declines to hire employees solely because they are members of a union commits a § 8(a)(3) unfair labor practice.

Howard Johnson involved an action by a union under Section 301 of the LMRA to compel an employer who purchased the assets of a motel and restaurant to arbitrate under the arbitration provision of its collective-bargaining agreement with the predecessor employer the extent of its obligations to the predecessor's employees, none of whom it employed. The Court ruled that such an action was "completely at odds with the basic principles this Court elaborated in Burns," as quoted supra. The Court stated (417 U.S. at 262): "Clearly, Burns establishes that Howard Johnson had the right not to hire any of the former Grissom employees, if it so desired."

In a footnote, similar to that in Burns, the Court stated (id. at 262 fn. 8):

> Of course, it is an unfair labor practice for an employer to discriminate in hiring or retention of employees on the basis of union membership or activity under § 8(a)(3) of the National Labor Relations Act . . . . Thus, a new owner could not refuse to hire the employees of his predecessor solely because they were union members or to avoid having to recognize the union.

As Respondent did not employ a majority of the predecessor's employees at the POB or Livingston Street, a successor obligation cannot be found in that manner. If, however, the evidence establishes that Respondent did not hire the predecessor's employees at these locations because of their union membership, this would directly establish an 8(a)(3) violation, which would result in an 8(a)(5) refusal-to-bargain violation as well. Love's Barbeque Restaurant No. 62, 245 NLRB 78 (1979). This issue therefore boils down to whether the record evidence establishes that Respondent refused to hire the former employees at the two locations because they were Local 32B members and to avoid having to recognize and bargain with Local 32B at these locations. I find that it does not.

There are numerous cases which have found that an employer's refusal to hire the predecessor's employees violated Section 8(a)(3) of the Act and, at the same time, created a successorship relationship; e.g., Houston Distribution Services, 227 NLRB 960 (1977); Potter's Chalet Drug, 233 NLRB 15 (1977); Love's Barbeque, supra; and C.J.B. Industries, 250 NLRB 1433 (1980). However, in each of these cases there was substantial evidence that the employer's hiring practice was purposely formulated to avoid hiring the predecessor's or union employees. I find such evidence lacking in the instant matter.

Initially, it should be stated that I did not find Atkinson to be a totally credible witness. His testimony regarding the notice he received prior to obtaining the contract at Livingston Street is contradicted by the testimony of Saraceno, a disinterested and more credible witness. In addition, as stated in the Charging Party's brief, an extensive amount of time was consumed at the negotiating sessions by Atkinson's complaints about his inability to obtain accurate information from Local 32B regarding staffing at locations Respondent was attempting to obtain. This creates a strong doubt about his testimony that a few months earlier he did not attempt to obtain this information from Local 32B about the POB and Livingston Street. However, that does not establish the necessary elements of a violation. The element for finding such a violation is animus, and I find it lacking here.

Discussing the POB initially, and without deciding whether Respondent's recognition of Local 732 was valid under the Board's accretion doctrine, I find the evidence fails to demonstrate animus toward Local 32B. Respondent had a unit of 100 employees at the IAB, a 1 mile distance from the POB, which was a unit of 5 employees. This IAB unit had been represented for a year or two by Local 732 after Local 32B refused Respondent's request to take these employees due to its no-raiding pact with the Teamsters. Atkinson's testimony regarding accreting this POB unit to the IAB unit is not unreasonable: he had a ready and convenient pool of experienced employees to employ in his new operation. Respondent's argument regarding Livingston Street is not as persuasive; yet, the necessary animus is still lacking. Although Atkinson's three affidavits given to the Board fail to mention any personal inspection of Livingston Street prior to 8 January, considering his experience in the industry it is fair to conclude that he was aware that Organized Maintenance was being canceled as the contractor because the Telephone Company was not satisfied with its operation at Livingston Street. Saraceno's frank testimony that although he did not tell Respondent the reason for the cancellation. "I am sure they found out," supports this finding. Finally, as the Telephone Company was Respondent's largest customer it is understandable that Respondent would want to employ at this facility employees whom it knew to be capable. For these reasons, I shall dismiss the allegations that Respondent violated Section 8(a)(1), (2), (3), and (5) of the Act in this manner.

There remains for consideration the allegations that Respondent violated Section 8(a)(5) of the Act by withdrawing recognition of Local 32B, by demanding the exclusion of the POB and Livingston Street as a condition of consummating an agreement with Local 32B, and by instituting unilateral changes in its employees' terms and conditions of employment. The initial allegation is clearly without merit; the uncontradicted testimony is that after Atkinson learned of what Ross and Metcalf had informed the Flatbush Avenue employees, he had the remarks corrected; the evidence also establishes that from that time until the present time Respondent has continued to recognize Local 32B at those locations where it is the collective-bargaining representative of its employees.

I also find that Respondent did not unlawfully condition the consummation of an agreement with Local 32B on their agreement to exclude the POB and Livingston Street from the unit. The testimony regarding the parties' negotiations establishes that they were both playing "hardball"; due to the events of January and February, Local 32B was insisting on extremely stringent terms in its negotiations with Respondent, terms that were more stringent than those contained in its SEA or ICA agreement. Respondent, on the other hand, was proposing (and insisting) that any new agreement exclude the POB and Livingston Street on the ground that it had valid collective-bargaining agreements with Local 732 covering these locations. Most importantly regarding this allegation, however, during these negotiations Israel proposed, on a number of occasions, that the parties consummate an agreement and let the Board (in the unit clarification petition) or the Unions resolve the unit issue. Local 32B refused such an offer for the reason: "[Y]ou created the problem, you resolve it." I therefore find that Respondent was not adamant in its position; rather, it was attempting to find a solution to the predicament that it, and Local 32B, had gotten it into. This allegation is therefore dismissed.

Finally, it is alleged that Respondent violated Section 8(a)(5) in October by making unilateral changes in certain terms and conditions of employment of its employees. Respondent defends that these changes were made after an impasse had developed, and I agree. In an oftencited case, Taft Broadcasting Co., 163 NLRB 475, 478 (1967), enfd. 395 F.2d 622 (1968), the Board stated:

> An employer violates his duty to bargain if, when negotiations are sought or are in progress, he unilaterally institutes changes in existing terms and conditions of employment. On the other hand, after bargaining to an impasse, that is, after good-faith negotiations have exhausted the prospects of concluding an agreement, an employer does not violate the Act by making unilateral changes that are reasonably comprehended within his pre-impasse proposals.
> Whether a bargaining impasse exists is a matter of judgment. The bargaining history, the good faith of the parties in negotiations, the length of the negotiations, the importance of the issue or issues as to which there is disagreement, [and] the contemporaneous understanding of the parties as to the state of negotiations are all relevant factors to be considered in deciding whether an impasse in bargaining existed.

An impasse is present when it is clear "that further good-faith bargaining . . . would have been futile." Alsey Refractories Co., 215 NLRB 785, 787 (1974).

There were five negotiating sessions between early March and mid-July; apparently no agreement was reached at the first four meetings. Respondent was insisting that it could not "give" Local 32B the POB and Livingston Street while Local 32B was insisting on obtaining these locations and other terms not present in the SEA or ICA agreement. When Local 732 refused to relinquish jurisdiction over the POB and Livingston Street the tentative agreement of 19 July was destroyed, and, in my opinion, so was any possibility that the parties would subsequently reach an agreement. I make this finding even though Respondent later attempted to schedule further negotiations with Local 32B. The nature of Respondent's letters of 1 and 2 October, together with Atkinson's earlier call to Sturm, creates some question in my mind of the good-faith nature of these communications. Respondent's long-term relationship with Local 32B, together with the fact that, prior to Atkinson's 24 September call to Sturm, Respondent had not contacted Local 32B for in excess of 2 months, creates a strong suspicion that either Atkinson or Israel was aware of Sturm's religious affiliation and chose the dates involved because of the Jewish holidays during those weeks. Regardless, I need not make such a finding, as the fact that the parties have attempted to schedule further negotiating sessions does not preclude the finding of an impasse. There was no evidence of any movement in the parties during the first five meetings and crucial issues remained to be resolved. Additionally, no evidence was adduced to establish that either party's position had changed since then. Lou Stecher's Super Markets, 275 NLRB 475 (1985).

Once it has been established that an impasse exists, "an employer can only make unilateral changes in working conditions consistent with its rejected offer to a union." Caravelle Boat Co., 227 NLRB 1355 (1977).

Counsel for Respondent, in its brief, states:

> While the implemented changes were not made in the course of face to face negotiations (since 32B refused to engage in face to face negotiations) 32B nevertheless received advance, specific and clear written and detailed notice of the proposals. Triple A could not have done anymore.

> I disagree. The Board in Taft, supra, found no violation as the postimpasse unilateral changes "were reasonably comprehended within the Respondent's proposals which preceded impasse." In the instant situation Respondent first proposed the changes on 1 and 2 October; other than the 24 September call from Atkinson to Sturm, there was no contact between Respondent and Local 32B for the prior 10 weeks. There is certainly no evidence of bad faith on the part of Local 32B in scheduling a meeting and, if Respondent had been patient, a meeting would have been arranged within 2 weeks. I therefore reject Respondent's argument and find that the unilateral changes were not previously part of its negotiations with Local 32B, and therefore violate Section 8(a)(5) of the Act.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. Respondent Triple A Maintenance Corp. is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

2. Local 32B and Local 732 are labor organizations within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

3. Respondent violated Section 8(a)(1) and (5) of the Act by unilaterally changing the following terms and conditions of employment of its employees without prior adequate notice to, and negotiations with, Local 32B.

(a) Discontinuing contributions to the Local 32B health fund and substituting employees-only coverage of Blue Cross and Blue Shield, together with a $2500 life insurance policy, for all existing employees and for new employees after 180 days of employment with Respondent.

(b) Eliminating the employee's birthday and two health center visits yearly as paid leave.

(c) Reducing vacation allowance and paid sick leave days for all employees hired after 2 October 1984.

(d) Reducing the hiring rate to $6 an hour for all employees hired after 2 October 1984.

4. Respondent did not further violate the Act as alleged in the consolidated complaint.

THE REMEDY

Having found that Respondent unlawfully made the above unilateral changes in the terms and conditions of employment of certain of its employees, I shall recommend that it cease and desist therefrom, restore the terms and conditions of employment as they existed prior to the unilateral changes in October, and make its employees whole for any losses they suffered due to these changes in their terms and conditions of employment. The reimbursement shall be computed in accordance with F. W. Woolworth Co., 90 NLRB 289 (1950), and Florida Steel Corp., 231 NLRB 651 (1977). See generally Isis Plumbing Co., 138 NLRB 716 (1962).

On these findings of fact and conclusions of law and on the entire record, I issue the following recommended[5]

ORDER

The Respondent, Triple A Maintenance Corp., Brooklyn, New York, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall

1. Cease and desist from

(a) Unilaterally changing the terms and conditions of employment of its employees without prior consultation and negotiation with the collective-bargaining representative of its employees.

(b) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them by Section 7 of the Act.

2. Take the following affirmative action necessary to effectuate the policies of the Act.

(a) Make its employees whole for any losses they suffered due to the discontinuance of contributions to the Local 32B health fund in the manner set forth above under the remedy section of this decision.

(b) Make its employees whole for the loss of their birthday and two health center visits yearly as paid leave in the manner set forth above under the remedy section of this decision.

(c) Make its employees whole for any losses suffered due to the reduction in vacation and sick leave days due its employees in the manner set forth above under the remedy section of this decision.

(d) Make its employees whole for any losses they suffered due to the reduction in the hiring rate to $6 an hour in the manner set forth above under the remedy section of this decision.

(e) Preserve and, on request, make available to the Board or its agents for examination and copying, all payroll records, social security payment records, timecards, personnel records and reports, and all other records necessary to analyze the amount of backpay due under the terms of this Order.

(f) Notify Local 32B, in writing, that it is rescinding these changes and restoring its employees' terms and conditions of employment to what they were prior to 1 October 1984.

(g) Post at each of its offices and facilities copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix."[6] Copies of the notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 29, after being signed by the Respondent's authorized representative, shall be posted by the Respondent immediately upon receipt and maintained for 60 consecutive days in conspicuous places including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by the Respondent to ensure that the notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(h) Mail a copy of the notice, by certified mail, return receipt requested, to every employee employed by the Respondent on or after 30 September 1984 at a location where the employees are represented for purposes of collective bargaining by Local 32B.

(i) Notify the Regional Director in writing within 20 days from the date of this Order what steps the Respondent has taken to comply.

IT IS FURTHER RECOMMENDED that the consolidated complaint herein be dismissed insofar as it alleges violations of the Act not specifically found.

[5] If no exceptions are filed as provided by Sec. 102.46 of the Board's Rules and Regulations, the findings, conclusions, and recommended Order shall, as provided in Sec. 102.48 of the Rules, be adopted by the Board and all objections to them shall be deemed waived for all purposes.

[6] If this Order is enforced by a judgment of a United States court of appeals, the words in the notice reading "Posted by Order of the National Labor Relations Board" shall read "Posted Pursuant to a Judgment of the United States Court of Appeals Enforcing an Order of the National Labor Relations Board."

DECISION AND ORDER

BY MEMBERS JOHANSEN, BABSON, AND STEPHENS

On 28 March 1985 Administrative Law Judge Earldean V.S. Robbins issued the attached decision. Respondent Grey Line Scenic Tours, Inc., d/b/a California Nevada Golden Tour filed exceptions and a supporting brief.

The National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the decision and the record in light of the exceptions and brief and has decided to affirm the judge's rulings, findings,[2] and conclusions and to adopt the recommended Order.

ORDER

The National Labor Relations Board adopts the recommended Order of the administrative law judge and orders that the Respondent, Grey Line Scenic Tours, Inc. d/b/a California Nevada Golden Tours, Oakland, California, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall take the action set forth in the Order.

[1] The judge approved a unilateral settlement agreement in Case 32–CB–1637, and granted the General Counsel's motion for leave to withdraw the complaint.

[2] In the last full paragraph of sec. III,A,2 of the judge's decision the judge stated that the Respondent engaged in separate negotiations with Local 265, which resulted in a separate agreement being entered into on 21 November. We find the date of that agreement was 21 October. We also correct an error appearing at the beginning of sec. III,A,4 of the judge's decision. The judge's sentence begins: "On March 18 Tarson sent a letter to Perry." The date of that letter was 28 March. These inadvertent errors do not affect our decision.

Daniel R. Fritz, Esq., for the General Counsel.
James A. Carter, Esq., of San Francisco, California, for the Respondent Employer.
Kenneth N. Silbert, Esq. (Beeson, Tayer & Silbert), of San Francisco, California, for the Respondent Union.
Patrick D. Dolan, Esq., of Reno, Nevada, for the Charging Party.

DECISION

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

EARLDEAN V.S. ROBBINS, Administrative Law Judge. This matter was tried before me in Oakland, California, on October 23 and 24, 1984. The charge in Case 32–CA–5967[1] was filed by Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen and Helpers Union, Local 533, International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen and Helpers of America (Local 533), on October 17, 1983, and served on Grey Line Scenic Tours, Inc. d/b/a California Nevada Golden Tours (Respondent) on October 18, 1983. The amended consolidated complaint, which issued on August 16, 1984, alleges, inter alia,[2] that Respondent violated Section 8(a)(1), (2), and (5) of the National Labor Relations Act (the Act).

The principal issues herein are:

1. Whether Respondent violated Section 8(a)(1), (2), and (5) of the Act by recognizing Local 265 as the collective-bargaining representative of a portion of the appropriate bargaining unit; by negotiating separately with Local 265; and by entering into, and implementing, the terms of a separate collective-bargaining agreement with Local 265, which covered only a portion of the certified appropriate unit and reduced the wages of the covered employees.

2. Whether Respondent violated Section 8(a)(1) and (5) of the Act by unilaterally reducing the wages of employees pursuant to its "final offer" in December 1983; by unilaterally changing wages and working conditions of unit employees in May 1984; and by refusing to provide the joint bargaining representative of unit employees with requested financial information.

On the entire record, including my observation of the demeanor of the witnesses, and after due consideration of the briefs filed by the parties, I make the following

FINDINGS OF FACT

I. JURISDICTION

Respondent, a Nevada corporation with an office and place of business in Oakland, California, is engaged in the operation of an interstate bus transportation system. During the 12-month period preceding the issuance of the amended consolidated complaint Respondent, in the course and conduct of its business operations, derived gross revenues in excess of $50,000 from the transportation of passengers from the State of California directly to points outside the State of California.

[1] At the commencement of the hearing, I granted the General Counsel's motion to sever Case 32–CB–1637 from Case 32–CA–5967 and approved a unilateral settlement agreement in Case 32–CB–1637, which remedied all the allegations of the complaint relating to that matter. In his posthearing brief, the General Counsel requested that I treat this request as a motion for leave to withdraw the complaint in Case 32–CB–1637 required by the settlement agreement on compliance therewith. That motion is granted.

[2] Because I approved the unilateral settlement agreement that disposed of all the allegations of the consolidated complaint relating to Case 32–CB–1637, the hearing and decision herein relates only to Case 32–CA–5967 and the 8(a)(1), (2), and (5) allegations of the consolidated complaint pertaining thereto.

The amended consolidated complaint alleges, Respondent admits, and I find that Respondent is, and has been at all times material, an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

II. LABOR ORGANIZATION

The complaint alleges, Respondent admits, and I find that Local 533 and Local 265 are now, and have been at all times material herein, labor organizations within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

III. THE ALLEGED UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES

A. Facts

1. Introduction

Respondent transports individuals between the San Francisco Bay Area and resort casinos in Reno and South Lake Tahoe, Nevada. In January 1974 Local 533 and Local 265 were certified as the joint collective-bargaining representative of Respondent's drivers in the San Francisco Bay Area, Reno, and South Lake Tahoe. Thereafter in 1974 and 1977 Respondent and the joint representative entered into successive collective-bargaining agreements. In 1979, during the term of the second agreement, Peerless Stages, Inc. purchased Respondent.[3] Thereafter in April 1981 Respondent and the joint representative entered into a collective-bargaining agreement effective by its terms from November 1, 1980, through October 31, 1983. According to Lloyd Perry, who has been Respondent's president since it was acquired by Peerless, this was his first negotiation with the joint representative and at no time was it ever mentioned, nor was he ever aware, prior to the incidents involved herein, that Local 533 and Local 265 were the certified joint representative of Respondent's drivers.

Even though Local 533 and Local 265 are joint representatives, the Nevada drivers are members of Local 533 and the collective-bargaining agreement as to them is administered by Local 533, and the San Francisco Bay Area drivers are members of Local 265 and the collective-bargaining agreement is administered as to them by Local 265. Respondent's passengers originate in the Bay Area from where they are transported to Nevada and back to the Bay Area. However, for purposes of driver assignment, some of the runs originate in Reno. The runs that originate in Reno are manned by Local 533 drivers and the runs that originate in the Bay Area are manned by Local 265 drivers. These runs are posted for bids and are awarded to the most senior bidder.

The 1980–1983 collective-bargaining agreement provides that Respondent shall maintain at least 10 bid run assignments[4] and that Respondent shall attempt to provide nearly equal numbers of bid run assignments for the San Francisco Bay Area and the Reno-Lake Tahoe area. In November 1982 Respondent reassigned some runs that had previously originated in Reno so that they originated in San Francisco.[5]

Local 533 and the Reno drivers expressed displeasure with this arrangement and on June 13, 1983,[6] Perry met with Local 533 Shop Steward Al Bice, Local 533 Secretary-Treasurer Ed Greeley, and Local 265 Secretary-Treasurer Bill McElroy to discuss Local 533's objection to the existing arrangement. Despite McElroy's stated objections to the proposed change, an agreement was reached whereby Reno would receive additional bid runs effective July 7. However, the Reno drivers would be required to pay any cost of lodging in excess of the $10.70 Respondent paid for the lodging of San Francisco drivers in Reno.

Thereafter Bice posted a memo to all drivers setting forth this agreement. By letter dated July 1 and addressed to Clay Pierce, business agent for Local 533, Perry acknowledged the Bice memo and set forth some aspects of the agreement that allegedly were not included in this memo—specifically, that the Reno runs were only guaranteed during the summer season, that the guarantee was only for four runs instead of the five referred to in the Bice memo, and that the formula for lodging expenses applied in both San Francisco and San Jose.

2. The separate negotiations with Local 265 and the implementation of the resulting agreement

On July 25 Local 533, through Greeley, notified Respondent of its intent to modify the agreement. The body of the letter reads:

> Please accept this letter as notification of our wish to open our Agreement with your company in accordance with the provisions of the Labor Relations Act of 1947.
> We hope to continue our friendly relationship with your Company.

The record does not indicate the response, if any, to this letter.

On September 21 McElroy sent the following mailgram to Respondent:

> IN REGARDS TO NEGOTIATIONS ON OUR CURRENT WORKING AGREEMENT LOCAL 265 HAS TAKEN THE POSITION TO NEGOTIATE THE CONTRACT AS A SINGLE BARGAINING UNIT PLEASE REPLY ASAP.
> R. W. MCELROY, VICE PRESIDENT

[3] Peerless owns a group of companies consisting of three operating bus companies, including Respondent, a sales company, California Nevada Golden Tours, Inc. d/b/a Betty's Tours, which is the sales arm for the bus companies, and an overhead company, Sunwest Travel Industries, which is the overhead arm for all of the companies owned by Peerless.

[4] This requirement is subject to the proviso that Respondent's operations are sufficient to cover that number of runs.

[5] According to Perry, the reason for this was the weather conditions. Specifically, at times during the winter, weather conditions are such that drivers on a Reno run could not be returned to Reno on a paying run. Instead the driver would have to fly from the Bay Area back to Reno or deadhead back to Reno in a bus, causing an additional operational expense.

Respondent responded by mailgram as follows on September 23:

> PEERLESS STAGES—GOLDEN TOURS AGREES TO BARGAIN WITH YOU AS SINGLE UNIT.
> YOURS TRULY
> A.J.G.

On October 3 Local 533 sent a mailgram to Respondent, the body of which reads:

> PLEASE BE ADVISED THAT LOCAL 533 REMAINS READY AND WILLING TO MEET WITH YOUR COMPANY TO NEGOTIATE TERMS AND CONDITIONS OF SUCCESSOR LABOR AGREEMENT TO BE EFFECTIVE NOVEMBER 1 1983. ALSO PLEASE BE ADVISED THAT LOCAL 533 EXPECTS AND DEMANDS ALL NEGOTIATIONS MEETINGS INVOLVING SUCCESSOR LABOR AGREEMENT INCLUDE, AND TAKE PLACE IN THE PRESENCE, BOTH LOCAL 533 AND 265, THE JOINTLY RECOGNIZED BARGAINING REPRESENTATIV [SIC]. ANY SEPARATE MEETING WITH LOCAL 265 CONCERNING A SUCCESSOR LABOR AGREEMENT WILL BE DEEMED TO BE UNLAWFUL UNILATERAL NEGOTIATION FOR WHICH WE WILL TAKE APPROPRIATE ACTION. GIVEN THE OCTOBER 31 ANNIVERSARY DATE OF THE EXISTING AGREEMENT LOCAL 533 HAS GIVEN THIS PRIORITY AND IS AVAILABLE TO MEET AT THE CONVENIENCE OF THE OTHER PARTIES.

On October 6 Respondent sent a letter to Local 533, the body of which reads:

> Lloyd Perry will be available to meet with you to discuss the working agreement. The arrangements for a meeting can be made by calling Lloyd Perry at (415) 444–2900.

By letter dated October 17, Local 533 responded as follows:

> In response to your letter of October 6th, we will be happy to meet with you or Mr. Perry at a mutually agreeable time, but must advise that representatives of Chauffeurs Local 265 must be included in all negotiating meetings since Local 533 and Local 265 jointly represent the bargaining unit.
> Please refer to our telegram sent on October 10th. Advise the best meeting dates for you or Mr. Perry.

On October 20 Respondent sent a letter to Local 533, the body of which reads:

> In response to your letter of October 17, 1983 to Mr. Gaeta, I am available to meet with you in Oakland at your convenience. If you wish to include representatives of Chaufeurs [sic] Local 265 in the meeting, I have no objection.

Despite being placed on notice by Local 533 that Local 265 and Local 533 were joint representatives and that Local 533 was only amenable to joint negotiations, Respondent engaged in separate negotiations with Local 265 that resulted in a separate agreement entered into by Respondent and Local 265 on November 21, which reduced the basic wage rate from $8.65 an hour to $8.00 an hour. Thereafter Respondent implemented this agreement by reducing the wages of the San Francisco drivers by 65 cents an hour effective November 1.

3. The November negotiations and the implementation of Respondent's November 9 proposal

On November 7, Local 533 sent a mailgram to Local 265, the body of which reads:

> AS YOU ARE WELL AWARE WE HAVE SET UP A MEETING WITH CALIFORNIA NEVADA GOLDEN TOURS TO BEGIN NEGOTIATIONS ON A NEW CONTRACT FOR NOVEMBER 8 1983 . . . . WE EMPHASIZE THAT THIS IS A JOINT AGREEMENT BETWEEN LOCAL 265, 533 AND THE COMPANY AND WHATEVER COMES FROM THESE NEGOTIATIONS WILL BIND ALL THREE PARTIES JOINTLY . . . . AS PER CONVERSATION WITH AL TARSON THIS DATE IT IS IMERATIVE [SIC] THAT A REPRESENTATIVE FROM YOUR LOCAL BE THERE.

On October 17, Local 533 filed an unfair labor practice charge against Respondent in Case 32–CA–5967 alleging that Respondent's separate negotiations with Local 265 violated Section 8(a)(1), (2), and (5) of the Act.

On November 8 Local 533 met with Respondent as scheduled. Present for Local 533 were Business Representative Al Tarson, Greeley, and Bice. Present for Respondent was Perry. The shop steward for Local 265, Tom Mueller, was also present but, according to Tarson, was there only as an observer and did not participate in the negotiations. Tarson testified that, at the outset of the meeting, Greeley stated that because there was no spokesman for Local 265 present they could not enter into joint bargaining negotiations. Perry said they could go over the contract and submitted some proposals that included provisions that the expired agreement be modified to eliminate all references to Local 265, to limit the agreement to the Nevada operation only, and, inter alia, to reduce wages for full-time employees to $7.20 an hour and for casual employees to $6.90 an hour for the first year of a 3-year agreement with 30-cent increases in each of the remaining 2 years of the agreement.

Following a caucus to review these proposals, Local 533 rejected all of Respondent's proposals and submitted its proposal for, inter alia, an increase in wages of 50 cents per hour in all classifications each contract year and, further, that all drivers be paid the same whether casual or full time. Following a second caucus Perry rejected Local 533's proposal, and submitted a counterproposal for, inter alia, a wage rate of $8 an hour for full-time employees and $7.617 an hour for casual employees for the first year of the contract with no increase in wages for casual employees throughout the life of the contract, a 33-cent increase the second year of the contract, and a 32-cent increase for the third year of the contract. This counterproposal, which Perry characterized as Respondent's final proposal, was rejected by the Union at which point Greeley stated that because Local 265 was not in fact represented by the business agent they could not actually consider this as negotiations and since Local 265 was not party to the negotiations because they had signed the contract with Respondent there was no alternative except to wait for a decision from the Board as to the legality of the separate negotiations between Local 265 and Respondent. The meeting adjourned with no date set for further meetings.

Perry does not dispute that Tarson's testimony as to this or subsequent negotiation sessions is accurate as far as it goes. He does testify as to additional details of his comments regarding Respondent's financial situation. According to him, when he met with the Union on November 8, Respondent was in pretty desperate financial straits and he told the Union he had to have concessions immediately. Perry further testified that Respondent's attorney advised Respondent that in order to avoid the financial burden of going into Chapter 11, Bankruptcy, Respondent should hire a financial consultant to assist it out of its financial difficulties. On this advice Curtis was hired and thereafter Curtis negotiated settlements with Respondent's major creditors in a manner that permitted Respondent to continue operations. Respondent's cash flow problems became critical about the end of January 1983 when it came to management's attention that Respondent's controller had failed to file the withholding statements and to remit to the Internal Revenue Service taxes withheld from the pay of about 200 employees. Curtis negotiated a settlement with the IRS for extended payment of the tax liability over a 3-year period with a balloon payment at the end of the period. He also set up a cash flow budget, which he monitored on a daily basis. The three owners agreed to forgo their salaries for December 1982 and took a 10-percent pay cut for 1983. Four or five presidents were terminated and some middle management personnel. One of Respondent's two accounting offices was closed, and the position of controller was eliminated. Curtis advised that wages would have to be reduced to less than $8 per hour. According to Perry, he related these details to the Union.

On November 9 Local 533 sent a letter to Respondent, the body of which reads:

> In reference to the contract negotiations between Local 533 and your company held at Sacramento, California on November 9, 1983, this letter is your notification that Local 533 does not accept your company's final offer regarding our proposals and counter-proposals, as bein [sic] inadequate in many phases.
> Furthermore, although Local 265 was represented by a Shop Steward (Tom Mueller), only as an observer, Local 533 must reiterate it's [sic] stand as stated at the meeting that all parties involved must await a decision from the National Labor Relations Board regarding charges filed by Local 533.
> With best regards . . . .

By letter dated November 18, Respondent responded as follows:

> Your letter, of November 9, 1983, reconfirms your rejection of our final offer in contract negotiations between your local and our Company. It appears that we have reached an impasse.
> I suggest that you reconsider your position. If you do not notify me of a change in your position by November 30, 1983, we will implement our final offer on December 1, 1983.

On November 21 Local 533 sent Respondent a letter, the body of which reads:

> Your letter dated November 18, 1983 was received this date and I agree with you, we are now at an impasse regarding your final offer in contract negotiations submitted November 8, 1983.
> As stated previously, Local 533 stands by it's [sic] committment [sic] that Local 265 and Local 533, jointly, must negotiate any and all contract agreements with your company as has been done for many years past, and, furthermore, Local 533 has filed charges with the National Labor Relations Board and will await the outcome of those decisions before proceeding with further negotiations.
> With best wishes . . . .

On November 29 Respondent issued the following memo:

> To: All Nevada Drivers
> From: Lloyd G. Perry
> There is an impasse in contract negotiations between Local 533 and the Company. Your bargaining agent rejected the Company's final offer on November 18, 1983 and confirmed our impasse on November 21, 1983.
> As stated in our letter of November 18, 1983, we will implement our final offer on December 1, 1983.
> The final offer changed the pay rates as follows:

	11-1-83 to 7-31-84	8-1-84 to 7-31-85	8-1-85 to 7-31-86
45—9 Hourly rates of pay:
Full Time	$8.00	$8.33	$8.65
Casual	7.617	7.617	7.617
45-1 Mileage rates of pay:
Full Time	$0.2807	$0.2922	$0.3037

	11-1-83 to 7-31-84	8-1-84 to 7-31-85	8-1-85 to 7-31-86
Casual	0.2673	0.2673	0.2673

Copies were sent to both Local 533 and Local 265.

On December 1, the wages of the Nevada drivers were reduced to $8 per hour.

4. The 1984 negotiations between Respondent and the joint representatives

A negotiation session was scheduled for January 18. However it was cancelled when McElroy walked out prior to the commencement of the meeting. On January 19 Respondent sent its proposals to Local 533 and Local 265, along with a letter, the body of which reads:

> Our scheduled joint contract negotiations for January 18, and 19 have failed because Local #265 was not present for the scheduled meeting in Sacramento. According to Local #533, they had met with Local #265 earlier in the day (18th) and that Local #265 had departed as they would not participate with Local #533 in joint contract negotiations.
> I stand ready, as I have in the past, to participate in joint contract negotiations. If you will not negotiate jointly, I will ask the NLRB to withdraw all complaints filed against us.
> Since I was not able to present our negotiating proposal to you jointly, I am submitting it as an attachment to this letter. I am ready to meet with you and jointly negotiate a new contract. However, because we have not had joint negotiations, I must insist that we meet on January 26, 27, 30 and 31 in our office at 228 Broadway, Oakland, Ca. 94607. When you have agreed on a meeting time, please notify me.
> If the two locals are unwilling to jointly negotiate, the Company can no longer permit your position to delay our ability to operate on a reasonable basis. Unless you meet and negotiate as requested, we will have no alternative but to assume that we have reached an impasse and we will implement the enclosed proposal on February 1, 1984.

On January 27 Local 533 sent Respondent a letter that states inter alia:

> . . . Your availability for negotiation on February 7th in Oakland is convenient to Local 533, as arranged by Local 265, yesterday. . . .
> We ask that you re-establish and maintan [sic] the status quo of employment conditions, i.e., return to the terms and conditions of the labor agreement existing as of October 31, 1983, and reimburse the employees for improperly reduced wages and benefits. By doing so, negotiations would then be taking place under the conditions that existed at the time of your unlawful and singular bargaining with Local 265, and unilateral change of conditions.
> Simply offering to meet for negotiations does not avoid or remedy the charges against your company.
> Moreover, inasmuch as both Local 265 and 533 are necessary for negotiations, and 533 cannot speak for 265, we cannot report on that Local's availability, and leave it to that Local to respond to your letter.
> Your ultimatum of declaring impasse based upon a submission of proposals, coupled with notice and demand for bargaining in the present circumstances hardly forms a lawful basis for implementation of employer's terms and conditions of employment. Should you do so, additional charges will be filed.
> If you are truly interested in resolution of this matter, we suggest you ask the Labor Board to structure and oversee settlement efforts. Please inform us of your intentions concerning re-establishing the October 31, 1983 conditions, re-imbursement to employees of unpaid wages, and payment of delinquent health insurance benefits.

Another negotiating session was held on February 7. Greeley, Bice, and Tarson were present for Local 533, McElroy and Shop Steward John Stringer for Local 265, and Perry and Jim Noe for Respondent. Greeley was the principal spokesman for the Unions. According to Tarson, at the outset of the meeting Greeley said he wanted an understanding from Respondent that the expired contract was still in effect and they were bargaining under that contract. Perry said Respondent would not agree to that. After seeking legal advice during a caucus, Greeley stated that, on advice of counsel, the Unions were maintaining their position. Again Perry said Respondent would not bargain under those conditions. Following another caucus Greeley stated the Unions would bargain under those conditions, but the Unions' attorney was filing for an injunction and it would be advisable for Perry to contact Respondent's attorney to try and settle this matter.

After another caucus Perry agreed that they would commence bargaining under the contract that expired on October 31. Greeley said they would have to delay negotiations on monetary items until they had some sort of official report as to Respondent's financial position. Respondent's representatives stated that they were in the process of having an audit done that they would provide to the joint representative in March. Greeley said the Unions wanted to see some sort of records to prove that the Company needed the financial relief it was requesting. Tarson said that Respondent had provided an audit report for 1980–1981 and for 1981–1982 by another audit company and that after reviewing the reports carefully, they had found a discrepancy in 1981 of about $1 million between the two reports and therefore they needed more information as to the Company's financial status. Perry said Respondent would provide an audit report. At this point Ronald Curtis, financial consultant, began giving them information as to Respondent's financial status and stated that Respondent owed the IRS $400–500 plus 17-percent interest. Tarson again stated that before the Unions could get into negotiations concerning wages they needed further reports to substantiate Respondent's position. Curtis said the Unions would get the audit report as soon as Respondent received it.

After lunch Curtis stated that Respondent needed the 7.6-percent cut in wages and an overall 10.45-percent cut in benefits and wages until at least May 1985 because, according to the Company's projection, they thought they would be operating in the black around the end of April 1985. Curtis said Respondent had begun to cut the fat out of its operation, they had cut services, some employees had been affected, and four vice presidents had been let go. There was some discussion of Respondent's liability for back wages and benefits.

Negotiations resumed on February 8. Present were Tarson and Bice for Local 533, McElroy and Stringer for Local 265, and Perry and Noe for Respondent. Tarson was the spokesman for the Unions. Tarson said the Unions would negotiate contract language but would withhold any discussion of monetary items until they received the audit report. The discussion in this session was based on Respondent's proposal that had been attached to Respondent's January 19 letter to the Unions. After discussing several items on this proposal, Tarson requested that Curtis be called in so the Unions could submit a proposal referring to Respondent's request for a 10-percent relief. After Curtis arrived Tarson said the Unions would be willing to grant approximately 10-percent relief by giving back three paid holidays—Memorial Day, Fourth of July, and Labor Day—3 sick days, 3 vacation days, and pay for the 15-minute check time before and after a run. Tarson explained that based on a wage rate of $8.65 an hour and annual earnings of approximately $25,000 this relief would amount to approximately $2500 for a driver, but would not specifically hurt an employee's ability to pay his bills whereas giving back 65 cents an hour would directly reduce an employee's paycheck. Perry requested a lunch break so he and Curtis could review the proposal to determine whether it would in fact amount to the 10-percent relief they were requesting.

According to Larson, when the meeting resumed after lunch Perry said he thought it would be unfair to take 3 sick days away from an employee because it was for the employee's protection in the event of illness. Curtis said Respondent needed the 65 cents an hour give-back. Tarson said it was the Unions' position that they could not accept a 65-cent give-back. After a caucus they discussed Respondent's proposal to delete the 4, 6, and 8 hours minimum pay provision, and the union committee requested documentation as to cost incurred by Respondent under that provision. Tarson proposed that if Respondent could not afford to pay back wages at the time but would agree to assume liability for such, the Unions would be agreeable to applying the back wages to future health and welfare payments. At the conclusion of the meeting they agreed to meet again on February 23.

A meeting was held as scheduled on February 23. Present were Perry and Noe for Respondent, McElroy and Stringer for Local 265, and Greeley, Tarson, and Bice for Local 533. At the outset of the meeting Greeley said the Unions wished to continue negotiations on the monetary items and they proceeded to do so. The Unions submitted a proposal that included, inter alia, an additional three holidays, deletion of the cap on health and welfare contributions and on sick leave accumulation, and a $1-per-hour wage increase in all classifications for each contract year. Some of the items in the Unions' proposal were discussed but no agreement was reached. Greeley asked when the Unions would receive Respondent's audit report. Perry said March 1 but no later than March 15. Another meeting was scheduled for March 13.

Present at the March 13 meeting were Tarson, McElroy, Stringer, Perry, and Noe. Both the Unions' and the Company's proposals were discussed. Some agreement was reached as to language in certain of the proposals. Perry offered to consider having a union representative on the company board of directors. Tarson said that would be agreeable to the Unions but he had no knowledge at this time as to who that person could be. Perry said, due to some errors in the preparation of the audit report, it would not be ready until April 1, or April 15 at the latest. The Unions' representatives again said they could not engage in negotiations on financial proposals until they received the audit report.

The next meeting was on March 15. Present were Tarson, Bice, McElroy, Perry, and Noe. Perry presented a summary of the tentative agreements reached in negotiations. They reviewed each section of the summary and the union representatives either indicated that they agreed that it was a correct summary of the agreement reached or corrected the summary or indicated that additional negotiations would have to be undertaken because of uncertainty as to whether the items involved were a monetary loss to employees. The Unions presented written clarification of certain of their proposals.

Another meeting was held on March 15 at which time Respondent and the Unions continued to discuss the nonmonetary items of their proposals on which tentative agreement had not been reached. Respondent submitted a summary of the tentative agreements that had been reached through that date together with Respondent's proposals for continued negotiations. These proposals dealt with monetary items and contained the following justification for its proposal for reduction in the economic package:

> Following are the Company's proposals for continued negotiation. These include money items which are predicated on certain facts. First, is the Company's need for lower payroll costs so that the Company can continue to exist. Money savings are required to liquidate, the Internal Revenue Service's liability, the loan payment requirements for buses, and the trade account deficits. Cost savings are required so that the Company can compete with Greyhound, who is now able to substantially undercut our Tariff. We also have to compete with a greatly increased number of competitors who are > non-union. Second, there have been requests by the Union to increase our costs for some items. Each increase will have to be matched with a corresponding decrease in another area.

On March 16 Tarson cancelled the negotiation session scheduled for March 19 citing staffing problems in his office and scheduling conflicts. Tarson offered to meet on alternative dates but suggested that since most of the noneconomic items had been settled, Local 533 would just as soon wait for the audit report so that economic items could be discussed at the next meeting. Perry agreed to do so and although no definite date was set for the next meeting, according to Tarson, it was understood that it would be sometime after April 15.

By letter dated March 20, addressed to Perry, Tarson expressed his regrets at the cancellation of the March 19 meeting and further stated:

> As I mentioned to you during our phone conversation, it is regrettable we could not meet to finalize negotiations for a new contract this week.
> With all due respect, the next available dates will depend largely on the availability of the new audit report, as those concerned can examine them in order to come up with some idea of what your company's financial dilemma might be.
> Hoping that the cooperation between all parties will continue to produce an amicable solution in a new agreement, I remain . . .

Respondent responded by letter dated March 21, addressed to Local 533 and Local 265, which requested that the Unions seek membership approval of Respondent's "final" proposal, which was attached thereto, and stated Respondent's intent to implement this proposal on April 1. The body of the letter reads:

> The Company's proposal for a new working agreement includes money items which are predicated on certain facts. First, is the Company's need for lower payroll costs so that the Company can continue to exist. Money savings are required to liquidate the Internal Revenue Service's liability, the loan payment requirements for buses, and the trade account deficits. Cost savings are required so that the Company can compete with Greyhound, who is now able to substantially undercut our Tariff. We also have to compete with a greatly increased number of competitors who are non-union. Second, there have been requests by the Union to increase our costs for some items. We have increased the health and welfare contribution. Any other increase will have to be matched with a corresponding decrease in another area.
> Local 533's cancellation of negotiations that was scheduled for March 19, 1984, is of concern to me. We have to do something for our employees to ease their uncertainties. It appears that the officers of that Local are delaying the negotiations. That conduct along with positions taken previously and with previous cancellations lead us to believe that additional negotiations will be unproductive. Therefore, we submit herewith our "final" proposal and request that you seek membership approval of it. If approval is not received by March 31, 1984, we will consider that we are at an impasse and will implement our "final/final" proposal on April 1, 1984.
> If the Unions wish to meet for the purpose of additional negotiations in sufficient time to permit a membership vote not later than March 31, 1984, please let me know.

Upon receipt of this letter Tarson telephoned Perry and expressed his position that Perry's request was improper and further that Perry did not allow the Unions sufficient time to submit a referendum to their members. Perry said that regardless of the outcome or whether he actually implemented Respondent's final offer they could still resume negotiations.

On March 18 Tarson sent a letter to Perry, the body of which reads:

> I have reviewed your March 21st letter concerning our negotiations. It is becoming obvious that you are more interested in declaring "impasse" than engaging in collective bargaining.
> In response to your company's claimed lack of financial "ability to pay," we have repeatedly requested that you provide financial records for our auditors to review. To date, no such records have been provided.
> You have again submitted a proposal and without providing for negotiations concerning it, have demanded acceptance and approval. As even evidenced in your second letter, in your haste, you have now indicated section 19-5, "may be misinterpreted." Is this bargaining in good faith?
> As we have previously advised, this "take it or else" and unilateral declaration of impasse in these circumstances will not provide lawful basis to avoid bargaining or implement your proposals.
> The reason for Local 533's request to cancel the March 19th meeting as explained were due in part to our office staff being short handed due to sickness, and out of town commitments to our International's requests, as well as myself being sworn in as a Delegate, our one o'clock meeting had to be cancelled under these circumstances. As to our previous mutual agreements to cancel scheduled meetings, I'm sure there were no improprieties by any of the concerned parties when requesting meeting places, times, dates, etc.
> Furthermore, you have stated financial records would not be available until March 31st, and now later to April 15th. Your obligation to furnish financial information requested and to bargain collectively remains unsatisfied, particularly in light of our actions to secure these rights made necessary by your company's earlier conduct.
> Please advise when financial information requested will be available since that information is necessary for us to evaluate your company's claimed lack of ability to pay.

Respondent did, in fact, implement the terms of its "final/final" offer on April 1. On April 10 Tarson sent a letter to Perry, the body of which reads:

> Referring to your recent letters and memo declaring "impasse" and then implementing your final/final offer, please be advised that both Locals are going forward with a mail referendum vote to accept or reject your final offer.
> Assuming they reject it, we are still uncertain when the company intends to: (a) repay back wages; (b) make the audit report available, and; (c) company proof of liabilities concerning wages, work rules and benefits that may require monetary relief, until May, 1985.
> These items were first negotiated on February 7, 1984 but as yet have not been forthcoming. Therefore, it is respectfully requested that within seven (7) days of receipt of this letter, the above items be answered before negotiations can resume.

On May 3, by mail ballot, the unit employees rejected Respondent's final offer by a vote of 33 to 4. Local 533 notified Respondent, by mailgram, of the results of the vote. On May 7 Tarson sent a letter to Perry, the body of which reads:

> You are now aware your drivers rejected your "final offer" by a wide margin by secret ballot. As the Union has been consistent in bargaining in good faith, you have shown to be contrary to negotiate for reasons yet revealed.
> The Union still requests:
> 1. The company promised financial and/or audit report so that the Union can make an intelligent judgment regarding wages, work rules, benefits, etc., of the company's claim for relief until May, 1985.
> 2. Re-establishment of bid runs to the Reno/Tahoe domicile to San Jose, California that the Nevada drivers enjoyed since 1974 until you arbitrarily removed all of them last November under the guise of higher costs of hotel rooms in San Jose and unpredictable winter road conditions.
> 3. Re-establish back wages and working conditions as ascribed [sic] in the agreement still in effect.
> There are of course other items still to be negotiated, i.e., your declaration of impasse and implementation of different wages, work rules, etc.
> Therefore, as stated in our mailgram sent you May 4th, Locals 265 and 533 stand ready to resume negotiations at your earliest convenience when all parties amicably meet.
> With best regards, I remain . . . .

Perry responded by letter dated May 9 addressed to Local 533 and Local 265, the body of which reads:

> Your wire of rejection raises the question, "Can we resolve the impasse?"
> The letter from Local #533, dated April 10, 1984, indicated your uncertainty on three points:
> First, as to our intention to provide back pay. Our final offer to the drivers provided for back pay.
> Second, as to the availability of our annual audited reports. We have made the audited reports for 1980 through 1982 available and if you desire we will provide you with copies. The audited report for 1983 is still not available even though the certified public accountant, Arthur Young & Company, had indicated a completion date of March 15, 1984. We will make the 1983 audited report available as soon as we receive it from Arthur Young & Company.
> Third, as to our need for monetary relief. Our books are open to you for examination on this item. We have previously documented that money is needed to liquidate our liabilities with the Internal Revenue Service, our loan payments on the buses, and our trade account deficits. Those requirements still exist and there are two new large items (over $100,000 each). One is a court-awarded judgment to James Wood. The other is retrospective insurance premiums for 1979 to 1983 that will have to be paid to Transit Casualty.
> Our financial position has deteriorated below this year's forecast for at least three major reasons:
> One is that Greyhound and many new small bus companies are quoting charter rates that are lower than our operating costs and this has taken business away from us or has resulted in our moving at marginal rates in order to generate cash flow.
> Two is that we have less buses to generate revenue. In the last two years we have had to sell 13 buses in order to generate money to allow us to continue operations. Additional bus sales have been considered, but a depressed used bus market would not provide any operating money as virtually all of the proceeds would have to be applied to our debt to the Internal Revenue Service and to our debt on the equipment loan.
> Three is that we have been unable to modernize our MCI fleet, whose age averages ten years. Also, our fleet will drop four more buses in October when our lease expires on the four Eagles. We cannot renew that lease or buy any new equipment until we meet our obligations with Internal Revenue Service and with Barclay American Credit. Our inability to modernize the fleet could result in our loss of the Richard Lee account.
> We have drastically reduced our expenses in all areas and we have asked the drivers to help us. The only reason that we have continued to try to save the Company is our personal pride for 68 years of history in the bus business. We ask you to help us continue our historical record and to maintain union jobs.

In view of these facts, what do you propose that will resolve the impasse and permit the Company to survive? If you desire a face-to-face meeting to discuss this, we are available, at this time, on May 14, 17, 22, 23, 24 and 25.

Thereafter there was an exchange of letters between Perry and Tarson in which each ascribed to the other blame for the status of negotiations and Tarson requested that negotiations resume in Reno on June 4 and Perry agreed to the June 4 resumption, but in Oakland. On May 29 Tarson sent a letter to Perry, the body of which reads:

Your letter of May 18th refer[ing] to a resumption "to continue discussions" beginning June 4th at your Oakland office is another clear indication of your failure to negotiate in good faith.

In my correspondence to you I have tried to answer your questions and/or statements as specifically as possible, but you ignore a simple request as to having negotiations take place at your Reno office, especially since Local 533 has gone to much expense to accomodate the company and Local 265 in meetings held in Oakland (and Sacramento, a half-way point).

In addition, there is no indication of when or where or if your financial records will be available for the Union's perusal in order that monetary items can be intelligently negotiated.

Furthermore, your declarations of impasse and implementation of yet another contract is another clear indication of your cavalier attitude toward good-faith bargaining.

Therefore, if you are really serious in resuming contract negotiations, the following criteria must be met, either wholly or in part, or we will simply await the outcome of an NLRB decision regarding all the charges filed by Local 533 or other resources at the Union's discretion:

1. Restore the contractual agreement in effect October 31, 1983 (as per company-Union agreement during negotiations February 7, 1984).

2. Restore and correct the hourly wage of $8.657, now.

3. Repay all back wages.

4. Financial and audit report.

5. Restore bid runs to operate from Reno to San Jose (see Section 9-22 of the agreement).

On June 12 Respondent sent the Unions a copy of a letter from the firm preparing its audit, which explained the delay in the completion of the audit for 1983 and stated that it was anticipated that the audit would be available no later than June 30.

D. Conclusions

1. The separate negotiations with Local 265 and Local 533 and the resulting reduction in wages

It is well established that the existence of a collective-bargaining agreement raises an irrebutable presumption of a collective-bargaining representative's majority status during the life of the contract. Shamrock Dairy, Inc., 119 NLRB 998 (1957), and 124 NLRB 494 (1959), enfd. 280 F.2d 665 (D.C. Cir. 1960), cert. denied 364 U.S. 892 (1960); Pioneer Inn and Pioneer Inn Casino, 228 NLRB 1263 (1977), enfd. 578 F.2d 835 (9th Cir. 1978); Carmichael Construction Co., 258 NLRB 226 (1981), enfd. 728 F.2d 1137 (8th Cir. 1984). Here Local 533 and Local 265 were the certified joint representative of Respondent's drivers in a unit that covered drivers located in the San Francisco Bay Area and the Reno-Lake Tahoe area and were parties to a collective-bargaining agreement with Respondent covering these employees, effective by its terms until October 31. Respondent argues, however, that parties to a joint certification may voluntarily adopt a different mode of negotiations and that Local 533 had temporarily waived the right to bargain on a joint basis by its conduct, which had induced Respondent reasonably to believe that both Local 533 and Local 265 desired separate negotiations.

I reject this argument. Any waiver of a representative's right to bargain must be "clear and unmistakable." General Electric Co. v. NLRB, 414 F.2d 918, 923 (4th Cir. 1969). Here the evidence does not establish such a clear and unmistakable waiver. A Local 265 representative was present at the negotiations regarding the reassignment of the bid runs and, in Local 533's letter announcing a desire to open the collective-bargaining agreement, there is nothing to indicate an abandonment of joint representative status or a desire to exclude Local 265. Further, Local 533 later made its position quite clear, in its October 3 mailgram, that it was the joint representative of Respondent's employees along with Local 265 and that any separate meetings between Local 265 and Respondent would be considered unlawful. In these circumstances I find that Respondent violated Section 8(a)(5), (2), and (1) of the Act by recognizing Local 265 as the collective-bargaining representative of a portion of the appropriate bargaining unit, negotiating separately with Local 265, and entering into, and implementing, the terms of the resulting separate collective-bargaining agreement with Local 265.

As to its November negotiations with Local 533 and the December 1 implementation of its final offer submitted during these negotiations, Respondent argues that it was genuinely seeking to reach an agreement, and that it was Local 533's conduct in refusing to consider requested economic concessions and its determination to await the outcome of NLRB proceedings that thwarted attempts to reach agreement. Therefore, Respondent contends, a genuine impasse was reached that should not be affected by Respondent's conduct in engaging in the prior separate negotiations with Local 265. Contrary to Respondent's contentions, I find that no lawful impasse was reached. Respondent's proposal and its "final offer" specifically provides that it applies only to a portion of the appropriate bargaining unit—the drivers located in Nevada—and that all references to Local 265 be deleted from the contract. Despite Local 533's immediate and unwavering rejection of this proposed modification of the certified unit and the representative status of the certified representative, Respondent remained adamantly insistent on such modification throughout the negotiations and during the exchange of correspondence immediately thereafter, and it was this position that led to a stalemate in bargaining. Since modification of a Board-certified unit is not a mandatory subject of bargaining, by bargaining to impasse thereon Respondent violated Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act. National Fresh Fruit & Vegetable Co., 227 NLRB 2014 (1977).

Respondent argues that its conduct in the October negotiations with Local 265 and the November negotiations with Local 533 was, at most, technical or de minimis violations, which were cured by its subsequent negotiations with the joint representative. Further, Respondent argues its conduct was not unlawful because each of the Locals had the power to bind the joint representative. Therefore, Respondent contends a valid impasse was reached and its subsequent implementation of its final offer was lawful. This argument is not convincing because Respondent negotiated with Local 265 and sought to negotiate with Local 533 not as agents of the joint representative but in derogation of the joint representative status. The disruptive nature of such conduct precludes a conclusion of a technical or de minimis violation. Rather, in the circumstances herein Respondent's conduct is indicative of bad-faith bargaining. Case law is clear that a valid bargaining impasse cannot exist in the context of bad-faith bargaining. NLRB v. Pacific Grinding Wheel Co., 572 F.2d 1343 (9th Cir. 1978); Taft Broadcasting Co., 163 NLRB 475 (1967); United Contractors Inc., 244 NLRB 72 (1979). In view of the above, I conclude that no valid impasse was reached. Accordingly, in the absence of a valid impasse, I find that Respondent violated Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act by unilaterally implementing its "final" offer on December 1. NLRB v. Katz, 369 U.S. 736 (1962); Taft Broadcasting Co., 163 NLRB 475 (1967), enfd. 395 F.2d 622 (D.C. Cir. 1969).

2. The joint representative's February request for information concerning Respondent's financial status and the April 1 implementation of Respondent's "final/final" offer

It is well established that if an employer asserts financial inability to meet a union's economic demands, upon request of the union the employer is obligated to furnish the union information to document whether it can or cannot afford to meet the union's demands. NLRB v. Truitt Mfg. Co., 351 U.S. 149 (1956); Teleprompter Corp., 227 NLRB 705 (1977), enfd. 570 F.2d 4, 8 (1st Cir. 1977). Here it is undisputed that Respondent claimed inability to pay the contractual wage rate and relied thereon as justification for its proposals for reduced wages and other benefits. It is also undisputed that the Unions requested documentation of this claimed inability to pay, and that such information was not furnished for several months.

Respondent argues that it did not unlawfully refuse to furnish financial information. Rather it agreed to, and did, furnish the audit report on its receipt from the auditor. Therefore, Respondent argues, the fact that the preparation of the audit report was delayed does not constitute a violation. Respondent further contends that since Local 533 had reviewed audit reports from earlier years in the possession of Local 265, it knew that the audit reports were on a consolidated basis and would not be sufficient to enable the Unions to evaluate the legitimacy of Respondent's claims. In these circumstances, Respondent contends, the request for the audit reports was being used by Local 533 as a pretext to delay bona fide negotiation and the pretextual nature thereof is confirmed by the Unions' failure to request to review the documents on which Curtis based his oral presentation concerning the Company's cash flow position and its failure to accept Perry's offer to permit a union representative on Respondent's board of directors where he would have access to all of the Company's financial matters.

Whatever might be the validity of this argument if it were factually supported by the record, I find the argument unconvincing in the context herein. According to Tarson's undenied testimony, which I credit, on February 7 Greeley stated the Unions' position that negotiations on monetary items would have to be delayed until the Unions had some sort of official report as to Respondent's financial position. Greeley said the Unions wanted to see some sort of records to prove that the Company needed the financial relief it was requesting. It was Respondent's representative that offered the audit report in response to this request. As to the earlier audit reports, Tarson said there was some discrepancy as to a 1981 figure between the report for 1980–1981 and the report for 1981–1982 and, accordingly, the Unions needed additional information as to the Company's financial status. Perry's response was that Respondent would provide an audit report and Curtis began giving them oral information as to Respondent's financial status. Tarson again stated that before the Unions could get into negotiations concerning wages they needed further reports to substantiate Respondent's position. Curtis' response was that the Unions would get the audit report as soon as Respondent received it.

Contrary to Respondent's urging, I find that the Unions' request for financial information was sufficient to reasonably convey to Respondent that the Unions were requesting any financial information that would indicate the accuracy of Respondent's claimed inability to pay. It was the Respondent, not the Unions, that defined this documentation in terms of audit reports. The nature of any substantiating documents was peculiarly within the knowledge of Respondent and Respondent had an obligation to furnish such substantiating information as would allow the Unions to evaluate Respondent's claim of inability to pay. As stated by the Supreme Court in Truitt, supra, "[G]ood faith bargaining necessarily requires that claims made by either bargainer should be honest claims. [If an asserted inability to pay] is important enough to present in the give and take of bargaining,

Here it could not reasonably be expected that the Unions would be able to evaluate the accuracy of Respondent's claim without some substantiating documents. In these circumstances I find that Respondent had an obligation to furnish the Unions with such documents. I further find that when Respondent offered to furnish audit reports in response to the Unions' request for documentation, it knew that the audit report would be insufficient to allow the Unions to evaluate Respondent's financial circumstance and that it had in its possession documents more likely to meet the Unions' requirement in that they related to Respondent's cash flow and debt problems. Nevertheless, relevant documents and records were not made available to the joint representative for more than 2 months. There is no evidence of justification for this delay as to information other than the audit reports in the process of preparation. Accordingly, I conclude that the delay in furnishing information other than the audit reports was unreasonable and contributed to the stalemate in negotiations that Respondent was so quick to characterize as an impasse. In the circumstances I find that Respondent violated Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act by its refusal for a period of time to furnish the Unions with financial information to substantiate its claimed inability to pay. International Credit Service, 240 NLRB 715 (1979).

In view of Respondent's unlawful refusal to furnish such information, I further find that no bona fide impasse was reached as to wages. Accordingly, I find that by unilaterally implementing the wage provisions of its "final/final offer" Respondent violated Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act. Palomar Corp., 192 NLRB 592 (1971).

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. The Respondent is an employer within the meaning of Section 2(2) of the Act, engaged in commerce or a business affecting commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

2. Local 533 and Local 265 are labor organizations within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

3. At all material times, Local 533 and Local 265 have been the certified joint exclusive representative of the Respondent's employees within the meaning of Section 9(a) of the Act in the following appropriate unit:

> All motor coach operators and motor truck operators employed by Respondent-Employer at its Reno, Nevada, South Shore Lake Tahoe, California, and San Francisco, California facilities; excluding school bus drivers, all other employees, guards, and supervisors as defined in the Act.

4. By withdrawing recognition from, and refusing to bargain with, Local 265 and Local 533 from October 21, 1983, until January 18, 1984, as the joint exclusive collective-bargaining representative of the employees in the unit described above; by granting recognition to Local 265 as the exclusive collective-bargaining representative of the employees in the appropriate unit based in the San Francisco Bay Area; and by entering into, and implementing a collective-bargaining agreement on October 21, 1983, with Local 265 covering the rates of pay, wages, hours of employment, and other terms and conditions of employment of the San Francisco employees, Respondent has engaged in unfair labor practices within the meaning of Section 8(a)(5), (2), and (1) of the Act.

5. By its insistence, on November 8, 1983, that Local 533 accept its "final offer" that demanded that Local 533 enter into a separate collective-bargaining agreement with it excluding all references to Local 265 and to the unit employees based in San Francisco; by bargaining to impasse over the nonmandatory subject; and by implementing on December 1, 1983, the terms and conditions of the "final offer," Respondent has engaged in unfair labor practices within the meaning of Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act.

6. By implementing the terms and conditions of its "final/final offer" on April 1, 1984, at a time when no valid, good-faith impasse had been reached in its collective bargaining with joint representatives Local 265 and Local 533, Respondent has violated Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act.

7. By failing and refusing from February 7, 1984, until May 9, 1984, to furnish the joint representative's requested information as to Respondent's financial status, which information is necessary and relevant to the performance of the joint representative's functions as collective-bargaining representative of the employees in the appropriate unit, Respondent has engaged in unfair labor practices within the meaning of Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act.

8. The above-described unfair labor practices are unfair labor practices affecting commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

REMEDY

Having found that Respondent has engaged in certain unfair labor practices, it shall be recommended that Respondent cease and desist therefrom, and take certain affirmative action designed to effectuate the policies of the Act.

Since it has been found that Respondent unlawfully withdrew recognition from Local 265 and Local 533 as the joint representative of its employees in the certified unit, I shall recommend that Respondent recognize and bargain, on request, with the joint representative as the exclusive bargaining representative of the employees in the unit. Having also found that Respondent unlawfully implemented the terms and conditions of its separate agreement with Local 265 on November 1, 1983, its "final offer" to Local 533 on December 1, 1983 and its "final/final offer" to the joint representative on April 1, 1984, I shall also recommend that Respondent rescind the terms and conditions of employment unilaterally implemented on November 1, 1983, December 1, 1983, and April 1, 1984, and restore the wages and other terms and conditions of employment established by its collective-bargaining agreement with the joint representative, which expired on October 31, 1983, until such time as it negotiates in good faith to a new agreement or to a valid impasse. It is further recommended that Respondent make the employees in the certified unit whole for any loss of wages or benefits incurred as a result of the unilateral changes implemented by Respondent, to be computed in the manner set forth in F. W. Woolworth Co., 90 NLRB 289 (1950), with interest as computed in Olympic Medical Corp., 250 NLRB 146 (1980) and Florida Steel Corp., 231 NLRB 651 (1977). Any trust fund reimbursements are to be made in accordance with Merryweather Optical Co., 240 NLRB 1213 (1979). Finally, as Respondent's unfair labor practices were of a nature that has the effect of totally disrupting the bargaining process and depriving employees of fundamental rights guaranteed by the Act, I find the Respondent's conduct to be "egregious" within the meaning of Hickmott Foods, Inc., 242 NLRB 1357 (1979). Accordingly, it is recommended that Respondent be ordered to cease and desist from any other interference with employee rights.

On these findings of fact and conclusions of law and on the entire record, I issue the following recommended[7]

ORDER

Respondent, Grey Line Scenic Tours, Inc. d/b/a California Nevada Golden Tours, Oakland, California, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall

1. Cease and desist from

(a) Refusing to recognize Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen and Helpers Union Local 533, International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen and Helpers of America, and Chauffeurs Union Local 265, International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen and Helpers of America, as the exclusive joint collective-bargaining representative of its employees in the appropriate unit described below.

(b) Bargaining to impasse over nonmandatory subjects of bargaining.

(c) Giving effect to its October collective-bargaining agreement with Local 265 covering unit employees based in the San Francisco Bay Area.

(d) Unilaterally changing wages and other terms and conditions of employment of its employees in the appropriate unit described below without giving notice to the joint representative and providing them with an opportunity to bargain or at a time when no valid, good-faith impasse has been reached in collective bargaining.

(e) Failing and refusing to furnish, without unreasonable delay, to the joint representative requested information necessary and relevant to the performance of the joint representative's functions as collective-bargaining representative of the employees in the appropriate unit.

(f) In any other manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing its employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them in Section 7 of the Act.

2. Take the following affirmative action necessary to effectuate the policies of the Act.

(a) Recognize the above-named Unions as the joint exclusive collective-bargaining representative of its employees in the appropriate unit described below and, on request, meet and bargain with the aforesaid Unions concerning wages, hours, and other terms and conditions of employment; and, if an understanding is reached, embody it in a signed document. The appropriate unit is:

> All motor coach operators and motor truck operators employed by Respondent-Employer at its Reno, Nevada, South Shore Lake Tahoe, California, and San Francisco, California facilities; excluding school bus drivers, all other drivers, guards, and supervisors as defined in the Act.

(b) Cease giving effect to the collective-bargaining agreement it entered into with Local 265 on October 21, 1983, rescind the terms and conditions of employment unilaterally implemented on November 1, 1983, December 1, 1983, and April 1, 1984, and restore the wages and other terms and conditions of employment established by its collective-bargaining agreement with the joint representatives, which expired on October 31, 1983, until such time as it negotiates in good faith to a new agreement or to a valid impasse.

(c) Make the employees in the appropriate unit described above whole for any loss of wages or benefits incurred as a result of the unilateral changes implemented by Respondent in the manner set forth in the remedy section herein.

(d) Preserve and, on request, make available to the Board or its agents for examination and copying, all payroll records, social security payment records, timecards, personnel records and reports, and all other records necessary to analyze the amount of backpay due under the terms of this Order.

(e) Post at its facilities in the San Francisco Bay Area and the Reno, Nevada area copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix."[8] Copies of the notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 32, after being signed by the Respondent's authorized representative, shall be posted by the Respondent immediately upon receipt and maintained for 60 consecutive days in conspicuous places including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by the Respondent to ensure that the notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(f) Notify the Regional Director in writing within 20 days from the date of this Order what steps the Respondent has taken to comply.

APPENDIX

NOTICE TO EMPLOYEES
POSTED BY ORDER OF THE
NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD
An Agency of the United States Government

The National Labor Relations Board has found that we violated the National Labor Relations Act and has ordered us to post and abide by this notice.

Section 7 of the Act gives employees these rights.

To organize
To form, join, or assist any union
To bargain collectively through representatives of their own choice
To act together for other mutual aid or protection
To choose not to engage in any of these protected concerted activities.

WE WILL NOT refuse to recognize and bargain with Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen and Helpers Union Local 533, International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen and Helpers of America, and Chauffeurs Union Local 265, International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen and Helpers of America, as the exclusive joint collective-bargaining representative of its employees in the appropriate unit described below.

WE WILL NOT bargain to impasse over nonmandatory subjects of bargaining.

WE WILL NOT give effect to our October 1983 collective-bargaining agreement with Local 265 covering unit employees based in the San Francisco Bay Area.

WE WILL NOT unilaterally change wages and other terms and conditions of employment of our employees in the appropriate unit described below without giving notice to the joint representative and providing them with an opportunity to bargain, or at a time when no valid, good-faith impasse has been reached in collective bargaining.

WE WILL NOT fail and refuse to furnish, without unreasonable delay, to the joint representative requested information necessary and relevant to the performance of the joint representative's functions as collective-bargaining representative of the employees in the appropriate unit.

WE WILL NOT in any other manner interfere with, restrain, or coerce our employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them in Section 7 of the Act.

WE WILL recognize the above-named Unions as the joint exclusive collective-bargaining representative of our employees in the appropriate unit described below and, upon request, meet and bargain with the aforesaid Unions concerning wages, hours, and other terms and conditions of employment; and, if an understanding is reached, embody it in a signed document. The appropriate unit is:

All motor coach operators and motor truck operators employed by Respondent-Employer at its Reno, Nevada, South Shore Lake Tahoe, California, and San Francisco, California facilities; excluding school bus drivers, all other drivers, guards, and supervisors as defined in the Act.

WE WILL cease giving effect to the collective-bargaining agreement we entered into with Local 265 on October 21, 1983, rescind the terms and conditions of employment unilaterally implemented on November 1, 1983, December 1, 1983, and April 1, 1984, and restore the wages and other terms and conditions of employment established by our collective-bargaininig agreement with the above-named joint representative, which expired on October 31, 1983, until such time as we negotiate in good faith to a new agreement or to a valid impasse.

WE WILL make the employees in the appropriate unit described above whole for any loss of wages or benefits incurred as a result of the unilateral changes implemented by us.

DECISION AND ORDER

BY CHAIRMAN DOTSON AND MEMBERS JOHANSEN AND BABSON

On 13 August 1986 Administrative Law Judge Thomas R. Wilks issued the attached decision. The Respondent filed exceptions and a supporting brief, and the General Counsel filed an answering brief to the exceptions.[1]

The National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the decision and the record in light of the exceptions and briefs and has decided to affirm the judge's rulings, findings, and conclusions[2] and to adopt the recommended Order as modified.

ORDER

The National Labor Relations Board adopts the recommended Order of the administrative law judge as modified below and orders that the Respondent, Hohn Industries, Inc., Batavia, New York, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall take the action set forth in the Order as modified.

1. Insert the following as paragraph 1(a) and reletter the subsequent paragraphs.

"(a) Refusing to bargain with the Sheet Metal Workers' International Association, Local Union No. 71, as the exclusive bargaining representative of the employees in the bargaining unit."

2. Substitute the attached notice for that of the administrative law judge.

APPENDIX

NOTICE TO EMPLOYEES
POSTED BY ORDER OF THE
NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD
An Agency of the United States Government

The National Labor Relations Board has found that we violated the National Labor Relations Act and has ordered us to post and abide by this notice.

Section 7 of the Act gives employees these rights.

To organize

To form, join, or assist any union

To bargain collectively through representatives of their own choice

To act together for other mutual aid or protection

To choose not to engage in any of these protected concerted activities.

WE WILL NOT refuse to bargain with the Sheet Metal Workers' International Association, Local Union No. 71, as the exclusive representative of the employees in the bargaining unit.

WE WILL NOT coercively poll you about your desire for representation by Sheet Metal Workers' International Association Local Union No. 71.

WE WILL NOT in any like or related manner interfere with, restrain, or coerce you in the exercise of the rights guaranteed you by Section 7 of the Act.

WE WILL recognize and, on request, bargain in good faith with the above-named Union regarding rates of pay, wages, hours of employment, and other terms and conditions of employment for the employees in the appropriate unit and, if an understanding is reached, reduce the agreement to writing and sign it. The appropriate unit is:

> All full-time and regular part-time employees normally employed in the manufacture of the Hirschman-Pohle line of rooftop ventilators and employed at our Batavia Industrial Park, Batavia, New York facility, excluding all other employees, office clerical employees, guards, and supervisors as defined in the Act.

HOHN INDUSTRIES, INC.

Michael Cooperman, Esq., for the General Counsel.
Peter J. Spinelli, Esq. (Harris, Beach, Wilcox, Rubin and Levey), of Rochester, New York, for the Respondent.

[1] We deny the General Counsel's request to strike the arguments set forth in Respondent's exceptions under Sec. 102.46(b) of the Board's Rules and Regulations. We also deny the General Counsel's request to add a visitatorial clause in the judge's recommended Order, since the General Counsel has failed to demonstrate sufficient grounds for a visitatorial clause in this case.

[2] In adopting the judge's finding that the Respondent violated Sec. 8(a)(5) and (1) by unlawfully withdrawing recognition, we agree with the judge's finding that the Respondent did not have a sufficient basis for doubting the Union's majority. The Respondent conducted a poll which failed to conform to the safeguards set forth in Struksnes Construction Co., 165 NLRB 1062 (1967), for employer-conducted polls. The signing of the petition by the employees was a direct result of the unlawful poll. Therefore, the Respondent was not justified in relying on it as objective evidence of the Union's loss of majority status. Absent the 8 April 1986 petition, the facts of this case present insufficient grounds for the Respondent to raise a reasonably based doubt as to the Union's majority status. The Respondent thus violated Sec. 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act by withdrawing recognition of the Union.

We find it unnecessary to pass on the judge's alternative rationale for finding the violation. Chairman Dotson additionally finds it unnecessary to pass on the judge's discussion of the obligations of an employer who assumes a business with respect to the incumbent union of the previous employer, or the judge's discussion of what is required before an employer has sufficient basis for conducting a poll. Member Johansen, who did not pass on the legality of the employee poll in Boaz Carpet Yarns, 280 NLRB 40 (1986), agrees that that case is distinguishable.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

THOMAS R. WILKS, Administrative Law Judge. This case was tried before me at Buffalo, New York, on 16 June 1986, pursuant to an unfair labor practice charge filed on 17 April 1986 by Sheet Metal Workers' International Local Union No. 71 (Union) against Hohn Industries, Inc. (Respondent), and a complaint issued by the Regional Director of Region 3 on 14 May 1986. The complaint alleges that the Respondent, by its agent, employee Robert Scott, violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act by coercively interrogating his three fellow bargaining unit employees, i.e., polling them about whether they desired continued representation by the Union, and that it further violated Section 8(a)(5) of the Act by thereafter withdrawing recognition of the Union as their bargaining agent. The Respondent's answer denied the commission of an unfair labor practice.

At the trial all parties were given full opportunity to participate, to adduce relevant evidence, to examine and cross-examine witnesses, to argue orally, and to thereafter file written briefs that were ultimately received by me on 28 July 1986.

On the whole record of this case, and from my observation of the witnesses and their demeanor, and after evaluation of the oral arguments and written briefs, I make the following

FINDINGS OF FACT

I. BUSINESS OF RESPONDENT

At all times material herein, Respondent, a New York State corporation with an office and place of business at Batavia Industrial Park, Batavia, New York (Respondent's facility), has been engaged in the production of sheet metal products. Since commencing operations about August 1985, Respondent, in the course and conduct of its operations, sold and shipped from its Batavia, New York facility products, goods, and materials valued in excess of $39,000 directly to points outside the State of New York. Based on a projection of its operations since about August 1985, at which time Respondent commenced its operations, Respondent, in the course and conduct of its operations for the 12-month period beginning August 1985, will have gross revenues in excess of $150,000 and will ship and sell from its Batavia, New York facility goods and materials valued in excess of $50,000 directly to points outside the State of New York.

It is admitted, and I find, that Respondent is now, and has been at all times material herein, an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

II. LABOR ORGANIZATION

It is admitted, and I find, that the Union is now, and has been at all times material herein, a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

III. THE UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES

A. Issues

The main issue in this case is whether the Respondent, as a successor employer which had voluntarily recognized the Union as bargaining agent for a unit of four employees, subsequent to a non-Board adjustment of a prior refusal to recognize an unfair labor practice charge, violated the Act by withdrawing recognition soon afterward based on the polling of its employees by employee Robert Scott. Subordinate within this issue is whether Scott acted as an agent of the Employer in conducting the poll.

A second issue raised by Respondent in its brief is whether, regardless of the poll, the Union had in fact lost its majority status, and whether the Respondent possessed a good-faith doubt of the Union's majority status sufficient to justify its withdrawal of recognition.

1. Background

The production of sheet metal ventilators at Respondent's facility had previously been performed by Hirschman-Pohle Company, Inc., whose production employees had been represented by the Union for 30 years. In October 1985, the product line was sold to Respondent, which continued the operation of the business with the same employees. After its acquisition of the business in early October, Respondent was confronted with and declined the demand for continued recognition of the Union. The Union thereafter filed an unfair labor practice charge in Case 3–CA–12952 that alleged a violation of Section 8(a)(5) of the Act based on the refusal of Respondent as a successor employer to recognize the Union as continued majority employee bargaining agent. The Respondent contended that it was not a successor employer.

On 7 and 12 March 1986, Respondent executed a non-Board settlement agreement, the terms of which the Respondent acquiesced as successor employer to recognize the Union as the majority bargaining agent for employees in the historic bargaining unit. After a few days the unfair labor practice charge was withdrawn with the approval of the Regional Director. All parties agree to the applicability herein of Harley-Davidson Co., 273 NLRB 1531 (1985), and that Respondent's bargaining obligation arising from that settlement agreement is that of a successor employer and that the Union had at most a rebuttable presumption of majority representative status.

Between 7 and 14 March, the Union's business manager, Glenn Gibson, by telephone, requested Respondent's president and manager, David Hohn, to meet and negotiate a collective-bargaining agreement. Gibson was told to contact Respondent's attorney, Brian O' Connor. Within a day or so, Gibson communicated by telephone with O'Connor and was told to draft the Union's proposal, and that a meeting would be held after receipt of these proposals. Gibson proceeded to draft these proposals. Afterward, in the last week of March, he attempted to inform O'Connor that the proposals were complete and that a meeting should now be arranged. He was told that O'Connor was on vacation. Subsequently, Gibson's office received a message that O'Connor had telephoned and stated that Gibson would soon be in receipt of a letter from Respondent.

About 13 April, Gibson received a letter from O'Connor dated 10 April which stated that Hohn had received an "unsolicited letter" signed by all four of the bargaining unit employees which disclosed that they had voted among themselves by 3 to 1 in favor of no further representation by the Union. A photocopy was enclosed. O'Connor's letter concluded that the Union had lost its status as majority employee bargaining agent and that it was inappropriate to engage in any collective bargaining with it.

2. The status of Robert Scott

David Hohn testified that he is the owner and president of the Respondent as well as its traveling sales agent. When engaged in sales solicitation he is absent from the plant. From the context of his testimony, it appears that he is the sole manager and production supervisor of the four unit employees. One of the four bargaining unit employees, Robert Scott, not only performs the same daily production duties as his coworkers, but he also serves as leadperson and conduit of instructions and orders from Hohn. Scott testified that he assigns work to and signs the timecards of his coworkers. Hohn testified that generally assignment of work is determined by each man's job function, and the job functions called for are determined by predetermined job plans on blueprints. He explained that when assignment decisions are made that he and Scott will jointly discuss it and that sometimes joint decisions are made and sometimes Scott will make the assignment decision. Vacation and time off requests of unit employees are submitted by the employees to Scott who in turn submits them to Hohn for approval. Scott maintains his own office at the plant.

Scott is not alleged to be a supervisor, nor is there sufficient evidence to conclude that he exercises that type of independent discretion indicative of supervisory authority as defined by the Act. However, it is clear that Scott occupies a preeminent position among the employees as the conduit of Hohn's decisions that affect employees' work conditions, i.e, what Scott tells the employees concerning their work status is certainly likely to be and intended to be perceived by them as the policy of Respondent.

3. The alleged rejection of collective-bargaining representative

Hohn testified that he decided to meet with the bargaining unit employees and to read to them a prepared statement concerning union representation. Such a meeting was held on 24 March 1986. Hohn testified initially as follows concerning the purpose of the meeting.

> [W]e had a meeting with them because there was various comments presented to me, questions regarding their rights as employees and in regards to the union. They had mentioned several times that they had requested withdrawal cards and had been refused.

When he was asked to be more specific in his testimony, Hohn responded, "This is actually—it comes to me through my engineer who is much closer to the employees in the shop than I was." In effect, Hohn then retracted his testimony. Hohn related only one conversation he had back in November 1985 with engineer Bob McCombs, a nonunit employee. He testified that McCombs had told him that during the last week of October that he had witnessed a business agent in a confrontation with three unit employees in the plant parking lot wherein their requests for membership withdrawal cards were rejected and they were threatened with blacklisting if such requests persisted. Thus Hohn gave no specifics about any conversations with bargaining unit employees concerning union representation disaffection prior to the March meeting, nor did he relate any other reports of employee disaffection.

Hohn testified further, without detail or specifications, that he held the March meeting because:

> they were getting feedback from the Union that they were going to have a contract and there was a lot of gray areas, they had questions, they were getting upset because they were getting conflicting stories, so we decided we'd have a meeting with them and set the record straight as to what actually occurred in the settlement.

Thus these more recent reports to Hohn appear related to contract negotiations, and not to union disaffection or membership withdrawal.

On 24 March, unit employees Arthur Stothers and Roger Morgan were summoned by Scott to the plant's office. Union steward David Roblee, a unit employee, was not present at the meeting. Hohn read to the employees a two-page speech prepared by his attorney. In that speech he made the following points paraphrased or quoted as follows:

> 1. Respondent entered into a settlement of an unfair labor practice charge which required continued recognition of the Union by the Respondent as a successor employer.
> 2. The Union "currently" has the right to represent and bargain for unit employees.
> 3. Unit employees are not obliged by the settlement to retain their union membership or to pay dues. There is no current contract and thus no existing union-security obligation nor check off provisions.
> 4. Employees may not be compelled to join the union by threat of blacklist.
> 5. "Some of you have asked me how they can withdraw from union membership or eliminate the Union as their bargaining representative. Under the National Labor Relations Act, you are free to decertify the Union at any time before a new collective bargaining agreement is reached. However, I cannot assist you or encourage you to do so. This is up to you alone. If you need further information re> garding decertification of Local 71 or any other issue, you must contact the National Labor Relations Board yourself. I have the names and phone numbers of three employees at the Buffalo office who are obligated by law to answer your questions and assist you in any way possible. There names are as follows: [names deleted]

> 7. [sic] That is all that I have to say to you. However, I would like to answer any questions that you may have regarding this situation.

Hohn failed to testify to any current event in justification of the assertions in item 5 regarding membership withdrawal or union elimination. I credit Hohn that he read the speech verbatim.

Robert Scott, a witness who was called by the General Counsel, could not recall the substance of the speech. After the speech, however, both he and Hohn testified that there was some discussion. Although Scott was not called as an adverse witness, his demeanor revealed a hesitancy and reluctance when responding to counsel for the General Counsel's questions, but a greater spontaneity, if not alacrity, in answering Respondent counsel's questions in cross-examination, particularly when those questions were of a leading nature.

Scott testified in response to counsel for the General Counsel's question that in the postspeech discussion which concerned the substance of the letter, Hohn expressed a desire for the employees to decide whether they wanted union representation. He did not particularize just how Hohn verbalized that desire. In cross-examination Scott testified that in the discussion he asked Hohn whether Respondent would encounter adversity in marketing its products as a nonunion shop and that Hohn responded that nonunion representation would not affect employees' jobs. He also responded "yes" to Respondent counsel's questions concerning whether Hohn stated that nonunion representation would make no difference, and that Scott had stated at the meeting that he was "asking for a withdrawal card from the union." He further testified on the rephrasing of another leading question that Morgan stated "something about having been suspended from the Union and he testified [Morgan] didn't want to discuss it, I guess." Scott testified that Stothers also asked whether rejection of union representation would affect employees' jobs and whether Hohn could supply the employees with the names of NLRB agents who could provide them with information. When asked by Respondent's counsel whether that request "had anything to do with a withdrawal from the Union" he answered with certitude that it did not. He answered further "yes" to the question as to whether Strothers said "anything about the men discussing it [withdrawal from the Union] among themselves," but explained that Stothers did not state that employees would make a decision as to "withdrawal from the Union."

Hohn testified that during the postspeech conversation Stothers asked about the probability of adverse economic impact by the loss of the union label from Respondent's product line. He testified that employee Morgan arose during the discussion and proceeded to walk out on stating that he had been suspended from union membership, and that Scott had stated he was asking the Union for a membership withdrawal card. He added, however, that Stothers did most of the talking and Stothers stated a fear concerning whether as a long-time union member his rejection of the Union would affect "his service if for some reason he left the Company and went someplace else and it was a Union shop," but that "some of the other guys just kidded him and said, 'look Art, you don't have any pension benefits or anything else so it doesn't make any difference.'" Hohn testified that the meeting ended, and as the employees arose Stothers stated, "Well, we're going to have to discuss this among ourselves and get back to you."

Stothers testified as a rebuttal General Counsel witness. According to him, the meeting lasted a mere few minutes, i.e., Hohn read his speech and invited questions. The only question Stothers was able to recall was that someone asked about the adverse effects of a loss of the union label. Stothers denied that he had stated anything at the meeting about withdrawing from union membership. He denied raising any concern "that if there was no union there [he] might lose benefits." He neither confirmed nor denied other accounts of the balance of the meeting by either Hohn or Scott.

Stothers testified that at the close of the meeting Hohn invited further future questions. He therefore proceeded to engage Hohn in a later private conversation. He testified without contradiction that he asked Hohn whether he wanted the employees to have union representation and Hohn stated he did not and, when asked why not, stated that union representation would deprive him of the flexibility to transfer employees from one job to another. In cross-examination it became clear that there was more to the meeting than initially testified to by Stothers. He admitted "yes," that at the meeting Hohn told the employees "that it was really up to them whether they wanted a union or not." He also admitted that during the meeting Hohn's wife, who serves as office clerical and receptionist, was also present and stated that she had "slips of paper" with NLRB agents' names, and that he took such a slip. He could not remember doing so, but testified that it was "possible" that he stated during the meeting that he was "going to find out whether the union could refuse his membership withdrawal card application." Further, in cross-examination, he did not deny that he stated at the end of the meeting that the employees would discuss continued union representation among themselves. He explained that he just did not remember.

Based on Hohn's greater certainty, Scott's corroboration, and Stothers' admissions, I conclude that Stothers did tell Hohn that the employees would discuss further the subject of union representation. I credit Scott's testimony that Stothers did not state to Hohn that the employees would come to some definite conclusion that would be reported to Hohn. Scott did not appear to have any motivation to give testimony adverse to Respondent. If anything, he appeared eager to accommodate counsel for Respondent's questions. Moreover, his self-interest would seem to mitigate against antagonizing his employer. Furthermore, Hohn's own personal notes, which he wrote within an hour of the meeting, merely state, "Art [Stothers] said they will have to discuss among themselves." Based on Stothers' concessions, I conclude that he did make a statement to the effect that he would make inquiries concerning withdrawal of union membership. It is uncontradicted that Morgan stated that he had been suspended from union membership. In view of Scott's and Hohn's uncontradicted testimony, I conclude that Scott also stated that he was in the process of seeking a withdrawal of union membership application form. Therefore, at the conclusion of the meeting of 24 March 1986, Hohn had become aware that one employee was suspended from union membership, that one was in the process of requesting a membership withdrawal form, and a third was about to make inquiries as to withdrawing from union membership. However, no employee stated to him that they did not desire representation by the Union as nonunion members, i.e., representation without the obligation of a dues-paying membership. Nor did any employee state that they would consider decertification of the Union, despite item no. 5 of Hohn's speech which referred to withdrawal of union membership "or" the elimination of the union as bargaining representative in the disjunctive as subjects of past employee inquiry. At most Hohn was told that the unit employees would discuss further among themselves, "withdrawal from the Union." Neither the testimony nor Hohn's own notes clearly reveal whether the employees were to discuss the subject of nonunion representation, or the more limited subject of withdrawal from union membership with its attendant dues and obligations but short of complete nonrepresentation, or both. Further, Hohn was not told that the employees would report their decision to him, nor was there any deadline set for them to report any decisions reached.

Hohn was advised by his attorney during this period of time. NLRB agents were suggested to the employees as sources of information. Thus Hohn should have been aware that the employees had at least access to sources of information that would surely explain to them the distinction between nonmembership and nonrepresentation.

It appears that union steward Roblee, the fourth employee, was read Hohn's speech the next day.

According to Hohn's own testimony, it is clear that he had not been able to conclude on the basis of his information after 24 March that the majority of employees did not desire representation because he found it necessary to evoke from them some explicit decision. He testified that 2 weeks went by without any further expression from the employees on the subject of union membership or union representation. Hohn testified that on 8 April he felt constrained to ask Scott whether the employees "had any discussions," and (in implicit recognition of Scott's role as his informational conduit) he "reminded him that they were going to get back to us and let us know what had been decided.[1] Regarding Scott's response, Hohn's testimony is:

> He said he'd had a couple minor discussions; nothing concrete determined and he says, well I can't get everybody together and he says, well, I don't know how to do this, and he said, well, my answer to him was they can either take a secret ballot or they can take a vote or he can do anything, but I can't tell you how to do it.

The conclusion that the employees had not agreed to come to a formal decision or to report such decision back to Hohn is enhanced by the fact that no deliberation or "vote" was taken by them nor was any report made to Hohn. This conclusion is buttressed by Scott's testimony.

According to Scott, he did indeed have a couple of discussions with his coworkers after the speech. His motivation in not approaching Hohn with news of an antiunion decision is revealed by his testimony that after the meeting at least two of the employees, Stothers and Morgan, told him that they "thought they wanted the union." The third employee was the union steward. Thus, according to Scott and even Hohn's testimony, there had been no employee initiative toward a revocation of the status quo. Scott's testimony as to Hohn's initiative toward instilling employees' actions in this regard is in certain important aspects markedly different from that of Hohn.

Scott's testimony as to the 8 April conversation is as follows: According to Scott, on 8 April, Hohn confronted him in the work area of the plant and asked whether the employees "had decided on the Union or not." He answered that the employees "hadn't been talking about it, and nobody's made up their mind yet." Thereupon, Hohn insisted that "he had to know today whether [the employees] want it or not." Hohn then told him to "take a vote on it." Scott agreed to do so. Nothing more was said. On cross-examination to Respondent's counsel, Scott answered "yes" to the assertions that at the March meeting Hohn told the employees that union representation was a matter for their choice and that he did not want to get "directly" involved, and "yes to the question, So you took this vote on your own?" In redirect examination he admitted that the idea, i.e., the initiative to take a vote, was not his but was that of Hohn.

Within the full context of the events, and the conversation between Hohn and Scott even under Hohn's version, I conclude that it is Respondent who put Scott in motion with the objective of forcing the issue on the employees by means of some kind of a formalized group decision, which by any other name means, in effect, a polling of the employees by Scott at Hohn's order, notwithstanding Hohn's appended disclaimers. However, if credibility resolution is necessary, I credit Scott's version. As noted above, it was clearly against his self-interest to testify adversely to Respondent, whereas Hohn's testimony was, of course, otherwise. Furthermore, Scott was most certain in demeanor with respect to who authored the idea of a vote.

Hohn most certainly realized that nonaction of the employees was a vote for the status quo. Hohn's pressure on Scott to force an explicit option was a clear signal that he wanted them to reject the status quo. Thus, despite having been told by two employees that they still "thought" that they desired union representation and knowing that the third employee was the union steward, Scott followed Hohn's imperative to poll the employees that very day about continued union representation. He approached each employee and told them to come to his office at breaktime. He told them, "we were going to decide on the Union or not." When they assembled in his office, he stated to them:

> Dave [Hohn] wants us to know whether we want this Union or not, he wants us to vote on it; he says we can take a secret ballot or show of hands.

One employee expressed a desire for a showing of hands which was acquiesced to by the others. The result was a 3-to-1 vote in favor of no further union representation. Scott reported the results to Hohn's daughter who is an office clerical employee. She suggested that he put the information in writing. At this time Mrs. Hohn was in the room. Scott testified that he went back to his own office and composed a note which he arranged for each of the four employees to sign which states as follows:

> The four sheet metal workers at Hohn Industries took a vote and decided 3–1 against being part of the Sheet Metal Workers' International Association.

Scott then delivered the note to Hohn's office. Thereafter, Respondent's counsel communicated with the Union as described above.

C. Analysis

The presumption of majority status of the Union may be rebutted by a demonstration of actual loss or a showing of a reasonable good-faith doubt.

The Respondent's position is that based on the results of the employee petition and other employee expressions, it was clear that the Union had lost its majority status, or that in any event Respondent was warranted in doubting the Union's majority status as in the Harley-Davidson case which involved an employee-initiated petition, and J. & J. Drainage Products Co., 269 NLRB 1163 (1984). In the latter case which also involved a successor employer, it was found by the administrative law judge that the presumption of union majority status was rebutted by the existence of objective basis for reasonable doubt which consisted of (1) the age of the original certification, (2) the fact that only 6 of 32 unit employees were union members, (3) the statements of the union steward to the employer to the effect that employees did not wish to meet with the union representatives because they were not interested in the union, and (4) the absence of unfair labor practices.

The Board has traditionally considered a wide range of factors in making an evaluation whether sufficient objective phenomena individually or cumulatively supports a reasonable good-faith belief of loss of majority status. U-Save Food Warehouse, 271 NLRB 710, 715–718 (1984). This case, however, does not include many of the factors often taken into account, i.e., change in employee complement, absence or inactivity of the union, closeness of the original majority designation, and, apart from the 8 April petition, a clear statement of rejection of union representation by a majority of the employees.

Immediately prior to the receipt of the 8 April petition, Respondent was possessed of no greater information of possible employee disaffection with the Union than it was back in November 1985 at the outset of its half-year refusal to recognize and bargain with the Union. That lengthy period of frustrated bargaining efforts by the Union was caused by Respondent's refusal to acknowledge its status as successor, and not by a proffered doubt of majority status. Respondent recognized the Union in March 1986, having possessed essentially the same information of purported employee union disaffection, i.e., that three employees were possibly interested in withdrawing from union membership. The only difference by 24 March was that Hohn now was informed that one employee was suspended from union membership and one had only requested, not executed, a membership withdrawal and a third intended to make inquiry about obtaining a membership withdrawal card. As I have concluded above, Hohn, by his insistence on a more clear-cut renunciation of the Union, had himself concluded that he did not possess sufficient reasonable doubt that the majority of the employees did not want union representation as such, in contradistinction to union membership and its obligations. Scott's more credible testimony shows that he informed Hohn that the employees had made no disavowal decision. Even Hohn's testimony reveals this.

The Board has long distinguished employee expressions of membership and/or dues obligations rejection from expressions of a desire for nonrepresentation, and therefore the Board has not viewed such evidence alone as of sufficient weight to establish a reasonable doubt of majority status, much less evidence of actual loss of majority status. Roger's I.G.A., Inc., 232 NLRB 1053 (1977), enfd. 605 F.2d 1164 (10th Cir. 1979); Carmichael Construction Co., 258 NLRB 226, 230 (1981), enfd. 728 F.2d 1137 (8th Cir. 1984).

Administrative Law Judge Holmes, in J. & J. Drainage, supra 269 NLRB at 1171, evaluated evidence of a minority union membership as but "one factor" to support the Respondent's claim it had a reasonable doubt of the Union's majority status. He did not rely on the factor of successorship, and the factor of the age of certification was not relied on by the Board in adopting his decision. I conclude that the facts of this case do not warrant a conclusion that Respondent had, exclusive of the 8 April employee "petition," sufficient grounds to doubt the majority status of the Union.

Counsel for the General Counsel concedes that a successor employer may rely on an employee petition in doubting the union's majority status, but he points out that where such petition has been relied on, it has been one that was initiated by the employees, citing for example Sun Coast Foods, 273 NLRB 1642 (1985), and Boaz Carpet Yarns, 280 NLRB 40 (1986). In the Sun Coast case the Board took great pains in rejecting the administrative law judge's finding that the employee petition had been tainted by supervisory assistance. In the Boaz case, the employer conducted a poll of its employees in consequence of the presentation of an employee-initiated petition which revealed a clear rejection of a union as their bargaining agent. The Board's majority opinion in that case carefully observed that the employer "verified" the petition in a noncoercive manner that comported with the employees' rights under the Act, i.e., the purpose of the vote was communicated to them, they were assured that regardless of the outcome there would be no reprisals, and a secret ballot was utilized.[2] The Board noted that these events occurred in the absence of a refusal of the employer to bargain in good faith.

The General Counsel argues that Respondent as a successor employer did not have "the option of postponing its bargaining obligation to make its own determination of whether the Union still enjoyed minority status." The General Counsel cites Aircraft Magnesium, 265 NLRB 1344 (1982). The Board stated therein that a union is not obliged to establish majority status when a successor employer assumes the business, but that it is the successor employer's obligation to demonstrate actual or reasonably believed loss of majority status. Furthermore, it held that "encouraging and sanctioning an employee-conducted election to test the Union's support" 60 days after its assumption of operations did not satisfy its obligation because, the Board stated, lack of union support on the later date had no relevance to the Union's status on the date when the Union demanded recognition, i.e., the date of the assumption of business. The essential point in the Board's reasoning is the time differential, and thus the Board did not preclude per se a poll by a successor employer. If a prerequisite for a poll is a reasonable doubt of majority status, then there is no need for a poll except as verification.

The Respondent argues that it took no poll in this case inasmuch as Scott was not its agent. The factual finding above indicates the contrary. Respondent had clothed Scott with the general apparent authority of its agent by virtue of his position as conduit for Respondent's orders and instructions. Propellex Corp., 254 NLRB 839, 843 (1981). Scott's position as a bargaining unit member does not negate a finding of agency herein because not only did he possess a general apparent agency, he was specifically made Hohn's agent for the polling. Scott, in turn, made that agency clear to the employees when he gathered them in his office. I therefore conclude that Respondent must be viewed not only as the author of the idea of a poll, but the actual polling agent.

In the circumstances of this case, therefore, the consequent petition was a creature of the Employer's poll and did not precede it. Also, unlike the Boaz case, supra, the Employer did not apply the Struksnes safeguards. The purpose and effect of the vote was not clearly explained, there was no secret ballot, and no assurances against reprisals were made at the polling which I therefore find was a coercive interrogation. Furthermore, unlike Boaz, supra, the polling did not occur in the absence of a refusal to bargain. Respondent admitted that it is a successor employer. Thus it had an obligation to bargain with the Union on the assumption of the business, but it had refused to bargain for almost one-half year. Having frustrated the Union's request to bargain, only after it offered to bargain did it take a poll of its employees' sentiments.

In light of all the circumstances in this case, I cannot conclude that there was demonstrated a loss of the Union's majority status nor a reasonable good-faith doubt as to its majority status. Accordingly, I conclude that Respondent violated Section 8(a)(1) and (5) of the Act as alleged in the complaint.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. Respondent Hohn Industries, Inc. is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

2. Sheet Metal Workers' International Association Local Union No. 71 is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

3. The following employees of Respondent (the unit) constitute a unit appropriate for the purposes of collective bargaining within the meaning of Section 9(b) of the Act:

> All full-time and regular part-time employees normally employed in the manufacture of the Hirschman-Pohle line of rooftop ventilators and employed by the Respondent at its Batavia Industrial Park, Batavia, New York facility, excluding all other employees, office clerical employees, guards and supervisors as defined in the Act.

4. Since about 1 October 1985, and at all times material herein, the Union has been the designated exclusive collective-bargaining representative of Respondent's employees in the unit described in paragraph 3, and since about 14 March 1986 the Union has been recognized as such representative by Respondent. Such recognition has been embodied in a recognition agreement dated about 14 March 1986.

5. At all times material herein and for the past 30 years, the Union, by virtue of Section 9(a) of the Act, has been, and is, the exclusive representative of the employees in the unit for the purpose of collective bargaining with respect to rates of pay, wages, hours of employment, and other terms and conditions of employment.

6. Respondent has engaged in unfair labor practices in violation of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act by the conduct of its agent, Robert Scott, on 8 April 1986, whereby it coercively polled its employees concerning their desire for union representation.

7. Respondent engaged in unfair labor practices in violation of Section 8(a)(1) and (5) of the Act on 10 April 1986 and thereafter by withdrawing recognition of the Union as the exclusive bargaining representative of the unit and, since, failing and refusing to recognize or bargain with the Union as such representative.

8. The foregoing unfair labor practices affect commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

[2] This is an implicit reference to the safeguards required by the Board for permissive employer polling, as set forth in Struksnes Construction Co., 165 NLRB 1062 (1967).

THE REMEDY

Having found that Respondent engaged in unfair labor practices in violation of Section 8(a)(1) and (5) of the Act, I recommend that it be ordered to cease and desist therefrom and take certain affirmative action designed to effectuate the policies of the Act.

On these findings of fact and conclusions of law and on the entire record, I issue the following recommended[3]

ORDER

Respondent Hohn Industries, Inc., Batavia, New York, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall

1. Cease and desist from

(a) Coercively polling its employees concerning their desire for union representation.

(b) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them by Section 7 of the Act.

2. Take the following affirmative action necessary to effectuate the policies of the Act.

(a) Recognize and, on request, bargain in good faith with Sheet Metal Workers' International Association Local Union No. 71 as the exclusive collective-bargaining representative of the employees in the appropriate unit regarding rates of pay, wages, hours of employment and other terms and conditions of employment for the employees in that unit and, if an understanding is reached, reduce the agreement to writing and sign it. The appropriate unit is:

> All full-time and regular part-time employees normally employed in the manufacture of the Hirschman-Pohle line of rooftop ventilators and employed by the Respondent at its Batavia Industrial Park, Batavia, New York facility, excluding all other employees, office clerical employees, guards and supervisors as defined in the Act.

(b) Post at its Batavia, New York facility copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix."[4] Copies of the notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 3, after being signed by the Respondent's authorized representative, shall be posted by the Respondent immediately upon receipt and maintained for 60 consecutive days in conspicuous places including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by the Respondent to ensure that the notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(c) Notify the Regional Director in writing within 20 days from the date of this Order what steps the Respondent has taken to comply.

[3] If no exceptions are filed as provided by Sec. 102.46 of the Board's Rules and Regulations, the findings, conclusions, and recommended order shall, as provided in Sec. 102.48 of the Rules, be adopted by the Board and all objections to the them shall be deemed waived for all purposes.

[4] If this Order is enforced by a judgment of a United States court of appeals, the words in the notice reading "Posted by Order of the National Labor Relations Board" shall read "Posted Pursuant to a Judgment of the United States Court of Appeals Enforcing an Order of the National Labor Relations Board."

26 February 1987

DECISION AND DIRECTION OF SECOND ELECTION

BY CHAIRMAN DOTSON AND MEMBERS JOHANSEN AND STEPHENS

The National Labor Relations Board, by a three-member panel, has considered objections to an election held 28 July 1983 and the hearing officer's report recommending disposition of them. The election was conducted pursuant to a Stipulated Election Agreement. The tally of ballots shows 23 for and 20 against the Petitioner, with 2 challenged ballots, an insufficient number to affect the results.

The Board has reviewed the record in light of the exceptions and briefs, and has decided to adopt the hearing officer's findings[1] and recommendations[2] only to the extent consistent with this decision.

The hearing officer recommended overruling the Employer's Objection 2, which alleged that the Petitioner materially misrepresented its nature, structure, and identity to unit employees during the election campaign. We find merit in the Employer's exception to this recommendation.

The pertinent facts are as follows. Printing Specialties & Paper Products Union, Local 609, District Council No. 1, a/w International Printing & Graphic Communications Union, AFL–CIO (PGCU Local 609) began organizing the unit employees in mid-May 1983.[3] The parties signed a Stipulated Election Agreement on 15 June, listing PGCU Local 609 as the petitioning organization. On 1 July the PGCU merged with the Graphics Arts International Union (GAIU) and formed the Graphic Communications International Union (GCIU), culminating approximately 1 year of negotiations. PGCU's District Council No. 1, which included PGCU Local 609 and 12 other PGCU locals, officially merged with GAIU's Western Graphic Arts Union No. 14 on 13 July and created GCIU Local 777. The 28 July election ballots, however, did not reflect the merger but listed PGCU Local 609 as the petitioner.

During the election campaign, Local 609 Organizer James Ziolkowski conducted weekly meetings with some of the Employer's employees. Ziolkowski testified that at each meeting he reported the merger's progress to the group. At the 24 July meeting he informed the employees of the new union's name, structure, and membership, and distributed two documents to be signed by employees stating that they acknowledge Local 777 as Local 609's successor and designate it as their collective-bargaining representative.[4] Twenty-seven of the forty-five unit employees signed both of these documents. The record does not indicate whether the employees who attended the meetings disseminated the merger information to those who were absent, but unit employees Kris Mavity testified that at the time of the election he was unaware of the merger.

The hearing officer concluded that the merger did not result in a change in the continuity of the bargaining representative. We disagree. While Local 609 encompassed only San Joaquin, Stanislaus, and Merced counties in California, Local 777 additionally includes the widespread jurisdictions of 12 other PGCU locals throughout Northern California, as well as GAIU's Western Graphic Arts Union No. 14.[5] The new union presumably

[1] The Employer has excepted to some of the hearing officer's credibility findings. The Board's established policy is not to overrule a hearing officer's credibility resolutions unless the clear preponderance of all the relevant evidence convinces us that they are incorrect. Stretch-Tex Co., 118 NLRB 1359, 1361 (1957). We find no basis for reversing the findings.

[2] Absent exceptions, we adopt pro forma the hearing officer's recommendations to overrule the Employer's Objections 8 and 9 and to approve the Employer's withdrawal of Objection 1.

[4] The documents read in full:

> TO: The Officers and Representatives of Graphic Communications Union Local 777. The successor to Printing Specialties and Paper Products Union, Local 609, District Council #1, affiliated with International Printing and Graphic Communications Union, AFL–CIO.
> We, the undersigned, are employees of Pacific Southwest Container, Inc. understand and acknowledge that Graphic Communications Union Local 777 is the successor to Printing Specialties and Paper Products Union, Local 609, District Council #1, affiliated with International Printing and Graphic Communications Union, AFL–CIO and it is our entent [sic] that the authorization cards we signed for Printing Specialties and Paper Products Union, Local 609, District Council #1 affiliated with International Printing and Graphic Communications Union, AFL–CIO indicates our desire to be represented for the purpose of negotiating our wages, hours and working conditions by Graphic Communications Union Local 777. The successor.
> TO: The Officers and Representatives of Graphic Communications Union Local 777.
> We, the undersigned, are employees of Pacific Southwest Container, Inc. By our signatures we hereby make application to Graphic Communications Union, Local 777, an affiliate of the Graphic Communications International Union (AFL–CIO), and hereby designate the Officers and Representatives of your Union as our chosen collective bargaining representatives for the purpose of negotiating wages, hours and working conditions on our behalf.

[5] The jurisdictions of the other merging PGCU locals were as follows: #362, San Francisco; #382, East Bay Cities; #460, Sacramento; #618, Salinas; #653, Modesto; #677, Richmond; #678, San Leandro; #679, Idaho; #706, Sacramento; #748, Benecia; #777, San Mateo and Santa Clara Counties; and Ink and Roller Makers #5, San Francisco and East Bay Counties.

contains far more members than Local 609. Local 777's executive board has 60 members; Local 609's had approximately 6. Local 777 drew its first officers from the former officers of PGCU's District Council No. 1 and Western Graphic Arts Local No. 14; none of them had served as Local 609's officers. Additionally, Local 777 has an entirely new constitution and bylaws. Although it did not immediately change the former PGCU and GAIU local dues payment formulas, the merger agreement states that "careful consideration of an equitable formula for a dues structure will be provided which will ultimately equally apply to all members."

We find that the merger substantially transformed Local 609. It significantly diluted the strength of any individual employee's influence in internal union matters, because Local 777 is a far larger organization than Local 609, in scope and in membership. Additionally, the new local is governed by entirely different officers, its executive board is 10 times larger, and its members are subject to a new constitution and bylaws. The merger thus did not merely effect minor administrative changes in the local. Local 609 lost its original identity and became part of a local with a vastly different structure and entirely new leadership.[6] We therefore find, contrary to the hearing officer, that the merger resulted in a meaningful change in the bargaining representative. Independent Drug Store Owners, 211 NLRB 701 (1974), affd. 528 F.2d 1225 (9th Cir. 1975); Gulf Oil Corp., 135 NLRB 184 (1962).

Although 27 of the 45 unit employees signed statements prior to the election indicating that they knew of the merger and desired representation by GCIU Local 777, there is no evidence suggesting that as of the election date the 18 other unit employees had heard of the merger; indeed, 1 employee testified that he voted while unaware of it. Because the Petitioner failed adequately to inform all unit employees of the merger, it is uncertain that a majority of the employees who voted actually intended to vote for Local 777. Because of the circumstances, we cannot be certain that the employees knew for which union they were voting.

Thus, the employees' right to select their bargaining representative, a right embedded in Sections 7 and 9 of the Act, was compromised. In O & T Warehousing Co., 240 NLRB 386 (1979), the Board stated (at 386), "That statutory right can only be meaningfully exercised if the employees are presented on the election ballot with the choice of a clearly identified labor organization." The Board in O & T Warehousing found that the petitioner could not appear on the ballot with the designation "AFL–CIO and/or its Appropriate Affiliate." The Board concluded that it was "far from clear what labor organization or organizations are seeking representative status." The Board will thus not certify a labor organization to represent employees unless the election results unquestionably reflect the employees' intent. Employees must be informed of any substantial change in the representative occurring during the election campaign, and the correct labor organization must be listed on the ballot. Moreover, the petitioning union may not selectively inform employees of the changes; it must notify all potential voters. Only then are employees ensured the opportunity meaningfully to exercise their voting rights. We therefore sustain Objection 2 and set aside the election.[7]

Although we cannot certify GCIU Local 777 to represent the unit employees based on the 28 July election results, we shall not dismiss the petition. We find that the documents signed by 27 unit employees on 24 July expressing a desire to be represented by Local 777 constitute an adequate showing of interest to justify a second election. Accordingly, we shall direct a second election, listing GCIU Local 777 on the ballot.[8]

MEMBER JOHANSEN, concurring.

I concur in the result.

[6] Although the merger agreement provides that Local 777 "is the legal successor to all the rights, duties and obligations of each of the merging Local Unions," this is outweighed by the evidence demonstrating that Local 777 is a substantially different entity from Local 609.

We place little weight on Ziolkowski's conclusory testimony that, following the merger, "representation of the membership remained the same."

[7] J. F. Hink & Son, 252 NLRB 1187 (1980), enfd. 654 F.2d 729 (9th Cir. 1981), and American Enka Co., 231 NLRB 1335 (1977), relied on by the hearing officer, are distinguishable. Both cases involved mergers only at the International level, and in neither case was it established that the merger significantly affected employee representation.

The hearing officer correctly distinguished this case from Midland National Life Insurance, 263 NLRB 127 (1982), which held that the Board will not set aside elections due to parties' misrepresentations during the campaign. Although the Employer framed Objection 2 in misrepresentation terms, we are not setting aside the election for that reason. Rather, we find that the election did not comport with Sec. 9(a) because we cannot ascertain that a majority of the employees intended to designate Local 777 as their collective-bargaining representative.

The Employer request that because of the potential for confusion surrounding the election, the Board should permit it to withdraw from the Stipulated Election Agreement. We shall leave this matter for resolution by the Regional Director.

As we have sustained the Employer's Objection 2, we find it unnecessary to pass, and we do not pass, on the issues raised by its Objections 4 and 5.

DECISION AND ORDER

BY CHAIRMAN DOTSON AND MEMBERS STEPHENS AND CRACRAFT

On 8 May 1981 Administrative Law Judge Gerald A. Wacknov issued the attached decision. The Respondent filed exceptions and a supporting brief, and the General Counsel filed a memorandum in support of the judge's decision.

The National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the decision and the record in light of the exceptions, memorandum, and brief and has decided to affirm the judge's rulings, findings, and conclusions[1] and to adopt the recommended Order.

In Case 32–CC–394 of the instant consolidated proceeding, the judge concluded, inter alia, that the Respondent violated Section 8(b)(4)(i)(B) of the Act when its business agent, Rudy Valente, induced and encouraged individuals employed by a neutral subcontractor on a common construction site to stop work and walk off the job in honor of a picket line established by another union in furtherance of that Union's primary labor dispute with the general contractor on the construction project. We agree.

In Plumbers Local 444 (T. S. Hanson Plumbing), 277 NLRB 1231 (1985), the Board concluded that the Union violated Section 8(b)(1)(A) of the Act by fining two members employed by a neutral subcontractor because they crossed and worked behind a lawful primary picket line established by another union at a common construction jobsite. Although the specific section of the Act that was alleged to have been violated in T. S. Hanson—Section 8(b)(1)(A)—is different from the section of the Act alleged to have been violated in the instant case—Section 8(b)(4)(i)(B)—the underlying issue presented in T. S. Hanson is presented again here: whether a union may induce its members to honor a lawful primary picket line where those members work for a neutral employer on a common situs at which no valid system of reserved gates is in effect. Like the fines in T. S. Hanson, the request of the Respondent's business representative that individuals employed by Cal Bay, an undisputedly neutral employer, honor the primary union's picket line by leaving the jobsite clearly discloses an objective proscribed by Section 8(b)(4)(B)—to cause the neutral employer, Cal Bay, to cease doing business with the primary employer, Osborn. The Respondent knew that Cal Bay was a neutral in the Laborers' primary dispute with Osborn. A natural and apparent object of the Respondent's request that individuals employed by Cal Bay honor the Laborers' picket line by leaving the jobsite was to induce and encourage them to stop working for the neutral Cal Bay and in turn cause Cal Bay to cease doing business with Osborn.[2] Accordingly, we conclude that the Respondent has violated Section 8(b)(4)(i)(B) of the Act as alleged in this regard.[3]

ORDER

The National Labor Relations Board adopts the recommended Order of the administrative law judge and orders that the Respondent, Carpenters Local 316, United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America, AFL–CIO, San Jose, California, its officers, agents, and representatives, shall take the action set forth in the Order.

[1] At the hearing, the parties stipulated that the General Counsel was not alleging in Case 32–CC–335 that the Respondent's picketing at the neutral reserved gate between 27 August and 4 September 1980 was unlawful. Consequently, we do not affirm the judge's implicit finding that such picketing during that period of time was unlawful.

[3] In affirming the judge's finding of a violation under these circumstances, we do not rely on Teamsters Local 505 (Carolina Lumber), 130 NLRB 1438 (1961), cited by the judge. The distinction drawn in that case between "low level" and "high level" supervisors, in regard to the scope of the term "individual" in Section 8(b)(4)(i) of the Act, was rejected by the Supreme Court in NLRB v. Servette Inc., 377 U.S. 46 (1964).

There the Court held that the applicability of Section 8(b)(4)(i) to supervisors turns on whether the union's appeal to the supervisor is to cease performing his employment services, or is an appeal for the exercise of the supervisor's managerial discretion. In the instant case, we find that the Respondent's business agent Valente unlawfully appealed to Cal Bay's foreman Mobley to cease performing his employment services for Cal Bay.

Bernard Hopkins, Esq., for the General Counsel.
Michael B. Roger, Esq. (Van Bourg, Allen, Weinberg and Roger), of San Francisco, California, for the Respondent.
Mark R. Thierman, Esq., of San Francisco, California, for Thornhill Construction Co. and The Osborn Company, Inc.
Michael Riccitiello, Esq. (Littler, Mendelson, Fastiff & Tichy), of San Francisco, California, for Gould Trust d/b/a Gould Center and Century West Builders.

DECISION

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

GERALD A. WACKNOV, Administrative Law Judge. Pursuant to notice, a hearing with respect to this matter was held before me in San Jose, California, on January 8, 1981. The initial charges in Cases 32–CC–335, 32–CC–385, 32–CC–394, and 32–CB–795 were filed on July 10, August 18, September 24, 1979, and July 10, 1980,[1] respectively.

Thereafter, various complaints and amendments thereto were issued on July 31, September 17, 23, and 30, and December 18, by the Regional Director for Region 32 of the National Labor Relations Board (Board), alleging violations by United Brotherhood of Carpenters & Joiners of America, AFL–CIO, Local 316 (Respondent), of Section 8(b)(1)(A)[2] and (4)(i) and (ii)(B) of the National Labor Relations Act (the Act).

The parties were afforded a full opportunity to be heard, to call, examine, and cross-examine witnesses, and to introduce relevant evidence. Since the close of the hearing, briefs have been received from the General Counsel, counsel for Respondent, and counsel representing both Thornhill Construction Company and the Osborn Company, Inc.

On the entire record, and based on my observation of the witnesses and consideration of the briefs submitted, I make the following

FINDINGS OF FACT

I. THE LABOR ORGANIZATION INVOLVED

It is admitted that the Union is, and has been at all times material herein, a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

II. THE UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES

A. The Facts

1. Thornhill Construction Co. (Case 32–CC–335)

In June, Thornhill Construction Co.,[3] a framing contractor, was hired as a contractor on a condominium project in San Jose, California. On June 19, prior to the commencement of Thornhill's work on the job, Respondent's business representative, Rudy Valente, visited the jobsite and advised David Larimer, president of New West Associates, owner of the condominium project, that Thornhill was unwilling to sign a successor contract with the Union and that Larimer could, therefore, expect picketing on the job when Thornhill began work.

On July 9, the day that Thornhill commenced work on the site, Valente appeared at the jobsite and questioned several Thornhill employees about their lack of union membership.

Later that day, according to the testimony of Larimer, the following conversation occurred between Larimer, Larry Thornhill, owner of Thornhill Construction Co., and Valente:

> And he [Valente] turned to me and he said, what are you going to do? And I said, well, I'm just trying to build my construction project. And I said, what are you going to do? And he said, all I want to do is get Larry [Thornhill] to sign. And then he turned to Larry and pointed at me, and said this man's going to sue you if you can't finish. And I shook my head at that. And then Rudy [Valente] looked out the window and he said,—he looked out the door and he said, I'm not going to give Larry shit on this job. I'm not going to be easy on him. I want him to sign the agreement, and I want the job to be finished by Union carpenters. We want a—the Unions will all stick together and if Larry—I have the pickets right out in the car, I'll bring them out right now. And your job won't go one step further than it is right now.

Then there ensued some conversation between Valente and Larimer regarding obtaining a union framing contractor for the job. During this portion of the conversation, Valente told Larimer that the job would never get finished if Thornhill did not sign the agreement. Larimer indicated an intention to establish a reserve gate system, and testified that Valente replied:

> [t]hat doesn't matter. Gates don't matter. We don't picket gates, we picket job sites. And I have the pickets right out in the car and they'll be here tomorrow unless Larry signs.

The next morning, July 10, Respondent's pickets arrived at the jobsite, and shortly thereafter a reserve gate system was established by Larimer. Respondent's agents, including Valente, nevertheless picketed in front of the neutral gate reserved for employees, personnel, and visitors of persons other than Thornhill. On the same day, Larimer sent a telegram to Respondent, advising that a reserve gate system had been established, and requesting that the Union confine its picketing to the gate reserved for Thornhill. Nevertheless, Respondent picketed exclusively at the neutral gate from July 10 to July 14.

Thereafter, Respondent primarily confined its picketing activity to the gate reserved for Thornhill. However, when a vehicle or person would approach and enter the project through the neutral gate, the pickets would walk over to that gate, write down the vehicle's license number, and remain there while the delivery was being completed. I credit Larimer's unrebutted testimony that such conduct continued prior to August 27.

On August 27, Larimer used a forklift to bring lumber for Thornhill through the neutral gate. Thereupon, the Union commenced picketing the neutral gate, and on September 4, 1980, the Union was advised by telegrams that there would be no further tainting of the reserve gate system. Thereafter, picketing continued at both gates until October 1980 when an injunction was granted by the United States district court, enjoining picketing at the neutral gate. Picketing at the gate reserved for Thornhill continued until late November, and ceased following the outcome of a decertification election until late November, and ceased following the outcome of a decertification election among Thornhill's employees. Valente was not called as a witness in this proceeding.

[2] Following the close of the hearing, the parties entered into a settlement agreement involving this matter, namely, Case 32–CB–795, and on March 23, 1981, I issued an order serving cases, remanding Case 32–CB–795 to the Regional Director for purposes of compliance with the terms and provisions of the settlement agreement.

[3] Thornhill Construction Co. is a sole proprietorship with its principal place of business in San Jose, California. In the course and conduct of its business operations, Thornhill Construction Co. annually provides goods and services in excess of $50,000 to customers meeting one of the Board's jurisdictional standards other than the indirect inflow or indirect outflow standard. It is admitted, and I find, that Thornhill Construction Co. is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Sec. 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

2. Gould Trust d/b/a Gould Center (Case 32–CC–385)

On August 11, Respondent's business representative, Elmer Phillips, approached Mark Allen, job superintendent for Century West Builders, Inc.,[4] the general contractor for a restaurant construction project in San Jose, California. Phillips asked Allen whether certain employees who were employees of Construction Trends, the carpentry subcontractor, were union members. Allen told Phillips to ask the employees directly. On learning that the employees were not union members, Respondent commenced picketing the project the following day.

The picket sign was attached to a mobile home vehicle that was parked at the main entrance to the shopping center, known as the Gould Shopping Center and owned by E. Gould, where the restaurant construction was taking place. The picket sign stated that E. Gould fails to meet established wages and benefits established by the Carpenters Local 316.

Reserved gates were established on the second day of the picketing. A telegram sent to the Union about August 14, advised that gate 1 was reserved for the exclusive use of E. Gould and Century West Builders, Inc. and warned the Union to confine its picketing to gate 1. However, only Gould's name initially appeared on the sign at gate 1, and sometime thereafter, Century West's name appeared. Finally, on August 28, Construction Trend's name was also placed on the reserved gate sign at gate 1. Also on this latter date, Century West sent a telegram to the Union advising that Construction Trends and its suppliers were to use gate 1 exclusively. Apparently, the Union picketed at gate 1 during all times material herein. In addition to picketing at gate 1, however, the Union did not immediately remove its vehicle, bearing the aforementioned picket sign, from the main entrance to the shopping center, some 110 feet from gate 1. The vehicle remained at this location for about a week following August 14.

In late August, Century West's job Superintendent, Mark Allen, unlocked gate 2, the gate apparently reserved for employers other than Gould, Century West, and Construction Trends, in order to permit the concrete contractor, J. C. Lomas Company, to enter the site. Thereupon, according to Allen, who observed but did not overhear the conversation, Business Representative Phillips and the individual who had been picketing at gate 1 approached and spoke to an employee of J. C. Lomas near gate 2. Immediately thereafter, the employee approached Allen and advised him that he was leaving the project as he feared being fined if he came on the job, and presented Allen with a pamphlet that had been given to him by Phillips. Allen read the pamphlet that he paraphrased at the hearing as stating that "when a good union man sees a picket, he doesn't ask questions but just leaves." Thereupon, Allen, in the presence of Phillips, suggested that the employee call his employer on the CB radio in the truck. The employee contacted J. C. Lomas on the CB and explained the situation to him. Then there ensued a conversation between Phillips and Lomas over the CB. Allen overheard Phillips, who appeared angry, mention some sort of agreement between Lomas and Phillips and accused Lomas of breaking the agreement. Phillips, according to the uncontroverted testimony of Allen, said that he had a long memory, and the matter would not be forgotten. Phillips was not called as a witness.

3. The Osborn Company, Inc. (Case 32–CC–394)

In mid-July, the Laborers Union picketed The Osborn Company, Inc.,[5] the general contractor at a condominium construction site in San Jose, California. The carpentry subcontractor on the job was Cal Bay Builders with whom Respondent maintained a collective-bargaining relationship. On September 2, Rudy Valente, Respondent's business agent, approached Cal Bay Builders' working foreman, Vern Mobley, and requested that Mobley and his crew honor the picket line established by the Laborers Union. Mobley phoned Cal Bay Builders' general manager, Steven Fisk, and reported the matter, whereupon Fisk directed Mobley to instruct the employees to leave the jobsite, while Fisk attempted to get the matter resolved with Respondent.

On the afternoon of September 2, Fisk phoned Valente and asked why Valente had requested that his employees leave the site, and how the problem could be resolved. Valente replied, according to Fisk, that there was a sanctioned Laborers Union picket on the job and that the matter could be resolved by Fisk's honoring of the picket line. Valente further stated that if Fisk, or apparently Cal Bay Builders' employees, crossed the picket line, Fisk could be subject to "further assessments." Fisk testified that Valente did not go into detail and left the matter very vague. Valente was not called as a witness.

Cal Bay Builders did not work on September 2, but the carpentry crew commenced work the following day with no further incidents.

[4] Century West Builders, Inc. is a California corporation with offices located in California, and annually performs construction services valued in excess of $50,000 for customers located outside the State of California. It is admitted, and I find, that Century West Builders, Inc. is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Sec. 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

[5] The Osborn Company, Inc. is a California corporation with its principal place of business located in Santa Clara, California, and is engaged in the business of real estate development and construction. During the last fiscal year, Osborn performed services valued in excess of $800,000 for the United States Navy, and its operations have a substantial impact on the National Defense of the United States. It is admitted, and I find, that Osborn is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Sec. 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

B. Analysis and Conclusions

1. Thornhill Construction Co. (Case 32–CC–335)

It is clear, and Respondent proffered no contrary evidence, that Respondent, including Respondent's business representative Rudy Valente, picketed at the neutral gate reserved for persons other than employees and suppliers of the primary employer, Thornhill Construction Company. Moreover, even on belatedly moving its picket to the appropriate gate after about 4 days of picketing at the neutral gate, Respondent continued to picket the neutral gate during periods when deliveries were being made through that gate. Such picketing, under the circumstances, is conclusive evidence of an unlawful objective. Further, Business Representative Valente's statement to David Larimer, an official of New West Associates, a neutral employer, that reserved gates did not matter, and that Respondent intended to picket the jobsite, rather than any particular gate, clearly constituted a threat to engage in unlawful picketing. Sailors Union (Moore Dry Dock), 92 NLRB 547, 549 (1950); Carpenters Sacramento Area District Council (Malek Construction), 244 NLRB 890 (1979).

Nor, as contended by Respondent, does the fact that New West Associates provided a job shack, electrical current, portable toilets, and water used by Thornhill and other subcontractors, and purchased finished lumber, doors, and millwork for Thornhill establish that New West Associates was an ally of Thornhill or that the two entitles thereby maintained coemployer or joint venture relationship. See Carpenters Sacramento Area District Council, supra. The cases cited by Respondent in support of its ally defenses are inapposite.[6] Thus, contrary to the contention of Respondent, these cases do not establish that a neutral employer that purchases materials for and acts as a supplier of the primary employer by bringing materials onto the jobsite, thereby becomes an ally of the primary employer.

Nor does the fact that the owner of New West Associates used either gate for his personal ingress or egress invalidate the reserved gate system. Broadcast Employees NABET Local 31 (CBS Inc.), 237 NLRB 1370, 1378 (1978), enfd. 631 F.2d 944 (D.C. Cir. 1980); Carpenters Local 639 (American Modulars), 203 NLRB 1112, 1118 (1973).

I, therefore, find that by the aforementioned conduct, Respondent violated Section 8(b)(4)(i) and (ii)(B) of the Act, as alleged.

2. Gould Trust d/b/a Gould Center (Case 32–CC–385)

The General Counsel maintains that Respondent's illegal objective is demonstrated by its failure to conform its picketing to Moore Dry Dock standards.[7] In particular, the General Counsel contends that the picket sign erroneously named Gould rather than Construction Trends as the employer with which the Respondent has a primary labor dispute. Further, the General Counsel argues that the fact that Respondent picketed the main entrance of the Gould Shopping Center, in addition to the reserved gate set aside for Gould and others, establishes an unlawful secondary objective.

I find that, given the state of the record herein, the evidence is unclear that the Respondent knew or was ever timely advised of the identity of the primary employer, Construction Trends. Indeed, it appears that even several weeks after the reserved gates were established, Gould led Respondent to believe that Century West Builders employed the carpenters on the job and, insofar as the record shows, it was not until August 28 that the name of Construction Trends was even specifically mentioned to Respondent. Moreover, as the telegram of August 14 directed that Respondent's picketing activity be confined only to Gould and Century West Builders, it would appear reasonable for Respondent to conclude that its continued picketing at the main entrance of the shopping center, owned by Gould was likewise permissible.

However, I further find that Respondent's unlawful objective has been demonstrated by the conduct of Business Representative Phillips who sought to cause an employee of neutral employer. J. C. Lomas Company, the concrete contractor, to leave the job. Moreover, Phillips also threatened Lomas with breaching an agreement and, in effect, with unspecified reprisals should Lomas continue pouring concrete at the site. Although Mark Allen, job superintendent for Century West Builders, did not overhear but rather merely observed the conversation between Phillips and an employee of J. C. Lomas Company, and overheard only Phillips' remarks over the CB to Lomas, the record clearly establishes that Allen, whom I credit, was a precipient witness to what transpired herein, and that Allen's testimony is sufficient, under the circumstances, to support the finding of a violation. Respondent has presented no evidence that would negate the import of Allen's testimony. Moreover, I draw an adverse influence from Phillips' failure to testify.[8] I, therefore, conclude that the fair interpretation of Allen's testimony warrants the determination that Phillips engaged in conduct violative of the Act, and thus find that Respondent has violated Section 8(b)(4)(i)(B) and (ii)(B) of the Act as alleged. See Technical Engineering Division Local 130 (National Survey Services), 204 NLRB 348 (1973); Iron Workers Local 597 (Linebeck Construction), 208 NLRB 524 (1974).

3. The Osborn Company (Case 32–CC–394)

I credit the unrebutted testimony of Steven Fisk, general manager of Cal Bay Builders, a neutral employer performing work at the construction site in question, and find that during the September 2 telephone conversation, Respondent's business agent, Rudy Valente, in effect acknowledged that he had requested Cal Bay Builders' employees to leave the job earlier that day. Such a request even though directed to a low-level supervisor on the job, namely, Vern Mobley, is violative of Section 8(b)(4)(i)(B) of the Act. Teamsters Local 505 (Carolina Lumber), 130 NLRB 1438 (1961). Moreover, I find coercive, under the circumstances Valente's unexplained reference, during the same telephone conversation, of "further assessment," directed to Fisk. This is particularly true in the absence of any testimony by Valente that would tend to explain or clarify such ambiguous language. I, therefore, find that Valente's statement constituted a threat and was calculated to cause Cal Bay Builders to cease work at the site in furtherance of Respondent's unlawful objective. I, therefore, conclude that by the foregoing conduct Respondent has also violated Section 8(b)(4)(ii)(B) of the Act, as alleged.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. Thornhill Construction Co., Century West Builders, Inc. and The Osborn Company, Inc. are employers and persons engaged in commerce and in operations affecting commerce within the meaning of Section 2(1), (2), (6), and (7) and Section 8(b)(4)(i) and (ii) of the Act.

2. Carpenters Local 316, United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America, AFL-CIO is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

3. By inducing and encouraging individuals employed by New West Associates, J. C. Lomas Company, Cal Bay Builders, or other persons engaged in commerce or in an industry affecting commerce, to engage in a strike or refusal in the course of their employent to use, manufacture, process, transport, or otherwise handle or work on any goods, articles, materials, or commodities or to perform services; and by threatening, coercing, and restraining the above-named persons, or other persons engaged in commerce or in an industry affecting commerce, with an object of forcing or requiring the above-named persons to cease doing business with Thornhill Construction Co., Construction Trends, and The Osborn Company, Carpenters Local 316, United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America, AFL-CIO has engaged in and is engaging in unfair labor practices affecting commerce within the meaning of Section 8(b)(4)(i) and (ii)(B) and Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

THE REMEDY

Having found that Carpenters Local 316, United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America, AFL-CIO has engaged in, and is engaging in, unfair labor practices within the meaning of Section 8(b)(4)(i) and (ii)(B) of the Act. I shall recommend that it be ordered to cease and desist therefrom, and that it take such affirmative action as will effectuate the purposes of the Act.

The General Counsel and counsel for the various employers maintain that Respondent's conduct warrants the imposition of a broad order rather than an order limited only to the employers herein. I agree. Thus, it has been found that the Respondent, on various dates between July 10 and September 2, 1980, repeatedly engaged in clear violations of the Act affecting numerous employers and construction sites within the San Jose, California area. Under the circumstances herein, I find that Respondent's proclivity to violate the Act has been amply demonstated, and that, therefore, the requested remedy is clearly warranted. See Sequoia District Council of Carpenters (Lattanzio Enterprises), 206 NLRB 67 (1973); Teamsters Local 945 (Newark Disposal), 232 NLRB 1 (1979), enfd. mem. 586 F.2d 835 (3d Cir. 1978).

On these findings of fact and conclusions of law and on the entire record, I issue the following recommended[9]

ORDER

The Respondent, Carpenters Local 316, United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America, AFL-CIO its officers, agents, and representatives, shall

1. Cease and desist from

(a) Inducing or encouraging any individual employed by New West Associates, J. C. Achilles Construction Co., Inc. and Shopmen's Local Union No. 455, International Association of Bridge, Structural and Ornamental Iron Workers, AFL–CIO. Case 29–CA–12015

26 February 1987

DECISION AND ORDER

BY MEMBERS JOHANSEN, BABSON, AND STEPHENS

On 26 August 1986 Administrative Law Judge Thomas D. Johnston issued the attached decision. The Respondent filed exceptions and a supporting brief.

The National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the decision and the record in light of the exceptions and brief and has decided to affirm the judge's rulings, findings,[1] and conclusions and to adopt the recommended Order.

ORDER

The National Labor Relations Board adopts the recommended Order of the administrative law judge and orders that the Respondent, Achilles Construction Co., Inc., Brooklyn, New York, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall take the action set forth in the Order.

[1] In adopting the judge's finding that the Respondent lacked a good-faith and reasonably grounded doubt that the Union enjoyed majority support when it refused to bargain with the Union on 8 August 1985, we emphasize that majority support is determined with reference to the unit's size at the time of the Respondent's refusal. There were then four employees in the unit.

Beatrice Kornbluh, Esq., for the General Counsel.
Stanley Israel, Esq., of New York, New York, for the Respondent.

DECISION

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

THOMAS D. JOHNSTON, Administrative Law Judge. This case was heard at Brooklyn, New York, on 27 June and 22 July 1986 pursuant to a charge filed on 20 August 1985[1] by Shopmen's Local Union No. 455, International Association of Bridge, Structural and Ornamental Iron Workers, AFL–CIO (the Union) and a complaint issued on 9 April 1986.

The complaint alleges that Achilles Construction Co., Inc. (the Respondent) violated Section 8(a)(1) and (5) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended (the Act) by withdrawing its recognition of the Union as the exclusive bargaining representative of the unit employees and refusing to recognize and bargain with the Union.

The Respondent in its answer filed on 21 April 1986 denies having violated the Act and asserts as an affirmative defense the Union is not the representative for the purposes of collective bargaining of any of the unit employees.

The issues involved are whether the Respondent unlawfully withdrew recognition of and refused to recognize and bargain with the Union as the exclusive bargaining representative of the unit employees thereby violating Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act.

On the entire record in the case and from my observations of the witnesses and after due consideration of the oral argument made by the General Counsel and the brief filed by the Respondent[2] I make the following[3]

FINDINGS OF FACT

I. THE BUSINESS OF THE RESPONDENT

The Respondent, a New York corporation with its principal office and place of business located at Brooklyn, New York, is engaged in the manufacture, sale, distribution, and installation of various products made by iron, steel, and other metals and related products. During the 12-month period preceding 9 April 1986, a representative period, the Respondent in the course of its operations purchased and received iron, steel, metal products, and other goods and materials, valued in excess of $50,000, which was transported and delivered to its Brooklyn, New York facility in interstate commerce directly from States located outside the State of New York.

The Respondent is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

II. THE LABOR ORGANIZATION INVOLVED

Shopmen's Local Union No. 455, International Association of Bridge, Structural and Ornamental Iron Workers, AFL–CIO is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

III. THE UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES

A. Background and the Bargaining Unit

The Respondent operates a facility located at Brooklyn, New York, where it is engaged in the manufacture, sale, distribution, and installation of various products made of iron, steel, and other metal and related products.

Mora Braunstein is the president of the Respondent and she has operated the Company since her husband died in 1983. Up until his death he was in charge of Respondent's operations.

The following employees of the Respondent constitute a unit appropriate for the purposes of collective bargaining within the meaning of Section 9(b) of the Act:

> All production and maintenance employees of Respondent, including plant clerical employees, employed at the plant, exclusive of office clerical employees, guards and supervisors as defined in the Act.

[2] The General Counsel and the Union did not submit briefs.

[3] Unless otherwise indicated the findings are based on the pleadings, admissions, stipulations, and undisputed evidence contained in the record which I credit.

On 30 September 1980 the Board issued its decision in Kuno Steel Products Corp., 252 NLRB 904 (1980), in which it found the respondent violated Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act by refusing to recognize and bargain with the union as the exclusive bargaining representative of the unit employees. It ordered the respondent to cease and desist from refusing, on request, to recognize and bargain with the union and ordered it, on request, to recognize and bargain with the union as the exclusive collective-bargaining representative of the unit employees. The Board, in finding the respondent violated the Act, reversed the administrative law judge's finding that the respondent had a rationally grounded belief that the union no longer represented a majority of respondent's unit employees at the time of the union's request to bargain in July 1978 because of the lapse of time, the lack of picketing, and the fact two of the seven employees retired on pension during the strike and two other employees had terminated their membership in the union.[4]

On 7 June 1982 the Board's decision was enforced by the United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit. Koenig Iron Works, 681 F.2d 130 (2d Cir. 1982).

Commencing in July 1982 and continuing thereafter including 1983, 1984, and 1985 the Union requested the Respondent to bargain collectively with it as the representative of the unit employees for a collective-bargaining contract covering those employees. During 1982 and 1983 the Respondent and the Union met at various times for purposes of negotiating the collective-bargaining agreement. These negotiations were unsuccessful. Union President William Colavito was the chief negotiator for the Union. Colavito's reasons given at the hearing for not having Respondent's employees present at the bargaining sessions were that they were working under conditions substandard to those in existence prior to the strike and having the employees present would not serve the purpose of bolstering negotiations because the employees were insecure and he did not know whether they would even come.

On 20 March the Board issued its Order in Achilles Construction Co. in Case 29–CA–10585 adopting the decision of Administrative Law Judge Raymond P. Green issued on 30 January, to which no exceptions had been filed, in which he found the respondent had violated Section 8(a)(1) and (5) of the Act by unilaterally granting wage increases to employees without prior notice to and consultation with the union during the collective-bargaining negotiations. The respondent was ordered to cease and desist from refusing to bargain collectively with the union by unilaterally granting wage increases to employees during the course of collective-bargaining negotiations, without prior notice to and consultation with the union, and in the event the respondent and the union resumed negotiations respondent was to notify the union as to all proposed wage increases to unit employees and not to implement such wage increases absent an impasse in negotiations or consent by the union.[5]

B. The Respondent's Withdrawal of Recognition of the Union as the Exclusive Collective-Bargaining Representative of the Unit Employees

About 29 March, Union President Colavito had a meeting with Respondent's attorney, Stanley Israel, who also represented certain other companies including Koenig Iron Works, Inc. (Koenig), Roman Iron Works, Inc. (Roman), and Peelle Company (Peelle). During this meeting, as described by President Colavito, Attorney Israel informed Colavito that he did not feel Roman, Koenig, or Peelle had any obligation to bargain with the Union. Upon Colavito asking Israel about a meeting with the Respondent, Israel said he would contact the Company and get back to them. Attorney Israel did not testify and I credit Colavito's undisputed testimony regarding this conversation.

Following this meeting Colavito stated Attorney Israel did not get back to him about a meeting with the Respondent as promised. Colavito then sent Israel a letter dated 24 July requesting Israel on receipt of the letter to call him to set up a negotiating session regarding the Respondent.

Colavito's explanation given at the hearing for the delay in sending this letter was because the Union had filed charges in April against Koenig and Roman for their withdrawing recognition of the Union and the Union was awaiting action on the charges which resulted in complaints being issued against those companies on 28 June by the Regional Office.

Attorney Israel responded to Colavito's request by letter dated 8 August advising Colavito as follows:

> In light of the recent decision of the Board and the further fact that all prior offers made by this Company have been rejected and are no longer applicable, and in fact have been revoked, and in light of the further fact that this Company does not believe that Local 455 currently represents the employees of the Company, I believe it would be inappropriate and indeed unlawful to schedule any new negotiating session.

President Colavito denied there was any further contact with Attorney Israel after receiving his letter.

C. Respondent's Defense

Respondent's president, Braunstein, testified she made the decision not to bargain with the Union. She stated it was made in July or August when Attorney Israel contacted her, informed her he had received a letter from the Union, and asked if she was interested in bargaining with the Union on behalf of the men in their shop. She informed Israel the Union was not representing them, there were no union members working there, and she was definitely not interested.

[4] Louis Douda was identified as one of the two employees who had terminated his union membership.

At the hearing Braunstein described that the basis for her decision was they had no representation of any union members and the employees were not interested in the Union. Her knowledge that the employees were not interested in the Union was based on statements made to her by Louis Douda that he felt no loyalty to the Union, wanted no part of the Union, and was not interested[6] and a statement by Charles Douda[7] that he was not interested in becoming or being a member of the Union. On being asked when these conversations with the Doudas occurred, Braunstein said it was an ongoing discussion with the Doudas since the beginning of the strike. According to Braunstein the Doudas initiated those conversations.

Braunstein, who stated that in the summer of 1985 the Respondent employed a maximum of five employees, acknowledged she did not have any discussions with any of the other three employees concerning the Union.

Although Braunstein stated Louis Douda was a union member prior to the strike and worked during part of the strike, she denied that Charles Douda, who started work after the strike began, was ever a union member. Union President Colavito denied knowing whether either Louis Douda or Charles Douda was a union member in 1985 or whether the Union collected dues from any of Respondent's employees in 1985.

Louis Douda stated he was a member of the Union when the strike started. However, he ceased paying dues and drew a pension from the Union, but his pension was stopped after he returned to work during the strike. Douda did not resume paying his dues while he worked for the Respondent.

Although Braunstein denied any of Respondent's employees were members of the Union in 1984, she acknowledged she had assumed this because no one spoke about the Union at all. Braunstein also claimed the only former employee of the Respondent who she had seen around the premises the last couple of years was Joe Chopko, who lived in the area and occasionally came in to say hello. Chopko had worked there up until the strike. Braunstein acknowledged Chopko's name was listed in a backpay specification hearing at which she testified. According to Braunstein, Chopko had been ill a number of years and had also stated he was not interested in working.

Respondent records reflect that in July the Respondent employed four unit employees. They were Louis Douda,[8] Charles Douda, Lancelot Brotherson, and Joseph Prusein. Louis Douda was hired during the early 1970s and his son, Charles Douda, was hired about 1976. Lancelot Brotherson began work in 1984 and Joseph Prusein started about June 1985. During August these same four unit employees worked there along with another unit employee, Ras Singh, who began work on August 26. From January to July there were four unit employees employed each week except for 6 weeks in May and June when there were only three. During August through November 1984 the Respondent also employed four unit employees each week except for 3 weeks in August 1984 when it employed five. After August 1985 the Respondent continued to employ five unit employees up through the week beginning 6 November except for 1 week in October when it employed seven. From 13 November up until the week beginning 19 March 1986 the number of unit employees varied from four to six, after which the number of unit employees dropped to three or four up until 25 June 1986.

The records also reflect Charles Douda last worked for the Respondent during the week beginning 18 December and Louis Douda last worked the week beginning 19 February 1986. According to President Braunstein, Joseph Prusein is also no longer working for the Respondent while Lancelot Brotherson is still employed there.

Respondent's attorney, Israel, in a letter to the Regional Office dated 18 September regarding the Respondent's position on the charge in the instant case stated as follows:

> As previously advised, we have absolutely no reason to believe that Local 455, in fact, represented the employees of the above-named company in August 1985. In none of the numerous bargaining sessions commencing in 1982, was a member of the bargaining unit present. Inquiries addressed to the Union on this point have been responded to with such comments as "the men don't have to be here" or "we represent the people" or "that is not a matter for your concern."
> While the Union is correct in asserting that no law requires the presence of bargaining unit members at negotiation sessions, it is nevertheless apparent to any objective observer that the Union has no contact with the employees, the employees do not regard the Union as their representative and most significantly the employees have not had any participation (or even say in the bargaining process). The Company even doubts that they know anything about the bargaining.
> Surely, at this point, the Region must realize that the Company has a good faith doubt of representation status. In light of the fact that this Company was not one which signed with Local 810 I.B.T. and has at the Administrative Law Judge level been absolved of the surface bargaining charges, the new charges should be dismissed.

Union President Colavito denied Attorney Israel ever informed him to the effect that because Respondent's employees were not present at the negotiating sessions it proved they did not want the Union.

The strike by the Union against the Respondent began on 1 July 1975. According to both Respondent's president, Braunstein, and Union President Colavito the last time picketing actually occurred at Respondent's premises was 5 or 6 years ago.

[6] Louis Douda denied remembering whether he discussed the Union with President Braunstein after she took over the Company.

[7] Charles Douda did not testify.

[8] Although the General Counsel on rebuttal contended for the first time that Louis Douda was a supervisor under the Act, an earlier stipulation entered into by her at the hearing, which I find is binding, places him in the unit. Moreover, Douda stated he was a working foreman and "working foremen" were included in the unit.

D. Analysis and Conclusions

The General Counsel contends the Respondent violated Section 8(a)(1) and (5) of the Act by unlawfully withdrawing recognition of and refusing to recognize and bargain with the Union as the exclusive bargaining representative of the unit employees. The Respondent denies having violated the Act and asserts as an affirmative defense the Union is not the representative for purposes of collective bargaining of the unit employees. It argues in its brief that the evidence supports both a finding of a loss of majority status as well as a good-faith objectively based doubt of majority status.

Section 8(a)(1) of the Act prohibits an employer from interfering with, restraining, or coercing its employees in the exercise of their rights guaranteed in Section 7 of the Act. Section 8(a)(5) of the Act prohibits an employer from refusing to bargain collectively with the representative of its employees. The findings supra establish the Union represented Respondent's unit employees and had a collective-bargaining agreement covering them which had expired. On 30 September 1980 the Board issued its decision, enforced by the court on 7 June 1982, in which it found Respondent had violated the Act by unlawfully refusing to recognize and bargain with the Union as the exclusive bargaining representative of the unit employees and ordered it to recognize and bargain with the Union as the exclusive collective-bargaining representative of its unit employees. The Board also rejected a finding that the Respondent had a rationally grounded belief the Union no longer represented the unit employees. Thereafter, the Respondent and the Union entered into negotiations for a new collective-bargaining agreement. These negotiations were unsuccessful. However, on 20 March the Board issued its Order adopting an administrative law judge's decision finding the Respondent during those negotiations violated the Act by refusing to bargain with the Union by unlawfully granting wage increases to the unit employees without consulting or bargaining with the Union. An allegation the Respondent also engaged in bad-faith bargaining was dismissed. It ordered the Respondent to cease and desist from such unlawful conduct and ordered that if the Respondent and the Union resumed negotiations the Respondent was to notify the Union as to all proposed wage increases to the unit employees and not to implement such wage increases absent an impasse in negotiations or consent by the Union. Although about 29 March, shortly after the Board's Order issued, the Union requested a bargaining meeting with the Respondent, but the Respondent did not respond as it had promised to do. Upon the Union renewing its bargaining request on 24 July the Respondent, by a letter dated 8 August, denied this request claiming it would be both inappropriate and unlawful. Its reasons contained in the letter were the Board's recent Order; the fact all prior offers made by the Respondent had been rejected, were no longer applicable, and had been revoked; and that the Respondent did not believe the Union currently represented the unit employees. Respondent in its 18 September response to the charge in the instant case claimed the Union did not represent the employees by asserting no employees were present at the negotiation sessions and claimed the Union had no contact with the employees, employees did not regard the Union as their representative, and the employees did not have any say in the bargaining process and it doubted the employees knew anything about the bargaining.

Respondent's president, Braunstein, who made the decision not to bargain with the Union, based her decision on statements made to her by Louis Douda that he felt no loyalty to the union and wanted no part of the union and was not interested, and statements made by Charles Douda that he was not interested in becoming or being a member of the union. Braunstein placed these statements as ongoing discussions with the Doudas since the beginning of the strike which was in July 1975.

When the Respondent questioned the Union's majority status on 8 August it employed four unit employees including Louis and Charles Douda. However, on 26 August it hired an additional employee, and its work force, which consisted of seven unit employees during the time of the initial Board Decision referred to above, varied in number from three to seven unit employees during 1985.

A union enjoys a rebuttable presumption of majority status upon the expiration of a collective-bargaining agreement. However, an employer who refuses to bargain with an incumbent union may rebut the presumption of majority status by establishing either (1) that at the time of the refusal to bargain the union in fact did not enjoy majority status, or (2) that the refusal was predicated on a good-faith and reasonably grounded doubt supported by objective considerations of the union's majority status. Burger Pits, Inc., 273 NLRB 1001 (1984), enfd. 785 F.2d 796 (9th Cir. 1986). An employer may not question a union's majority status in the context of certain types of unfair labor practices. Colonial Manor Convalescent & Nursing Center, 188 NLRB 861 (1971). The principles applicable to those cases are set forth in Celanese Corp. of America, 95 NLRB 664, 673 (1951), as follows:

> And, secondly, the majority issue must not have been raised by the employer in the context of illegal antiunion activities, or other conduct by the employer aimed at causing disaffection from the union or indicating that in raising the majority issue the employer was merely seeking to gain time in which to undermine the union.

Both the Board's decision and its most recent Order recognized the Union, which also enjoyed a presumption of majority status, as the collective-bargaining representative of Respondent's unit employees. The evidence presented here fails to show that at the time of Respondent's admitted refusal to recognize and bargain with the Union that the Union did not enjoy majority status or that Respondent's refusal was predicated on a good-faith and reasonably grounded doubt of the Union's majority status supported by objective considerations.

President Braunstein in questioning the Union's majority status relied on statements made by only two unit employees out of a work force that fluctuated between three and seven unit employees. One of those two employees only stated he was not interested in becoming or being a member of the Union. The Board has held that such statements by employees about their not wanting to join the union fail to distinguish between wanting to be a union member and desiring to have union representation. Club Cal-Neva, 231 NLRB 22, 24 (1977), enfd. 604 F.2d 606 (9th Cir. 1979). Thus, such statement cannot be relied on to support a good-faith and reasonably grounded doubt of the Union's majority status. Moreover, President Braunstein placed such statements as occurring since the beginning of the strike in July 1975, which would have included the period of the prior unfair labor practices found against the Respondent. As they were raised during and in the context of unfair labor practices and were of a nature sufficient to cause disaffection from or to undermine the Union, the Respondent cannot now rely on such statements to support its doubt of the Union's majority status. Insofar as the Respondent also hired new unit employees, they are presumed to support the Union in the same ratio as those employees whom they replaced. W & W Steel Co., 232 NLRB 74, 75 (1977), enf. denied on other grounds 599 F.2d 934 (10th Cir. 1979).

The other reasons advanced by the Respondent for refusing to recognize and bargain with the Union also lack merit. The fact the Respondent was absolved of bad-faith bargaining in the most recent Decision adopted by the Board and the Union had rejected Respondent's prior contract offers would not relieve the Respondent of its legal obligation to continue to recognize and bargain with the Union. The claim no employees were present at the negotiation sessions showed the Union did not represent them is rejected. The general rule is the parties have the right to select their own representative for bargaining and negotiations and the duty to deal with the chosen representative of the other party. Fitzsimons Mfg. Co., 251 NLRB 375, 379 (1980), enfd. 670 F.2d 663 (6th Cir. 1982). The Respondent's further assertion the Union had no contact with the employees and the employees did not regard the Union as their representative is unsupported by any probative evidence.

For those reasons stated I am persuaded and find the Respondent about 8 August unlawfully withdrew recognition of and refused to recognize and bargain with the Union as the exclusive bargaining representative of the unit employees and thereby violated Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act.

Additionally, even assuming the Union had lost its majority status I would find under the circumstances presented here the Respondent violated Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act by withdrawing recognition of and refusing to recognize and bargain with the Union as the exclusive bargaining representative of the unit employees. The law is well settled that in cases involving certifications, Board orders, and settlement agreements the parties must be afforded a reasonable time to bargain. Brennan's Cadillac, Inc., 231 NLRB 225, 226 (1977). Here the withdraw of recognition occurred without any bargaining although requested by the Union, only shortly after the Board had issued its Order adopting the administrative law judge's decision finding the Respondent had violated the Act by refusing to bargain with the Union by unlawfully granting wage increases to employees during the course of collective-bargaining negotiations and ordered that in the event negotiations resumed the Respondent shall notify the Union as to all proposed wage increases and not implement them absent an impasse in negotiations or consent by the Union. To now permit the Respondent to question the Union's majority status without first affording the Union a reasonable time to bargain would violate those principles of law and render the effect of the most recent Board's Order against the Respondent a nullity.

IV. THE EFFECT OF THE UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES UPON COMMERCE

The activities of Respondent set forth in section III, above, found to constitute unfair labor practices occurring in connection with the operations of the Respondent described in section I, above, have a close, intimate, and substantial relationship to trade, traffic, and commerce among the several States and tend to lead to labor disputes burdening and obstructing commerce and the free flow thereof.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. Achilles Construction Co., Inc., is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

2. Shopmen's Local Union No. 455, International Association of Bridge, Structural and Ornamental Iron Workers, AFL–CIO is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

3. All production and maintenance employees of the Respondent, including plant clerical employees, employed at its plant, exclusive of office clerical employees, guards, and supervisors as defined in the Act constitute a unit appropriate for the purposes of collective bargaining within the meaning of Section 9(b) of the Act.

4. The Union at all times material herein has been, and is now, the exclusive representative of all the employees in the above-described appropriate unit for the purposes of collective bargaining within the meaning of Section 9(a) of the Act.

5. By withdrawing recognition from the Union about 8 August 1985 and thereafter refusing to recognize and bargain with the Union as the exclusive bargaining representative of its unit employees, Respondent has engaged in, and is engaging in, unfair labor practices within the meaning of Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act.

6. The above-described unfair labor practices affect commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

THE REMEDY

Having found that the Respondent violated Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act, I shall recommend that it be ordered to cease and desist therefrom and take certain affirmative action to effectuate the policies of the Act.

To remedy the Respondent's unlawful withdrawal of recognition and its refusal to recognize and bargain with the Union, I shall recommend that the Respondent recognize the Union and, on request, bargain collectively with the Union as the exclusive representative of all the employees in the aforesaid appropriate unit and, if an understanding is reached, embody such understanding in a signed written agreement.

The General Counsel's request that the remedial order include a visitatorial clause authorizing the Board to engage in discovery under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure to enable it to monitor compliance with the Board's Order as enforced by the court of appeals is rejected on the grounds the Board does not provide for discovery procedures in its proceedings and there is no showing that under the circumstances presented here such a clause is necessary.

On these findings of fact and conclusions of law and on the entire record, I issue the following recommended[9]

ORDER

The Respondent, Achilles Construction Co., Inc., Brooklyn, New York, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall

1. Cease and desist from

(a) Withdrawing recognition of and refusing to recognize and bargain collectively with Shopmen's Local Union No. 455, International Association of Bridge, Structural and Ornamental Iron Workers, AFL–CIO as the exclusive representative of its employees in the following appropriate unit concerning wages, hours, and other terms and conditions of employment.

> All production and maintenance employees of the Respondent, including plant clerical employees, employed at its plant, exclusive of office clerical employees, guards and supervisors as defined in the Act.

(b) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of their rights guaranteed in Section 7 of the Act.

2. Take the following affirmative action necessary to effectuate the policies of the Act.

(a) Recognize and, on request, bargain collectively with the Shopmen's Local Union No. 455, International Association of Bridge, Structural and Ornamental Iron Workers, AFL–CIO as the exclusive representative of the employees in the above-described appropriate unit with respect to wages, hours, and other terms and conditions of employment and, if an understanding is reached, embody the terms of such understanding in a signed written agreement.

(b) Post at its facility located in Brooklyn, New York, copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix."[10] Copies of the notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 29, after being signed by the Respondent's authorized representative, shall be posted by the Respondent immediately upon receipt and maintained for 60 consecutive days in conspicuous places including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by the Respondent to ensure that the notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(c) Notify the Regional Director in writing within 20 days from the date of this Order what steps the Respondent has taken to comply.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the complaint is hereby dismissed insofar as it alleges unfair labor practices not specifically found herein.

[9] If no exceptions are filed as provided by Sec. 102.46 of the Board's Rules and Regulations, the findings, conclusions, and recommended Order shall, as provided in Sec. 102.48 of the Rules, be adopted by the Board and all objections to them shall be deemed waived for all purposes.

APPENDIX

NOTICE TO EMPLOYEES
POSTED BY ORDER OF THE
NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD
An Agency of the United States Government

The National Labor Relations Board has found that we violated the National Labor Relations Act and has ordered us to post and abide by this notice.

WE WILL NOT withdraw recognition of and refuse to recognize and bargain collectively with Shopmen's Local Union No. 455, International Association of Bridge, Structural and Ornamental Iron Workers, AFL–CIO as the exclusive bargaining representative of our employees in the bargaining unit described below.

WE WILL NOT in any like or related manner interfere with, restrain, or coerce our employees in the exercise of their rights guaranteed under Section 7 of the Act.

WE WILL recognize and, on request, bargain with Shopmen's Local Union No. 455, International Association of Bridge, Structural and Ornamental Iron Workers, AFL–CIO, as the exclusive representative of our employees in the appropriate unit described below with respect to wages, hours, and other terms and conditions of employment and if an understanding is reached, embody such understanding in a signed written agreement. The appropriate unit is:

> All production and maintenance employees of the Respondent, including plant clerical employees, employed at its plant, exclusive of office clerical employees, guards and supervisors as defined in the Act.

SUPPLEMENTAL DECISION AND ORDER

BY CHAIRMAN DOTSON AND MEMBERS JOHANSEN AND CRACRAFT

On 15 September 1986 Administrative Law Judge George Christensen issued the attached supplemental decision. One of the Respondents, Besco Roofing, Inc., filed exceptions and a supporting brief, and the General Counsel filed an answering brief.

The National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the decision and the record in light of the exceptions and briefs and has decided to affirm the judge's rulings, findings, and conclusions and to adopt the recommended Order.[1]

ORDER

The National Labor Relations Board adopts the recommended Order of the administrative law judge and orders that the Respondents, Better Building Supply Corp. and its alter egos, Evergreen Roofing, Inc. and Besco Roofing, Inc., Seattle, Washington, their officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall pay to the 69 individuals the sums listed in the appendix attached to the judge's decision, with interest computed in the manner prescribed in Florida Steel Corp., 231 NLRB 651 (1977), less applicable withholding taxes to be remitted to the appropriate authorities.

[1] In adopting the judge's finding that Respondent Besco Roofing, Inc. (BRI) is an alter ego of Better Building Supply Corp. (BBSC) and its first alter ego, Evergreen Roofing, Inc. (ERI), Chairman Dotson relies on all the factors discussed by the judge, including his finding that BRI was established to avoid making whole the 69 employees who suffered financial losses as a result of the unfair labor practices of BBSC and ERI.

SUPPLEMENTAL DECISION

GEORGE CHRISTENSEN, Administrative Law Judge. On 25 March 1986 I conducted a hearing at Seattle, Washington, to try issues raised by a backpay specification issued on 25 April 1985 following the enforcement by the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit on 10 May 1983 of a Decision and Order issued by the National Labor Relations Board (Board) on 3 December 1981 directing Evergreen Roofing, Inc. (ERI), as the alter ego of Better Building Supply Corp. (BBSC), to compensate employees who suffered wage and benefit losses by virtue of unfair labor practices committed by the common management of BBSC/ERI.

The Board and the court adopted Administrative Law Judge Pannier's findings and conclusions that: BBSC and ERI were family corporations controlled by Gerald Mylan; BBSC was party to a collective-bargaining agreement covering the wages, benefits, etc., of certain of its employees; after a dispute with two benefits funds over BBSC's failure to make payments required under the agreement on behalf of BBSC employees covered by the agreement and during the term of the agreement, Mylan ceased doing business under the BBSC name, activated ERI, and under the ERI name continued doing business (roofing) at the same location, using the same equipment, processes, and the same managers, supervisors and many of the same employees he utilized to conduct business under the BBSC name and serving the same customer area, but without recognizing Local 54 as the collective-bargaining representative of the employees or complying with the terms of the unexpired BBSC-Local 54 agreement; BBSC and ERI were alter egos within the meaning and application of the National Labor Relations Act (the Act); the conduct just set forth violated the Act; and ordered BBSC/ERI to make whole those employees who suffered wage and benefit losses by virtue of that conduct.

The General Counsel has determined 69 employees were affected by the violations; listed in the backpay specification opposite their names the amounts due to each of the 69 to make them whole under the headings "wages" and "benefits"; and requested the entry of a Board order directing Besco Roofing, Inc. (BRI), as the latest BBSC alter ego created and controlled by Mylan,[1] to pay the sums listed opposite the names of the 69, plus interest, less applicable withholding taxes.

BRI admitted the General Counsel's wage and benefit determinations are correct but contends BRI cannot be required to remedy the unfair labor practices committed by Mylan while he was operating under his previous corporate identities because BRI is not an alter ego thereof and, in any event, any obligation owed to the 69 employees was extinguished by the 1984 court order discharging BC's debts.

The issues are: (1) whether BRI is BBSC's latest alter ego and, if so, (2) whether the bankruptcy court order discharging BC's debts prevents Board entry of an order directing BRI to make the 69 employees whole for the wage and benefits losses they suffered by virtue of the unfair labor practices Mylan committed while operating under his earlier corporate identities.

Findings were entered in the original proceeding to the effect: BBSC was engaged in business as a roofing contractor in the Seattle, Washington area from offices and facilities located at 3116 N.E. 133d; Gerald Mylan owned 51 percent of its stock, his wife, Verna, owned 10 percent, and his son, Gerald Mylan Jr. (Mylan Junior), owned the remaining 40 percent; Mylan and salesmen employed on a commission basis solicited customers for the work of installing new roofs and the repair or replacement of existing roofs (on both residential and commercial structures); Mylan, Mylan Junior, and other BBSC supervisors assigned crews (applicators) to perform the jobs secured by Mylan and the sales force; BBSC supplied vehicles,[2] materials, and equipment; Mylan (and his designees) collected moneys due, ordered and paid for all materials, equipment, supplies, labor, services, etc., and issued guarantees of the work; and Mylan exercised overall direction and control of the business.

Findings were also entered in the original decision: ERI was owned by the Mylan family in the same proportions as BBSC; controlled by Mylan; conducted the same business from the same location serving the same market,[3] utilized the same vehicles, materials, equipment, and methods employed by BBSC, but, in an effort to circumvent any claim by Local 54 to continue representation of its employees, characterized the individuals who directed and performed the work, as well as the salesman, "independent contractors" and employees of the alleged "independent contractors."

Mylan commenced his operations under the BRI corporate identity at the same location from which he operated BBSC, ERI, BRCI, and BC-3116 N.E. 133d, Seattle;[4] Mylan and his wife own 100 percent of the (unissued) stock; Mylan and commission-paid salesmen solicit prospects in the Seattle area for performance of the work of repairing or removing and replacing existing roofs, primarily on commercial structures; Mylan has the same "independent contractors" (and their alleged employees) perform the work he or his salesmen secure; to perform the work Mylan provides the applicators with a vehicle he built by cannibalizing two of the vehicles he owned and operated under his previous identities, still carrying the BeScO logo, plus necessary materials and equipment; the work is performed in the same manner it was performed by the previous entities controlled by Mylan; Mylan exercises overall control over terms for performance of the work, collection of receipts, disbursement of costs and expenses, issuance of guarantees, etc. (in the BRI name).

The Board (and reviewing courts of appeals) repeatedly have ruled an employer, whether operating as an individual or a corporate entity, for purposes of the Act will be considered the alter ego of another and responsible for remedying the unfair labor practices of the latter when the two were in substantially the same business under substantially the same ownership, control, and management, utilizing the same operational methods and equipment, and producing the same product for the same market or customer area.[5]

Mylan owned and owns a majority of the stock in BBSC and BRI; he was in overall control of BBSC and is in overall control of BRI; he was engaged in the roofing business in the Seattle area as BBSC and is engaged in the roofing business in the Seattle area as BRI; both BBSC in the past and BRI in the present used and use the same vehicle(s), materials, equipment, mode of operation to serve the same customer market utilizing some of the same personnel (and, certainly, personnel exercising the same skills and functions).

This identity readily supports a finding BRI is BBSC's current alter ego.

BRI contends it is not BBSC's latest alter ego because: (1) while Mylan and his wife own all of BRI's stock, Mylan Junior owned 40 percent of BBSC's stock; (2) since he commenced operations as BRI, Mylan has limited his structures in the Seattle area while Mylan, when operating as BBSC, worked on commercial and residential structures and, while operating as ERI, continued that broader line of work and expanded his operations to include the Portland, Oregon, and Littleton, Colorado areas; (3) Mylan Junior allegedly has continuously operated under the ERI name in the Portland area and (recently) expanded operations to compete with Mylan in the Seattle area; (4) while Mylan solely manages BRI, he shared management functions with Mylan Junior and Chuck Gordon while operating as BBSC; (5) as BRI, Mylan does not conduct operations from the same facilities he utilized while operating as BBSC; (6) Mylan as BRI conducts his operations with one tractor/tank-trailer and three trucks with title ownership of all four in the name of BRI while he operated as BBSC with six tractor/tank-trailers with title held in the BBSC name and the same three trucks, then leased under the BBSC name; (7) while operating as BBSC, Mylan employed six applicator crews and five salesmen, while as BRI he employs one applicator crew and an undesignated number of salesmen; (8) as BRI, he does not employ the same personnel he employed while operating as BBSC; (9) since commencing operations as BRI, Mylan has used the cold application process exclusively, while he used both the hot and cold application processes while operating as BBSC; (10) BRI did not complete any BBSC contract and is not performing work for the same customers as BBSC; and (11) the General Counsel failed to establish Mylan commenced operations as BRI to avoid making whole the 69 employees who lost wages and benefits as a result of the unfair labor practices he committed while operating as BBSC/ERI.

[2] While operating under the corporate names BBSC and ERI, Mylan used both a hot and a cold process in completing built-up roofs composed of alternating layers of material and either hot or cold applications; as he acquired tractor/tank-trailer rigs necessary for the cold applications, he phased out the use of equipment and materials for hot applications; the tractor/tank-trailers all carried the logo "BeScO."

[3] While operating under the ERI name, the business was expanded to the solicitation and performance of jobs in Portland, Oregon, and a city in Colorado, as well as Seattle.

With respect to (1), the Board and the courts repeatedly have held that changes in the proportional ownership of a family corporation are irrelevant when the same individual has the controlling interest, as here.[6]

As to (2), a reduction in the scope of operations has likewise been held ineffective, i.e., when the alter ego conducts far less business, a portion of the former business, serves a smaller market, etc.[7]

With respect to (3), Mylan is caught in a seeming contradiction; Mylan testified Mylan Junior has continuously engaged in the roofing business under the ERI name since shortly after BBSC was deactivated and ERI was activated in its stead, in the Portland area; stipulated ERI is without assets and in Chapter 11 bankruptcy; testified while operating as ERI, he sold the equipment, assets, etc. he utilized in doing business as ERI in Portland to Mylan Junior prior to ERI's demise; and Mylan Junior currently competes against him for business in the Seattle area. The only reasonable inferences to be drawn from the foregoing are either: Mylan and Mylan Junior created a seperate entity in Portland to forestall claims against that portion of their assets held in the ERI name or the two parted ways and Mylan Junior purchased that portion of the equipment and business used to conduct the Portland operations and has since operated as sole owner of a separate entity from ERI. The latter inference is supported by the fact that the Mylans in their listing under the heading of "Lawsuits" attached to their Section 7 bankruptcy filing list the case of Evergreen Roofing of Oregon, Inc. and Jay Mylan v. Besco Roofing & Coatings, Circuit Court of Multnomah County, Oregon No. A8304–02310. In any event, I find and conclude whether or not ERI continues to exist and function, the Board is not precluded from seeking derivative liability for Mylan's unfair labor practices in one or more of his prior identities from his latest alter ego, BRI.

Turning to (4), the same principles as those controlling (2) are applicable; due to the reduced scale of his operations as BRI, Mylan necessarily employs fewer managers; this has no bearing on the issue of whether his majority ownership, control, and direction of two corporations engaged in the same business in the same area using the same equipment and methods, warrants a holding the later-created corporation is the alter ego of the earlier-created corporation.

Next, (5), I have entered findings Mylan commenced business as BRI at the same premises he conducted business under the BBSC and ERI names; the fact he was forced to later move his operations due to bank foreclosure to a new location has no bearing on the determination just stated.[8]

The short answer to (6) and (7) is that they are governed by the same principles set out in (2), i.e., Mylan's reduced operations as BRI of course do not necessitate ownership of the same number of vehicles or personnel he required to conduct his much larger business as BBSC and the fact he leased the three trucks as BBSC which he now owns as BRI are irrelevant to the alter ego issue.

As to (8), Mylan's reduced operations as BRI of course means a reduced staff and it is significant as part of that reduced staff Mylan employs the same crew chief he employed as BBSC to man his remaining tractor/-tank-trailer and direct his single crew (Chris Romel), the same repair specialist he employed as BBSC (Eric Youmans) and the same individual he employed as BBSC to assemble and mix materials, dispatch trucks, etc. (Ron Richart). Mylan's failure as BRI to employ the same individuals as applicators and salesmen as he employed as BBSC is readily explained by the fact he terminated the former during his various identity changes and the latter left as his business declined; this has no relevance to the alter ego issue, so long as it is established Mylan's latest creation, BRI, may be classified as BBSC's latest alter ego by Virtue of the fact it is owned, controlled, and managed by Mylan to conduct the same business serving the same customer base using the same equipment and mode of operation and employing persons exercising the same functions and skills.

Turning to (9), findings were entered by Judge Panniet in the original case Mylan as BBSC/ERI was phasing out his use of hot applications as he built or acquired tractor/tank-trailers; the fact he was still performing some jobs using hot appications is thus irrelevant, since it is undisputed Mylan completed his changeover to the cold application process between the time he ceased to operate as BBSC and commenced operations as BRI.

Concerning (10), of course, Mylan did not complete any jobs as BRI he contracted for as BBSC, since he had ample opportunity to do so in his numerous identities prior to his creation of BRI and it goes without saying as BRI he would not be removing and replacing the same roofs he removed and replaced as BBSC (or repairing them, unless earlier guarantees applied). The only relevant inquiry is whether as BRI he is serving the same class of customers in the same area or market he served as BBSC. The answer to that inquiry is positive, for as BRI he solicits and performs work he solicited and performed as BBSC—the repair, removal, and replacement of existing roofs on commercial structures.

As to (11), the Board and most reviewing courts have held proof a wrongdoer has created an alter ego to escape liabilities imposed for violations of the Act is only one of the criteria to be scrutinized in determining whether to impose derivative liability to remedy the violation, and is not determinative.[9]

In this case it is clear Mylan held the controlling ownership interest and exercised management control (including control of management labor relations) over a succession of entities starting with BBSC and ending (currently) with BRI doing business as a roofing contractor in the Seattle area employing the same methods, equipment, materials, supplies, supervision, and workers serving the same class of customers in the same area; i.e., Mylan has been "the common strand, linchpin, principal, operator, and guiding star of the business, as well as each of the 'enterprises' in question."[10] BRI easily satifies the criteria applied by the Board and reviewing courts in a determination of whether or not BRI is BBSC's latest alter ego,[11] i.e., I have determined BBSC and BRI were and are owned and controlled by Mylan, they were and are engaged in the same business (roofing) under the same dominant manager (Mylan), operating with the same vehicles and equipment using the same operational methods, and employees exercising the same skills (in some cases, the same individuals) to serve the same class of customers in the same area; in such cases the Board and reviewing courts have held the current alter ego entity (Mylan, as BRI) derivatively liable for the Act violations committed by the earlier entity (Mylan, as BBSC), whether or not it has been established the alter ego was created to avoid such derivative liability.[12] Even assuming it is incumbent on the Board to find Mylan established BRI to avoid making whole the 69 employees who suffered financial losses due to Mylan's attempted evasion (as BBSC and ERI) of the BBSC-Local 54 agreement, as the court in the Asbetos Workers Local 54 Pension Fund case, cited above, stated: "We cannot permit them (the defendants) to evade obligations to the plaintiff's by setting up what appears to be a new company, but is in reality a continuation of the old ones." 115 LRRM 2445. The history of Mylan's successive creations and dissolutions, culminating in his latest creation (BCI), demonstrates an intent to avoid satisfying his obligations to his creditors, including the 69 employees who suffered financial losses due to his manipulations under former identities, and I so find and conclude.

I therefore further find and conclude BRI is BBSC's latest alter ego derivatively liable for the moneys due the 69 former BBSC/ERI employees set forth in the specification.

Next addressing the bankruptcy issue, it was established that in July 1983 Gerald and Verna Mylan, as individuals doing business under the name Besco Coating, filed a petition under Chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code asserting they ceased doing business under that name in May 1983 and seeking release from the claims of creditors on the ground their liabilities exceeded their assets. The Mylans attached schedules to the petition listing the secured and unsecured debts they sought released. Under the scheduled headed "Lawsuits" the Mylans listed the case of NLRB v. Better Building Supply Corp., No. 82-7199 (9th Cir.).[13] In January 1984, Bankruptcy Judge Kenneth S. Treadwell ordered the petitioners be "released from all dischargeable debts" and ruled "any judgment heretofore or hereafter obtained in any court other than this court is null and void as a determination of the personal liability of the debtor with respect to . . . debts dischargeable under 11 U.S.C. 523." [Emphasis added.]

BRI contends that Order bars the Board, on behalf of the 69 employees who suffered monetary losses as a result of Mylan's unfair labor practices as BBSC/ERI, from seeking reimbursement of those losses from BRI.

The first negative to this contention arises from the fact the bankruptcy was a personal (Chapter 7) bankruptcy of the Mylans as individuals while the Board Order pending before the Ninth Circuit case involved BBSC and ERI as corporate entities and they were in Chapter 11 bankruptcy at that time (the parties so stipulated). On those facts, it appears the Ninth Circuit case was listed improperly, in the wrong proceeding.

Second, it has been established a corporate obligation may not be discharged by a personal bankruptcy petition.[14]

And in any event, the Board and reviewing courts have ruled the Board has sole authority to determine and enforce backpay awards to remedy violations of the Act,[15] irrespective of whether there was a hiatus between the time a wrongdoer ceased operations due to bankruptcy and the time he resumed operation under another identity.[16]

As the Board stated in the International Technical Products case, "To find otherwise would . . . be tantamount to a relinquishment by the Board of its statutory obligation to remedy unfair labor practices and also its [12] As the Second Circuit stated in the E. G. Sprinkler case cited above, "here the record bears very substantial evidence that EG and GPP (EG's alter ego) shared substantially identical management, supervision, customers, ownership and business purpose. The argument that the Board must find anti-union animus or an intent to evade union obligations before it can impose alter ego status is unpersuasive. The cases . . . show that anti-union animus may be 'germane' . . . or even a sufficient basis for imposing alter ego status . . . they do not establish that anti-union motivation is necessary." 741 F.2d 10, 12. authority . . . to proceed against a successor employer in furtherance of that obligation." 249 NLRB at 1303.

On the basis of the foregoing, I reject BRI's position that the Board is barred from entering an order directing that BRI as BBSC's latest alter ego make whole the 69 individuals named in the backpay specification for their losses caused by Mylan's manipulations as BBSC and ERI.

On these findings of fact and conclusions of law and on the entire record, I issue the following recommended[17]

ORDER

The Respondent, Better Building Supply Corp. and its alter egos Evergreen Roofing, Inc. and Besco Roofing, Inc., Seattle, Washington, their officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall pay to the 69 individuals listed on the attached appendix the sums listed opposite each name under the headings "Wages" and "Benefits," plus interest on the sums due calculated in the manner set out in *F. Great Lakes Oriental Products, Inc. and Production Workers Union of Chicago and Vicinity, Local 707. Case 13–CA–25165

26 February 1987

DECISION AND ORDER

BY CHAIRMAN DOTSON AND MEMBERS JOHANSEN AND STEPHENS

On 5 June 1986 Administrative Law Judge Thomas D. Johnston issued the attached decision. The Respondent and the General Counsel filed exceptions and supporting briefs and they each filed answering briefs.

The National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the decision and the record in light of the exceptions and briefs and has decided to affirm the judge's rulings, findings,[1] and conclusions and to adopt the recommended Order.

ORDER

The National Labor Relations Board adopts the recommended Order of the administrative law judge and orders that the Respondent, Great Lakes Oriental Products, Inc., Chicago, Illinois, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall take the action set forth in the Order.

[1] The Respondent has excepted to some of the judge's credibility findings. The Board's established policy is not to overrule an administrative law judge's credibility resolutions unless the clear preponderance of all the relevant evidence convinces us that they are incorrect. Standard Dry Wall Products, 91 NLRB 544 (1950), enfd. 188 F.2d 362 (3d Cir. 1951). We have carefully examined the record and find no basis for reversing the findings.

For the reasons stated by the judge, we agree that there were no unlawful interrogations of employee Martinez. We also agree with the judge that the two instances in which Supervisor Garcia asked employee Santana Hernandez about the Union did not constitute violations of Sec. 8(a)(1) of the Act. Garcia's question about 15 June 1985 concerning whether employees had signed cards for the Union was asked in passing, while the two men were out in the packing area; and Garcia did not press Hernandez for an answer when Hernandez failed to respond. As a result of a previous conversation on the subject of the Union, initiated by employee Martinez, Garcia had already been informed, in the presence of several employees, that some employees had gone to the Union and had signed cards. Finally, this isolated inquiry to Hernandez, by a supervisor fairly low in the management hierarchy, was unaccompanied by any statements that would give it coercive overtones. In the second incident, Garcia merely asked Hernandez in late July, "What happened about the Union?"; since this inquiry was made soon after the election (which the Union won), it apparently did not concern anything more than the results of the election. Under all the circumstances, we agree with the judge that neither question would reasonably tend to coerce employees in the exercise of their Sec. 7 rights. Sunnyvale Medical Clinic, 277 NLRB 1217 (1985).

In sec. III,B of his decision, the judge states that "Galaviz denied mentioning any names." The record reflects that "Galaviz" should be "Garcia." Similarly, in sec. III,E the judge states that "Fang stated Bustamante used one curse word . . . ." The record reflects that Garcia, and not Fang, testified as indicated. Finally, in sec. III,E the judge states that Fang had shown Bustamante how to cut the meat against the vein. "Vein" should be "grain." We correct these inadvertent errors.

DECISION

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

THOMAS D. JOHNSTON, Administrative Law Judge. This case was heard at Chicago, Illinois on 12 and 13 March 1986 pursuant to a first amended charge[1] filed by Production Workers Union of Chicago and Vicinity, Local 707 (the Union) on 16 July 1985[2] and a complaint issued on 30 December.

The complaint as amended at the hearing alleges Great Lakes Oriental Products, Inc. (the Respondent) violated Section 8(a)(1) of the National Labor Relations Act (the Act) by interrogating employees regarding their union membership, activities, and sympathies and those of other employees, and threatening an employee with suspension because he engaged in union and/or protected concerted activity;[3] and violated Section 8(a)(1) and (3) of the Act by disciplining and thereafter discharging and failing to reinstate its employees Jose Martinez and Rodolfo Bustamante because they joined, supported, or assisted the Union and engaged in concerted activities for the purpose of collective bargaining or other mutual aid or protection and in order to discourage employees from engaging in such activities.

The Respondent in its answer dated 9 January 1986 and amended at the hearing denies having violated the Act as alleged. Although it also asserts as an affirmative defense in its answer that Jose Martinez and Rodolfo Bustamante failed to mitigate their damages, if any, this defense is rejected on the grounds it is not a valid defense to their discharges and, if raised as a defense to the amount, if any, of backpay which might be due them as a remedy for a violation found, the proper procedure requires that it be raised at the compliance stage of the proceeding.[4]

Another defense first raised during the hearing was that both Jose Martinez and Rodolfo Bustamante were supervisors under the Act and therefore they were not protected under the Act from suspension or discharge for engaging in union activities.

The issues involved are whether Jose Martinez and Rodolfo Bustamante were supervisors under the Act and whether the Respondent violated Section 8(a)(1) and (3) of the Act as alleged by unlawfully interrogating and threatening employees concerning the Union and discriminatorily suspending, discharging, and failing to reinstate Jose Martinez and Rodolfo Bustamante because of the Union.

[3] The concerted activity referred to in the amended complaint as described by the General Counsel relates only to union activity.

[4] The Respondent's request for fees raised in its answer was rejected in a prehearing Order dated 6 February 1986 issued by Associate Chief Administrative Law Judge John M. Dyer.

On the entire record[5] in this case, from my observation of the witnesses, and after due consideration of the briefs filed by the General Counsel and the Respondent,[6] I make the following[7]

FINDINGS OF FACT

I. THE BUSINESS OF THE RESPONDENT

The Respondent, a corporation with an office and place of business located at Chicago, Illinois, is engaged in the business of producing and selling wholesale various food products. During 1985, a representative period, the Respondent in the course of its operations derived gross revenues in excess of $50,000 and it sold and shipped products, goods, and materials valued in excess of $50,000 from its Chicago, Illinois facility directly to points located outside the State of Illinois.

The Respondent is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

II. THE LABOR ORGANIZATION INVOLVED

Production Workers Union of Chicago and Vicinity, Local 707 is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

III. THE UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES

A. Background

The Respondent operates a facility located at Chicago, Illinois, where it is engaged in the production and sale of food products. Included among its officials and supervisory personnel were Manager John Dai, Production Supervisor Chris Fang, Supervisor Juan Garcia,[8] Assistant Manager Vicki An, and Vice President of Operations Simon Lin.

During June the Respondent employed approximately 20 employees, including the discriminatees, Jose Martinez and Rodolfo Bustamante. About the early part of June the Union began an organizing campaign among the Respondent's unrepresented employees. The first union meeting was held on 8 June. On Monday, 17 June, Union Business Agent Juan Galaviz, who had filed a representation petition with the Board the previous week seeking to represent the Respondent's employees, contacted Manager Dai by telephone and informed him he had met with some of the Respondent's employees and they wanted a union in the Company. Galaviz refused Dai's request for those employees' names. Although they agreed to meet the next day pursuant to Galaviz' request, Dai canceled the meeting the next day. Manager Dai stated he received the petition that same Monday, which he claimed was his first knowledge about the union organizing campaign.

An election was held on 26 July and the Union was thereafter certified as the collective-bargaining representative of the Respondent's employees.

This proceeding arose out of conduct occurring during that organizing campaign.

B. The Supervisory Status of Jose Martinez and Rodolfo Bustamante

The Respondent's facilities and operations as described by Manager Dai consists of four departments, including the warehouse, packaging, meatcutting, and appetizers departments. During the period in issue here three employees, including a helper and two drivers, worked in the warehouse department; six employees worked in the appetizers department; one employee worked in the packaging department; and four employees worked in the meatcutting department. Manager Dai was over the facility and directly under him were Production Supervisor Fang and Supervisor Garcia, who both reported directly to Dai. Garcia was primarily responsible for overseeing the distribution and warehousing while Fang was primarily responsible for production, quality control, sanitation, maintenance, and making out the work schedules. However, their responsibilities overlapped and they both were over all the production employees. Besides the employees there was also one captain employed in each of the departments, except for the appetizers department, which had two captains.

Jose Martinez worked in the warehouse department. His job was dispatching things for delivery and receiving things coming into the facility. He worked under Supervisor Garcia's supervision. Effective 27 May, Martinez' position was changed from plant helper to shift leader or captain.[9] However, his hourly rate of pay of $3.90 remained the same.

Besides Martinez, two drivers, Fernando and Francisco, and a helper, Pablo Adan, worked in the warehouse department. Adan did not work there every day.

Martinez' responsibilities as captain as described by Manager Dai were to make sure the correct products called for on the tickets were taken out of the freezer and were in good condition. Martinez was also responsible for the operation of his department. According to Dai, the captains possess various types of authority. They can suggest or recommend to the supervisor that an employee be disciplined and the supervisor would uniformly follow the captain's recommendation. The captains can also allow employees to go home but they usually first talk to the supervisor. Captains also have input on bonuses given to employees and if employees make mistakes the captain can suggest to the supervisor and the bonuses are not given. They also report to the supervisor on the employee's performance for bonus purposes. Dai stated the captains and the supervisors inform him when mistakes are made and deductions in the amount of the bonuses are made for such mistakes. When employees are 3 to 4 minutes late to work captains notify the supervisors and for serious problems the supervisors notify Dai.

[5] The General Counsel's unopposed motion dated 30 April 1986 to correct the transcript is granted.

[6] The Union did not submit a brief.

[7] Unless otherwise indicated the findings are based on the pleadings, admissions, stipulations, and undisputed evidence contained in the record, which I credit.

[9] Manager Dai claimed he made Martinez a captain to motivate him.

The captains, like other employees, are hourly paid, except for Rodolfo Bustamante; punch timeclocks; work the same hours; and are assigned lunch shifts.

Supervisor Garcia, who stated he examines the work of both the captains and the employees, testified Martinez had the authority to let the employees leave work if they were ill and to tell employees to leave if they seriously violated company rules. On granting raises and bonuses Garcia stated captains are conferred with and denied there was ever a time Martinez had recommended a bonus which the employee did not get. However, Garcia acknowledged Martinez never recommended Adan or the two drivers for bonuses or raises or accompanied Garcia to Dai's office to talk about raises for them. Under cross-examination Garcia admitted if Adan wanted to leave work early he, himself, would check with Adan to see if Adan's reason was legitimate. Garcia denied Martinez ever told him the two drivers wanted to leave early and denied remembering whether Martinez ever told him Adan wanted to leave early. Garcia also denied remembering whether Adan or the drivers ever got raises and denied they ever talked to him about it. Contrary to Dai's testimony, Garcia stated if Martinez wanted to send employees home for violating company rules, endangering the Company, or illness Martinez would have to check with him first and he, himself, would decide whether the rules were violated, the Company was endangered, or the employees were ill before the employees would be sent home. Garcia further acknowledged if he, himself, was going to send an employee home for disciplinary reasons he would generally check it out with Manager Dai. Supervisor Fang also said if there were problems with employees he would talk to the employees. Garcia acknowledged Martinez spent 100 percent of his time by the freezer doing the same work as Adan.

Martinez described his duties as captain were to do the job well, fill the orders properly when he filled them himself, and be responsible for his own mistakes. Martinez stated he was also responsible for telling Adan, who only worked in his department when needed, what to do, but denied he was responsible for Adan's errors or teaching him what to do. Martinez was also responsible for keeping the place clean, making sure the products were shipped out correctly, and making sure that the products which could thaw out were put into the freezer quickly.

Martinez denied he ever allowed Adan or the drivers to leave early, recommended that they get bonuses or be disciplined, or that he ever talked to Supervisor Garcia about them wanting to leave work early. Martinez stated the only time Garcia asked him about the performance of any other employee was in May when Garcia asked him how Adan was doing his job. On telling Garcia that Adan was helping him well and could learn fast and do a good job Garcia said to continue teaching him.

Martinez denied he was ever told he had the authority to hire, fire, discipline, or transfer employees. He also denied ever hiring employees or interviewing employees to be hired, reporting employees for being late to work, checking Adan's timecard, or having the authority to assign Adan to work overtime.

Rodolfo Bustamante worked in the meatcutting department where he sliced meat. On 12 October 1984 his position was changed from butcher to butcher team leader or captain and his $780 monthly salary was raised to $800. Bustamante, who was the most experienced meatcutter and had worked there longer than the other meatcutters, was the highest paid employee working in the meatcutting department.

Manager Dai described Bustamante's responsibilities as a captain were to make sure the meat was cut in the fashion specified and to make sure the job was done properly and none of the employees were fooling around. Bustamante also trained a lot of the new meatcutters hired. According to Dai, there was a 3-month probationary period for new employees and in several instances when the new meatcutters hired did not perform their work properly Bustamante would report that to the supervisors with recommendations which the supervisors reported to Dai. Dai stated on those occasions they followed Bustamante's recommendations. Dai also stated if an employee was not properly performing his job Bustamante was responsible for disciplining the employee. The supervisors would give Bustamante instructions about preparing the products to meet the customers' needs, whereupon Bustamante was responsible for getting the meatcutters to prepare it in that fashion.

On granting bonuses to the meatcutters, as explained by Dai, the Company had records showing how fast the employees worked and those figures were calculated by Supervisors Fang and Garcia. However, as far as the quality of their work was concerned, Dai stated the captain informed the supervisor about what the employees were doing wrong and this was deducted from the employees' bonuses. Dai stated they uniformly followed the captain's recommendations on reductions from the bonuses.

Dai first stated because the captain was the person actually involved in the operation he and the supervisors would take the captain's opinion a lot on raises. Dai then said if they wanted to give an employee a raise he would have Garcia check with the captain about the employee's performance to decide the amount of salary increase which he uniformly followed.

According to Dai, if an employee was not feeling well or had an emergency Bustamante had the right to let the employee leave but he had to let Garcia know the employee was not feeling well. To dismiss an employee Bustamante would have to talk to the supervisors, who would report it to Dai, who would then make the decision to discharge.

Dai denied Bustamante ever hired employees without permission although he suggested employees be hired. The hiring procedure was for Dai or Fang to interview employees with Dai making the decision. Dai stated he would follow suggestions in making his decisions and said he followed Bustamante's recommendations on hiring because Bustamante was very good at it and they were experienced meatcutters and Bustamante would give him valuable suggestions.

Although Dai stated Bustamante transferred employees out of the meatcutting department he acknowledged he and Fang agreed with the decision. Dai also acknowledged he sometimes investigated himself to see what employees were doing to make sure Bustamante's suggestions were correct.

Supervisor Garcia also described Bustamante's duties, responsibilities, and authority. According to him, Bustamante spent all of his time in the meatcutting department doing the same work as the other meatcutters. Bustamante was responsible for seeing that the other meatcutters cut the meat correctly for Garcia. Garcia also observed the other meatcutters and said if they were not doing it correctly he would either talk to them directly or to Bustamante. Garcia stated Bustamante had the authority to let sick employees leave work or to tell the employees to leave if they seriously violated company rules. Bustamante was conferred with regarding bonuses and raises given to the employees in his department. However, Garcia stated Manager Dai made the decisions on raises and would ask Garcia's opinion, which he would give with his recommendation based on the employee's performance as he viewed it. Garcia also said Bustamante never recommended bonuses for the meatcutters. Garcia also acknowledged if Bustamante wanted to send employees home for violating company rules, endangering the Company, or illness, Bustamante would have to check with him first and he, himself, would decide whether the rules were violated, the Company was endangered, or the employees were ill before the employees would be sent home. Garcia also acknowledged Bustamante would tell him when the meatcutters wanted to leave early, whereupon he would talk to them and check their reasons.

Bustamante denied he ever had any authority over the meatcutters or to hire employees or allow overtime work. Although Bustamante stated he was told to direct the other meatcutters he denied he was their boss and stated he did his work like any other meatcutter along with showing employees how to do the work correctly. Bustamante denied he ever recommended that employees be disciplined, fired, or given raises. Bustamante acknowledged he did ask Garcia to ask Dai about hiring his brother and Adan, who were both hired.

Not only was Manager Dai's claim Martinez and Bustamante could effectively recommend disciplining employees, grant them time off from work, and grant or deny them bonuses or raises refuted by Supervisor Garcia's testimony regarding the authority of Martinez and Bustamante, but both Martinez and Bustamante specifically denied possessing such authority or any other supervisory authority over the employees in their departments. I credit the testimony of both Martinez and Bustamante rather than that of Manager Dai and Supervisor Garcia, whom I discredit. Apart from my observation of the witnesses in discrediting Dai and Garcia, their testimony was contradictory and Garcia's testimony also tends, in part, to support that of Martinez and Bustamante concerning their alleged supervisory authority.

Section 2(11) of the Act defines a supervisor as "any individual having authority, in the interest of the employer, to hire, transfer, suspend, lay off, recall, promote, discharge, assign, reward, or discipline other employees, or responsibly to direct them, or to adjust their grievances, or effectively to recommend such action, if in connection with the foregoing the exercise of such authority is not of a merely routine or clerical nature, but requires the use of independent judgment." An individual need only to have one of the indicia enumerated to be a supervisor. Research Designing Service, 141 NLRB 211, 213 (1963).

Based on the testimony of Martinez and Bustamante, which I credit, I find neither Martinez nor Bustamante possessed any of the statutory authority enumerated to make him a supervisor within the meaning of Section 2(11) of the Act. Therefore, I find, for the reasons indicated, neither Martinez nor Bustamante was a supervisor within the meaning of Section 2(11) of the Act and they were employees of the Respondent accorded the protection of the Act. Moreover, to accept Respondent's contentions the captains were supervisors would mean that including Production Supervisor Fang, Supervisor Garcia, and the 5 captains there would be a total of 7 supervisors for the other 14 employees employed by the Respondent or a ratio of 1 supervisor for every 2 employees. The Board has held it will look to the ratio between supervisors and employees in determining the supervisory status of an employee. Monarch Federal Savings & Loan Assn., 237 NLRB 844 (1978).

C. Interrogations About the Union

Several employees testified about conversations they had with Supervisor Garcia concerning the Union.

Jose Martinez stated about April he mentioned to Supervisor Garcia and Rodolfo Bustamante that in the factory "they treated them very badly and they had to see or find someone like a union, for example, who could help them." Either Garcia or Bustamante asked Martinez how it could be done and said it might be difficult to get it done. Martinez' response was once you proposed to do something it was simple. When Bustamante and Garcia remarked it could be difficult to do or accomplish, Martinez agreed, but told them he would try to do it.

Bustamante corroborated Martinez' testimony about the conversation and further stated Garcia told Martinez he was in agreement with the idea of putting in the Union.

Martinez also testified about several other conversations he had with Supervisor Garcia about the Union. No one else was present during the first two of these conversations. The first one occurred about 7 June, which was the day after Martinez had first talked to Union Business Agent Galaviz about organizing the Respondent's employees. Martinez stated he informed Garcia he was going to try to get the Union in but needed people to support it. On Garcia's asking who was going to go, Martinez said he did not know but he was going to try to get some people to go there one Saturday. Garcia then told him to see who could go.

Martinez helped arrange and attended the first union meeting held on Saturday, 8 June, at which Martinez and other employees of the Respondent signed union authorization cards. The following Monday, 10 June, Martinez testified, he told Garcia in the presence of other employees, including Fernando and Pablo Adan, he had gone to the Union. On Garcia's asking him what happened, Martinez said they signed cards for the Union and showed Garcia one of the cards. Garcia then asked Martinez what he was going to do with them, whereupon Martinez said he was going to pass them out and had them in case other employees wanted to sign them.

On 12 June, Martinez stated, Garcia came over to where he was working and said he wanted to talk to the man from the Union. Martinez gave Garcia Business Agent Galaviz' name and telephone number so he could call and talk to him. No one else was present during the conversation.

Supervisor Garcia acknowledged having several conversations with Martinez about the Union. However, he denied anyone else was present. Garcia testified the first conversation occurred 1 or 2 months before Martinez' employment ended. On that occasion Martinez mentioned Garcia was not making enough money and told Garcia if Garcia wanted to help him that he had a friend working for the Union who could help them do something about it but Garcia had to help him. When Garcia asked why he had to help, Martinez said he was a supervisor and could talk to the rest of the people easier. Garcia refused, stating he did not want problems with his boss.

According to Garcia, during their next conversation, the date of which Garcia could not recall, Martinez mentioned he had called his friend and then asked Garcia whether he wanted to join the Union. Garcia again refused, saying he did not want any trouble with his boss. Martinez said his friend told him it was easy to do it and all they needed was to get the other people to sign a piece of paper. Garcia then told Martinez if he wanted to do it, to do it, but not give Garcia any troubles.

Garcia stated that later in another conversation, the date of which was not established, Martinez came to his desk with some union cards, showed him one, and asked him whether he wanted to sign it. When Garcia refused, Martinez gave him Business Agent Galaviz' telephone number and told Garcia to call Galaviz and ask him about the Union.

To the extent the testimony of Martinez and Garcia conflicts, I credit Martinez, whose testimony was corroborated in part by Bustamante rather than Garcia, whom I have previously discredited.

Having credited Martinez, I find Supervisor Garcia about 7 June asked Jose Martinez who was going to go to the Union; on 10 June asked Martinez in the presence of other employees what happened at the union meeting and what he was going to do with the union cards he had; and on 12 June told Martinez he wanted to talk to the man from the Union.

According to Supervisor Garcia, he then called Business Agent Galaviz and asked about the Union's benefits. However, on stating he was a supervisor Galaviz informed him the Union was only for regular workers. Galaviz denied mentioning any names.

Business Agent Galaviz acknowledged having such a conversation with Garcia and further stated, which I credit, that Garcia also told him he had talked to Martinez and Bustamante because they had the cards they were showing to the employees. Besides my observation of the witnesses in crediting Galaviz instead of Garcia, both Martinez and Bustamante had participated in getting other employees to sign cards and, as previously indicated, they had been involved in conversations with Garcia about the Union.

Employee Santana Hernandez, who attended the union meeting held on 8 June, testified about 1 week later while in the packing area Supervisor Garcia asked him if they signed cards for the Union. Hernandez also testified while he was in the packing area the last week in July, which was after the 26 July union election was held, Garcia also asked him what had happened about the Union, whereupon he denied knowing anything.

Supervisor Garcia acknowledged asking Hernandez right after the election what happened with the Union and stated he also asked if the guys won or what. Garcia did not specifically deny having an earlier conversation with Hernandez about the Union or asking him if they signed cards for the Union. Based on Hernandez' undisputed testimony and Garcia's admissions I find about 15 June Supervisor Garcia asked Santana Hernandez whether they signed cards for the Union and the later part of July asked Hernandez what happened about the Union.

D. The Unlawful Threat and Suspension and Discharge of Jose Martinez

Jose Martinez was employed by the Respondent from October 1984 until his termination in June. While employed there Martinez received raises effective 10 December 1984 and 1 April. Martinez also testified in May on asking Manager Dai for another raise Dai informed him he was a good worker and promised to give him another raise later. Dai acknowledged telling Martinez when he gave him his April raise that if he continued doing a good job he would think about giving him another raise later. Although Dai claimed after Martinez received his April raise his attitude changed and he did not do his job, no examples were given to support this assertion and Martinez credibly denied his work changed.

Martinez' union activities consisted of initially contacting the Union in early June about organizing the Respondent's employees; attending a union organizing meeting held on 8 June, at which time he signed a Union authorization card; and on 10 June soliciting other employees at the Respondent's facility to sign union authorization cards.

On Monday, 17 June, Martinez and helper Pablo Adan were filling tickets given to Martinez by Assistant Manager An for the deliveries scheduled that day. Production Supervisor Fang was checking the orders being loaded and discovered one of the boxes of shrimp, which Adan had loaded on a truck, was the wrong brand. Martinez, at Fang's instructions, returned the box of shrimp to the freezer. Fang went to the office and reported the incident to Assistant Manager An. Fang then returned and they continued loading the truck.

Martinez testified about 12 or 12:10 p.m. Supervisor Garcia instructed him to return boxes of appetizers, which had been removed from the freezer beginning about 10:30 a.m. to be loaded on the truck for delivery, to the freezer because the truck had flat tires. Garcia confirmed giving such instructions to Martinez and claimed the appetizers had already been out for several hours in the hot weather.[10]

About 10 or 15 minutes later, Martinez stated, he also had a conversation with Manager Dai with another employee named Lupe acting as an interpreter.[11] Martinez stated Dai also instructed him to return the appetizers to the freezer because the truck had flat tires. Martinez denied it was his fault and said Dai should have told him before because now he had to do double work and Dai was not paying him double. When Dai insisted Martinez was going to have to do it Martinez responded it was his lunchtime and he had to go to lunch.

According to Martinez, about that time Adan was returning from lunch and he informed Adan what Dai had told Martinez to do. When Dai remarked they could go to lunch later Martinez reminded Dai that he would be coming back later and Dai did not like for people to come back from lunch late and gave points against them for doing so.

Manager Dai, who did not deny having such a conversation with Martinez, stated that morning he had instructed Supervisor Garcia about 11 a.m. to have four or five boxes of appetizers, which he saw, returned to the freezer to keep them from thawing while waiting for the truck.

Martinez acknowledged that, after putting some of the appetizers back into the freezer, he then went to lunch on the second shift from 12:30 to 1 p.m. because he was hungry. Before going, Martinez stated, he had put almost all the appetizers back into the freezer and Adan was continuing to do that when Martinez left for lunch.

On returning from lunch the truck was ready for loading and it was then loaded.

Martinez testified about 1:20 or 1:30 p.m., while loading the truck, Supervisor Garcia returned to the facility. Garcia asked Martinez why he had not put away the appetizers like he had told him. Martinez responded by saying he was filling the order and when he filled it he went to lunch after putting the things susceptible to defrosting in the freezer. Under cross-examination Martinez acknowledged when Garcia returned there were still some appetizers that had not been put back in the freezer and that he had ignored Manager Dai's orders to put the appetizers back and go to lunch later.

Supervisor Garcia testified, when he returned to the facility between 1 and 2 p.m., Manager Dai had gotten on him about not having the appetizers returned to the freezer as he had instructed him, whereupon he informed Dai he had told Martinez to do it and Martinez had not done it because Garcia saw some appetizers in the same place. Manager Dai corroborated Garcia's testimony and stated he instructed Garcia to find out why Martinez did not follow instructions.

About the end of that workday, Martinez testified, Supervisor Garcia came over to where he was working and told him he thought Manager Dai wanted to suspend Martinez because he had found out about the Union. On asking Garcia who told Dai, Garcia denied he did or knowing who had but said somebody must have told him and Dai was thinking of suspending Martinez. Martinez informed Garcia if Dai was going to suspend him to let him suspend him.

Although Supervisor Garcia acknowledged telling Martinez that Dai might give him a suspension, he stated he told Martinez it was for the appetizers because Martinez did not listen to Garcia. Garcia denied there was any mention of the Union during this conversation.[12]

I credit Martinez rather than Supervisor Garcia for reasons previously given and find on 17 June Garcia threatened Jose Martinez with suspension because of his union activities.

Manager Dai stated after instructing Supervisor Garcia to have the appetizers returned to the freezer he went to the office and informed Assistant Manager An what had happened. An told him Supervisor Fang had reported that morning Martinez had made a mistake by taking out the wrong brand of shrimp. She also told Dai the previous week a customer had complained he had received the wrong brand of shrimp. Assistant Manager An confirmed she had received a complaint about a week earlier from a customer who had received the wrong brand of shrimp. Although according to Dai Assistant Manager An had given Martinez an oral warning about the incident by telling him to be careful, An did not testify about such a warning and Martinez denied ever being told about the customer's complaint.

According to Manager Dai after Garcia talked to Martinez, Garcia reported Martinez' excuse for not putting the appetizers in the freezer was because he went to lunch. Dai then told Garcia they had to give Martinez some serious discipline, reminded Garcia of the regulations, and said to either dismiss Martinez or give him a very serious suspension. Garcia suggested suspension and Dai instructed Garcia to suspend Martinez for 1 month and to write it up. Garcia wrote a note stating he was going to suspend Martinez for 1 month for not following instructions. Dai stated the next day he had Assistant Manager An issue a memorandum and notice which was attached to Martinez' timecard. Supervisor Garcia corroborated Dai's testimony.

A rule contained in a memorandum from Manager Dai to Supervisors Fang and Garcia dated 15 February, which Supervisor Garcia stated he had previously translated and explained to employees, including Martinez, provided as follows:

> Effectively immediately, any kinds of meats should not be left outside of cooler or freezer more than 20 minutes.
> Violator of this rule will be dismissed.

Martinez, however, denied any knowledge of such a rule and Dai was not certain whether it was ever posted.

[10] The outside temperature that day was in the mid-seventies.

[11] Dai's primary language is Chinese and although he speaks English he does not speak Spanish, which is the language used by Martinez.

[12] Manager Dai also denied having any conversation with Supervisor Garcia prior to 17 June about suspending or disciplining Martinez and denied talking to Garcia about Martinez' union activities.

The Respondent also had rules and regulations in both English and Spanish dated 25 June 1984 which were distributed to the employees. It set out rules and the number of points employees would be assessed for violating such rules. The points assessed for violating a rule for not obeying the orders of a manager or supervisor ranged from 9 to 27 points. The regulations also provided employment should be terminated for employees with 27 points.

The next day, 18 June, Martinez on finishing work found a memorandum and notice with his timecard.

This memorandum from Manager Dai to Martinez, dated 18 June and entitled "Punishment," provided as follows:

> We regret that the Company decided to give you one month suspension as punishment since you do not obey the Company's regulations and Supervisor's instructions several times which mistakes reduced our reputation and caused the loss of the Company. According to our regulation, we can not keep you with the Company any more on the above mistakes, but for given you one more chance to do the good job, we decided to give you one month suspension instead of leaving the Company.
> This punishment shall be starting on June 19, 1985.

Attached to the memorandum was a punishment/-misconduct notice dated 18 June and signed by Dai. It gave as a reason for the punishment that Martinez made mistakes while distributing merchandise by distributing the wrong brand of shrimp on 17 June and by not keeping the frozen appetizers in the freezer before delivery on 17 June. Martinez was given 10 points for each of those two mistakes and the notice reflects those 20 points gave him an updated total of 23 points.[13]

Martinez then went to the office where he had a conversation with Manager Dai with Supervisor Garcia acting as interpreter. Present also were Assistant Manager An and Vice President Lin. Martinez testified he asked Dai what the memorandum was about and was told it was about his suspension. Martinez asked them to sign the memorandum, which they did, and asked Dai for his check. Dai refused to give him his check giving as a reason it was not a payday and told him if he received the check before payday it was like quitting his job. Martinez mentioned he had been suspended for a month and would not be working and asked where was he going to get the money to come there on the bus to get his check on payday. Dai, who had a check Assistant Manager An had made out for Martinez, then told Martinez if he wanted his check he was going to have him sign a paper and if he signed that paper he was fired and was not going to be working there anymore. Martinez denied signing the paper or getting his check. He informed Dai he was planning to come back to work there. Martinez then left the premises.

Manager Dai's version of this conversation was when Martinez questioned him about the memorandum he told Martinez that Martinez had made a mistake in distributing the products several times and had disobeyed the supervisor's instructions by not putting the appetizers back in the freezer as instructed and he had disciplined Martinez to let him remember what he had done. Martinez kept shaking his head in disagreement and insisted on getting his check. Dai told Martinez the only way an employee could get his check immediately when it was not a payday was by not working there anymore and quitting.[14] Dai also informed Martinez it was for a 1-month suspension and he should get his check like the other employees on the next Tuesday, which was payday. Martinez, however, said he wanted to quit and get his check.

Dai, who stated it was his decision to accept Martinez' resignation, stated he then instructed Assistant Manager An to make out Martinez' check as he requested. Dai claimed he had no knowledge of Martinez' union activities.

Supervisor Garcia, who denied discussing the Union with the Respondent's officials or supervisors, corroborated Dai's testimony and stated he signed Martinez' memorandum at Martinez' request. Although Garcia also stated Martinez used some curse words, he denied translating them to Dai and said employees always talked like that.

Assistant Manager An stated she got a paycheck hand drafted by the bookkeeper for Martinez that day. However, Martinez refused to take it claiming too much tax had been deducted and stated he wanted one made out by the company which normally made out their checks. According to An, Martinez' brother subsequently picked up Martinez' check for him.

Martinez, who stated he was supposed to return to the facility on a Friday, returned to the facility on a Monday morning, at which time he had a conversation with Manager Dai with a delivery driver, Fernando,[15] acting as interpreter. Present also were Assistant Manager An, Vice President Lin, and another employee. Martinez testified he asked Dai what Dai wanted to tell him.[16] Dai informed Martinez he was not to come back to work because there was no work for him anymore. About that time Supervisor Garcia came into the office where they were and Fernando left. Martinez then asked Garcia why they were not going to give him his job back, whereupon Garcia said he did not know and told him to ask them. Martinez replied he already had. Martinez, with Garcia acting as interpreter, then remarked to Dai that in other words the memorandum Dai had given him was not any good. Dai agreed it was not any good and Martinez then asked for another letter stating it was no good. Dai said he would give him another letter and [13] The other three points were for being late for work on 26 October 1984 and on 25 January and 18 February.

[14] The payroll is handled by an outside company and for the Respondent to prepare an employee's check requires a lot of paperwork. According to Dai, the Respondent's policy was if an employee got his check early he was considered a quit.

[15] Fernando did not testify.

[16] According to Martinez, he had been told by Fernando the previous Thursday Dai wanted to talk to him on Monday.

asked him to wait outside. Although Martinez waited outside, he did not receive the letter as promised.

Manager Dai placed this conversation as occurring about 18 July and stated, using Fernando as an interpreter, he informed Martinez there was no job for him and to go home and that Martinez had already quit, his employment was terminated, and they did not have any jobs.

Since that time Martinez has not been contacted by the Respondent about returning to work.

Respondent's records contain a document signed by Manager Dai entitled "Termination Form" for Martinez which reflects he was terminated on 18 June for disobeying management directions.

I credit the testimony of Martinez concerning his conversations with Manager Dai on 18 June and with Manager Dai and Supervisor Garcia afterwards when he attempted to return to work, and find based on such testimony as well as Respondent's own records that Martinez was suspended and discharged on 18 June. Besides my observation of the witnesses and having previously discredited Manager Dai and Supervisor Garcia, the Respondent's own records reflect Martinez was terminated on 18 June allegedly for disobeying management directions rather than quitting his job on 18 June as Dai, Garcia, and Assistant Manager An claim.

E. The Unlawful Suspension and Discharge of Rodolfo Bustamante

Rodolfo Bustamante was employed by the Respondent from August 1982 until his termination in June.

His union activities consisted of signing a union authorization card on 10 June and helping Jose Martinez solicit other employees to sign union authorization cards. Bustamante signed his union authorization card on the Respondent's parking lot in the presence of several other employees. Supervisor Garcia at the time was about 10 meters away from Bustamante.

On 13 June Supervisor Fang showed Bustamante how he wanted some meat sliced for a customer. Bustamante, who stated he had previously sliced meat that way, testified he cut the meat the way Fang had instructed him. However, about 15 minutes later after slicing the meat, Fang returned and using Supervisor Garcia as an interpreter said he knew Manager Dai was going to ball Fang out and then accused Bustamante of not slicing the meat correctly saying he wanted it sliced a different way and thinner. Bustamante disputed this by saying he sliced it the way he was instructed. Bustamante also denied he could correct it because there was no other meat there.

Bustamante stated Fang then told him because he did not obey instructions he should go home, whereupon he informed Fang if Fang wanted him to go home then to pay him. Fang also told him to go to the office because Manager Dai wanted him.

Supervisor Fang claimed on that occasion he had shown Bustamante to cut the meat against the vein instead of with the vein. On using Supervisor Garcia to translate those instructions, Fang stated, Bustamante refused to do it giving as the reasons it was too troublesome to do things like that and he did not want to do it. Although Fang explained it was to meet a customer's special requirement, Bustamante still did not want to do it and then ignored them and did it his own way. Fang stated he then told Bustamante they had a problem and after ordering him out of the cutting room asked Bustamante why he did not obey the order. Bustamante's response again was that it was too troublesome and he was fed up with this because they wanted to do it differently on different days, it happened over and over, and he was getting tired of the whole thing. Fang explained this was the nature of the business and he hoped Bustamante would cooperate but said if he did not he was going to discipline him for 2 weeks. Bustamante responded by saying Fang would not do that to him and then said he just wanted to quit and get his paycheck that day.

Supervisor Garcia, who acted as the interpreter for Fang, stated on asking Bustamante why he did not do the job Bustamante replied he had been working for them a long time and already knew his duties and everything and how to cut meat. Bustamante said nobody was going to tell him what to do and he also said he wanted to do his job. On telling Fang what Bustamante had said Fang told Garcia to tell Bustamante he was going to give him a 1-week suspension because he did not listen to Fang. Garcia stated, on telling that to Bustamante, Bustamante said he was going to quit and went to change his clothes. Although Fang stated Bustamante used one curse word on that occasion, he stated employees always talked like that.

I credit Bustamante rather than Garcia and Fang, whom I discredit. The reasons for discrediting Garcia have been previously expressed and, apart from my observation of the witnesses in discrediting Fang I do not find his testimony, which is inconsistent with the Respondent's own records, plausible.

Bustamante stated after going to the office he had a conversation with Manager Dai with Supervisor Garcia acting as the interpreter. Bustamante testified Dai asked him why he did not cooperate with the other workers and accused him of being very stubborn. Although Dai mentioned Bustamante was a good worker and did more work than anybody else, he said Bustamante did not cooperate or listen to what Fang said. They said, because Bustamante did not obey Fang, Bustamante was being punished for 3 weeks[17] and they told him to go home. Bustamante said to pay him and he would go home. Dai told him they were going to pay him for the 3 days he had worked by giving him $11. When Bustamante questioned Dai about the amount, Dai mentioned there was certain deductions. Bustamante also asked about being paid for his vacation which was coming up, whereupon Dai agreed to give him his vacation check but told him to leave and not come back because there would not be anymore work for him. Bustamante claimed he did not get his check for the 3 days that day because Dai wanted him to sign a paper, which he refused to do. Under cross-examination, Bustamante said Dai also told him he could not give him the check until payday because there was no one there to sign it.

[17] Bustamante, in an affidavit given to a Board agent, stated Supervisor Fang told him he was being punished for 2 weeks.

Supervisor Fang denied firing Bustamante. According to Fang, Manager Dai using Garcia as an interpreter asked Bustamante whether he was sure he wanted to quit, whereupon Bustamante stated he was.

Supervisor Garcia testified while they were in the office Bustamante kept asking for his money and said he wanted to leave the Company. On telling Supervisor Fang that Bustamante wanted his money Fang said he was only going to give Bustamante a 1-week suspension, which Garcia explained to Bustamante. However, Bustamante said he wanted his money, he did not like his job anymore, and asked Garcia to tell them to give him his money. Garcia explained this to Fang, who then went to talk to Manager Dai. Garcia testified Dai using him to translate asked Bustamante why he wanted to leave the Company and said he was a good worker. Bustamante's response was he was tired of Fang always bothering him and he said he knew his job. Although Garcia said he thought they gave Bustamante a check on that occasion, he stated he did not know.

Manager Dai's version was Bustamante, who had already changed his clothes, came to the office with Fang and Garcia, and Fang informed him Bustamante did not want to work there anymore and wanted to leave. On asking Fang the reason Fang said Bustamante did not want to obey him and he wanted to give Bustamante 1 week's punishment. Bustamante did not want to take it and said he did not like his work and wanted to quit. Dai stated he then asked Garcia, who also told him Bustamante wanted to quit, did not want to work there anymore, and wanted his money. Dai stated he asked Garcia to ask Bustamante to see whether he really wanted to quit. After Garcia talked to Bustamante, Garcia told Dai that Bustamante did not want to work and wanted his money and to go home. Dai, who stated it was his decision to accept Bustamante's resignation, stated he then instructed Assistant Manager An to figure the amount owed and to write out a check for Bustamante.

Dai, however, stated Bustamante disagreed with the amount of the check claiming it was not right and said he was not going to take it, whereupon Dai stated he instructed An to tell him if he disagreed with the amount to come back tomorrow or some other time.

Assistant Manager An also testified Bustamante through Garcia said he wanted to quit and get his paycheck and Dai instructed her to prepare it. Although An stated she prepared the check, the person who could sign it was not there so she told Bustamante to come back the next day. Bustamante also claimed the amount of the check was not correct because they had taken out too much for taxes.

Both Dai and Fang claimed they had no knowledge of Bustamante's union activities.

I credit the testimony of Bustamante concerning this conversation instead of Manager Dai, Assistant Manager An, and Supervisors Garcia and Fang, whom I have previously discredited, and find based on such testimony as well as Respondent's records, as discussed infra, that Bustamante was suspended and discharged on 13 June allegedly for not cooperating with coworkers and for disobeying management directions rather than quitting his job as Dai, An, Garcia, and Fang claim.

Bustamante testified about 1 week later he returned to the facility accompanied by a friend, Angel Quesada, to get his check. According to Bustamante, he had a conversation with Manager Dai with Quesada serving as interpreter.[18] Bustamante stated Dai gave Quesada a paper saying they had not fired Bustamante and he had left of his own volition and that Bustamante was a good worker but very stubborn and did not obey orders. Bustamante, who denied signing the paper, asked Dai whether he was going to give him his job back, whereupon Dai said he was not and told him there was not anymore work for him there. When Bustamante asked how he was going to support his family, Dai told him to find a job someplace else but if he had not found one in 1 month he would call Bustamante. If Bustamante did not have a job he would call him back but as a new employee at $3.30 per hour.

Bustamante, however, denied the Respondent ever called him or that he ever worked there again.

Manager Dai acknowledged Bustamante returned to the facility with a friend, but stated this was the day after he had left, and said that they talked to Assistant Manager An in his presence about the check.

Assistant Manager An corroborated Manager Dai's testimony.

The Respondent's records, as explained by Assistant Manager An, reflect Bustamante was paid $11.55 for unused sick leave and $150.49 for vacation pay. According to An, Bustamante got his check on 15 June.

The Respondent's records also contained a document entitled "Change of Status Authority," signed by Manager Dai and dated 13 June, which reflects effective 13 June, Bustamante resigned. However, a termination form for Bustamante, also dated 13 June and signed by Dai reflects Bustamante was terminated on 13 June for not cooperating with coworkers and for disobeying management directions.

Supervisor Fang stated on one occasion in April or May Bustamante had initially refused his request to cut some meat according to a customer's requirements. However after several explanations from Fang, Bustamante agreed to do so. Although Fang claimed as he left the meatcutting room Bustamante threw a piece of chicken at the door for which he later apologized, Bustamante credibly denied such an occasion occurred. Although Fang subsequently claimed there were several other incidents involving Bustamante before this, those incidents were not identified and Fang acknowledged Bustamante was not given any points or suspended because of those alleged incidents.

The Respondent's records reflect a total of only six points had been assessed against Bustamante, including four points for being late for work on three occasions.

The General Counsel contends the Respondent violated Section 8(a)(1) and (3) of the Act as alleged by unlawfully interrogating and threatening employees concerning the Union and discriminatorily suspending, discharging, and failing to reinstate Jose Martinez and Rodolfo Bustamante because of the Union. The Respondent denies having violated the Act and asserts both Martinez and Bustamante were supervisors under the Act and voluntarily quit their jobs instead of accepting the suspensions imposed on them.

Section 8(a)(1) of the Act prohibits an employer from interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of their rights guaranteed in Section 7 of the Act. Section 8(a)(3) of the Act provides in pertinent part, "It shall be an unfair labor practice for an employer . . . by discrimination in regard to hire or tenure of employment or any term or condition of employment to encourage or discourage membership in any labor organization."

The test applied in determining whether a violation of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act has occurred is "whether the employer engaged in conduct which, it may reasonably be said, tends to interfere with the free exercise of employee rights under the Act." Electrical Fittings Corp., 216 NLRB 1076 (1975).

The interrogation of employees about the Union is not unlawful per se. The test for determining whether such interrogation violates the Act is whether under all the circumstances the interrogation reasonably tends to restrain, coerce, or interfere with rights guaranteed in the Act. Rossmore House, 269 NLRB 1176 (1984), affd. 760 F.2d 1006 (9th Cir. 1985). This test is not limited to only open and active union adherents but applies to other employees as well. Sunnyvale Medical Clinic, 277 NLRB 1217 (1985).

The findings supra establish Supervisor Garcia, about 7 June, asked Jose Martinez who was going to the Union; on 10 June asked Martinez in the presence of other employees what happened at the union meeting and what he was going to do with the union cards he had; on 12 June told Martinez he wanted to talk to the man from the Union; about 15 June asked Santana Hernandez whether they signed cards for the Union; and the latter part of July asked Hernandez what happened about the Union.

A consideration of the circumstances surrounding these acts of interrogation shows they were not accompanied by any threats, promises, or other unlawful conduct. Moreover, all of these conversations between Martinez and Supervisor Garcia, except for the one on 12 June when Garcia wanted to get information concerning how to contact the Union's representative, which he did, were initiated by Martinez, who volunteered information to Garcia about Martinez' efforts to organize the Respondent's employees. Under these circumstances and applying the above test for finding whether acts of interrogation are unlawful, I am persuaded and find that none of the acts of interrogation herein found are unlawful or violative of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act.

The above findings also establish on 17 June Supervisor Garcia threatened Jose Martinez with suspension because of his union activities. I find this threat of suspension by Supervisor Garcia, who subsequently participated in the suspension given to Martinez the next day, did interfere with, restrain, and coerce Martinez in the exercise of his rights guaranteed in Section 7 of the Act and the Respondent by engaging in such conduct violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act.

The remaining issues are whether Jose Martinez and Rodolfo Bustamante were discriminatorily suspended, discharged, and denied reinstatement because of their union activities.

The law is well settled that to discriminate against employees in their employment because of union activities violates Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act. When motivation for discharge is at issue in cases alleging violations of Section 8(a)(1) and (3) of the Act the General Counsel must make a prima facie showing sufficient to support the inference that protected activity by employees was a motivating factor in an employer's decision to discharge them, and the employer then has the burden of showing the employees would have been discharged absent the protected activity. Wright Line, 251 NLRB 1083, 1089 (1980), enfd. 662 F.2d 899 (1st Cir. 1981), cert. denied 455 U.S. 989 (1982), approved in NLRB v. Transportation Management Corp., 462 U.S. 393 (1983). Direct evidence of discriminatory motivation is not necessary to support a finding of discrimination and such intent may be inferred from the record as a whole. Heath International, 196 NLRB 318 (1972).

The Respondent's contentions Martinez and Bustamante were both supervisors under Section 2(11) of the Act and therefore unprotected and quit their jobs instead of being suspended and discharged have already been resolved. For the reasons found above neither Martinez nor Bustamante was a supervisor under the Act and Martinez was suspended and discharged on 18 June and Bustamante was suspended and discharged on 13 June and neither of them has been reinstated. The Respondent's own records, which show they were discharged, clearly refute the Respondent's claim they quit their jobs.

The findings further establish both Martinez and Bustamante were active union adherents and the Respondent had knowledge of their activities as evidenced by their conversations about the Union with Supervisor Garcia and Garcia's statement to Union Business Agent Galaviz about Martinez and Bustamante having cards they were showing to the employees. Until their suspensions and discharges both Martinez and Bustamante, except for a few points assessed against them for being late for work, enjoyed good work records as demonstrated by their promotions to captain and the fact Martinez the month before his discharge was informed he was a good worker and promised another raise. Except for Supervisor Garcia's unlawfully threatening Martinez with suspension for his union activities the day before it occurred, which clearly establishes the Respondent's union animus, no prior warnings or notice had previously been given to either Martinez or Bustamante about suspending or discharging them. Moreover, their suspensions and discharges occurred shortly after the union organizing campaign began and Martinez was suspended and discharged the day after the Union informed Manager Dai the employees wanted a union.

Based on these factors discussed, including the union activities of both Martinez and Bustamante, of which the Respondent had knowledge, the Respondent's union animus, the timing of the suspensions and discharges of Martinez and Bustamante in relation to the advent of the union organizing campaign, the unlawful threat to suspend Martinez because of his union activities which occurred the day before his suspension and discharge, and the absence of any prior warnings or notice, except for the unlawful threat made to Martinez, to suspend or discharge either Martinez or Bustamante, who were considered to be good employees, and having rejected the Respondent's defenses that Martinez and Bustamante were supervisors and had quit their jobs, I am persuaded and find the Respondent discriminatorily suspended and discharged Jose Martinez on 18 June and Rodolfo Bustamante on 13 June and denied them reinstatement because of their union activities and thereby violated Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act. I further find the reasons advanced by the Respondent for its actions taken against Martinez and Bustamante were mere pretexts to conceal its discriminatory reasons for suspending and discharging them.

IV. THE EFFECT OF THE UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES UPON COMMERCE

The activities of the Respondent set forth in section III, above, found to constitute unfair labor practices occurring in connection with the operations of the Respondent described in section I, above, have a close, intimate, and substantial relationship to trade, traffic, and commerce among the several States and tend to lead labor disputes burdening and obstructing commerce and the free flow thereof.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. Great Lakes Oriental Products, Inc. is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

2. Production Workers Union of Chicago and Vicinity, Local 707 is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

3. By threatening an employee with suspension because of his union activities, the Respondent has interfered with, restrained, and coerced its employees in the exercise of their rights guaranteed in Section 7 of the Act and has engaged in unfair labor practices in violation of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act.

4. By discriminatorily suspending and discharging Rodolfo Bustamante on 13 June 1985 and Jose Martinez on 18 June 1985 and refusing to reinstate them because of their union activities, the Respondent has engaged in unfair labor practices in violation of Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act.

5. The aforesaid unfair labor practices affect commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

THE REMEDY

Having found that the Respondent has engaged in certain unfair labor practices within the meaning of Section 8(a)(1) and (3) of the Act, I shall recommend it cease and desist and take certain affirmative action to effectuate the policies of the Act. Accordingly, the Respondent shall be ordered to offer immediate and full reinstatement to Rodolfo Bustamante and Jose Martinez to their former jobs or, if those jobs no longer exist, to substantially equivalent jobs, without prejudice to their seniority and other rights and privileges, and make them whole for any loss of earnings and other compensations they may have suffered as a result of the discrimination against them in their employment herein found by discriminatorily suspending and discharging Rodolfo Bustamante on 13 June 1985 and Jose Martinez on 18 June 1985 and refusing to reinstate them. Backpay shall be computed in the manner prescribed in F. W. Woolworth Co., 90 NLRB 289 (1950), with interest as prescribed in Florida Steel Corp., 231 NLRB 651 (1977). See generally Isis Plumbing Co., 138 NLRB 716 (1962).

The Respondent shall be ordered to remove from its files any references to the discriminatory suspensions and discharges of Rodolfo Bustamante and Jose Martinez herein found and to notify them, in writing, this has been done and evidence of its unlawful conduct will not be used as a basis for future personnel action against them.

The General Counsel's request that the remedial order include a visitatorial clause authorizing the Board to engage in discovery under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure to enable it to monitor compliance with the Board's Order as enforced by the court of appeals is rejected on the grounds the Board does not provide for discovery procedures in its proceedings and there is no showing that under the circumstances presented here such a clause is necessary.

On these findings of fact and conclusions of law and on the entire record, I issue the following recommended[19]

ORDER

The Respondent, Great Lakes Oriental Products, Inc., Chicago, Illinois, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall

1. Cease and desist from

(a) Threatening employees with suspensions because of their union activities.

(b) Discouraging membership in and activities on behalf of Production Workers Union of Chicago and Vicinity, Local 707, or any other labor organization, by suspending, discharging, refusing to reinstate, or in any other manner discriminating against employees in regard to hire and tenure of employment or any term or condition of employment.

(c) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them by Section 7 of the Act.

2. Take the following affirmative action necessary to effectuate the policies of the Act.

[19] If no exceptions are filed as provided by Sec. 102.46 of the Board's Rules and Regulations, the findings, conclusions, and recommended Order shall, as provided in Sec. 102.48 of the Rules, be adopted by the Board and all objections to them shall be deemed waived for all purposes.

(a) Offer immediate and full reinstatement to Rodolfo Bustamante and Jose Martinez to their former jobs or, if those jobs no longer exist, to substantially equivalent jobs, without prejudice to their seniority and other rights and privileges, and make them whole for any loss of earnings and other compensations they may have suffered by reason of the discrimination against them by discriminatorily suspending and discharging Rodolfo Bustamante on 13 June 1985 and Jose Martinez on 18 June 1985, in the manner set forth in the remedy section of this decision.

(b) Remove from its files any references to the suspensions and discharges of Rodolfo Bustamante and Jose Martinez herein found to be unlawful and notify them, in writing, this has been done and evidence of its unlawful conduct will not be used as a basis for future personnel actions against them.

(c) Preserve and, on request, make available to the Board or its agents for examination and copying, all payroll records, social security payment records, timecards, personnel records and reports, and all other records necessary to analyze and determine the amount of backpay due under the terms of this Order.

(d) Post at its Chicago, Illinois facility copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix."[20] Copies of the notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 13, after being signed by the Respondent's authorized representative, shall be posted by the Respondent immediately upon receipt and maintained for 60 consecutive days in conspicuous places including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by the Respondent to ensure that the notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(e) Notify the Regional Director in writing within 20 days from the date of this Order what steps the Respondent has taken to comply.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the amended complaint is dismissed insofar as it alleges unfair labor practices not specifically found herein.

DECISION AND ORDER

BY CHAIRMAN DOTSON AND MEMBERS JOHANSEN AND BABSON

On 8 October 1986 Administrative Law Judge Marvin Roth issued the attached decision. The Respondent filed exceptions and a supporting brief, the Charging Party filed an answering brief, and the General Counsel filed a Statement of Cross-Exceptions.

The National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the decision and the record in light of the exceptions and briefs and has decided to affirm the judge's rulings, findings,[1] and conclusions and to adopt the recommended Order[2] as modified.[3]

ORDER

The National Labor Relations Board adopts the recommended Order of the administrative law judge as modified below and orders that the Respondent, Local 792, Allied Sales Drivers, Ambulance, Beer Brewery, Grain Elevator, Retail Liquor, Livery, Malt House, Spring Water, Soft Drink, Taxicab, Vending Drivers, Helpers, Inside Employees and General Workers Union, affiliated with International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen and Helpers of America, its officers, agents, and representatives, shall take the action set forth in the Order as modified.

1. Substitute the following for paragraph 1(b).

"(b) In any like or related manner restraining or coercing employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them by Section 7 of the Act."

2. Substitute the attached notice for that of the administrative law judge.

DECISION

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

MARVIN ROTH, Administrative Law Judge. This case was heard at Minneapolis, Minnesota, on 13 August

[1] The judge inadvertently used the word "Company" instead of "Union" in sec. III,B, L. 49. We correct this error.

[2] The General Counsel has requested that the Order include a visitatorial clause authorizing the Board, for compliance purposes, to obtain discovery from the Respondent under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure under the supervision of the United States court of appeals enforcing this Order. Under the circumstances of this case, we find it unnecessary to include such a clause. Accordingly, we deny the General Counsel's request.

[3] We shall modify the judge's recommended Order and notice to contain the Board's standard language for narrow cease-and-desist orders against unions.

1986.[1] The charge was filed on 11 March by Bryan Jamison, attorney, for and on behalf of Johnson Bros. Wholesale Liquor Co. (Company). The complaint, which issued on 21 July, alleges that Local 792, Allied Sales Drivers, Ambulance, Beer Brewery, Grain Elevator, Retail Liquor, Livery, Malt House, Spring Water, Soft Drink, Taxicab, Vending Drivers, Helpers, Inside Employees and General Workers Union, affiliated with International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen and Helpers of America (Union or Respondent) violated Section 8(b)(1)(A) of the National Labor Relations Act. The gravamen of the complaint is that the Union allegedly imposed court collectible fines on seven company employees who crossed the Union's picket line and continued to work during an economic strike, notwithstanding that the Company and the Union entered into a strike settlement agreement that allegedly provided in pertinent part that the Union would not impose internal discipline on its members as a result of their conduct during the strike. The Union's answer denies the commission of the alleged unfair labor practices. All parties were afforded full opportunity to participate, to present relevant evidence, to argue orally, and to file briefs.

On the entire record in this case[2] and from my observation of the demeanor of the witnesses, and having considered the arguments of counsel and the briefs submitted by the General Counsel, the Company, and the Union, I make the following

I. THE BUSINESS OF THE COMPANY

The Company, a Minnesota corporation with an office and place of business in St. Paul, Minnesota, is engaged in the wholesale and distribution of liquor and related products. In the operation of its business, the Company annually receives at its St. Paul facility goods and materials valued in excess of $50,000 directly from points outside of Minnesota, and annually ships from its St. Paul facility goods and materials valued in excess of $50,000 directly to points outside of Minnesota. I find that the Company is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

II. THE RESPONDENT LABOR ORGANIZATION

The Union is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

III. THE ALLEGED UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES

A. Facts

The Union is the collective-bargaining representative of a unit of the Company's employees, including drivers and warehouse personnel, at the St. Paul facility. On Thursday, 19 December, the Union commenced a lawful strike and picketing at the St. Paul facility in support of its efforts to secure a successor collective-bargaining contract. The strike lasted throughout 3 workdays (19, 20, and 21 December). On Sunday, 22 December, the Company and the Union reached agreement on the terms of a successor contract. In the interim, seven unit employees (Harold Edelman, Melvin Emerson, Larry DeSmith, Douglas Forester, Donald Johnson, James Reiter and Richard Schneider), all union members, crossed the Union's picket line and continued to work.[3]

On Sunday, 22 December, the Company and the Union met in a lengthy session at the offices of the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service (FMC), including both formal negotiations and so-called off-the-record or side-bar discussions, which culminated in agreement on the terms of a new contract. Company Attorney Martin Garden prepared a memorandum of agreement that was signed by representatives of both parties. The agreement specifically provided in item six of seven listed items in the memorandum: "Contract language as agreed to—and both parties agree that there will be no retaliation against anyone."

Donald Gerdesmeier, president and business agent of Teamsters Local 503, was a member of the Union's negotiating team, and actively participated in the negotiations. Gerdesmeier had recently negotiated a contract between his own local and another wholesale liquor firm, and the president of the area Teamsters' Joint Council requested him to participate in the Union's negotiations.[4] Gerdesmeier testified concerning an off-the-record or side-bar discussion between himself, Company Attorney Garden, and Federal Mediator Earl Smith, at which time they reviewed Garden's draft of the proposed memorandum of agreement. Attorney Bryan Jamison, Garden's associate, was also present. Gerdesmeier testified in sum as follows: He objected to Jamison's presence at what he considered to be an off-the-record conversation. Garden said that Jamison was present to take notes, whereupon Gerdesmeier replied that if he were quoted, he would stick the notes up Garden's nose. They reviewed the language of the proposed memorandum. After reaching agreement on wages, they discussed item 6. Garden said he was concerned that the Union would pursue pending unfair labor practice charges, and was also concerned about sabotage by returning strikers and "things of a get even nature." Gerdesmeier said that he was concerned about discipline of returning strikers for picket line activity, and possible reprisals against them, and that he would talk to the Union about the matter. Gerdesmeier went to speak to Union Secretary-Treasurer Bryant, and then returned to his conversation with Garden and Smith, telling them that the Union concurred in the memorandum, and that they could sign the document.[5]

[1] All dates herein are for the period from 1 December 1985 through 30 November 1986 unless otherwise indicated.

[2] Errors in the official transcript of proceedings have been noted and corrected.

[3] It is immaterial how the employees managed to cross the picket line. I assume, for the purpose of this case, that as contended by the Union, they hid in the back of a van that was driven across the picket line by a management employee.

[4] In its brief, the Union refers to Gerdesmeier as a "mediator." However, in its answer the Union admitted that Gerdesmeier was an intermediary "on behalf of" the Union, and that he personally handled negotiations of the clause at issue in this case.

There was no further discussion about the "no retaliation" clause. Gerdesmeier was vague and equivocal about some aspects of the conversation. He testified that Garden gave specific examples of sabotage, such as breakage, but then qualified his testimony by saying that Garden said "words to that effect." Gerdesmeier testified that he could not recall whether Garden said there would not be any "shit" by either side, or whether the mediator said that the same went for the Union. Garden, who was present as a General Counsel witness, testified that prior to the conversation on 22 December, he expressed concern to Gerdesmeier that Secretary-Treasurer Bryant would be vengeful because seven of his members crossed the picket line, and that he could not agree to a final settlement unless there was a clear understanding that there would be no retaliation. Garden further testified that when they reviewed the proposed memorandum of agreement, Gerdesmeier did not object to the language of item 6. Garden testified that he said in effect that "we didn't want any shit from either party," adding that the Company would not be able to fire any strikers, that mediator Smith said "the union likewise," and that Gerdesmeier made no comment about the no-retaliation clause. Garden testified that at a later date, he telephoned Gerdesmeier and complained that the Union was disciplining the employees. Gerdesmeier stated, and Garden agreed, that there was no discussion at the 22 December meeting about whether the no-retaliation clause limited the Union's ability to apply internal discipline to its members. However, Garden asserted that "we had a broad no retaliation agreement" and that this meant there would be no fines against anybody. Gerdesmeier disagreed with this interpretation. Attorney Jamison, who was presented as a charging party witness, substantially corroborated Garden's testimony concerning the 22 December meeting. Jamison testified that the first time the parties had a side-bar meeting, Gerdesmeier questioned his presence, and told Garden that "if you ever try to use those notes, I'm going to shove them up your ass." However, Gerdesmeier did not again refer to Jamison's presence at such meetings. Jamison testified that when they discussed the proposed memorandum, Garden explained: "I've added a no retaliation clause. There is not going to be any shit going from either way. The Company may try to fire some strikers, they can't." Mediator Smith then commented, "The same goes for the Union." There was no further discussion of item 6. Jamison specifically testified that there was no mention of the pending charges or acts of sabotage. Jamison's testimony was corroborated by his notes at the meeting, which were presented in evidence by the Union.

I credit Garden and Jamison.[6] As indicated, Gerdesmeier's testimony was vague and equivocal in important respects. Gerdesmeier's version of the 22 December conversation was also improbable in one significant respect. If Garden, an experienced attorney, were concerned about the continuing pendency of unfair labor practice charges, then it is probable that he would have expressly provided in the memorandum of agreement that the Union request withdrawal of such charges. It is also probable that Garden would have conditioned the entire agreement on approval of such withdrawal by the Board's Regional Director. However, he did not request withdrawal of the pending charges (which concerned statements by the Company to its employees in correspondence and meetings) until 14 January, some 3 weeks after the parties reached agreement on a contract. Therefore, it is evident that at least in the Union's view, withdrawal of the charges was unrelated to its obligations under item 6 of the memorandum of agreement.

It is undisputed that by identical letters dated 25 February, the Union by its president, Steven Lucht, notified six of the seven employees who crossed the picket line (all but Larry DeSmith) as follows:

> On January 10, 1986, you were sent notice of a hearing to be held before the Executive Board on Wednesday, January 22, 1986. This hearing was to determine whether or not disciplinary action should be taken against you for crossing the picket lines and working during the recent strike at Johnson Bros. Liquors.
> The hearing was held and you did not appear. The Executive Board hearing committee, chaired by Vice-President Anthony Tiemann, examined the evidence and reached the following conclusions:
> On the basis of an investigation of the facts presented and signed affidavits submitted, you worked while a strike was in progress at your employers [sic] place of business. The Board assessed a fine against you in the amount of $1400.00. The Board however determined that one-half of the fine would be forgiven, therefore, you owe your union Local 792 the amount of $700.00 for working while a strike was in progress.

DeSmith appeared at the Union's executive board hearing, was assessed a fine in the amount of $1200, of which one-half was forgiven, and he paid the remaining $600. The other employees did not pay their fines. None of the fines were rescinded. Douglas Forester filed an appeal with Teamsters Joint Counsel No. 32, but received no reply. The Union admits that it imposed the fines because the employees crossed its picket line and worked for the Company while its strike was in progress.

B. Concluding Findings

I find that the Union negotiated and executed an agreement with the Company whereby it agreed that it would not impose internal discipline on its members as a result of their conduct during the strike. Therefore, the [6] Their testimony, like that of Gerdesmeier, may properly be considered as evidence in this case. There is no Board policy that precludes an attorney from testifying in a Board proceeding concerning matters of which he has personal knowledge. Indeed, neither Garden nor Jamison participated as trial counsel in this case, although Board policy does not require such abstention. Operating Engineers Local 9 (Fountain Sand), 210 NLRB 129 fn. 1 (1974). There is also no Board policy that precludes testimony concerning so-called off-the-record conversations during contract negotiations, or which precludes testimony by persons who heard such conversations, regardless of whether their presence was accepted or even known by the other participants. Indeed, it was the Union that sought to introduce testimony concerning the conversation on 22 December, over the objection of the General Counsel and the Company.

Company violated Section 8(b)(1)(A) by imposing such discipline. Office Employees Local 129, 267 NLRB 1017 (1983); Hospital Workers Local 250 (Associated Hospitals), 254 NLRB 834 (1981); Hospital Workers Local 250 (Dameron Hospital), 248 NLRB 1390 (1980); Retail Clerks Local 1364 (Food Employers), 240 NLRB 1127 (1979); Stationary Engineers Local 39 (San Jose Hospital), 240 NLRB 1122 (1979). The first two decisions cited above are particularly in point. In Associated Hospitals, which involved an arbitration decision in settlement of a strike, the administrative law judge specifically held that the phrase "no retaliation" applied to union discipline of its members for their conduct during the strike. Office Employees involved an oral agreement that provided that there would be "no reprisals by either side against strikers or nonstrikers." The parties never expressly referred to internal union charges. Nevertheless, the Board affirmed the administrative law judge's determination that in the context of a strike settlement agreement, the quoted language applied to such charges. The terms "retaliation" and "reprisal" are, insofar as pertinent, synonymous, i.e., they refer in sum to acts of putting or inflicting in return, as with an injury or wrong. Webster's Third New International Dictionary (G & C Merriam Co., 1981). A no-retaliation agreement in the context of a strike settlement, as here, should be given its generally accepted meaning, in light of applicable Board precedent, unless extrinsic evidence indicates that the parties intended otherwise.[7]

The credited evidence adduced at the hearing confirms rather than contradicts the General Counsel's position. First, at no time did the parties say or agree that the no-retaliation clause would not apply to internal union discipline. Indeed, prior to writing up the memorandum of agreement, Attorney Garden made clear to the Union that the Company wanted a clear understanding that there would be no retaliation by the Union against employees who crossed the picket line. It is undisputed that nothing else was said between the parties on this subject at any other time during the negotiations and, specifically, that nothing was said when the parties went over the clause at issue. Therefore, as internal union discipline would constitute "retaliation" under both Board law and plain English, the clause should be so interpreted. Second, the agreement in context would make no sense unless it covered internal union discipline. At the hearing, the Union argued in sum that by the no-retaliation clause, the parties agreed that the Union would withdraw its charges against the Company, there would be no sabotage by employees, the Company would not retaliate against returning strikers, and the Company would not take disciplinary action against employees because of picket line misconduct. However, it is questionable at best whether the pendency of unfair labor practices would be regarded as an act of "retaliation." For the reasons previously discussed, the evidence indicates that the Company was not concerned about the pending charges, and the Union did not contemplate that they were covered by the agreement. In its brief (Br. 4) the Union attaches significance to the fact that the agreement referred to "both parties," i.e., the Company and the Union, and "does not incorporate, by its terms, individual union members." However, the agreement in Office Employees similarly referred to reprisals "by either side." If I were to carry the Union's argument to its logical conclusion, it would mean that the agreement might not apply to acts of sabotage because such acts might constitute individual rather than union action. However, internal union discipline would constitute union action, i.e., action by one of the parties to the agreement. Moreover, company discrimination against returning strikers and acts of sabotage by returning strikers would constitute, respectively, unlawful and unprotected conduct, whether the parties had an agreement. It is unlikely that the parties would be concerned that the other refrain from doing that which in any event would be unlawful. Rather, it is probable that the parties, in the interest of reaching a "settlement providing for industrial peace" agreed to refrain from doing that which they could or might lawfully do in the absence of an agreement. Office Employees, supra, 267 NLRB at 1021 (1981). Therefore, it is evident that the Company agreed to refrain from taking disciplinary action against employees because of picket line misconduct, and the Union agreed that it would not impose internal discipline on its members as a result of their conduct during the strike.[8]

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. The Company is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

2. The Union is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

3. By imposing fines on Harold Edelman, Melvin Emerson, Larry DeSmith, Douglas Forester, Donald Johnson, James Reiter, and Richard Schneider, in contravention of a strike-contract settlement agreement between the Company and the Union, the Union engaged in unfair labor practices within the meaning of Section 8(b)(1)(A) of the Act.

[7] I do not agree with the General Counsel's argument (Br. 3–4) that I am precluded by the parol evidence rule from considering any evidence of the parties' intent beyond the language of the agreement itself. The question presented is one of contract interpretation, which should be governed by the intentions of the parties. NLRB v. Ortiz Funeral Home Corp., 651 F.2d 136, 139–140 (2d Cir. 1981). This is also a case involving the alleged relinquishment of a right protected by Section 7 and Section 8(b)(1)(A) of the Act. Compare Indianapolis Power Co., 273 NLRB 1715 (1985), revd. and remanded sub nom. Electrical Workers IBEW Local 1395 v. NLRB, 797 F.2d 1027 (D.C. Cir. 1986). Indeed, in Office Employees, the most recent decision relied on by the General Counsel, the administrative law judge expressly took into consideration the negotiations and other statements by the parties. This is not a case such as those cited by the General Counsel Hawaii Teamsters Local 996 (Dairymen's Assn.), 111 NLRB 1220 (1955); Seattle Bakers' Bureau, 101 NLRB 1344 (1953); and Peterson & Lytle, 60 NLRB 1070 (1945), in which a party seeks to present evidence of a prior or contemporaneous understanding that would clearly be at variance with or supplemental to the written agreement. Rather the meaning of the written agreement itself is at issue, and therefore the parties may adduce evidence concerning their discussions, or lack of discussion, concerning the clause.

[8] I reject the General Counsel's alternative argument that the fines were unlawful at least in part because they were unreasonable in amount. In determining the lawfulness of union fines on members or former members, the Board does not consider whether the fines are reasonable in amount. NLRB v. Boeing Co., 412 U.S. 67 (1973).

4. The aforesaid unfair labor practices affect commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

REMEDY

Having found that the Union has committed violations of Section 8(b)(1)(A) of the Act, I shall recommend that it be required to cease and desist therefrom and from like or related conduct, to post appropriate notices, and to furnish and give appropriate notices to the Company. I shall further recommend that the Union be ordered to rescind the fines imposed on the above-named employees, remove all records of the disciplinary actions taken against them, and to refund any such fines or part thereof that has been paid, with interest thereon to be computed in the manner and amount prescribed in Florida Steel Corp., 231 NLRB 651 (1977).[9] I am rejecting the General Counsel's request for a visitatorial clause because the General Counsel has failed to demonstrate that there are circumstances in this case that warrant such a remedy. See Rebel Coal Co., 279 NLRB 141 fn. 2 (1986).

On these findings of fact and conclusions of law and on the entire record, I issue the following recommended[10]

ORDER

The Respondent, Local 792, Allied Sales Drivers, Ambulance, Beer Brewery, Grain Elevator, Retail Liquor, Livery, Malt House, Spring Water, Soft Drink, Taxicab, Vending Drivers, Helpers, Inside Employees and General Workers Union, affiliated with International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen and Helpers of America, its officers, agents, and representatives, shall

1. Cease and desist from

(a) Imposing fines or other discipline on employees who crossed or worked behind its picket line during the strike against Johnson Bros. Wholesale Liquor Co. in December 1985, in contravention of the strike-conduct settlement agreement between the parties.

(b) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of rights guaranteed them by Section 7 of the Act.

2. Take the following affirmative action necessary to effectuate the policies of the Act.

(a) Rescind the fines imposed on Harold Edelman, Melvin Emerson, Larry DeSmith, Douglas Forester, Donald Johnson, James Reiter, and Richard Schneider, remove all records of the disciplinary actions against them, and notify each of them in writing that this has been done.

(b) Refund any such fines or part thereof that has been paid, with interest, as set forth in the remedy section of this decision.

(c) Post at its offices and meeting halls, copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix."[11] Copies of the notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 18, after being signed by the Respondent's authorized representative, shall be posted by the Respondent immediately upon receipt and maintained for 60 consecutive days in conspicuous places including all places where notices to members are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by the Respondent to ensure that the notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(d) Furnish to the Regional Director for Region 18, signed copies of the notice for posting, if Johnson Bros. Wholesale Liquor Co. is willing, at its St. Paul facility, in the places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Copies of the notice, to be furnished by the Regional Director for Region 18, after being signed by Respondent's representative, shall be forthwith returned to the Regional Director for posting.

(e) Notify the Regional Director in writing within 20 days from the date of this Order, what steps the Respondent has taken to comply.

27 February 1987

DECISION AND ORDER

BY CHAIRMAN DOTSON AND MEMBERS JOHANSEN AND BABSON

On 28 June 1985 Administrative Law Judge Russell M. King Jr. issued the attached decision. The Respondent filed exceptions and a supporting brief, and the General Counsel filed an opposing brief.

The National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the decision and the record in light of the exceptions and briefs and has decided to affirm the judge's rulings, findings,[1] and conclusions and to adopt the recommended Order.

The judge found that the Respondent Union violated Section 8(b)(7)(C) of the Act by picketing at the Cranberry Mall Shop 'N Save (the Employer), primarily to obtain recognition, without a petition under Section 9(c) having been filed within a reasonable period of time from the commencement of such picketing. The Union in its exceptions contends, inter alia, that the judge erred by failing to conclude that a meritorious 8(a)(2) charge in an earlier case filed against the Employer, Case 6–CA–17666, served as a complete defense to the finding of an 8(b)(7)(C) violation in the instant case. The General Counsel, in her answering brief, contends that the Board has long held that the filing of meritorious charges under Section 8(a)—save those involving a meritorious 8(a)(5) refusal-to-bargain charge—do not excuse a picketing union from the obligation to a file representation petition under Section 9(c). Hod Carriers Local 408 (Blinne Construction Co.), 135 NLRB 1153, 1166 fn. 24 (1962).

We agree with the General Counsel that Blinne, above, controls the instant case. In Blinne, the Board, after reviewing the legislative history of Section 8(b)(7), determined that Congress was unwilling to write an exemption into Section 8(b)(7)(C) dispensing with the need to file a representation petition whenever employer unfair labor practices were alleged. In this regard, the Board specifically noted that Congress rejected a proposed amendment to Section 10(l) that would have made any unfair labor practice under Section 8(a) a defense to a charge of an 8(b)(7) violation.[2] Blinne recognized only one situation in which a representation petition would not be required under Section 8(b)(7)(C): when a meritorious 8(a)(5) charge had been filed, which would moot the unresolved question concerning representation, and thereby result in dismissal of the petition.

Here, the credited evidence clearly establishes that the Union's many months of picketing at the store had a recognitional object, albeit it may also have had other objects of protesting alleged area standards violations or protesting the Employer's alleged 8(a)(2) violations. No timely election petition was filed, and no meritorious 8(a)(5) charge existed that would have mooted the underlying question concerning representation. Accordingly, under Blinne, Section 8(b)(7)(C) is applicable and a violation of Section 8(b)(7)(C) has occurred.

The judge also found that the outcome of the instant case was not affected by the Union's then pending appeal before the Third Circuit regarding the Regional Director's approval of informal settlement agreements in Case 6–CA–17666 as well as in other related cases filed by the Union against the predecessor employer and the allegedly assisted union.[3] Because the issuance of the judge's decision, the Third Circuit on 16 April 1986 vacated the informal settlement agreements and remanded the cases to the Board for an evidentiary hearing on the Union's objections to the settlement agreements.[4] The Board thereafter filed a petition for certiorari before the Supreme Court, which was granted on 12 January 1987. In our view, these subsequent events do not warrant a contrary result for the same reason, set forth above, that even a meritorious 8(a)(2) charge is not a defense to an alleged 8(b)(7) violation, Blinne, above. At most, a meritorious 8(a)(2) charge precludes application for a restraining order pursuant to Section 10(l). Thus, even if, as a result of a later Court ruling, the earlier unfair labor practice charges ultimately should go to a hearing and be found meritorious—and therefore a valid object of the picketing—the fact remains that the Union picketed the Employer's

[1] The Respondent has excepted to some of the judge's credibility findings. The Board's established policy is not to overrule an administrative law judge's credibility resolutions unless the clear preponderance of all the relevant evidence convinces us that they are incorrect. Standard Dry Wall Products, 91 NLRB 544 (1950), enfd. 188 F.2d 362 (3d Cir. 1951). We have carefully examined the record and find no basis for reversing the findings.

[2] Blinne at 1165. Sec. 10(l) merely provides, in pertinent part, that a Board "officer or regional attorney shall not apply for any restraining order under section 8(b)(7) if a charge against the employer under section 8(a)(2) has been filed and after the preliminary investigation, he has reasonable cause to believe that such charge is true and that a complaint should issue."

[3] The judge relied on the approval of the settlements as having "removed any possibility that unfair labor practices could be a valid objective of picketing in this case, notwithstanding the fact that the [U]nion objected to the settlement[s]."

store with a recognitional object for more than 30 days without a representation petition having been filed and thereby violated Section 8(b)(7)(C).[5]

ORDER

The National Labor Relations Board adopts the recommended Order of the administrative law judge and orders that the Respondent, United Food and Commerical Workers International Union, Local Union 23, AFL–CIO–CLC, its officers, agents, and representatives, shall take the action set forth in the Order.

[5] The judge concluded that the Union unlawfully picketed at the store between 24 September 1984 and 26 April 1985, the date a temporary injunction was obtained. We note, however, that the start of the 10(b) limitation period was 4 October 1984. Therefore, and in light of our decision, the finding of a violation dates from 4 October 1984. Accordingly, we amend Conclusion of Law 3 to read as follows: "That by picketing the Company's Mars, Pennsylvania store with picket signs between 4 October 1984 and 26 April 1985, the Respondent Union violated Section 8(b)(7)(C) of the Act."

Barton A. Myers, Esq., for the General Counsel.

DECISION

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

RUSSELL M. KING JR., Administrative Law Judge. This case was heard by me in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, on 14 and 15 May 1985. The charge was filed by the Employer, Vic's Markets, Inc. d/b/a Cranberry Mall Shop 'N Save (the Store or Company) on 4 April 1985,[2] and the complaint was issued on 19 April 1985 by the Regional Director for Region 6 of the National Labor Relations Board on behalf of the General Counsel.[3] The complaint alleges that the United Food and Commercial Workers International Union, Local Union 23, AFL–CIO–CLC (the Union) unlawfully demanded that the Company recognize it as the exclusive collective-bargaining representative of its employees at its store in Mars, Pennsylvania, by unlawfully picketing the store with signs indicating that the Store had committed unfair labor practices and did not comply with area standards, all in violation of Section 8(b)(7)(C) of the National Labor Relations Act.[4]

The Union, in its answer, defends the complaint on four grounds. First, the Union contends the picketing was not for recognitional purposes. Second, the Union alleges that at the time of the picketing, there was a pending unfair labor practice charge by the union against the store that has not been remedied because of an invalid settlement agreement. Third, the union claims that the complaint alleges unfair labor practices barred by the limitation period contained in Section 10(b) of the Act, and thus the entire complaint should be dismissed. Last, the Union contends that the picketing the Union engaged in was protected by Section 8(c) of the Act and the first amendment to the United States Constitution.

On the entire record, including my observation of the demeanor of the witnesses, and after due consideration of the briefs filed by the General Counsel and counsel for the union, I make the following

I. JURISDICTION

The pleadings and admissions established the following jurisdictional facts. At all times material, the Company, a Pennsylvania corporation with facilities located in Pittsburgh, Gibsonia, and Mars, Pennsylvania, has been engaged in the retail sale of groceries. The Company's

[1] Reehl was not present on the second day of the hearing.

[2] The word "store," when used, will also and often refer to the actual facility involved in the case.

[3] The term "General Counsel," when used, will normally refer to the attorney in the case acting on behalf of the General Counsel of the Board through the Regional Director.

It shall be an unfair labor practice for a labor organization or its agents—

. . . .

(7) to picket or cause to be picketed, or threatened to picket or cause to be picketed, any employer where an object thereof is forcing or requiring an employer to recognize or bargain with a labor organization as the representative of his employees, or forcing or requiring the employees of an employer to accept or select such labor organization as their collective-bargaining representative, unless such labor organization is currently certified as the representative of such employees:

(A) where the employer has lawfully recognized, in accordance with this Act [subchapter] and other labor organization and a question concerning representation may not appropriately be raised under Section 9(c) of this Act [section 159(c) of this title].

(B) where, within the preceding twelve months a valid election under Section 9(c) of this Act [section 159(c) of this title] has been conducted, or

(C) where such picketing has been conducted without a petition under Section 9(c) [section 159(c) of this title] being filed within a reasonable period of time not to exceed thirty days from the commencement of such picketing: Provided, That when such a petition has been filed the Board shall forthwith, without regard to the provisions of Section 9(c)(1) [section 159(c) of this title] or the absence of a showing of a substantial interest of the labor organization, direct an election in such a unit as the Board finds to be appropriate and shall certify the results thereof: Provided further, That nothing in this subparagraph (C) shall be construed to prohibit any picketing or other publicity for the purpose of truthfully advising the public (including consumers) that an employer does not employ members of, or have a contract with, a labor organization, unless an effect of such picketing is to induce any individual employed by any other person in the course of his employment, not to pick up, deliver or transport any goods or not to perform any services.

Nothing in this paragraph (7) shall be construed to permit any act which would otherwise be an unfair labor practice under this Section 8(b) [this subsection].

[5] The facts found are based on the record as a whole and on my observation of the witnesses. The credibility resolutions have been derived from a review of the entire record, with due regard for the logic of probability, the demeanor of the witnesses, and the teaching of NLRB v. Walton Mfg. Co., 369 U.S. 404, 408 (1962). Regarding those testifying in contradiction of the findings, their testimony has been discredited either as having been in conflict with the testimony of credible witnesses, or because it was in and of itself incredible and unworthy of belief. All testimony and evidence, regardless of whether or not mentioned or alluded to, has been reviewed and weighed in light of the entire record.

store in Mars is the only facility directly involved in this case. The Company purchased and commenced operations at the Mars' store about 24 September 1984,[6] and in the course and conduct of its business operations at the Mars' store the Company has derived gross revenue in excess of $500,000. Also during that period the Company, in the course and conduct of its business operations, purchased and received at its Mars' store products, goods, and materials valued in excess of $50,000 directly from points located outside of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania. Thus, I find, as alleged and admitted, that the Company has been at all times material an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

Also, as alleged and admitted, I find that at all times material the Union has been, and is now, a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

II. ALLEGED UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES

A. Background and Initial Facts

Victor Wukits, the company's president, purchased the store in Mars on 24 September from Charlie Brothers Company, Inc. (Charlie's), and thus became a successor employer. In April Charlie's had granted recognition to the United Steelworkers of America, Local 23 (Steelworkers) as the exclusive collective-bargaining representative of its nonsupervisory employees, and in May Charlie's entered into a collective-bargaining agreement with the Steelworkers effective 29 April 1985 and expiring 30 April 1988. The Union in this case was apparently a competing union with the Steelworkers in the Spring of 1984 and after Charlie's recognized the Steelworkers, the Union in this case filed unfair labor practice charges against both Charlie's and the Steelworkers, alleging that Charlie's had unlawfully recognized and given aid and support to the Steelworkers in violation of Section 8(a)(2) of the Act, and that the Steelworkers had unlawfully accepted such recognition in violation of Section 8(b)(1)(A) of the Act. The Regional Director issued a complaint against Charlie's and the Steelworkers as a result of the charge. Wukit's knew of this fact when he purchased the store on 24 September and he also knew that the Union in this case had been picketing the store since at least July. However, when Wukits purchased the store he also recognized the Steelworkers as the collective-bargaining representative of the employees and adopted the contract that had been entered into between Charlie's and the Steelworkers effective 29 April. As a result thereof, the Union continued picketing the Store, continued to obtain its own signed union authorization cards from the employees, and continued to pursue organizing attempts at the Store. It was stipulated in the case that during the months of May, June, and July the union had obtained 73 signed union authorization cards from the Store's employees and further obtained an additional signed card in March 1985.[7] On 5 October the Union filed additional unfair labor practice charges against the Store and its new owner and on 14 November the Regional Director issued a complaint against the Store, which again charged the Store with unlawfully recognizing and rendering unlawful assistance and support to the Steelworkers, in violation of Section 8(a)(2) of the Act (Case 6–CA–17666). Throughout this period of time the Union continued to picket the Store with picket signs which included allegations that the store was guilty of unfair labor practices. On 26 November a settlement was entered into by the Store and the Steelworkers in the earlier case against Charlie's and the more recent case against the Store, and although the Union in this case was listed as a party to that settlement agreement, it refused to enter into the agreement. The Regional Director approved the settlement over the objections of the Union, and the Union appealed that approval to the General Counsel, who denied the appeal on 22 January.[8] The major thrust of the settlement was the rejection by the Store of the Steelworkers and their earlier contract. After this settlement the Union continued to picket the Store with signs alleging unfair labor practices, and continued its attempts to obtain recognition by the Store and its owner, Wukits. This picketing ceased on 6 March 1985 but again commenced on 18 March,[9] but with the picket signs alleging the failure of the Store to meet area standards. On 8 April the picket signs were again changed to allege unfair labor practices by the Store. Prior to the 26 November settlement, the Union had not filed a petition for representation with the Board, apparently because of the pending unfair labor practice charges by the Union both against Charlie's and the Steelworkers, and later against the Store's new ownership, and the Board's so-called "blocking policy," under which a labor organization could not obtain a Board-conducted election during the pendency of unfair labor practice charges. After the cases themselves were settled and the Union's appeal to the General Counsel of the settlement approval by the Regional Director was denied on 22 January, about 26 February the Union filed a petition for review of that approval in the United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit and the record in this case reflects as yet no final disposition of that petition for review.[10] As indicated earlier, the Union's picketing at the store continued with only a short interruption between 6 and 18 March. The Union to date has not filed a petition for representation with the Board pursuant to Section 9(c) of the Act. The Regional Director issued the complaint in this case on 19 April and pursuant to Section 10(l) of the Act, also obtained a temporary injunction against the Union and its picketing in the ap-

[6] All dates in July through December are in 1984, and all dates in January through June are in 1985.

[8] In his brief, counsel for the Union alleges that settlement negotiations were held and the settlement was reached without the Union's knowledge, and cites a statement to that effect in his letter of appeal to the General Counsel. That letter of appeal was admitted into evidence over the objection of the General Counsel. Other than the allegation in the brief and the statement in the letter of appeal, there is no other record evidence or testimony to support the contention.

[9] The Union claims the picketing again commenced on the 25 March. This dispute will be discussed later.

[10] Throughout all the appeals the Union has requested an evidentiary hearing on its objections to the settlement agreement.

propriate United States District Court on 26 April. That temporary injunction presumably will remain in effect until final disposition of this case.

B. The Specific Acts of Picketing and Organizational Attempts of the Union

As indicated earlier, picketing at the store commenced in July 1984, and except for a short period in March 1985, the picketing continued on a daily basis until the Union was legally enjoined from such picketing on 26 April. This picketing normally consisted of two individual picketers and at least one picket sign, and except for the period between 18 March and 8 April, the picket signs alleged that the store was guilty of unfair labor practices. Victor Wukits purchased the store on 24 September but prior thereto, and sometime in early to mid-September, Union trustee Carl Huber telephoned Wukits and indicated that he wanted to talk to Wukits about "accreting" the collective-bargaining contract which the Union had recently negotiated and entered into with the other two stores that Wukits owned. At that time Wukits essentially rejected any such conversations.[11] Sometime in mid-October two individuals identifying themselves as representing the Union came into the store, one of which was Black. Wukits testified that the black individual identified himself as one "Gregory Hazlett" or something similar.[12] Wukits testified that the black man gave him "a card," which he has since lost, and that this individual also indicated that he wanted to speak to him about getting rid of the pickets in front of the store, and further indicated that he wanted to discuss a collective-bargaining agreement with him. Wukits referred both individuals to a firm named Human Resources Management, Inc. (HRM), a labor consulting firm that represented Vic's Markets, Inc. In late January union business agent Patrick Monaco, who was assigned by the Union to administer the two contracts at the company's other stores, telephoned the store's roving Supervisor James Maccaglia and asked him to speak to Wukits about accreting the other two contracts to the Mars Store.[13] Maccaglia testified that he related his conversation to Wukits, who never responded to Monaco's request. Thus, and approximately 2 weeks later, Monaco again telephoned Maccaglia with the same request, and again Wukits never responded. In approximately mid-February Monaco talked with Wukits in person at the Gibsonia store and according to Wukits, Monaco stated, ". . . if you sit down and talk to him [Union trustee Huber] about accreting the contract, he'll get the pickets out of there." Wukits then indicated his desire not to discuss the matter of accretion and that he did not think it would be legal to engage in such discussions, and again referred Monaco to his labor consultant HRM, indicating that he should specifically contact one Richard Goclano of HRM. Goclano testified that Monaco did telephone him in late February about attempting to set up a meeting with himself, Union Trustee Huber and Wukits to discuss recognition of the Union and the implementation of a contract at the Mars store. According to Goclano, Monaco also related that he had attempted to set up such a meeting directly with Wukits and Maccaglia, but had been unsuccessful. Goclano's reply to Monaco's request was negative at that time, and Goclano met in person with Monaco the first week of March 1985, whereupon Monaco renewed his request for a meeting to discuss recognition and a contract at Mars, and Goclano firmly indicated that at that time that he did not think such a meeting and discussions would be appropriate.

On 6 March 1985 the pickets at the Store were removed and two staff organizers for the Union came to and entered the store and had conversations with at least two employees and also handed them cards. Supervisor Maccaglia was in the Store at that time and after watching this activity he asked both organizers to leave, and after a short confrontation both organizers left.[14] Maccaglia indicated that later on that afternoon one of the organizers returned and approached employee John Peterman who was outside of the Store collecting shopping carts in the parking lot. Peterman testified that he was approached by organizer Krampert while in the parking lot and that Krampert suggested they both meet in a local bar after work. Peterman did meet Krampert in the bar after work and Peterman testified that Krampert asked him to sign a union authorization card, which he did, but using a false last name. The two staff organizers continued to solicit employees outside of the Store and in the parking lot for a period of time after March 6 but according to Kean, their attempts to solicit the support of the store's employees were unsuccessful.[15] According to Maccaglia and Wukits, the pickets reappeared in front of the Store on 18 March and the picket signs then alleged that the Store violated area wage and other standards, as opposed to alleging that the Store was guilty of unfair labor practices.[16]

[12] It was stipulated in this case that one Gregory C. Hamblet was an employee of the United Food and Commercial Workers International Union and was assigned to assist the Union (Local 23) in the Pittsburgh area in organizing activities during the period from 6 October to the end of October 1984, and that he was a black man. No individual by the name of "Hazlett" or Hamblet testified in the case.

[14] One Ronald Kean testified on behalf of the Union in this case. His position was the director of organizing for the union. Kean admitted that he sent the two staff organizers to the store on 6 March and identified them as Sandra Thompson and Douglas Krampert.

[15] Store Supervisor Maccaglia indicated that the two staff organizers remained outside for a 2-week period after 6 March, but Kean testified that they remained only 1 week. Other than Kean, the director of organizing, only one other witness was called on behalf of the Union in the case and that was the Union's bookkeeper, Rita Nist.

[16] There is a dispute in this case about whether the pickets reappeared on 18 or 25 March. Bookkeeper Rita Nist was called for the purpose of proving that the picketing resumed on 25 March, through certain records that she kept. All of the pickets at the Store had been hired, outside pickets. Nist was responsible for the union's payroll and thus for making payment to these pickets. Certain of Nist's payroll records were admitted into evidence that did tend to indicate that payments did not resume until 25 March. However, she also conceded that the information in her records were derived from reports she had received and both she and Kean conceded that they never visited the Store at any time relevant in this case. On the other hand, Wukits and Maccaglia were definite and certain in their testimony that the pickets reappeared on March 18, and I so find that such was the case.

The Union's attorney James Reehl sent a letter to the store which was received on 25 March. In that letter a demand was made that the store meet the minimum standards of wages, hours, and working conditions for all retail store employees in the area. The letter also contained the following statement: "This letter is not intended as a demand upon you to sign a contract with Local 23 . . . . " The store's attorney, Daniel W. Cooper, replied to Attorney Reehl's letter on 3 April and that letter indicated the store's intention to file unfair labor practices charges with the Board if the union's picketing continued. On 4 April the Store did file such charges that eventually led to the issuance of the complaint in this case on 19 April. About 8 April the picket signs were again changed alleging the Company to be guilty of unfair labor practices, and on 26 April 1985 the Union was legally enjoined from picketing the store.

C. Evaluation of Evidence and Law and Initial Conclusions

Sometime prior to 24 September, the date the Company purchased the Mars store, Union Trustee Carl Huber approached the Company's President Victor Wukits and requested that Wukits recognize the union as the sole representative of the Store's nonsupervisory for employees the purposes of collective bargaining. Huber also asked Wukits to extend the existing contracts at the Company's other two stores to the Mars' store by "accretion." Wukits refused.[17] In mid-October two union representatives came to the store and talked to Wukits about getting rid of the pickets and discussing a collective-bargaining agreement. In late January and early February Union Business Agent Monaco telephoned Store Supervisor Maccaglia and asked him to talk to Wukits about extending or "accreting" the union contracts with those existing at the Company's other two stores. In mid-February Monaco talked personally with Wukits at the Company's Gibsonia store about accreting the contract and getting rid of the pickets at the Mars store. In late February and early March Monaco talked the Company's labor consultant, Goclano, about the same subject.[18] From 6 to 18 March the pickets were removed and on 6 March the Union admittedly sent two organizers to the store to solicit support for the union and signed Union authorization cards. Although they actually entered the store on 6 March they continued their organizing activities outside of the store until 18 March, when pickets reappeared with picket signs then alleging the store's failure to follow area standards. Some 21 days later, on 8 April, the picket signs were changed back to allege unfair labor practices by the store. The pickets and signs remained until the temporary injunction was obtained on 26 April.

Section 8(b)(7) of the Act was added by Congress to the Act in 1959 to proscribed picketing by an uncertified Union when "an" object of such picketing is recognition or organization. Laborers Local 840 (Blinne Construction, 135 NLRB 1153 (1962). If either recognition or organization is found to be "an" object of the picketing, the limitations of Section 8(b)(7) will apply despite the existence of other legitimate objectives. Machinists Local 1173 (Alabama Motors), 266 NLRB 91 (1983); Electrical Workers IBEW Local 265 (R P & M Electric), 236 NLRB 1333 (1978), enfd. 604 F.2d 1091 (8th Cir. 1979); Houston Bldg. Trades Council (Everett Construction), 136 NLRB 321 (1962).[19] More specifically Section 8(b)(7) makes unlawful organizational or recognitional picketing by an uncertified union when another union has been lawfully recognized by the employer under Section 9(c) of the Act (8(b)(7)(A)), when a valid election had been held within the preceeding 12 months (8(b)(7)(B)), or when no petition for an election had been filed within a reasonable period of time not to exceed 30 days from the commencement of the picketing (8(b)(7)(C)), as alleged in this case. The object of the picketing must be ascertained from the union's overall conduct. Operating Engineers Local 4 (Seward Construction), 193 NLRB 632 (1971); Teamsters Local 618 (S & R Auto Parts), 193 NLRB 714 (1971). This may include events which precede as well as those that accompany the picketing. Retail Clerks Local 345 (Gem of Syracuse), 145 NLRB 1168, 1172 (1964). Other factors that tend to show a recognitional or organizational objective include oral requests to employees to join the Union and an indication that pickets will be removed only when recognition is received. Gem of Syracuse, supra; Retail Clerks Local 212 (Maxam Buffalo), 140 NLRB 1258, 1265 (1963).

I find and conclude in this case that the Union's picketing at the Mars' store after 24 September was primarily (if not solely) to obtain recognition, and thus violative of Section 8(b)(7)(C) of the Act as alleged in the complaint. I find that the Union's temporary change to claims of violations of area standards by the store is in no way inconsistent with the above conclusion. Electrical Workers IBEW Local 265 (R P & M Electric), supra. I further find that the pending appeal before the Third Circuit regarding approval of the settlement of the earlier cases does not affect the outcome of this case. The administrative determination by the General Counsel to dispose of those cases removed any possibility that unfair labor practices could be a valid objective of picketing in this case, notwithstanding the fact that the Union objected to the settlement. Waiters & Bartenders Local 500 (Mission Valley Inn), 140 NLRB 433 (1963).[20] In its brief, the Union cites two cases as contrary authority, Hotel & Restaurants Employees Local 274 (Warwick Caterers), 269 NLRB 482 (1984), and Mistletoe Express Service, 268 NLRB 1245 (1984). In my opinion, those cases are distinguishable from this case. In Warwick the Union had filed 8(a)(5), (3), and (1) charges against the employer claiming representation under the successorship or alter ego theory. The Regional Director dismissed the charges and the General Counsel approved the dismissal. The union then picketed the employer, who thereafter filed 8(b)(7)(C) charges against the union and the Regional Director issued a complaint based on those charges. The judge found a violation after refusing to consider the union's representation defense, which was the basis of its earlier 8(a)(5) charge. The Board reversed and remanded the case to the judge with instructions to consider the union's defense. In the instant case there was no representation issue or 8(a)(5) issue, and no incumbent or intervenor union after the earlier settlement. See Blinne Construction Co., supra. Mistletoe was a representation case. The petitioning union filed a representation petition with the Board and thereafter Sections 8(a)(2) and 8(b)(1)(A) unfair labor practice charges against the Employer and intervenor Union. The Regional Director ultimately decided to grant the petitioning Union's request to waive the Board's blocking rule and proceed with the representation case, including both Unions. The Employer appealed the Regional Director's decision to the Board, alleging that the pending 8(a)(2) charge should block the representation proceeding, and the Board agreed. Again, in the instant case there is no representation issue. The Union's fourth defense in its answer alleged that the Union's picketing was protected by Section 8(c) of the Act and the first amendment to the Constitution, i.e., a freedom of speech assertion. I also find this defense to be without merit, and I note further in this regard that the defense was not mentioned or discussed in the union's brief.

[17] This conversation, among others, were alleged as specific violations in the complaint. Because it was definitely outside the 6-month limitation period contained in Sec. 10(b) of the Act, at the hearing the Union moved to dismiss the entire complaint, or in the alternative, to strike any reference to the conversation in the complaint, citing Machinists Local 1424 (Bryan Mfg.) v. NLRB, 362 U.S. 411 (1960) (also cited in the Union's brief). I ruled the reference to the conversation could remain in the complaint although indicating it could not, and would not constitute any violation of the Act, and that I would consider it, if at all, only as background evidence, and then only if supported by testimony in the case. Huber did not testify in the case. Wukits did creditably testify in the case, and about this and other conversations. Accordingly, I accept the conversation and the reference to it in the complaint only as background evidence. I note also that Bryan Mfg. supra, also held that when occurrences within the 10(b) limitation period in and of themselves constitute unfair labor practices, earlier events may be utilized to shed light on the true character of the matters occurring within the limitation period. I thus find the Union's 10(b) limitation defense to be without merit.

[18] The settlement agreement in the earlier unfair labor practice case was admitted into evidence. It was approved by the Regional Director on 27 November and contained an immediate 60-day posting provision and a notice that was extensive and complete. Thus, a considerable part of the timeframe involved was also a posting period for the Store. Both Wukits and Goclano testified that they had doubts about the legality of even talking to any of the Union's representatives during the posting period.

On the foregoing findings of fact and initial conclusions, and on the entire record, I make the following

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. That the Charging Company is an employer within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

2. That the Respondent Union is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of that Act.

3. That by picketing the Company's Mars, Pennsylvania store with picket signs between 24 September 1984 and 26 April 1985, the Respondent Union violated Section 8(b)(7)(C) of the Act.

4. That the violation found in paragraph 3 above, affected commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

THE REMEDY

Having found that Respondent Union, United Food and Commercial Workers International Union, Local Union 23, AFL–CIO–CLC has engaged in certain unfair labor practices, we shall order it to cease and desist therefrom and take certain affirmative action that we find necessary to effectuate the policies of the Act, as set forth below.

On these findings of fact and conclusions of law and on the entire record, I issue the following recommended[21]

ORDER

The Respondent, United Food and Commercial Workers International Union, Local 23, AFL–CIO–CLC, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall

1. Cease and desist from picketing, or causing to be picketed, the premises of the Employer, Vic's Market Inc. d/b/a Cranberry Mall Shop 'N Save, with an object of forcing or requiring the Employer to recognize or bargain with the Union as the representative of its employees or to force or require the employees of the Employer to accept or select the Union as their collective-bargaining representative, the Union not being currently certified as the representative of such employees, and a petition under Section 9(c) of the Act not having been filed within a reasonable period of time from the commencement of such picketing.

2. Take the following affirmative action necessary to effectuate the policies of the Act.

(a) Post at its business offices copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix."[22] Copies of the notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 6, after being signed by the Respondent's authorized representative, shall be posted by the Respondent immediately upon receipt and maintained for 60 consecutive days in conspicuous places including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by the Respondent to ensure that the notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(b) Notify the Regional Director in writing within 20 days from the date of this Order what steps the Respondent has taken to comply.

[20] The Union's appeal is based on the Third Circuit's holding in Leeds & Northrup Co. v. NLRB, 357 F.2d 529 (1966), wherein the court held that a charging party is entitled to an evidentiary hearing on its objections to an informal settlement agreement. The circuits are split on the issue, and as counsel well knows, I am duty bound to follow Board law in the absence of a clear U.S. Supreme Court mandate. I note again, however, that the posted notice included in the settlement is lengthy and appears to be complete.

[22] If this Order is enforced by a judgment of a United States court of appeals, the words in the notice reading "Posted by Order of the National Labor Relations Board" shall read "Posted Pursuant to a Judgment of the United States Court of Appeals Enforcing an Order of the National Labor Relations Board."

DECISION AND ORDER

BY MEMBERS JOHANSEN, STEPHENS, AND CRACRAFT

On 24 September 1986 Administrative Law Judge Thomas D. Johnston issued the attached decision. The Respondents filed exceptions and a supporting brief, and the General Counsel filed limited exceptions and a brief in support of her exceptions and of the judge's decision.

The National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the decision and the record in light of the exceptions and briefs and has decided to affirm the judge's rulings, findings,[1] and conclusions[2] and to adopt the recommended Order.[3]

[1] The Respondents have excepted to some of the judge's credibility findings. The Board's established policy is not to overrule an administrative law judge's credibility resolutions unless the clear preponderance of all the relevant evidence convinces us that they are incorrect. Standard Dry Wall Products, 91 NLRB 544 (1950), enfd. 188 F.2d 362 (3d Cir. 1951). We have carefully examined the record and find no basis for reversing the findings.

Sec. III,A, of the opinion refers to Store Manager Lonnie Tomlinson as female. We correct this inadvertent error of the judge. We also correct the opinion to reflect the correct spelling of "perjure," and to indicate that the accurate citation of NLRB v. Transportation Management Corp. is 462 U.S. 393. None of these errors affects our decision.

[2] We agree with Judge Johnston that the Respondents violated Sec. 8(a)(1) of the Act by discharging Store Manager Kelley because of his refusal to commit an unfair labor practice. The credited testimony establishes that Kelley was ordered by the Respondents to terminate the employment of all employees who had signed union authorization cards. After the discharges, Kelley was discharged for refusing to fill out termination slips showing pretextual reasons for the discharges of five employees who actually had been fired, on instructions from General Manager Dibler, for signing union authorization cards. Although those discharges are not before us in this proceeding, on the record before us there can be no doubt that we would find them unlawful if called on to decide the issue. Thus, when Dibler instructed Kelley to prepare the termination slips, he was trying to persuade Kelley to act in furtherance of the Respondents' unlawful activities by preparing false documentation to support the Respondents' position. In declining to go along with Dibler's repeated requests for the termination slips, Kelley was refusing to take part any further in the Respondents' unfair labor practices. It is well settled that an employer violates the Act by discharging a supervisor for refusing to commit an unfair labor practice. See Parker-Robb Chevrolet, 262 NLRB 402 (1982), enfd. 711 F.2d 383 (D.C. Cir. 1983). Accordingly, Kelley's discharge violated Sec. 8(a)(1).

[3] The General Counsel requests that the remedy include a visitatorial clause authorizing the Board, for compliance purposes, to obtain discovery from the Respondents under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure under the supervision of the United States court of appeals enforcing this Order. Under the circumstances of this case, we find it unnecessary to include such a clause and we deny the General Counsel's request.

ORDER

The National Labor Relations Board adopts the recommended Order of the administrative law judge and orders that the Respondents, Grady Delling, Individually, Country Boy Mr. "D" Corp. and Glenwood Inc. d/b/a Country Boy Markets, Midwest City, Oklahoma, their officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall take the action set forth in the Order.

Charles W. Ellis, Esq. (Lawrence, Ellis & Harmon, P.A.), of Oklahoma City, Oklahoma, for the Respondents.
Mark L. Reed, Esq., of Del City, Oklahoma, for the Charging Party.

DECISION

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

THOMAS D. JOHNSTON, Administrative Law Judge. This case was heard at Oklahoma City, Oklahoma, on 8 through 10 July 1986[1] pursuant to a first amended charge filed on 29 April 1986[2] in Case 16–CA–12544 by Mark Reed, attorney, and a sixth consolidated complaint[3] issued on 26 June.

The sixth consolidated complaint, as amended, alleges Grady Delling, Individually and Country Boy Mr. "D." Corp. d/b/a Country Boy Markets; Grady Delling, Individually and Glenwood Inc. d/b/a Country Boy Markets; and Grady Delling, Individually d/b/a Country Boy Markets (the Respondents) violated Section 8(a)(1) of the National Labor Relations Act (the Act), by discharging Store Manager Everett O.V. Kelley for refusing to falsify termination slips in order to establish a pretext for terminating employees as an integral part of a pattern of conduct directed towards employees because of their union activities and other concerted activities for the purpose of collective bargaining or mutual aid or protection.

The issue involved is whether the Respondents violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act by unlawfully discharging Store Manager Kelley for his refusal to commit unfair labor practices by falsifying termination slips in order to establish a pretext for terminating employees because of their union activities.

On the entire record in this case and from my observations of the witnesses, and after due consideration of the briefs filed by the General Counsel and the Respondents[5] I make the following[6]

FINDINGS OF FACT

I. THE BUSINESS OF THE RESPONDENTS

Grady Delling, Individually d/b/a Country Boy Markets, a sole proprietor with an office and place of business located at Midwest City, Oklahoma, is engaged in the retail operation of a chain of supermarket stores.

Country Boy Mr. "D" Corp., an Oklahoma corporation with an office and place of business located in Midwest City, Oklahoma d/b/a Country Boy Markets, is engaged in the retail operation of a chain of supermarket stores.

Glenwood, Inc., an Oklahoma corporation with an office and place of business located in Midwest City, Oklahoma d/b/a Country Boy Markets, is engaged in the retail operation of a chain of supermarket stores.

During the 12-month period preceding 26 June, Grady Delling, Individually, Country Boy Mr. "D" Corp. and Glenwood, Inc., d/b/a Country Boy Markets in the course of their operations each derived gross revenues in excess of $500,000 and each purchased and received goods and supplies, valued in excess of $5000, at their supermarket stores located in the State of Oklahoma directly from sources located outside the State of Oklahoma.

Grady Delling, Individually, Country Boy Mr. "D" Corp., and Glenwood Inc. d/b/a Country Boy Markets are affiliated business enterprises with common officers, ownership, directors, management, and supervisors; have a common labor policy affecting employees; have common premises and facilities; hold themselves out to the public as a single-integrated business enterprise; and are a single employer under the Act.

Grady Delling, Individually, Country Boy Mr. "D" Corp., and Glenwood Inc. d/b/a Country Boy Markets each separately and together are employers engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

II. THE LABOR ORGANIZATION INVOLVED

United Food and Commercial Workers Union, Local 1680 is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

III. THE UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES

A. Background

Respondents are engaged in the business of operating a chain of supermarket stores located at Midwest City, Oklahoma, and vicinity. Included among their official and supervisory personnel are Owner Grady Delling, General Manager over all the stores Wayne Dibler, Store Manager Lonnie Tomlinson, and former Store Manager Everett O. V. Kelley.[7]

Although several employees, including Tom Moran, David Link, and Donna Shields, testified Wayne Stevenson held the position of assistant store manager at store 2 under Store Manager Kelley and assigned them duties, approved schedule changes for some of them, allowed employees to leave work early, and made sure employees were doing their jobs, Wayne Stevenson described his authority over the employees as being only similar to that of the office clerical employees who worked there. Stevenson, who referred to his position as "sort of assistant manager" or "night manager," denied he ever hired or effectively recommended hiring employees, made the decision to fire employees, or recommended employees be fired. Store Manager Kelley, whom I credit, denied Stevenson held the title of assistant store manager, which is consistent with Stevenson's testimony, and stated when Stevenson closed up the store at night he would instruct Stevenson on what to do.

Absent as here any showing Stevenson possessed the statutory indicia of a supervisor within the meaning of Section 2(11) of the Act,[8] I find, contrary to the General Counsel's contention, that Stevenson was not a supervisor under the Act.

About the latter part of 1985 the Union began an organizing campaign among Respondent's employees. Some of the employees who signed union authorization cards were Tom Moran, David Ray, David Link, Donna Shields, and Sharmane Black. These employees all worked at Country Boy Markets store 2 under Store Manager Kelley. Moran signed his card on 29 December 1985 and on 5 January he accompanied Union Organizer Karen Wade to a couple of Respondents' other stores where they passed out union fliers. According to Wade while she and Moran were at the Glenwood Store she identified herself as a union organizer to Tim Dibler[9] who she believed was either the store manager or assistant store manager. Wade overheard Tim Dibler, who she also talked to about the Union, talking to his father General Manager Dibler on the telephone telling him they had a union organizer in the store and that he would keep her there until Dibler arrived. Afterwards General Manager Dibler came to the store and saw both Moran and Wade who spoke to him. However, General Manager Dibler only looked at them without saying anything and they left the store.

General Manager Dibler did not dispute the testimony of either Wade or Moran, which I credit regarding this incident.

Besides signing a union authorization card David Link also solicited another employee at work to sign a card.

The Respondents were admittedly opposed to the Union's organizing campaign.

Donna Shields stated General Manager Dibler in a meeting held with employees in Store Manager Kelley's

[5] The Charging Party did not submit a brief.

[6] Unless otherwise indicated the findings are based on the pleadings, admissions, stipulations, and undisputed evidence contained in the record, which I credit.

[8] Sec. 2(11) of the Act defines a supervisor as a person "having authority, in the interest of the employer, to hire, transfer, suspend, lay off, recall, promote, discharge, assign, reward, or discipline other employees, or responsibly to direct them, or to adjust their grievances, or effectively to recommend such action, if . . . such authority is not of a merely routine or clerical nature, but requires the use of independent judgment."

office told the employees not to talk about the union in the store. Shields, who I credit, denied this was limited to while employees were on duty. General Manager Dibler acknowledged telling employees not to talk about the Union in the store but said he told them not to do it on company time.

Wayne Stevenson testified about late December 1985 or early January General Manager Dibler, during a meeting at which Dibler spoke to Stevenson and another employee with Store Manager Kelley present, mentioned there had been a bunch of cards being passed around about the Union and he did not care or want to know whether they signed them. However, Dibler said unless Owner Delling wanted to go union they were not going union. Dibler mentioned they all knew what happened to Humpty[10] and Safeway was about to go out of business in Oklahoma because of the Union so unless Delling wanted to sign the bottom line they were not going union. Under cross-examination Stevenson said when Dibler made the statement Dibler was talking about signing a contract.

General Manager Dibler did not deny the testimony of Wayne Stevenson or Store Manager Tomlinson and I credit their undisputed testimony along with that of Donna Shields and find Dibler made the alleged statements that they attributed to him.

Store Manager Tomlinson testified that about the end of February, shortly after she became store manager, she was present at one of the meetings General Manager Dibler held with small groups of employees at which Dibler spoke about the Union. Tomlinson stated when one of the employees present asked if they would be terminated if they signed a union card, they said sign and find out.

Store Manager Tomlinson, whom I credit, also stated that shortly after she became a store manager, she held a meeting with employees during which she mentioned if the store did go union they would probably end up closing the store because their store in particular probably would not be able to afford it.

Tomlinson also acknowledged about the end of February or early March when two employees asked her if the statement Tomlinson had made about closing the store if the Union came in was true she informed them it was. According to Tomlinson she had been informed they would probably close the store down if the Union came in and she admitted passing that information on to employees.

B. The Discharge of Store Manager Kelley

Everett Kelley was employed by the Respondents from 22 October 1984 to 31 January and held the position of store manager of store 2.

Store Manager Kelley stated he first learned about the union organizing campaign from General Manager Dibler, who came to his store and inquired whether Kelley had any extra employees Dibler could send to the Glenwood store to work. Dibler gave as the reason he had just fired two employees there, whose names he did not mention, for signing union cards. Dibler instructed Kelley not to tell the employees the reason they were being transferred. Kelley, as a result of this conversation, transferred employee Jimmy Carr to the Glenwood store.

Kelley also stated Dibler on one occasion told him that every store they found out were signing union cards, they were all going to be fired.

According to Kelley in December 1985 Wayne Stevenson informed him employees Tom Moran, David Link, David Ray, Keith Thompson, Donna Shields, and Katherine Johnson had signed union authorization cards. Later Stevenson told him Sharmane Black and a part-time employee named Brian had also signed cards.

Wayne Stevenson acknowledged informing Kelley which employees had signed cards.

Kelley testified that in January General Manager Dibler came to his store and inquired which employee was Tom Moran. Dibler then asked Kelley whether he had anything on Moran he could fire him for. Kelley denied having any reason and stated Moran was one of his best employees. Dibler, who had a list of names of employees to get rid of, then instructed Kelley to fire everybody who signed a union card. Dibler also told Kelley on one occasion that Oleen Dunn, who worked in the office at store 2, had informed Owner Delling and himself about the employees who had signed union cards.

General Manager Dibler denied telling Kelley he had fired employees at other stores because of the Union or telling Kelley to fire Tom Moran, Donna Shields, David Ray, or David Link. According to Dibler, as far as he knew it was Kelley who decided to let them go. I credit Kelley rather than Dibler, whom I discredit, and find Dibler did instruct Kelley to discharge those employees who had signed union authorization cards. Apart from my observations of the witnesses in discrediting Dibler, I find his testimony was contradictory and implausible.

Kelley, acting on Dibler's instructions to fire those employees who had signed union authorization cards, stated he personally fired Tom Moran, David Ray, and Donna Shields for signing union authorization cards. Kelley also instructed Wayne Stevenson to fire David Link and Sharmane Black for signing union authorization cards and Stevenson did. Kelley also stated that instead of firing Katherine Johnson for signing a card, he moved her to a job in the bakery because she was the sole support of a large family.

Wayne Stevenson acknowledged Kelley had informed him that General Manager Dibler had instructed Kelley to fire the employees who had signed union cards.

Tom Moran testified he was fired by Kelley on 6 January. The reason Kelley gave was Moran had gotten into an argument with a checker 3 or 4 weeks ago. When Moran denied it and told Kelley that was not the real reason he was firing him, Kelley replied all he knew was what he was being told and indicated Owner Delling and General Manager Dibler had told Kelley to fire Moran.

David Ray testified he was fired by Kelley on 6 January. The reason Kelley gave for firing him was the big men, whom he did not name, were mad because Ray did not come in to work the previous Friday. According to Ray he had been called to come in to work the previous Friday by Wayne Stevenson. However, it was his scheduled day off and he had already made plans. On informing Stevenson he could not come in and the reason, Stevenson told him it was okay. Ray denied he had ever been reprimanded about his work attendance.

Donna Shields stated on 15 January when she reported to work Kelley informed her she had been laid off. The reason Kelley gave was he had been in a meeting and he had to lay some employees off because business was slow. Although Kelley asked her whether she wanted to go to work in the bakery and she said she did, Kelley never contacted her.

David Link testified that about 7 January, shortly after he began work, Wayne Stevenson informed Link he was going to have to let him go because he had called in sick a couple of times and he was too slow. Stevenson also said it was not his idea to let Link go.

Link acknowledged he had called in sick a couple of times but denied he had been reprimanded for it or warned he would be terminated. Link also admitted that on a couple of occasions when General Manager Dibler previously managed the store Dibler had told both Wayne Stevenson and himself they needed to speed up. However, Link was not warned he would be terminated if he did not speed up.

Sharmane Black stated on 15 January she was informed by Wayne Stevenson she was fired. The reason Stevenson gave was because Black had burned the cookies. Stevenson also said Store Manager Kelley had told Stevenson to fire Black.

About a week and a half later Black credibly stated without denial that she called Owner Delling and informed him she had not signed a union card because she needed a job. Delling then asked Black whether she was sure she had not signed a card. After Black assured Delling she had not, Delling told Black he would see what he could do about getting her job back and he would contact her. Delling then asked Black if she knew who was giving out names for the people. Black denied knowing who was giving out names so the union people could contact them. Black was rehired a few days later.

Both Store Manager Kelley and Wayne Stevenson, who said he acted on Kelley's instructions in firing David Link and Sharmane Black, admitted the reasons they gave to Tom Moran, David Ray, Donna Shields, David Link, and Sharmane Black for firing them were false reasons and that the real reasons for their discharge were because they had signed union authorization cards.

Immediately following a meeting of the store managers at the Tradewinds Motel, at which Respondents' attorneys informed them how to conduct themselves during the union organizing campaign that had already started, Owner Delling and General Manager Dibler held a separate meeting with the store managers. During this second meeting Store Manager Kelley stated Delling said they were his stores and he would run them as he wanted to and it was just like the old saying that the basketball player that did not foul was not a very good player and they were going to foul a lot and carry on as usual. Store Manager Tomlinson, who attended the meeting, also said Delling explained what they could or could not do, during which he made a statement to the effect it was going to be like basketball players and to be a good basketball player you had to foul, and if need be he would foul. Tomlinson denied Delling was just saying they were going to be aggressive.

Owner Delling acknowledged mentioning a basketball player fouling. However, Delling's version was he mentioned even the professional basketball players foul and said while they may occasionally, but not intentionally, do it themselves, they were still going to run their stores and manage them as they knew how to manage them. According to Delling he also said they were going to play by the rules.

I credit the testimony of Store Managers Kelley and Tomlinson rather than Delling concerning the statements made by Delling. Besides my observations of the witnesses in discrediting Delling, his testimony was both implausible and contrary to that of other supervisory personnel of the Respondents.

Store Manager Kelley testified that after the meeting ended, General Manager Dibler instructed him to fill out termination slips on the people he had fired. Kelley refused telling Dibler he was not going to fill them out and perjure himself in front of the National Labor Relations Board. Kelley acknowledged Dibler did not tell him what to put on the termination slips; however, he knew Dibler did not want him to put on there it was because they signed a union card.

According to Kelley, prior to that time the Respondents did not require termination slips for discharges and he had never prepared any previously or been asked to. General Manager Dibler acknowledged instructing Kelley to prepare termination slips listing the reasons why he fired Tom Moran, David Ray, and David Link, but denied telling Kelley to falsify the information. Dibler admitted that the use of termination slips did not begin until sometime in January. This occurred on advice of counsel after a charge had been filed about the middle of January regarding Tom Moran's discharge.

About 2 days later Dibler asked Kelley in person whether he had filled the termination slips out and Kelley informed Dibler he had not.

According to Kelley, every 2 or 3 days on about a dozen occasions, including both on the telephone and in person, Dibler asked him whether he had the termination slips ready whereupon he informed Dibler he had not and said he was not going to fill them out.

The last time Kelley stated he was asked for the termination slips was on 30 January. On that occasion a girl from the office named Jeannie came to the store that morning and informed Kelley that Dibler had sent her there to see if Kelley had filled out the termination slips and told Kelley if he had not she was supposed to call Dibler right back. Kelley told her to tell Dibler he was not going to fill them out and perjure himself in front of the National Labor Relations Board.

Wayne Stevenson also stated there were several telephone calls from Respondents' office asking for the termination slips from Kelley and, on one occasion, an office girl came to the store and asked for them. Stevenson also stated Kelley had told him Dibler wanted termination slips for the discharged employees but Kelley told Stevenson he did not want to write them because if the cases ever came to court he would have to perjure himself on the stand because the letter would be a lie.

General Manager Dibler acknowledged requesting Kelley on 6 to 10 occasions to deliver the termination slips to him. However, he stated Kelley always replied he did not have time or to check with Kelley in a day or two. Dibler denied Kelley ever said he was not going to furnish them until the day he discharged Kelley.

To the extent the testimony of Kelley and Dibler conflicts, I credit Kelley for reasons previously stated.

On 31 January Kelley was discharged by Dibler. Kelley stated on that occasion Dibler first reminded him of a conversation they had about a month ago in which Kelley had asked Dibler whether he was going to be fired.[11] Dibler then said he finally remembered to ask Delling about it and Delling had said to go ahead and terminate Kelley and let them make a change. The reason Dibler gave Kelley for discharging him was poor inventory.

Dibler's version of the discharge conversation was when he went out to discharge Kelley that day he first asked Kelley whether he had the termination slips. Kelley's response was he had them but in a safe deposit box and would produce them when the time was necessary. Dibler then said he and Owner Delling had talked and decided to make a change because Kelley had asked Dibler previously if he was going to be fired and had mentioi moving into a house and had heard rumors and knew he was going to get fired.

I credit Kelley's version of the discharge conversation rather than Dibler, whom I have previously discredited.

Following Kelley's discharge he was replaced by Jeff Holmquist who was manager of store 7.

C. Respondents' Defense

General Manager Dibler testified the reasons Store Manager Kelley were given for being discharged were because he was overstocked on inventory and operating at a loss. While these were the reasons that led to the decision Dibler stated, there were other reasons including Kelley did not come up and sack groceries when he was supposed to, he would not work in the office or run a register, and his inability as a store manager.

The reasons Owner Delling gave for Kelley's discharge were he was continuously overbuying and was not making any progress in cutting inventory down and they just had too much excess inventory.

General Manager Dibler stated that in November 1985 he and Owner Delling first talked about discharging Kelley and made the decision to do so but then decided to wait until after the holidays were over because Kelley's wife was ill. While Owner Delling testified he first considered discharging Kelley in October or November 1985 but did not act then because Kelley's wife was ill and the holidays were coming up he, unlike Dibler, stated he was hoping Kelley would come around and do a better job, which he denied Kelley did.

Delling testified that beginning about August or September 1985 he talked with Kelley on several occasions about Kelley's excess inventory and how much overbuying Kelley was doing. According to Dibler, carrying a high inventory makes it hard to make a profit and results in damages.

Dibler also stated on different occasions he counseled Kelley about his inventory. During June 1985 Dibler said the inventory was $30,000 to $35,000 too high and he informed Kelley that Kelley needed to cut it down. However by October 1985 instead of decreasing the inventory it had increased another $30,000 for a total of $185,000.

Both Delling and Dibler stated that about October 1985 they met with Kelley at which time Delling took away Kelley's right to make purchases for the store without Dibler's approval.

According to Dibler after this meeting at Delling's suggestion approximately $35,000 to $40,000 worth of inventory at Kelley's store was then returned between 5 October 1985 and 4 January to the Flemming Company or transferred to other stores of the Respondents.

Respondents' records, as indicated by a summary taken from them, reflect store 2's average weekly sales were approximately $29,147 and the inventory on hand there was approximately $155,713 on 22 June 1985; $185,587 on 5 October 1985; $142,968 on 4 January; and $134,962 in February.[12]

The summary also reflects the inventory for store 6, which is the only other store with comparable average weekly sales of approximately $28,335, was approximately $123,290 on 5 October 1985 and $110,659 on 4 January. However, the record does not reflect what the inventory was on 22 June 1985 or February.

General Manager Dibler acknowledged inventory is normally higher around holidays such as Thanksgiving and Christmas in order to meet customers' demands.

The Respondents presented several employees who previously worked under Store Manager Kelley. Barbara Conley, who previously managed a store for the Respondents, stated while she worked in the office under Kelley, Kelley would not do anything that needed to be done such as checking, carrying out groceries, taking care of the front end, or scheduling, and caused friction among employees by telling one employee something about the other employee. Conley also described the back room as being so full of inventory a person could hardly get through it.

Jimmy Carr claimed while working under Kelley at store 2, as compared with periods he worked under other store managers there, the back stock was growing and Kelley was overordering because it was piling up in the back. Carr also said Kelley would not help out with checking when it was needed. Carr acknowledged he had never been a store manager or ordered inventory.

[11] According to Kelley about a month earlier he wanted to move into a house but first talked to Dibler to make sure he was not going to be discharged because of a rumor he had heard about his being discharged, which Owner Delling had already denied.

Eric Russell claimed under Manager Kelley the back room was overstocked with inventory whereas under Store Manager Holmquist it is now way down. Although Russell stated he ordered inventory for his frozen foods department, he acknowledged he did not order inventory for the entire store.

Neva Moseley, who worked as assistant store manager at store 2 under several managers, including Larry Wilder, Wayne Dibler, and Kelley, stated while Kelley was manager there was a lot of stock in the back room, the shelves were stocked from the floor to the ceiling, and when trucks came in they did not have anywhere to put the stock. Under Dibler and Wilder, however, they did not get stuff in they did not need and what merchandise they got in it went right to the shelf or on the floor. Moseley acknowledged the store manager was the person responsible for ordering inventory for the entire store.

Both Owner Delling and General Manager Dibler admitted having knowledge about the Union's attempt to organize Respondents' employees and they were concerned and took actions to prevent it. However, Delling, on being asked whether Kelley's involvement or conduct in the union organizing drive had anything to do with his decision to discharge Kelley, responded by denying he had any knowledge of Kelley having anything to do with it in any way. Neither Delling nor Dibler specifically denied that Kelley's refusal to fill out termination slips on those employees Kelley discharged for signing union authorization cards had anything to with his discharge.

Store Manager Kelley admitted he had been counseled by General Manager Dibler for carrying too high an inventory and Dibler wanted it down before the end of the year. However, Kelley denied his inventory was high during the latter part of December 1985 through his discharge in late January, and stated in fact by 4 January it was down $40,000. Kelley also stated a lot of inventory had been taken out of his warehouse by Owner Delling and General Manager Dibler and he never saw where he had been given credit for it. Kelley denied his store was losing money on the inventory.

Kelley also denied he had ever been reprimanded for his job performance or ever warned he would be discharged because of a bad inventory.

Besides having a charge on his behalf filed with the Board, Kelley also filed a charge with the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission against the Respondents alleging his discharge was based on age discrimination.

D. Analysis and Conclusions

The General Counsel contends the Respondents violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act by unlawfully discharging Store Manager Kelley, a supervisor under the Act, for refusing to falsify termination slips in order to establish a pretext for terminating employees because of their union activities and in effect discharged Kelley for his refusal to commit unfair labor practices. The Respondents deny having violated the Act and assert Kelley was discharged for overstocking on inventory and operating at a loss, not performing his duties, and his inability as a store manager. The Respondents in their brief denied the General Counsel had proved Kelley was fired because he refused to author a false record intended for Respondents personnel file.

Section 8(a)(1) of the Act prohibits an employer from interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of their rights guaranteed in Section 7 of the Act.

The law is well settled that an employer violates Section 8(a)(1) of the Act by discharging a supervisor for refusing to commit unfair labor practices because such discharge interferes with the exercise of employees' Section 7 rights coupled with the need to ensure that even statutorily excluded individuals may not be coerced into violating the law. Parker-Robb Chevrolet, 262 NLRB 402, 404 (1982); and Advertiser's Mfg. Co., 280 NLRB 1185 (1986).

Where motivation[13] for discharge is at issue in cases alleging violation of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act the General Counsel must make a prima facie showing sufficient to support the inference that protected activity by employees was a motivating factor in an employer's decision to discharge them and the employer then has the burden of showing the employees would have been discharged absent the protected activity. Wright Line, 251 NLRB 1083, 1089 (1980), enfd. 662 F.2d 899 (1st Cir. 1981), cert. denied 455 U.S. 989 (1982), approved in NLRB v. Transportation Management Corp., 459 U.S. 1014 (1982). Direct evidence of discriminatory motivation is not necessary to support a finding of discrimination and such intent may be inferred from the record as a whole. Heath International, 196 NLRB 318 (1972).

The findings supra establish that Store Manager Kelley, a supervisor under the Act, acting on specific instructions from General Manager Dibler to discharge all the employees at his store who had signed union authorization cards, discharged employees Tom Moran, David Ray and Donna Shields and had Wayne Stevenson discharge David Link and Sharmane Black all because they had signed union authorization cards. Dibler and Owner Delling had been told which employees had signed cards. Both Kelley and Stevenson orally gave those employees false reasons for their discharges in order to conceal the real discriminatory reasons for discharging them. Following their discharges, which occurred during 6 through 15 January, Dibler instructed Kelley to fill out written termination slips on the employees he had discharged. Kelley refused, informing Dibler that he was not going to purger himself in front of the National Labor Relations Board. While Dibler did not instruct Kelley what reasons to put on the termination slips, it was obvious Dibler was not seeking to have the records show the employees were actually fired because they signed union authorization cards. Moreover, when Kelley told Dibler he refused because he was not going to purger himself, Dibler did not assure him he did not have to. Despite repeated requests by Dibler up until the day before Kelley's discharge for Kelley to furnish Dibler with the termination slips for the discharged employees, Kelley steadfastly refused to furnish them saying he was not going to fill them out or purger himself in front of the National Labor Relations Board. It is clear that Dibler, by his demands to get Kelley, who refused to prepare falsified records to conceal the fact the Respondents had discharged five employees for signing union authorization cards, sought to have Kelley commit further unfair labor practices.

The Respondents' claims that Kelley was discharged because of overstocking inventory and operating at a loss, not performing his duties, and his inability as a store manager are unpersuasive, not supported by the evidence, and are rejected. Although Kelley's store did have a high inventory and Kelley was counseled about it, Respondents' own records reflect it substantially decreased between 5 October 1985 and 1 February. While some of the decrease was attributed to shipping and transferring stock elsewhere, this occurred before the further decrease in inventory between 4 January and 1 February. Moreover if, as Respondents assert, Kelley's right to make purchases without Dibler's approval was revoked in October 1985 it appears from that time on Dibler was aware of and approved Kelley's actions in ordering inventory for the store. Insofar as the other reasons given for Kelley's discharge are concerned no probative evidence was presented to support them. The required duties of a store manager for the Respondents were never fully defined and Kelley denied that his store, which Respondents' own records show had average weekly earnings of approximately $29,147, was operating at a loss.

Based on the foregoing findings as discussed and having rejected Respondents' defense, I am persuaded and find the Respondents violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act by discriminatorily discharging Store Manager Kelley, a supervisor under the Act, on 31 January because he refused to commit unfair labor practices under the Act by preparing termination slips showing false reasons for the discharges of five employees who were discharged for signing union authorization cards. I further find the reasons given by the Respondents for discharging Kelley were mere pretexts to conceal the discriminatory reason for his discharge.

IV. THE EFFECT OF THE UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES UPON COMMERCE

The activities of the Respondents set forth in section III, above, found to constitute unfair labor practices occurring in connection the operations of the Respondents described in section I, above, have a close, intimate, and substantial relationship to trade, traffic, and commerce among the several States and tend to lead to labor disputes burdening and obstructing commerce and the free flow thereof.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. Grady Delling, Individually, Country Boy Mr. "D" Corp., and Glenwood Inc. d/b/a Country Boy Markets are employers engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

2. United Food and Commercial Workers Union, Local 1680 is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

3. By discharging Everett Kelley, a supervisor under the Act, on 31 January 1986 for refusing to commit unfair labor practices thereby interfering with the exercise of employees' rights under Section 7 of the Act, Respondents violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act.

4. The aforesaid unfair labor practice affects commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

THE REMEDY

Having found that Respondents have engaged in certain unfair labor practices within the meaning of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act, I shall recommend that they cease and desist therefrom and take certain affirmative action to effectuate the policies of the Act. Accordingly, the Respondents shall be ordered to offer immediate and full reinstatement to Everett Kelley, or if that job no longer exists, to a substantially equivalent job without prejudice to his seniority and other rights and privileges and make him whole for any loss of earnings and other compensations he may have suffered as a result of his discriminatory discharge on 31 January 1986. Backpay shall be computed in accordance with the manner prescribed in F. W. Woolworth Co., 90 NLRB 289 (1950), with interest as prescribed in Florida Steel Corp., 231 NLRB 651 (1977). See generally Isis Plumbing Co., 138 NLRB 716 (1962).

The Respondents shall be ordered to remove from their files any references to the discriminatory discharge of Everett Kelley herein found and to notify him, in writing, this has been done and evidence of their unlawful conduct will not be used as a basis for future personnel actions against him.

The General Counsel's request that the remedial order include a visitatorial clause authorizing the Board to engage in discovery under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure to enable it to monitor compliance with the Board's Order as enforced by the court of appeals is rejected on the grounds the Board does not provide for discovery procedures in its proceedings and there is no showing that under the circumstances presented here such a clause is necessary.

On these findings of fact and conclusions of law and on the entire record, I issue the following recommended[14]

ORDER

The Respondents, Grady Delling, Individually, Country Boy Mr. "D" Corp., and Glenwood Inc. d/b/a Country Boy Markets, Midwest City, Oklahoma, their officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall

1. Cease and desist from

[14] If no exceptions are filed as provided by Sec. 102.46 of the Board's Rules and Regulations, the findings, conclusions, and recommended Order shall, as provided in Sec. 102.48 of the Rules, be adopted by the Board and all objections to them shall be deemed waived for all purposes.

(a) Discharging supervisors for refusing to commit unfair labor practices thereby interfering with the exercise of employees' rights under Section 7 of the Act.

(b) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them by Section 7 of the Act.

2. Take the following affirmative action necessary to effectuate the policies of the Act.

(a) Offer Everett Kelley immediate and full reinstatement to his former job or, if that job no longer exists, to a substantially equivalent job without prejudice to his seniority and other rights and privileges and make him whole for any loss of earnings and other compensations he may have suffered by reason of his discriminatory discharge on 31 January 1986 in the manner set forth in the remedy section of the decision.

(b) Remove from their files any references to the discharge of Everett Kelley herein found to be unlawful and notify him, in writing, this has been done and evidence of their unlawful conduct will not be used as a basis for future personnel actions against him.

(c) Preserve and, on request, make available to the Board or its agents for examination and copying, all payroll records, social security payment records, timecards, personnel records and reports, and all other records necessary to analyze the amount of backay due under the terms of this Order.

(d) Post at all of their stores located at Midwest City, Oklahoma, and vicinity copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix."[15] Copies of the notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 16, after being signed by the Respondents' authorized representative, shall be posted by the Respondents immediately upon receipt and maintained for 60 consecutive days in conspicuous places including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by the Respondents to ensure that the notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(e) Notify the Regional Director in writing within 20 days from the date of this Order what steps the Respondents have taken to comply.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that with respect to Case 16–CA–12544 the sixth consolidated complaint, as amended, is dismissed insofar as it alleges unfair labor practices not specifically found herein.

DECISION AND ORDER

BY CHAIRMAN DOTSON AND MEMBERS JOHANSEN, BABSON, AND STEPHENS

On 12 August 1985 the Acting Regional Director for Region 19 issued a Decision and Order in the above-entitled proceeding in which he dismissed the two decertification petitions on the basis that the petitioned-for units were not coextensive with the existing contractual bargaining unit. In so finding, the Acting Regional Director concluded that the Employers were part of a multiemployer bargaining group.

In accordance with Section 102.67 of the Board's Rules and Regulations, the Employers filed a timely request for review of the Acting Regional Director's decision. The Employers contended that the Acting Regional Director erred in finding that the Employers were part of the multiemployer bargaining group.

By telegraphic order dated 11 October 1985 the request for review was granted.

The Board has reviewed the entire record in this case and has decided to affirm the Acting Regional Director's Decision and Order, attached as an appendix hereto.

The record supports the Acting Regional Director's finding that the Employers were members of a multiemployer bargaining group called the Presidents' Council of Food, Beverage, and Lodging Industries of Oregon (Presidents' Council) and had not timely withdrawn therefrom. Accordingly, we find that the Acting Regional Director correctly applied the Board's longstanding rule that a petitioned-for unit in a decertification petition must be coextensive with the certified or recognized unit.[1]

The Chairman in his dissent contends that because the decertification petitions here were filed at a time when the Union and the Employers could have withdrawn from the multiemployer bargaining group under the rules set forth in Retail Associates, Inc.,[2] the Board should process the decertification petitions in order to preserve the employees' right of self-determination. The Chairman raises an issue, however, that was not raised by the Employers in their request for review. Such issue is therefore not properly before the Board and unnecessary to comment on in the instant case.

CHAIRMAN DOTSON, dissenting.

Contrary to my colleagues, I would reverse the Acting Regional Director's Decision and Order dismissing the petitions. Rather, I would reinstate the petitions and remand the case to the Region for further appropriate action, including scheduling of the elections and resolution of the outstanding issues.[1]

The petitions in Cases 36–RD–1097 and 36–RD–1098 seek decertification elections among certain employees employed by Mo's West and Mo's Enterprises, Inc. (MEI), respectively.[2] Both Mo's West and MEI are members of a multiemployer bargaining group called the President's Council of Food, Beverage, and Lodging Industries of Oregon (Council). The Employers are signatories to a multiemployer bargaining contract between the Council and the Union, which was in effect from 1 August 1982 through 31 July 1985. This contract covered those employees in the petitioned-for units. The Acting Regional Director found that since there was no evidence that the Employer had withdrawn from the Council, the petitioned-for units were not coextensive with the existing contractual multiemployer unit, and the petitions must therefore be dismissed. I disagree.

The Board has long recognized that the basic element necessary to create a multiemployer bargaining unit is an unequivocal agreement from the employers and the union to be bound by group negotiations rather than individual bargaining.[3] Withdrawal from the multiemployer group may be achieved by an employer or the union simply by giving "written notice . . . prior to the date set by the contract for modification, or to the agreed-upon date to begin the multiemployer negotiations."[4] Once actual multiemployer negotiations have begun, a unilateral attempt to withdraw from the multiemployer group is untimely, absent unusual circumstances. Neither the formation nor the dissolution of the multiemployer bargaining unit, however, takes into account the desires of the group most directly affected by these actions—the employees.

I have recently stated my strong opposition to Board policies which put to one side employees' free choice in favor of so-called stability in bargaining relationships.[5] In my opinion, such decisions fail to strike the proper balance between the statutory right to refrain from collective bargaining, guaranteed to employees by Section 7 of the Act, and the more general statutory policy of industrial stability. In Gibbs & Cox, the Board held that a group of employees which constituted a separate appropriate unit at the time it sought representation was later "merged" into a much larger, geographically distant, group of employees by the agreement of the employer and the union. This "merger" later prevented the smaller group of employees from expressing its desires in a representation election. Former Member Dennis and I dissented from this result, stating our belief that "[t]he appropriateness of [a] unit cannot be extinguished merely by mutual intent on the part of an employer and a union to conduct collective bargaining on the basis of some other unit."[6]

Here, as in Gibbs & Cox, the employees in two existing appropriate units were included in a much larger bargaining unit by the action of the employers and the union.[7] The employees of Mo's West and MEI have petitioned for decertification elections in the smaller units covering only these Employers' employees. The petitions were filed at a time when either the Union or the Employers could have timely withdrawn from the multiemployer bargaining unit. In these circumstances, I believe that the employees should be given the same opportunity as the Union and Employers to "withdraw," in effect, from the multiemployer unit for the purpose of determining whether the employees wish to reject or change bargaining representatives. As former Member Dennis and I stated in Gibbs & Cox, we believe that the appropriate accommodation between the conflicting goals of employee free choice and bargaining stability is that "absent unusual circumstances, any unit which was appropriate for the purpose of selecting a bargaining representative remains appropriate for the purpose of rejecting that bargaining representative or obtaining a new one."[8] The Board's insistence that once an employer and a union have agreed to include a separate unit of employees in a multiemployer bargaining unit, those employees cannot make changes in their bargaining representative except through that larger unit, is yet another example of the majority's willingness to sacrifice rights guaranteed employees by the Act to its views of statutory policy. Allowing an employer and a union effectively to disenfranchise employees by including them in a much larger unit because it meets the need or convenience of the employer and union is contrary to the employees' statutory Section 7 right to refrain from collective action. Stability in bargaining relations is a positive goal, but we must not elevate that goal above the basic principles of employee self-determination which are guaranteed in Section 7. Our primary purpose in effectuating the Act should be that of protecting employee rights, especially the right freely to choose or reject a bargaining representative. Accordingly, I dissent.

[5] See former Member Dennis' and my dissent in Gibbs & Cox, 280 NLRB 953 (1986) (involving the Board's "merger" doctrine) and my dissent in Central Soya Co., 281 NLRB 1308 (1986) (involving the Board's accretion policy).

[7] Although the record is devoid of any evidence indicating in what units the employees were originally organized, the parties' bargaining history reveals that prior to the negotiations for the 1982–1985 collective-bargaining agreement, Mo's West and MEI had been treated as separate bargaining units not included in the multiemployer unit. From this, one can logically infer that the selection of the bargaining representative occurred in these separate units, rather than in the overall multiemployer unit.

APPENDIX

DECISION AND ORDER

Upon a petition duly filed under Section 9(c) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, a hearing was held before a hearing officer of the National Labor Relations Board.

Pursuant to the provisions of Section 3(b) of the Act, the Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to the undersigned.

Upon the entire record in this proceeding,[2] the undersigned finds:

1. The hearing officer's rulings made at the hearing are free from prejudicial error and are hereby affirmed.

2. The Employer is engaged in commerce within the meaning of the Act and it will effectuate the purposes of the Act to assert jurisdiction herein.[3]

[2] The parties' briefs have been considered. As more fully explained in my Order Reopening Hearing and Notice of Further Hearing in this matter, dated June 26, 1985, the Union's request to strike Employers' Exhibits 1 and 3 was granted; accordingly, these exhibits have not been considered.

[3] In light of my decision regarding the unit scope, to be discussed more fully, the question of jurisdiction with respect to these Employers is moot. However, I note that the purchase by Mo's Enterprises, Inc. of Mo's West was finalized prior to the July 17, 1985 hearing date and that the purchasing corporation, during its last fiscal year, had gross revenues in excess of $500,000 and purchased in excess of $50,000 worth of goods directly from sources outside the state of Oregon. Thus, Mo's Enterprises, Inc., which is in the business of operating restaurants and of manufacturing chowder for wholesale distribution, meets the Board's jurisdictional standards for a retail business. Inasmuch as Mo's West is now an

3. The labor organization involved claims to represent certain employees of the Employer.

4. No question affecting commerce exists concerning the representation of certain employees of the Employer within the meaning of Section 9(c)(1) and Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act, for the following reasons:

The Union contends that both petitions must be dismissed inasmuch as the petitioned-for units are not coextensive with the existing bargaining unit. Case 36-RD-1097 seeks an election among certain employees employed at Mo's West, and Case 36-RD-1098 seeks an election among certain employees employed at Mo's and Mo's Annex. The Union asserts that Mo's, Mo's Annex and Mo's West all are part of a multiemployer bargaining unit through the multiemployer bargaining group called the President's Council of Food, Beverage and Lodging Industries of Oregon (hereafter Council).[4] The Employer denies the Union's claim, contending that neither Mo's Enterprises, Inc. (hereafter MEI) nor Mo's West prior to its purchase by MEI ever delegated its bargaining authority to that or any other multiemployer group.

MEI is in the business of operating restaurants. Mo's and Mo's Annex in Newport, Oregon, have been owned and operated by MEI for several years. The most recent contract covering certain employees at these establishments was effective from August 1, 1982 through July 31, 1985. The contract, which was the area agreement between the Council and the Union with certain modifications set forth in an Addendum, was signed on behalf of MEI by Mohava Niemi, a shareholder and corporate officer, in April 1983. Although the Addendum was not offered into evidence, it appears that Niemi executed that document on behalf of MEI in March 1983, at the same time that she signed the Addendum to the Mo's West agreement, which Addendum was offered into evidence. Prior to its purchase by MEI, Mo's West, a restaurant in Otter Rock, Oregon, was a sole proprietorship owned by Niemi; however, at the time that the most recent contract covering certain Mo's West employees was executed, it was a partnership in which Niemi was one of the partners. The contract covering the Mo's West employees ran from August 1, 1982 to July 31, 1985 and was the area agreement between the Council and the Union with certain modifications set forth in an Addendum. The Addendum was signed in March 1983 on behalf of Mo's West by Niemi; the contract was signed in April 1983 by Niemi. Both the MEI contract and the Mo's West contract contained the following language on the signature page directly above Niemi's signature:

> The undersigned employer agrees to be bound by all the terms and conditions of the attached "Contract and Agreement Between Presidents' Council of Food Beverage and Lodging Industries of Oregon (Restaurants of Oregon Association, Portland Hotel Association, Oregon Hotel and Motel Association, Food Services Executives Association and Independent Operators) with Hotel Employees, Restaurant Employees Union Local 9 of the Hotel Employees, Restaurant Employees, International Union, AFL-CIO," and of the Health & Welfare and Pension Trusts formed pursuant to the terms of this Agreement, and to accept as their representatives the employer trustees presently serving on said Trust and their duly elected or appointed successors. By agreeing to join the said Presidents' Council as an Independent Operator, the employer is bound to the Presidents' Council agreement and becomes a member of the multi-employer bargaining group, but does not waive its right to join any other member groups of the Presidents' Council, and may withdraw from the Presidents' Council by giving the Presidents' Council and Union written notice of withdrawal as provided by law.

The language clearly and unequivocally indicates the intention of the signatory employer to be a part of the multiemployer bargaining group and there is no dispute that Niemi did in fact sign the page containing this language on behalf of both MEI and Mo's West. However, the Employers' counsel contends that the Employers never intended to become part of the multiemployer bargaining group or to execute contracts containing such language. Gordon MacPherson, an attorney involved on behalf of both MEI and Mo's West in their contract negotiations with the Union in 1982 and 1983, testified that the Council area contract which the Union had provided to him during negotiations contained the following language on the signature page:

> The undersigned nonmember of the Presidents' Council of Food, Beverage and Lodging Industries of Oregon agrees to be bound by all the terms and conditions of this Agreement, and of the Health and Welfare and Pension Trusts formed pursuant to the terms of this Agreement, and accept as their representatives the Employer Trustees presently serving on said Trusts and their duly elected or appointed successors.

This is the same language as that which had been contained in the predecessor contracts between the parties and which is contained in the copy of the 1982-1985 Council agreement which the parties entered as Joint Exhibit 2. MacPherson testified that some of the negotiations were conducted outside his presence directly between Niemi and Union representatives. MacPherson stated that at those sessions at which he was present, the issue of the multiemployer bargaining group never was discussed. However, MacPherson was not present at the April 1983 session at which Niemi executed the contracts and thus is unable to testify as to how it came about that Niemi signed the documents containing the critical language. The Employers also produced as a witness Cindy McEntee, who was and is MEI's manager and corporate secretary. McEntee testified that she was present at some of the negotiation sessions in 1982 and 1983 and that at none of those sessions was the topic of the multiemployer bargaining group raised. She further testified that she integral part of the corporation, jurisdiction may be asserted over it as well as over Mo's and Mo's Annex. Carolina Supplies & Cement Co., 122 NLRB 88 (1958).

was present during a portion of the April 1983 meeting at which Niemi executed the contracts and that there was no discussion regarding the topic of multiemployer group bargaining while she was present. Finally, the Employer presented as a witness an official of the Council who testified that neither MEI nor Mo's West is considered by the Council as an official member of that association.

Despite the fact that the Employers had the opportunity to proffer Niemi as a witness on three different hearing days over a two-month period, and after repeated notice, including that set forth in the Order Reopening Hearing and Notice of Further Hearing, that the multiemployer bargaining unit issue was an issue to be litigated at the hearing, the Employers failed to present Niemi. The Employers assert that, despite the clear and unambiguous contractual language regarding their becoming part of the multiemployer bargaining group, that language must be ignored; yet, they failed to call Niemi, a witness under their control, to give evidence which might mitigate the weight to be accorded to the critical language in the documents she signed. While McEntee testified that the multiemployer bargaining group issue was not discussed during that portion of the April 1983 meeting at which she was present, her testimony in this regard proves nothing affirmatively inasmuch as she was absent during a portion of the critical meeting. Thus, no evidence was presented which might convince me that there is some reason why the clear and unambiguous language of the signed documents is not to be accorded controlling weight. While the Employers' counsel does not allege that the Union committed fraud by presenting for signature the documents which Niemi signed, but rather asserts that the presentation of the critical language was a mistake on the Union's part and Niemi's signing the documents containing that language was another mistake, the Employers, by failing to call Niemi as a witness despite ample notice and opportunity, have failed to adduce evidence to rebut the clear and unambiguous contractual language. Thus, I cannot do otherwise but conclude that the objective evidence shows that MEI and Mo's West, through Niemi's execution of the contracts, clearly and unequivocally expressed their intention to forthwith be a part of the multiemployer bargaining group and, derivatively, a part of the multiemployer bargaining unit. The Kroger Co., 148 NLRB 569 (1964); Morgan Linen Service, Inc., 131 NLRB 420 (1961). Moreover, the Employers produced no evidence to show that either or both MEI and Mo's West have withdrawn from the multiemployer group in a timely and proper fashion. Having concluded that the unrebutted objective evidence establishes that both MEI and Mo's West are part of the multiemployer bargaining group and that neither has withdrawn from the group, I find that the petitioned-for units are not coextensive with the existing contractual bargaining unit and that the petitions therefore must be dismissed.[5] W. T. Grant Company, 179 NLRB 671 (1969). Accordingly, I shall grant the Union's motion to dismiss the petitions and I shall, and hereby do, dismiss both petitions.

IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that the petitions filed herein be, and they hereby are, dismissed.

[5] Having so concluded, the issues of petitioner Nichols' supervisory status and of the unit inclusion or exclusion of chowder manufacturing employees are moot and need not be addressed.

27 February 1987

DECISION AND ORDER

BY CHAIRMAN DOTSON AND MEMBERS BABSON AND STEPHENS

Upon a petition filed under Section 9(c) of the National Labor Relations Act by the Employer, a hearing was held before Hearing Officer Wayne L. Benson on 12 and 13 March 1986. Subsequent to the hearing, the Regional Director transferred this proceeding to the National Labor Relations Board for decision pursuant to Section 102.67 of the Board's Rules and Regulations. Both the Union and the Employer have filed briefs.

The National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has reviewed the rulings of the hearing officer and finds that they are free from prejudicial error. The rulings are affirmed.[1]

On the entire record in this case, including the briefs, the Board makes the following findings:

1. The Employer is a wholesale distributor of grocery and household products to retail stores in Colorado. The Denver division operates a wholesale grocery warehouse on Brighton Boulevard in Denver, Colorado (Brighton warehouse) and operates a general merchandise warehouse approximately 10 miles from the Brighton warehouse in Aurora, Colorado (Aurora warehouse). The parties stipulated that the Employer during any 12-month period receives goods in excess of $50,000 directly from suppliers located outside the State of Colorado. On these facts, we find that the Employer is engaged in commerce with the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act. We also find that, as stipulated by the parties, the Union is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

2. The Union has represented employees at the Brighton warehouse since 1940. The Employer has recognized the Union as the collective-bargaining representative of the driver and warehouse employees at the Brighton warehouse since it purchased that facility in October 1982. The parties have entered into two collective-bargaining agreements during that time, and the current agreement is effective from 16 September 1984 through 12 September 1987. The Brighton unit is described in the most recent collective-bargaining agreement's recognition clause as follows:

> The Employer agrees to recognize and does hereby recognize the Union as the exclusive bargaining agent, for the purpose of collective bargaining, as provided by the National Labor Relations Act, for all employees as listed in this Agreement. . . .

The employees listed in the agreement appear in Addendum "A" as follows:

> warehouse persons and/or helpers; checker or shipping and/or receiving clerk; frozen food warehouse person; city drivers; over-the-road drivers; pre-wrapping, pricing or cigarette stamping; janitors; tiremen, parts person, greaser and washers; lead person; garage leadperson; journeymen mechanics; and apprentice mechanics.

The Brighton warehouse has historically stocked grocery items and general merchandise items to fill customer orders. Until 1982 the facility carried a complete line of general merchandise and the Union represented those employees handling that merchandise. At that time, however, the company from which the Employer purchased the Brighton warehouse sold the vast majority of its general merchandise inventory and eliminated most of the general merchandise aspect of its Brighton operation because of the loss of a major customer. Therefore, when the Employer purchased the Brighton warehouse in October 1982, the general merchandise aspect of the Brighton operation did not exist except for a few items.

In mid-1983, the Employer secured the business of a major customer after agreeing to supply that customer's grocery and general merchandise needs. The Employer therefore had to increase its general merchandise operations dramatically and arranged to have most of its general merchandise orders supplied from its facility in Omaha, Nebraska. The general merchandise shipments from Omaha were integrated with grocery orders at the Brighton warehouse where they were then shipped to customers. After several months, the Employer decided to establish a major general merchandise operation within the Denver division because inconsistent delivery schedules and late deliveries had made the Omaha arrangement unsatisfactory. After securing a lease on a warehouse in Aurora, Colorado, approximately 10 miles from the Brighton warehouse, the Employer opened the Aurora warehouse in June 1984.

[1] The Union renews its contention, initially raised at the hearing, that the hearing officer improperly proceeded with the hearing on the petition in light of certain pending unfair labor practice charges without receiving advice from the office of the Executive Secretary whether to proceed. We note, however, that on 11 February 1986, by direction of the Board, the Regional Director was granted permission to proceed with the hearing. Accordingly, we find the Union's contention without merit.

When the Employer opened the Aurora warehouse under the name "Preferred Merchandising," it did not hire any Brighton employees to staff the facility. The Employer also refused to apply the existing collective-bargaining agreement at the Brighton facility to the Aurora warehouse. Consequently, the Union filed a grievance and an unfair labor practice charge. The Regional Director deferred this charge to the agreement's arbitration procedure on 21 September 1984. On 22 May 1985 the arbitrator sustained the Union's grievance and ordered the Employer to apply the collective-bargaining agreement to the Aurora warehouse.[2]

Between 1 and 14 June 1985 the Employer complied with the arbitrator's award and posted Aurora jobs at the Brighton warehouse. The Employer released its Aurora employees and transferred several Brighton bargaining unit employees to the Aurora warehouse. On 14 June 1985, however, the Employer decided to contest the arbitrator's award; returned the earlier transferred bargaining unit employees to the Brighton warehouse; and rehired the Aurora employees it had released.

On 17 June 1985 the Employer filed the instant petition seeking to clarify the existing Brighton bargaining unit to exclude all the employees at the Aurora warehouse.[3] The Employer argues that the Aurora employees constitute a separate appropriate unit and do not constitute an accretion to the existing Brighton unit. In opposing the petition, the Union argues that (a) unit clarification is inappropriate to disturb the parties' agreement as interpreted by the arbitrator; (b) unit clarification is inappropriate because the Employer expanded an existing operation; and (c) assuming, arguendo, that the Aurora warehouse is a new facility, the Aurora employees constitute an accretion to the existing Brighton unit.

We have carefully considered the Union's and the Employer's arguments. For the following reasons, we grant the Employer's petition and clarify the existing Brighton unit to exclude the Employer's Aurora warehouse employees.

We first consider whether unit clarification is inappropriate because of the parties' agreement. The Board does not permit clarification of a unit in midcontract when that unit is clearly defined by the parties' agreement. See Wallace-Murray Corp., 192 NLRB 1090 (1971). The facts here, however, refute the contention that the parties have agreed to include the Aurora employees under the existing collective-bargaining agreement. Indeed, the Employer has refused to apply the agreement to the Aurora employees except for a 2-week period following the arbitrator's award. Nonetheless, the Union argues that in light of the arbitrator's interpretation of the parties' collective-bargaining agreement, the parties agreed that the agreement applies to the Aurora employees. In essence, the Union asks us to defer to the arbitrator's interpretation of the agreement and therefore find clarification of the unit inappropriate. We refuse to do so.

The appropriateness of deferring to an arbitrator's award depends on the nature of the dispute involved. Deferral is obviously appropriate when resolution of the dispute turns on the proper interpretation of the parties' contract. Questions involving clarification of a bargaining unit, however, are ones that the Board alone must resolve. As the Board stated in Marion Power Shovel Co., 230 NLRB 576, 577–578 (1977):

> The determination of questions of representation, accretion, and appropriate unit do not depend upon contract interpretation but involve the application of statutory policy, standards, and criteria. These are matters for decision of the Board rather than an arbitrator [footnote omitted].

In the instant situation, the issue presented is whether we should clarify an existing unit to exclude employees at a newly opened facility. Accordingly, this determination is solely one for the Board to make. Our determination whether or not to clarify the unit is not precluded by an arbitrator's decision on this issue. See Magna Corp., 261 NLRB 104, 105 fn. 2 (1982), enf. denied on other grounds 734 F.2d 1057 (5th Cir. 1984).

The Union further argues that unit clarification is inappropriate in this case because the Employer has simply expanded an existing operation. To support this contention, the Union has cited Richfield Oil Corp., 119 NLRB 1425 (1958); Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co., 140 NLRB 1011 (1963); and Goodyear Tire Co., 195 NLRB 767 (1972), enfd. 474 F.2d 1336 (2d Cir. 1973). In each of these cases the Board found that the additional operation in question was an accretion to the existing unit. As we reject the Union's contention that the Aurora warehouse constitutes an accretion to the existing Brighton unit, infra, we conclude that these decisions are distinguishable and do not require us to dismiss the Employer's petition. We find that the other two cases cited by the Union are also distinguishable from this case. In Rice Food Markets, 255 NLRB 884 (1981), and Bay Shipbuilding Corp., 263 NLRB 1133 (1982), enfd. 721 F.2d 187 (7th Cir. 1983), the Board adopted the judge's finding of an 8(a)(5) violation when the employer refused to apply the existing collective-bargaining agreement to employees previously included in the unit. These cases did not involve the opening of a new facility or the hiring of additional employees to staff that facility. By contrast, the Employer in this case has opened a new facility in Aurora to handle general merchandise and has hired additional employees to handle that merchandise. These employees are not previous unit employees separated from either the Brighton or Omaha warehouse. We therefore do not agree with the Union that in opening the Aurora warehouse, the Employer has simply expanded an existing operation. Whether the employees at this new warehouse constitute an accretion to the existing Brighton unit is the issue we must, therefore, next address.

[2] The Regional Director subsequently refused to issue a complaint based on the Union's charge in light of the arbitrator's decision to which he deferred.

[3] After the Employer filed this petition, several unfair labor practice charges were filed during 1985. An Aurora employee filed 8(a)(3) and (2) charges against the Employer, and the Union filed 8(a)(5), (3), and (1) charges against the Employer. The Employer also filed 8(b)(2) and (1)(A) charges against the Union, but these latter charges are no longer pending. The Union has also filed suit in Federal district court seeking enforcement of the arbitration award.

The Board has followed a restrictive policy in finding accretions to existing units because it seeks to insure that the employees' right to determine their own bargaining representative is not foreclosed. We thus will find a valid accretion "only when the additional employees have little or no separate group identity . . . and when the additional employees share an overwhelming community of interest with the preexisting unit to which they are accreted [footnotes omitted]." Safeway Stores, 256 NLRB 918 (1981). To establish that the Aurora employees share such a requisite community of interest with the Brighton employees and therefore should be accreted, the Union points to several factors. These factors include, inter alia, the integrated operation of the two warehouses to fill customer orders; the similarity in working skills and functions of the employees at both warehouses; the contact between the Brighton unit driver and the Aurora warehouse employees; the bargaining history whereby the bargaining unit employees historically handled general merchandise; and the close proximity of the two facilities.

Those factors are relevant. See Universal Security Instruments v. NLRB, 649 F.2d 247, 253–254 (4th Cir. 1981), cert. denied 454 U.S. 965 (1981), and cases there cited. Nevertheless, although the factors of integration of operations, similarity of employee skills, functions, and working conditions, and the contact between the Brighton driver and the Aurora warehouse employees arguably weigh in favor of an accretion, other factors are either neutral or weigh in the other direction. Thus, given the distance of 10–12 miles between the two warehouses, the geographic proximity factor does not weigh in favor of accretion. Although we have found accretions in cases where facilities were 10 miles or more apart,[4] those accretion findings had strong support from other factors. In fact, a distance of that extent between facilities has, on at least one occasion, been treated as weighing slightly against finding an accretion. Bryan Infants Wear Co., 235 NLRB 1305, 1306 (1978). The Union's reliance on bargaining history is also misplaced here. Although the Union had, in the past, represented employees who handled general merchandise, that work ceased, for the most part, in 1982 before the present Employer purchased the Brighton operation. That hiatus substantially weakens bargaining history as a factor in the Union's favor. Cf. Hall's Super Duper, 281 NLRB 1116 (1986) (little weight accorded bargaining history in unit determination when separate representation of two groups of employees had ended 2 years before the election petition was filed). The Employer's brief, 2-week acquiescence in the arbitration award is similarly insubstantial.

Two other factors—degree of employee interchange and common supervision—strongly militate against a finding of accretion, and we do not find that the factors discussed above outweigh them in this case. In arriving at this outcome, we follow Towne Ford Sales, 270 NLRB 311 (1984), a case in which, in the absence of bargaining history favoring accretion, the Board identified two factors as critical:

> One of these elements is the degree of interchange of employees between the affiliated companies. Mac Towing, 262 NLRB 1331 (1982). No weight is assigned to the fact that interchange is feasible when in fact there has been no actual interchange of employees. Combustion Engineering, 195 NLRB 909, 912 (1972). Another important element is whether the day-to-day supervision of employees is the same in the group sought to be accreted. Save-It Discount Foods, 263 NLRB 689 (1982); Weatherite Co., 261 NLRB 667 (1982). This element is particularly significant, since the day-to-day problems and concerns among the employees at one location may not necessarily be shared by employees who are separately supervised at another location. Renzetti's Market, 238 NLRB 174, 175 (1978). [Id. at 311–312.]

Chairman Dotson did not participate and does not rely on these cases for any precedential value.

In the instant case, the record reveals a total lack of interchange of employees between the two facilities except for the 2-week period in which the Employer complied with the arbitrator's award. We also find that common day-to-day supervision does not exist between the two facilities. Although the Union questions the validity of Sherry Rupp's status as a supervisor at the Aurora warehouse, we find the uncontradicted testimony establishes that Rupp has the authority to set work hours and to assign work, and to hire, fire, and discipline employees. The record further establishes that she has exercised this authority. Although Denver Division Distribution Manager William Merciers retains managerial control over the Denver division which encompasses both the Brighton and Aurora warehouses, we have noted that this type of control "does not detract from the significance of either the independent supervision of the employees on daily matters and concerns or the lack of interchange among the two groups of employees." Towne Ford Sales, 270 NLRB at 312. Accordingly, we find that the Aurora employees do not constitute an accretion to the existing Brighton unit.

We find, based on the record as a whole, that the parties have never agreed to include the Aurora warehouse employees in the existing Brighton unit. Furthermore, we find that the Aurora warehouse employees do not constitute an accretion to the existing unit. Accordingly, we shall grant the Employer's petition and clarify the existing Brighton unit to exclude the Aurora warehouse employees.

ORDER

The unit of warehouse employees and drivers represented by the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen and Helpers of America, Local 435, at the Employer's Brighton warehouse in Denver, Colorado, is clarified to exclude all employees at the Employer's Aurora, Colorado warehouse.

SUPPLEMENTAL ORDER

BY CHAIRMAN DOTSON AND MEMBERS JOHANSEN AND BABSON

A controversy having arisen over the amount of backpay due six discriminatees under the terms of the Decision and Order issued by the National Labor Relations Board on 31 July 1984[1] and enforced by a judgment entered by the United States Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit on 29 May 1985,[2] the Regional Director for Region 9 issued a backpay specification and notice of hearing on 26 March 1986 and on 16 May 1986 an amended backpay specification and order rescheduling hearing alleging the amounts of backpay due the discriminatees.

Thereafter, on various dates during September and October 1986, William B. Logan Jr., the trustee in bankruptcy for Respondent Artcraft Ornamental Iron Co., Inc.; Respondent Rich-Morrow Insurance Agency, Inc.; the Charging Party; and the General Counsel entered into a stipulation and motion to transfer case to the Board in resolution of the backpay owed pursuant to the terms of the Board's Order. The stipulation provides for the entry of a supplemental order and, on application by the Board, a consent judgment by the United States court of appeals for any appropriate circuit. The parties waived all further proceedings before the Board to which they may be entitled under the National Labor Relations Act and the Board's Rules and Regulations, and the Respondent waived all defenses to the entry of a judgment by the court of appeals enforcing the Board's Order.

Additionally, the parties stipulated that assets of Respondent Artcraft Ornamental Iron Co. and Respondent Rich-Morrow Insurance Agency are subject to the jurisdiction of the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Southern District of Ohio, Eastern Division, pursuant to the United States Bankruptcy Code. They further agreed that any moneys stipulated to be due and payable to the backpay claimants in this case shall be subject to further determination by the bankruptcy court regarding amounts payable from the bankruptcy estate of Respondent Rich-Morrow. The stipulation also provides that:

> Any determination by the Bankruptcy Court regarding the claims filed on behalf of the claimants shall be binding upon the parties to this stipulation and upon the claimants, after the expiration of any applicable appeal time, or after any appeal has been completed, and neither the bankruptcy estate nor the trustee individually or in his capacity as trustee shall have any further liability or obligation to pay any additional amounts or to take any additional action with regard to the judgment after distribution in accordance with the provisions of the Bankruptcy Code.

The stipulation is approved and made a part of the record, and the proceeding is transferred to and continued before the Board in Washington, D.C., for the entry of a supplemental order pursuant to the provisions of the stipulation.

ORDER

Upon the basis of the stipulation and the entire record in this case, the National Labor Relations Board orders that the Respondent, Artcraft Ornamental Iron Co., Inc. and Rich-Morrow Insurance Agency, Inc., Columbus, Ohio, its trustees in bankruptcy, officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall make the discriminatees whole for the loss of earnings and other benefits they suffered as a result of the discrimination against them by paying the discriminatees the amount set forth opposite their respective names below, plus interest as set forth below to the date of[3] payment.

William M. Diederich	17,334
Wilson Ford	3,594
	plus 1,980
Steve R. Friley	18,899
Ronald Lee Monroe	14,925

The annual interest rates to be applied to the backpay are 16 percent for the period ending 30 June 1983; 11 percent for the period 1 July 1983 through 31 December 1984; 13 percent for the period 1 January through 30 June 1985; 11 percent for the period 1 July through 31 December 1985; 10 percent for the period 1 January through 30 June 1986; and 9 percent for the period 1 July through 31 December 1986.

[3] These figures are the amounts of backpay due Ford and O'Hara for the period beginning in mid-February 1984 and ending 29 April 1984 which, pursuant to the terms of the Board's Order, are a separate and distinct obligation solely of Artcraft Ornamental Iron Co.

LDM Roofing, Inc. d/b/a Acme Roofing Company and Acme Roofing of Eugene, Inc. and United Union of Roofers, Waterproofers & Allied Workers, Local Union No. 156, AFL-CIO. Case 36-CA-4402

27 February 1987

SUPPLEMENTAL DECISION AND ORDER

BY CHAIRMAN DOTSON AND MEMBERS STEPHENS AND CRACRAFT

On 10 November 1986 Administrative Law Judge Timothy D. Nelson issued the attached decision. The Respondent filed exceptions and a supporting brief.

The National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the decision and the record in light of the exceptions and brief and has decided to affirm the judge's rulings, findings, and conclusions[1] and to adopt the recommended Order.

ORDER

The National Labor Relations Board adopts the recommended Order of the administrative law judge and orders that the Respondent, Acme Roofing of Eugene, Inc., Eugene, Oregon, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall take the action set forth in the Order.

[1] The judge concluded, and we agree, that the record clearly supports the finding that Respondent Acme Roofing of Eugene, Inc. is the alter ego of LDM. With respect to the judge's reference to certain factors as "heighten[ing] the presumption of alter ego status," we note that we base our agreement with his alter ego finding on the record evidence and not on any presumption.

Chairman Dotson finds no need to rely on the judge's alternate successorship finding as a basis for imposing backpay liability on Acme Roofing of Eugene, Inc.

Eduardo Escamilla, Esq., for the General Counsel.
E. Scott Lawler, Esq., of Eugene, Oregon, for the Respondents.
Theodore R. Kulongoski, Esq., of Portland, Oregon, for Charging Party Local 156.[1]

DECISION

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

TIMOTHY D. NELSON, Administrative Law Judge. This is a proceeding brought to determine whether Acme Roofing of Eugene, Inc. (Acme) is liable for remedying the unfair labor practices of LDM Roofing, Inc. d/b/a Acme Roofing Co. (LDM).

This is pertinent procedural history:

On 12 July 1984 an administrative law judge found that LDM had committed unfair labor practices in violation of Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act when it refused to honor or be bound by certain terms in the 1982-1984 labor agreement negotiated between United Union of Roofers, Waterproofers, and Allied Workers, Local Union No. 156, AFL-CIO (Union) and Association.[2] Having so found the judge recommended that the Board order LDM to cease and desist from such unfair practices and to make whole its employees (and the benefit trusts established under the governing labor agreement) for losses they incurred as a result of LDM's unlawful acts. On 13 August 1984, after LDM had failed to take exceptions from the judge's decision, the Board adopted, pro forma, the judge's findings and recommendations in their entirety.

On 26 November 1984 the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit entered on an order enforcing the Board's Order.

Thereafter, a controversy arose over the amounts of backpay that LDM must pay to certain employees pursuant to the Board's Order, as enforced by the Ninth Circuit. On 20 November 1985 the Board issued a Supplemental Decision and Order fixing those backpay amounts. On 18 April 1986 the Ninth Circuit enforced the Board's Supplemental Decision and Order.

Thereafter, another controversy arose over the liability of Acme for the fixed backpay amounts that the Board had ordered LDM to pay to certain employees. In order to place this controversy before the Board for resolution, the Regional Director for Region 19 subsequently issued a "Notice of Hearing Without Specification" on 30 July 1986.[3] In that notice of hearing the Regional Director averred in substance that, although LDM had formally ceased operations in "November and December 1984," its owners had formed Acme in November 1984 and thereafter had operated Acme as a "disguised continuance" of LDM, that Acme was LDM's "alter ego," or, alternatively, was a "successor" to LDM and that, under either of those characterizations, Acme was legally responsible for remedying the unfair labor practices committed by LDM.

Pursuant to that notice of hearing, the parties appeared before me on 18 September 1986, in Eugene, Oregon, where they litigated fully all the issues raised by the Regional Director's averrals, as summarized above.[4]

[1] The caption page of the hearing transcript mistakenly identified Kulongoski as the representative of Western Oregon Roofing Contractors Association (Association). The Association was a named party to the underlying proceedings described elsewhere below as a "party to the contract" and was also so named in the instant notice of hearing, although it did not appear here and it would not appear to have any standing in the instant proceeding. For this reason I have omitted the Association's name from the case caption as it appears on the instant notice of hearing.

On the whole record, including the parties' arguments as set forth in their posthearing briefs, I find and conclude as follows

FINDINGS OF FACT

Most of the relevant factual details are contained in the parties' stipulations. I summarize the most significant facts here.

LDM, the corporate entity that was the subject of the underlying unfair labor practice and backpay proceedings, is now an essentially defunct corporation that still retains nominal title, subject to liens, of certain trucks and equipment. It was engaged in mostly commercial roofing work. Its owners are brothers, Michael X. Maher and Richard Maher, respectively, LDM's corporate president and vice president. LDM did business under the name "Acme Roofing Company." The Maher brothers controlled the labor relations of that business operation. The roofing business is generally conducted outside the winter months. LDM essentially discontinued operations qua LDM in November or December 1984, when the winter lull set in.

In January 1985 the Maher brothers formed a new corporation, Acme Roofing of Eugene, Inc. and thereafter continued in the roofing business, this time focusing on smaller-scale residential work, operating initially out of the same office location on McDougal Avenue from which LDM had operated.[5] It also continued to use—and still does use—the trucks, equipment, office supplies, and telephone number that LDM had used. Indeed its trucks are still registered under the LDM corporate name.

When Acme began operation in 1985 its startup complement of roofing employees consisted of persons who had been similarly employed under LDM's operation; so far as this record shows, those former LDM employees still constitute a majority in the full complement of employees regularly used as roofers. The Maher brothers also hold the same corporate offices for Acme as they did for LDM and they still control Acme's labor relations and personnel policies.

The creation of corporate Acme had virtually nothing to do with independent business considerations. Rather, as Michael Maher admitted several times, echoed by Respondent's counsel on brief, the formation of the new corporation stemmed from the Maher brothers' desire to operate "nonunion." This desire, they believed, could be effectuated by the simple device of a change in corporate identity, together with a declaration to the employees whom they took on in 1985 that henceforth the Company would be nonunion.[6]

There is general agreement that Acme's operation now differs in scale and focus from LDM's. It is clear, however, that this is not so much related to the reasons for forming a new corporation than to the failure of the Maher brothers to stay afloat economically as roofers. Thus, in better times, the Mahers' business focussed on securing larger-scale commercial contracts, many of them from governmental bodies. This business focus allowed them to maintain a larger crew of roofers during the 9-month fair weather construction season, as well as a small cadre of intermediate supervisors. As long as this business was good, the Mahers were able to devote much of their time to pursuit of other, independent, business interests.

Eventually, however, for reasons that were not the subject of litigation in this hearing, the business under corporate LDM fell into financial decline, leaving LDM with many creditors, bank lienholders, state and Federal tax authorities, the United States Department of Labor, and the Board itself, all pursuing to judgment various claims against it. Particularly as a result of its defaults on payments to the bank that held liens on its trucks and equipment, the Mahers faced certain loss of their ability to continue in the roofing business. To prevent truck and equipment foreclosure, the Mahers negotiated arrangements with the bank whereby the bank would exercise forbearance in exchange for the Mahers' pledging of their personal assets and credit. And although this arrangement allowed them to continue in business, LDM's financial situation was still bad enough to make it impossible for the Mahers to obtain performance bonds, insurance, and to meet other typical requirements for large-scale commercial and governmental contract work. It was this fact of life, rather than any independent desire on the part of the Mahers to start a "new" business, which accounts for the fact that they now focus on residential work (operating under corporate Acme), using a substantially reduced complement of employees, and only occasionally perform commercial and governmental work—and then, only on a smaller scale.

ANALYSIS; CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

The General Counsel argues that Acme is merely a disguised continuance, or alter ego, of LDM; alternatively, the General Counsel would have the Board find Acme to be LDM's successor, with knowledge of LDM's liability under the Board's backpay order, and therefore liable itself for that backpay.[7]

[4] The evidentiary record thus made consists of three elements: The written answers made on 22 May 1986 by Michael X. Maher, a coowner of both LDM and Acme, to certain written interrogatories propounded by the General Counsel (G.C. Exh. 2), a series of stipulations of fact adopted by all parties and read into the hearing record, and the testimony of Michael X. Maher.

[6] It is not before me to judge or decide whether in doing so Acme committed unfair labor practices, nor whether Acme assumed the obligation to continue recognizing the Union as the representative of its employees. So far as this record shows, neither the Union nor the General Counsel has pursued those questions, but seek merely to hold Acme liable, to the extent of its assets, for the liquidated backpay obligations incurred by LDM.

[7] Conspicuously lacking in the General Counsel's position at this stage is any attempt to have the Board perform an ultimate piercing of corporate veils by seeking to hold the Mahers personally liable for the liquidated backpay amounts. I, therefore, do not independently consider that question.

It is easy to find merit in either theory. As to alter ego, see for example Fugazy Continental Corp., 265 NLRB 1301 (1982), enfd. 725 F.2d 1416 (D.C. Cir. 1984). And compare the Board's recent decision in Gilroy Sheet Metal, 280 NLRB 1075 fn. 1 (1986), and authorities cited (finding no alter ego), stressing that "the evidence does not establish that hostility towards the Union was a motive for terminating Heating & Air or for founding Sheet Metal." It is clear that the Maher brothers, under corporate Acme, are continuing to operate a roofing business with the same equipment that they used under corporate LDM and with a cadre of employees drawn from the former LDM complement. And nothing in this record explains why the Mahers formed corporate Acme except their desire to break away from "union" obligations and, perhaps, to confuse creditors whose judgments ran only to LDM. Thus, but for those considerations—which heighten the presumption of alter ego status (Fugazy, supra; Gilroy Sheet Metal, supra)[8]—the Mahers could have and would have continued as corporate LDM, even though LDM's precarious financial condition would have forced a change in their business focus and in their scale of operations of the same type as they now engage in under corporate Acme.

Where there is a direct basis for finding that Acme is no more than a disguised continuance, or alter ego, of LDM, it seems needlessly attenuated to reach the further conclusion that Acme also satisfies all pertinent tests for successorship, even though it operates on a smaller scale and with a different business focus than did LDM.[9] Nevertheless, where Acme satisfied those tests, and assumed the business with knowledge of LDM's outstanding liabilities under the Board's Order, Acme may be held liable for the liquidated backpay at issue even if it were not an alter ego of LDM. Golden State Bottling Co. v. NLRB, 414 U.S. 168 (1973); see also Perma-Vinyl Corp., 164 NLRB 968, 969 (1967), enfd. sub nom. United States Pipe & Foundry Co. v. NLRB, 398 F.2d 544 (5th Cir. 1968); Bell Co., 243 NLRB 977 (1979).

[8] In Goodman Piping Products v. NLRB, 741 F.2d 10 (2d Cir. 1984), enfg. E.G. Sprinkler Corp., 268 NLRB 1241 (1984), the Second Circuit suggested that antiunion animus may be "sufficient" in itself to find alter ego status, 741 F.2d at 12, citing the Supreme Court's decision in Southport Petroleum Co. v. NLRB, 315 U.S. 100, 106 (1942).

[9] See and compare, e.g., Stewart Granite Enterprises, 255 NLRB 569 (1981), also involving a successor who took over only a portion of a larger union-represented business and who thereafter operated in a narrower market than had its predecessor.

Conclusions of Law

1. Acme Roofing of Eugene, Inc. is a disguised continuance, and the alter ego, of LDM Roofing, Inc. d/b/a Acme Roofing Company.

2. Acme Roofing of Eugene, Inc. is a successor to LDM Roofing, Inc., which continued LDM's operations with knowledge of—and therefore assumed—LDM's liability for backpay under the Board's order.

3. Acme Roofing of Eugene, Inc. is liable for the liquidated backpay amounts that the Board found were owed to former employees of LDM.

On these findings of fact and conclusions of law and on the entire record, I issue the following recommended[10]

ORDER

To the extent LDM Roofing, Inc. d/b/a Acme Roofing Company has not done so, Acme Roofing of Eugene, Inc. shall immediately pay to the employees named in the Board's liquidated backpay order in Case 36–CA–6832 the amounts set forth in that order.

[10] If no exceptions are filed as provided by Sec. 102.46 of the Board's Rules and Regulations, the findings, conclusions, and recommended Order shall, as provided in Sec. 102.48 of the Rules, be adopted by the Board and all objections to them shall be deemed waived for all purposes.

DECISION AND ORDER

4 March 1987

BY MEMBERS JOHANSEN, BABSON, AND STEPHENS

On 21 August 1986 Administrative Law Judge Steven Davis issued the attached decision. The Respondents filed exceptions and supporting briefs, the General Counsel filed cross-exceptions and a supporting brief, and the Respondents filed briefs in answer to the General Counsel's cross-exceptions.

The National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the decision and the record in light of the exceptions and briefs and has decided to affirm the judge's rulings, findings,[1] and conclusions[2] as modified, and to adopt the recommended Order as modified[3] and set forth in full below.

The General Counsel excepts to the judge's failure to find that the layoffs of employees Bertha Meija and Amalia Paredes violated Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act. The judge found that the General Counsel did not establish a prima facie case of discrimination with respect to these individuals because there was no evidence that the Respondent BMD had knowledge of their union activities. He therefore recommended that the relevant complaint allegations be dismissed.

In her exceptions, the General Counsel argues that, inter alia, the evidence of Respondent BMD's animus toward the Union, the timing of the layoffs, the employees' union activities, and its other unlawful conduct are a sufficient basis from which to infer that the Respondent knew of Meija and Paredes' union activities. For the following reasons, we find merit in the General Counsel's exceptions.

On 19 April 1985 employees Paz and Garcia contacted the Union. During the next several days, both women took an active role in speaking to their fellow employees regarding the Union, and on 22 April they assisted the Union's agents in distributing cards outside the plant. As found by the judge, Paz and Garcia, in addition to other employees, were the subjects of unlawful interrogations regarding their union sympathies during this period. Paz and Garcia were unlawfully laid off on 23 and 25 April, respectively.

On five separate occasions between the advent of the union campaign and 23 April, when Meija and Paz were laid off, Meija was observed by Supervisor Milkenvoic having lunch with Paz. Meija signed an authorization card on 22 April. Similarly, Paredes was observed by Milkenvoic having lunch with Paz on 23 April, the same day she signed a card away from the plant. Subsequent to her lunch with Paz, Paredes was twice approached by employee Otero, who asked her if she had signed a card, and then told her that Dordevic would fire or lay off employees who signed cards.[4] Paredes was laid off on 3 May.

It has long been held that where there is no direct evidence, knowledge may be proven by cir-

[1] In adopting the judge's finding that Respondents BMD and Suzan are alter egos, we emphasize, as did the judge, that such a finding is not based solely on the familial relationship between Bora Dordevic and his brother Jovo Milosevic. Rather, we note the Respondents' failure, in light of the indicia of alter ego status addressed by the judge, to offer any evidence that would support a finding that an arm's-length relationship existed between the two companies. Moreover, the credited testimony establishes that Dordevic told Suzan employee Lopez that, in the event of unionization at BMD, he would close BMD to expand operation at Suzan, which statement further supports the alter ego finding.

We grant Respondent Suzan's motion to amend its answer to conform to "a defense raised before the judge." In this motion, Suzan asserts that Sec. 10(b) bars its addition as a party after the hearing was in progress and after evidence was taken. It is well settled, however, that the interests of alter egos are identical, and therefore Suzan was present at the entire hearing and defended itself through the representation of BMD. See, e.g., Sturdevant Roofing Co., 238 NLRB 186, 187 (1978), enfd. 636 F.2d 271 (10th Cir. 1980) (where two companies are found to be alter egos, service on one company is sufficient to initiate proceedings within limitations of Sec. 10(b)). Thus Sec. 10(b) has been complied with insofar as Respondent Suzan is found to be liable for the violations alleged against BMD. With respect to the amended complaint allegations relating only to Respondent Suzan, the charge was filed 7 January 1986 and the alleged violations occurred in late July or early August 1985. These alleged violations were thus clearly within the 6-month limitations period, and we therefore reject Respondent Suzan's 10(b) defense.

In part VI, par. 13, of his decision, the judge referred to employee Paredes rather than employee Carmen Lopez. We correct this inadvertent error.

[2] Respondent BMD excepts to the judge's conclusion that it violated Sec. 8(a)(1) by allowing an employee-made sign stating, "Please vote for BMD and save our job" to remain posted for several days prior to the 21 June 1985 election. In view of the ambiguity of the statement and the tenuous nature of Respondent BMD's connection with the alleged threat, we find merit in the Respondent's exception and shall modify the Order and notice accordingly.

[3] We shall modify the Order and notice to delete the judge's finding that the Respondents violated Sec. 8(a)(1) by telling employees they were silly and stupid in connection with the Union.

The General Counsel requests a visitatorial clause authorizing the Board, for compliance purposes, to obtain discovery from the Respondents under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure subject to supervision of the United States court of appeals enforcing this Order. Under the circumstances of this case, we find it unnecessary to include such a clause. Nathan's Furniture Store, 278 NLRB 268 (1986).

cumstantial evidence from which a reasonable inference may be drawn. NLRB v. Wal-Mart Stores, 488 F.2d 114, 117 (8th Cir. 1973). See generally NLRB v. Link-Belt Co., 311 U.S. 584, 602 (1941). Such circumstances may include proof of knowledge of general union activity, the employer's demonstrated animus, the timing of the discharge, and the pretextual reasons for the discharge asserted by the employer. General Iron Corp., 218 NLRB 770, 778 (1975), enfd. 538 F.2d 312 (2d Cir. 1976). See also Hunter Douglas, Inc. v. NLRB, 804 F.2d 808 (3d Cir. 1986), enfg. 277 NLRB 1179 (1985). In addition, the discharge of an employee who is not known to have engaged in union activity but who has a close relationship with a known union adherent may give rise to an inference of discrimination. See Permanent Label Corp., 248 NLRB 118, 136 (1980), enfd. 657 F.2d 512 (3d Cir. 1981). Thus a discharge motivated by an employer's belief or suspicion that an employee engaged in union activity violates the Act. Id.

Here, the judge found, and we agree, that Respondent BMD harbored anti-union animus, as demonstrated by the numerous 8(a)(1) violations found, as well as by the discriminatory layoffs of five employees in addition to Meija and Paredes. In addition, based on these violations, we find that Respondent BMD had general knowledge of the employees' union activity. We further agree with the judge that the reason asserted by Respondent BMD for the layoffs of all seven discriminatees, lack of work, was wholly unsupported by the evidence and therefore pretexual. With respect to timing, as noted above, Meija was laid off the same day as union supporter Paz, and Paredes was laid off the following week.[5] Moreover, the layoffs of all seven alleged discriminatees closely followed the start of the union campaign. We find that these circumstances, in addition to Milkenvoic's observation of Meija and Paredes at lunch with one or both of the primary union activists, who were themselves unlawfully laid off, constitute a sufficient basis to infer that the Respondent knew, or at least suspected, that Meija and Paredes supported the Union. We therefore conclude, particularly in light of the absence of any legitimate basis for the layoffs,[6] that the General Counsel has established a prima facie case of discrimination with respect to Meija and Paredes. Inasmuch as the Respondents have not met their burden of demonstrating that the layoffs would have occurred even in the absence of the protected conduct of Meija and Paredes, we find that the layoffs violated Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act.

[5] Contrary to the judge, we find that the fact that Paredes' layoff followed the other layoffs by several days does not significantly weaken the General Counsel's prima facie case, nor does it render Respondent BMD's defense any more plausible. In this regard we note that despite its claim of a general business slowdown necessitating the layoffs, Respondent BMD hired five new employees on the date of Paredes' layoff.

ORDER

The Respondents, BMD Sportswear Corp. and its alter ego Suzan Knitwear Corp., Queens, New York, their officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall jointly and severally

1. Cease and desist from

(a) Laying off, discharging, or otherwise discriminating against any employee for supporting Knitgoods Workers Union, Local 155, International Ladies Garment Workers Union, AFL–CIO or any other union.

(b) Isolating the work stations of employees causing them to be subject to adverse conditions; assigning employees to inefficient machines causing a reduction in the amount of earnings they receive; issuing warning letters to employees because of their membership in and activities on behalf of the Union.

(c) Asking employees if they called the Union; whether they signed cards or any papers for the Union; why employees were supporting the Union's advocates; who signed for the Union; whether they liked the Union; why one of the Union's advocates did not get a job in a union shop if she was in the Union; if they knew of the Union; whether they spoke to the Union's agents; and if they were in the Union and who spoke to them about the Union.

(d) Accusing employees of forcing workers to sign cards; threatening that it would lay off employees who signed cards and close the shop, change its name, and replace the workers; threatening employees that if they signed cards for the Union or called it they would be fired; telling workers that if they did not sign a card they would continue to work; threatening employees that the Respondents would close the shop if the Union came in or won the election; telling employees that if the union problem continued Respondent BMD contemplated closing and expanding operations at Suzan.

(e) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them by Section 7 of the Act.

2. Take the following affirmative action necessary to effectuate the policies of the Act.

(a) Offer Gloria Chunga, Carmen Lopez, Bertha Meija, Amalia Paredes, Edilma Nunez, Maria Garcia, and Mercedes Paz immediate and full reinstatement to their former jobs or, if those jobs no longer exist, to substantially equivalent positions, without prejudice to their seniority or any other rights or privileges previously enjoyed, and make them whole for any loss of earnings and other benefits suffered as a result of the discrimination against them, in the manner set forth in the remedy section of the decision.

(b) Remove from their files any reference to the unlawful actions taken against Chunga, Lopez, Meija, Paredes, Nunez, Garcia, and Paz and notify the employees in writing that this has been done and that the actions will not be used against them in any way.

(c) Preserve and, on request, make available to the Board or its agents for examination and copying, all payroll records, social security payment records, timecards, personnel records and reports, and all other records necessary to analyze the amount of backpay due under the terms of this Order.

(d) Post at the New York facilities of BMD Sportswear Corp., and Suzan Knitwear Corp., copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix."[7] Copies of the notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 29, after being signed by the Respondents' authorized representative, shall be posted by the Respondents immediately upon receipt and maintained for 60 consecutive days in conspicuous places including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by the Respondents to ensure that the notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(e) Notify the Regional Director in writing within 20 days from the date of this Order what steps the Respondents have taken to comply.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the complaint is dismissed insofar as it alleges violations not specifically found.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the election held on 21 June 1985 among certain employees at Respondent BMD Sportswear Corp., is set aside and the Regional Director is directed to conduct a second election at such time as he deems that circumstances permit the free choice of a bargaining representative.

APPENDIX

NOTICE TO EMPLOYEES
POSTED BY ORDER OF THE
NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD
An Agency of the United States Government

The National Labor Relations Board has found that we violated the National Labor Relations Act and has ordered us to post and abide by this notice.

WE WILL NOT lay off, discharge, or otherwise discriminate against any employee for supporting Knitgoods Workers Union, Local 155, International Ladies Garment Workers Union, AFL–CIO or any other union.

WE WILL NOT isolate the work stations of employees causing them to be subject to adverse conditions; assign employees to inefficient machines causing a reduction in the amount of earnings they receive; issue warning letters to employees because of their membership in and activities on behalf of the Union.

WE WILL NOT ask employees if they called the Union; whether they signed cards or any papers for the Union; why employees were supporting the Union's advocates; who signed for the Union; whether they liked the Union; why one of the Union's advocates did not get a job in a union shop if she was in the Union; if they knew of the Union; whether they spoke to the Union's agents; if they were in the Union; who spoke to them about the Union.

WE WILL NOT accuse employees of forcing workers to sign cards; threaten that we would lay off employees who signed cards and close the shop, change our name, and replace the workers; threaten employees that if they signed cards for the Union or called it they would be fired; tell workers that if they did not sign a card they would continue to work; threaten employees that we would close the shop if the Union came in or won the election; tell employees that if the union problem continued BMD contemplated closing and expanding operations at Suzan.

WE WILL NOT in any like or related manner interfere with, restrain, or coerce you in the exercise of the rights guaranteed you by Section 7 of the Act.

WE WILL offer Gloria Chunga, Carmen Lopez, Bertha Meija, Amalia Paredes, Edilma Nunez, Maria Garcia, and Mercedes Paz immediate and full reinstatement to their former jobs or, if those jobs no longer exist, to substantially equivalent positions, without prejudice to their seniority or any other rights or privileges previously enjoyed, and make them whole for any loss of earnings and other benefits suffered as a result of the discrimination against them with interest.

WE WILL remove from our files any reference to the unlawful actions taken against Chunga, Lopez, Meija, Paredes, Nunez, Garcia, and Paz and notify them in writing that this has been done and that the actions will not be used against them in any way.

DECISION

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

STEVEN DAVIS, Administrative Law Judge. On 1 May 1985[1] Knitgoods Workers Union, Local 155, International Ladies Garment Workers Union, AFL–CIO (Union) filed charges against BMD Sportswear Corp. (BMD) in Cases 29–CA–11824–1 and 29–CA–11824–2 and on 17 June filed a first amended charge in Case 29–CA–11824–1. The Regional Director issued an order consolidating cases, consolidated amended complaint, and notice of hearing on 28 June. On 24 June, the Union filed a charge against BMD in Case 29–CA–11929 and the Regional Director issued a complaint and notice of hearing on 24 September.

Based on those charges and on objections filed by the Union in Case 29–RC–6390, the Regional Director issued an order consolidating cases, consolidated amended complaint, and notice of hearing on 24 October.

On 21 October the Regional Director issued a Report on Objections, order consolidating cases, and notice of hearing, which consolidated for hearing Cases 29–CA–11824–1–2 and 29–CA–11929 and Case 29–RC–6390, which involves allegedly objectionable conduct[2] in that the Employer threatened its employees with plant closure if the Union won the election.[3]

On 15 November, Mercedes Paz filed a charge in Case 29–CA–12146–1 against BMD, and Maria Garcia filed a charge in Case 29–CA–12146–2 against BMD, on which the Acting Regional Director issued an order consolidating cases, consolidated complaint, and notice of hearing against BMD on 13 January 1986.

On 7 January 1986 a charge was filed by the Union against BMD and Suzan Knitwear Corp. (Suzan) in Case 29–CA–12213, on which the Acting Regional Director issued a complaint and notice of hearing against Respondents on 21 January 1986.

Finally, in order to clarify and consolidate the allegations of the various complaints and amendments made at the hearing, a written motion to amend complaints, made by the General Counsel and dated 19 March 1986, was granted by me at the hearing. The motion included all the allegations of the complaints and amendments made at the hearing, and alleges as follows:

(a) Respondent Suzan was established by Respondent BMD as a subordinate instrument to and a disguised continuation of a part of the business of Respondent BMD.

(b) Respondent BMD and Respondent Suzan have been affiliated businesses with common officers, ownership, directors, and operators; the directors and operators formulate and administer a common labor policy for the aforenamed companies, affecting the employees of the companies.

(c) Respondent BMD and Respondent Suzan are alter egos and a single employer within the meaning of the Act.

(d) Respondents interrogated employees concerning their union membership, activities, and sympathies.

(e) Respondents warned and directed their employees to refrain from becoming or remaining members of the Union.

(f) Respondents threatened their employees with discharge, and threatened that they would close a plant.

(g) Respondents laid off seven employees and failed to recall them because of their union activities.

(h) Respondent BMD assigned employees Maria Garcia and Mercedes Paz to more arduous and less agreeable job tasks; reduced their rate of pay by assigning them to lower paying job tasks; isolated their work stations from other employees; issued a warning letter to Paz; and caused their termination; all because of their union activities and because they gave testimony under the Act. After the close of the hearing, Respondents filed leave to amend their answers, which I granted.[4]

The case was heard before me in New York City on 12 days between 9 December 1985 and 16 April 1986.

On the entire record, including my observation of the demeanor of the witnesses, and after due consideration of the briefs filed by General Counsel and Respondent BMD,[5] I make the following

FINDINGS OF FACT

I. JURISDICTION

Respondent BMD, a New York corporation, having its office and place of business at 1051 Wyckoff Avenue, Queens, New York, is engaged in the manufacture, sale,

[1] All dates herein are in 1985.

[2] Other objections were withdrawn by the Union before the hearing and are not before me.

[3] The petition was filed by the Union on 9 May. A Stipulation for Certification Upon Consent Election was executed by the parties and approved by the Regional Director on 29 May, and an election was held on 21 June in a unit consisting of all production, maintenance, shipping, and receiving employees employed by BMD at its 1051 Wycoff Avenue, Ridgewood, New York location, excluding all other employees, guards and supervisors as defined in the Act. The election resulted in 11 votes for the Union; 46 votes against the Union; and 8 challenged ballots.

and distribution of sweaters and related products. During the past year, BMD, in the course and conduct of its business operations, purchased and caused to be transported and delivered to its plant thread, yarn, and fabric valued in excess of $50,000, which were delivered to its Queens, New York plant directly from locations outside New York State.

Respondent Suzan, a New York corporation, having its office and place of business at 20–36 Harmon Street, Queens, New York, has been engaged in the manufacture, sale, and distribution of sweaters and related products.

Based on projection of its operations since about 24 April 1985, at which time Respondent Suzan commenced its operations, Respondent Suzan, in the course and conduct of its business operations will annually sell and ship from its plant products, goods, and materials valued in excess of $50,000 directly to points outside the State of New York.

Respondents admit and I find that BMD and Suzan are employers engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act, and that the Union is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

II. SUPERVISORY STATUS OF MELJUS MILKENVOIC

A. Facts

The General Counsel alleges that Meljus Milkenvoic is a supervisor of Respondent BMD. Respondents deny this. She did not testify.

BMD's president, Bora Dordevic, testified that Milkenvoic, the floorlady, is in charge of the factory in his absence, to ensure that the workers do their work properly. He relies on her and she gives work to and controls the work of the merrow machine operators. However he also noted that his wife, the secretary, and John (a porter), also give work to the merrow operators. Milkenvoic began work, as a Singer machine operator, when the factory opened in 1978 and she continues to work on the Singer although she also distributes work and "oversees" the work of the merrow operators. As the floorlady, she also examines the work done. Dordevic further stated that he tells her what work to distribute and she does so without using independent judgment. He stated that she does not hire, fire, or recommend such action. Milkenvoic is salaried, earning $400 per week and an additional $100 per week as a "percentage" because she opens and closes the factory in his absence[6] and is reliable. The additional sum pays part of her gasoline expense. No one else received such a percentage. The other persons who receive salaries are Dordevic and his wife who receive $500 per week each; cutter Antonio Otero—$510 and secretary Radmila Rajkov—$480.

Employees testified that Milkenvoic gave them work, instructed them on how to perform it,[7] and inspected the work to see that it was done correctly by walking around the shop and looking at the workers as they worked.[8] If the work was not done properly, she returned it to the worker for corrections, which one worker regarded as discipline. Work was also assigned to others for corrections. Paz conceded that Dordevic told Milkenvoic what work to give out, and she distributed work to whoever was finished with their job. The work was evenly distributed among those senior people.

Employees also asked Milkenvoic if they had a question about the work they were doing. Milkenvoic also signs the production tickets attached to the work of the piece-rate employees. That ticket lists the rate paid for the job. Employees conceded that Milkenvoic, in addition to her floorlady responsibilities, works on the Singer machine, although no percentage of her day on such tasks was established at the hearing.

Employees told Milkenvoic if they had to leave early or would arrive late, and she always permitted them to do so without checking with Dordevic. It was argued by Respondents, however, that the fewer hours a piece-worker works results in lesser pay so the Company essentially did not care when the workers left or arrived.[9]

Employee Lopez stated that Milkenvoic frequently yelled at her and told her to go home, but she did not leave because she knew that Dordevic would not fire her. In fact, Lopez told Milkenvoic that if she did not stop bothering her she would hit her. Dordevic then approached and told them to calm down. Lopez stated that she knew that Dordevic did not support Milkenvoic's actions.

Milkenvoic also asked employees if they could work overtime or on Saturdays.

B. Analysis

Milkenvoic, the floorlady at BMD, is in charge of the factory in the absence of its owner; opens and closes it; assigns work to the employees; instructs them on its performance; and checks the work and returns it for correction to the employee who performed the work, or to others for correction. She also answers questions about the performance of the work and signs the tickets that authorize payment to the piece-rate workers. She also asks employees if they can work overtime or on Saturdays and accepts explanations why the workers arrived late or must leave early. In addition, Milkenvoic received a percentage, amounting to $100 per week, for, among other things, these additional responsibilities. In addition, she was salaried unlike the operators, who received piece-rate wages or others, who were hourly paid.

The evidence also shows that her demand that an employee leave was ignored and not supported by Dordevic, and that part of her day consisted of work performed on a machine.

[6] Milkenvoic and the Dordevics are the only persons having keys to the factory.

[7] Occasionally Dordevic explains how to perform the work.

[8] Employee Caban stated that occasionally Mrs. Dordevic checks her work.

[9] This is in contrast to the reaction of Respondent BMD when piece-worker Paz took photos for 2 minutes. She was accused of not working and disrupting the operation.

Dordevic admitted that he relies on Milkenvoic, who assigns and controls the work of the operators, to ensure that the workers perform their jobs properly.

Notwithstanding her lack of authority to hire, discharge,[10] suspend, recall, or promote employees or to make effective recommendations for such action, I believe that the evidence is clear that Milkenvoic responsibly assigned work to and directed employees and was a supervisor as defined in the Act. Dadco Fashions, 243 NLRB 1193, 1194 (1979); *Ridgely Mfg. III. ALLEGED UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES

A. The Organizing Drive

Respondents are garment contractors. They receive raw materials from manufacturers and orders from manufacturers or jobbers. They cut and sew sweaters, first making a sample and then, on receiving approval, sew and ship the orders received. In the period from March to November 1985, BMD employed 61 to 76 employees, most of whom were merrow machine operators who sewed the garments together and were paid on a piecerate basis. BMD also employed cutters and other machine operators.

Suzan was a smaller company. Its records showed that 26 workers received payment in the first week of its operations in May.

According to employees Garcia and Paz, beginning at least in early 1985, the piecework rates were lowered at BMD by its president and owner, Bora Dordevic. The workers' complaint was that the rates per dozen were reduced for the same type of work that had previously been paid at a higher rate. The rates were reduced three to five times since January 1985, according to them, and whenever they complained, Dordevic refused to increase the rates to their former level.

About 16 April, the piece rate was again lowered and about seven employees spoke to Dordevic about that. He explained that the company for which they sewed the goods recently began business and it could not afford to pay more and as a result, he could not pay the employees more. The employees protested to no avail and Dordevic invited them to leave if they did not like the piece rate.

The following day, 17 April, a group of employees spoke about the need for a union, and Paz called Local 155. On 19 April, Paz and Garcia went to the Union after work. That morning, Dordevic asked Garcia if she and Paz called the Union. Garcia replied, "No, not yet." Dordevic told her to call the Union because he is not afraid of anyone. Also that day, Milkenvoic, the floorlady, asked Garcia if she signed any papers for the Union.[11] Garcia asked, "What papers?" and Milkenvoic replied that she knew she wanted the Union. Garcia answered that everyone wanted benefits, and "who does not want the Union." Milkenvoic also asked why she was supporting Paz, and added that Dordevic was very rich, and could open a factory in another location. Garcia replied that Dordevic would lose because if the workers struck he would not be able to receive work. Employee Bertha Mejia stated that she spoke about five times with employees in the factory during lunch about the Union and benefits. The employees, who spoke Spanish, were seated about 25 feet from Milkenvoic. There is no evidence that Milkenvoic understood any part of their conversation or overheard them.

On 21 April, Union Agent Ramonita Guzman visited Paz at her home. Paz signed a card for the Union and was given blank cards to distribute to her coworkers.

On 22 April, Guzman and fellow union agent Will Aldrich stood outside the factory, speaking with and distributing cards to employees. Garcia and Paz assisted. Guzman was present from 6:30 to 8 a.m. and from 2 to 4:30 or 5 p.m.

That day, Milkenvoic asked Garcia if she signed papers that Paz had for the Union. Garcia denied doing so, and asked her "what papers?" Milkenvoic replied that she knew that Garcia wanted the Union, and asked who else signed. Garcia did not reply. Garcia signed a union card that day and was given additional cards by Paz.

Garcia and Paz stated that beginning on 22 April they distributed union cards to employees before work, at lunch, in the bathroom, on the street, and at the homes of the workers.[12] They stated that they stood with Guzman and Aldrich while they solicited employees on the street in front of the factory. In the morning of 22 April, Paz spoke briefly with five or six employees before work. When Milkenvoic brought Paz work that day, she told Paz that she was silly and stupid, and accused her of forcing employees to sign cards. She added that Dordevic has a lot of money and does not care if he closed the factory for 6 months, reopened it under another name or owner, and replaced the workers. Milkenvoic further said that Dordevic did not like the Union and everyone who signed a card would be laid off. Paz replied that she did not care, that she was a good worker who would either get another job or take vacation. Milkenvoic then asked her if she called the Union. Paz answered that she did because the reduction of the piece rate was unfair. Thereafter, during each of the five or six occasions that Milkenvoic brought work to Paz that day, she told Paz that Dordevic would fire her; anyone who signed a card would be dismissed; and Dordevic would change the name of the Company. Each time Paz replied that she did not care.

That afternoon, after work, Paz distributed union cards with Garcia and Union Agent Guzman in front of the shop.

The solicitation continued on the street the next day, 23 April, with Guzman, Aldrich, Garcia, and Paz speaking to employees and helping them complete cards.

[10] However, employees Nunez and Paredes testified that Milkenvoic told them that they were laid off, and they should leave the premises, which they did.

[11] Dordevic's question to Garcia was corroborated by Paz, who earlier had asked a Yugoslavian worker to sign a card. She refused and told Milkenvoic that Paz asked her, and Milkenvoic told Dordevic, who asked Garcia the above question.

[12] This is corroborated by the testimony of Carmen Lopez, Bertha Mejia, Edilma Nunez, and Amalia Paredes who stated that they were given cards by Garcia or Paz.

Garcia stated that, while engaged in this activity, she saw Milkenvoic watching them. Paz stood with the others for 25 minutes in front of the factory that morning. During the day, during each of the five or six times Milkenvoic brought work to Paz, she told her that if she signed cards for the Union or called the Union she would be fired. She added that Dordevic had a lot of money and would close the factory, change its name, and replace the workers because he does not like the Union.

Also that day, Milkenvoic told Garcia that employee Dalia told her that Paz forced her to sign union papers. Garcia replied that Dalia was lying because she did not sign any papers. Later that day, Milkenvoic asked Gloria Chunga if she liked the Union and if she signed a card for it. Chunga replied, "Yes."[13] The following day Chunga was laid off.

As Paz was leaving work on 23 April, Dordevic told her that a customer had canceled an order and that she was no longer needed because there was no work. Paz asked that he lay off the new employees first. Dordevic answered that he would do as he wished. Paz said she would go to the Labor Department because she knew why she was being fired.

Delores Rivera, Paz' sister, stated that that week, Milkenvoic asked her why Paz did not get a job in a union shop if she is in the Union. Milkenvoic also told Rivera that Dordevic's friend had the same problem with a union and he closed his factory and moved. She added that Dordevic would close the shop if the Union comes in.

When Bertha Mejia left work at the end of the day, Dordevic told her that he had no more work, and she should leave.

The following day, 24 April, Paz returned to the shop with Union Agents Aldrich and Guzman, who introduced themselves to Secretary Redmila Rajkov. According to Paz, Aldrich, and Guzman, they asked Dordevic to reinstate Paz and he refused, saying that if the Union came in he would close.

Dordevic denied saying that. He testified that Paz demanded that he admit her, saying that "I am your god." Dordevic replied that there is only one God, and "you're not it." Paz said that she would close the factory. Dordevic told her that she did not open the shop and she could not close it.

I credit the testimony of Paz, Aldrich, and Guzman. Their versions were consistent, mutually corroborative, and believable because similar threats to close had been made by Dordevic directly and through him by Milkenvoic.

Later that day, Milkenvoic asked Garcia whether she signed papers for the Union. Garcia denied doing so. Milkenvoic then said that if the Union comes in she would be happy because she would get 3 months' vacation.

Also that day, Edilma Nunez, while working, waved through an open door at Paz and the union agents who were standing outside the shop.[14] Five minutes later Mira Dordevic, the wife of the owner and an admitted officer and agent of Respondent, came to her work station with Antonio Otero, the cutter, who translated. Mira asked if she knew of the Union, whether she spoke to the union agents, and whether she was in the Union or signed a union card. Mira said that she knew what the Union was doing, but she wanted to help Nunez so that she would not "get involved," and could continue to work and not lose her job. Nunez answered that the Union spoke to her at her house, and gave him a paper to sign, but she (Nunez) did not know if the paper was a union card. Nunez stated that Otero said that he did not tell Mira that she signed a card. In fact, Nunez had signed a card the night before at home, at the request of Guzman and Paz. Otero then told Nunez that anyone who was involved with the Union would be fired. Maria Dordevic did not testify.

At the end of the workday Bora Dordevic asked Nunez, through Otero, whether she knew about the Union and who spoke to her concerning it. He said that he was telling her this because he wanted to help her, adding that he wanted to know if she signed a card. He also stated that if she did not sign, she could continue to work. Nunez replied that Paz told her about the Union at lunch the day before, and that she signed a card at home at Paz' request, who told her that a majority of the workers signed cards. Dordevic answered that he knew that they wanted to bring a Union in, but that he would not permit that. He said that he would rather close the shop before the Union entered, and that if the Union comes in he would close. The following day Nunez was laid off by Milkenvoic who told her that work was slow.

Carmen Lopez signed a card that day outside the factory after work in the presence of Paz and the union agent while the gate was open. On 21 or 22 April Lopez had spoken to Paz about the Union at lunch.

The following day, 25 April, as Lopez was leaving, Milkenvoic asked for her phone number and told her that there was no more work, but that she would call when work picked up. Lopez gave her phone number but was never called. That day Garcia was laid off too.

Amalia Paredes was asked by Paz on 23 April at lunch to help her get a union in the factory. Paredes agreed. Paz told her to sign a card after work that day. Paredes signed a card outside the shop at the end of the day. On 3 May, Milkenvoic told Paredes work was slow and she should not come to work, but would be recalled.[15]

Sometime before the election, which took place on 21 June, Milkenvoic told employee Mirian Cedeno, while she was working, that she (Cedeno) would see what will happen after the election, adding that if the Union won, Dordevic would close the factory. Cedeno replied that if the shop closed she would look for another job.

[14] This was corroborated by Union Agent Aldrich.

[15] On 23 April after the lunch conversation, Paredes was told by cutter Otero that she should not sign a union card because Dordevic would dismiss employees who signed as he did not want the Union; and would close the shop and replace the employees or send the work to another shop he controlled. Paredes told Otero that she intended to sign a card; and 2 days later told Otero that she did sign. I cannot attribute this conversation to Respondent inasmuch as Otero, a rank-and-file employee, was not Respondent's agent as to this conversation, as will be discussed infra.

About 1 month before the election, Dordevic called a meeting of all the employees. The meeting, which was very short, took place on the factory floor. Dordevic spoke Yugoslavian, and his words were translated into English by Secretary Rejkov. Then her words were translated into Spanish by cutter Otero for the Spanish workers, and into Polish for the Polish employees. All parties agree that Dordevic announced that there would be an election on 21 June, and that he did not want the Union. However, in addition, two employees, Delores Rivera and Dulce Sanchez, testified that Dordevic said that if the Union won, he would close the factory. But two other witnesses, also called by the General Counsel, Segunda Caban and Mirian Cedeno, who also heard the same Spanish translation, did not testify about that threat. Moreover, the Spanish interpreter, Otero, and Dordevic and Rajkov denied that Dordevic threatened to close the shop if the Union won the election, but rather they all testified that Dordevic invited the workers to vote as they wished.

Based on the conflict in the testimony, particularly that between the General Counsel's witnesses, I cannot find that Dordevic threatened to close the factory in that speech.

Sometime before the election a handwritten sign was posted in the work area of the factory. The sign was 4 feet by 4 feet and said, in English and Spanish, "Please vote for BMD and save our job. Thank you." A box on the sign had the word "no" written on it in various languages. The sign, which was prepared and hung by employees, including Otero, was posted at least for several days before the election and was in plain sight of everyone in the shop. Employee Delores Rivera stated that she saw Bora Dordevic look at the sign and tell his wife to look at it.

On 21 June, the election was held, which the Union lost by a vote of 46 to 11.

B. The Layoffs

The complaint alleges that the following employees were unlawfully laid off in April and May: Gloria Chunga, Maria Garcia, Carmen Lopez, Bertha Mejia, Edilma Nunez, Amalia Paredes, and Mercedes Paz.

1. Gloria Chunga

Chunga was hired on 5 October 1982 and was laid off on 24 April 1985, at which time she worked as a merrow machine operator.

Chunga spoke with Paz and other workers at lunch on 19 or 20 April and agreed with her that the workers should sign cards for the Union. On 22 April, Paz gave her the Union's address, and she went there after work and signed a card in the presence of other employees. The following day, 23 April, she answered yes when asked by Milkenvoic whether she liked the Union and signed a card for it. The next day, 24 April, as she was leaving for the day, Dordevic asked her if she wanted to receive unemployment benefits and she said she did.

Chunga testified that occasionally work is slow, but there was always work to do and she always worked 40 hours per week.

2. Carmen Lopez

Lopez was hired on 27 September 1982 and was laid off on 25 April 1985. She was a finisher who removed errant threads from the sweaters.

About 21 or 22 April Lopez spoke to Paz at lunch about the Union.

On 24 April she signed a card for the Union outside the factory after work in the presence of a union agent and Paz and another worker.

The following day, at the end of work, Milkenvoic told her that there was no more work, asked for her phone number, and said that if work picked up she would be called. Lopez was not called. She stated that when she left, there was more work to be done.

3. Bertha Mejia

Mejia worked for less than 1 month, from March to 23 April. She sewed labels into the sweaters. There were two others employed as label sewers.

A few days before 22 April, Mejia began conversing with her coworkers at lunch, while sitting at their machines. Five such lunchtime conversations concerned the Union, and included Paz and Garcia and their desire for a union because of the discharges of Spanish workers. They spoke Spanish. Milkenvoic was seated 25 feet away from them. On 22 April Mejia signed a union card at home.

On 23 April, Dordevic told her that there was no more work. Mejia testified, however, that there was sufficient work to be performed, and that there was never an occasion that she had no work to do.

4. Amalia Paredes

Paredes was employed for about 1 year, taking threads off sweaters.

Paz asked her in the factory at lunch on 23 April to sign a card after work that day and she did so 1 block from the factory.

On 3 May, Milkenvoic told her that because work was slow she should not come to work but should collect unemployment benefits, and she would be recalled when work picks up. Paredes stated that there was work left to be done when she was laid off.

5. Edilma Nunez

Nunez was employed for 1 or 2 months in 1984, then 3 or 4 weeks in April 1985, when she was laid off.

On 23 April she and others were told by Paz at lunch that they were bringing a union into the shop. That day after work she signed a card at home.

The following day, 24 April, she waved to the union agents from her workplace, and immediately Mira Dordevic approached her and asked her through interpreter Otero whether she knew of or spoke to union agents, and whether she was in the Union or signed a card for it. Although she told Otero that she signed papers for the Union, Otero told her that he did not tell Mira Dordevic that she signed a card. She was warned that anyone who was involved with the Union would be fired, and that if she had not signed a card she should not do so and could thereby continue working. Later that day Bora Dordevic asked her the same questions, through Otero, and this time she answered that she signed a card. That admission was apparently repeated to Dordevic.[16] Bora then warned that he knew that "they" wanted to bring a union in, but that he would not permit it, and would rather close the shop than have the Union organize it. Bora then told her that if she did not sign a card, she could continue to work.

The following day, 25 April, Nunez was told by Milkenvoic not to come to work the next day as work was slow.

6. Maria Garcia

Garcia began work in August 1980 and worked until sometime in 1981 when she left. In 1983 she worked for 3 months and then left. She returned to work in August 1984 and was employed until 25 April 1985 when she was laid off. Her last period of employment was as a merrow machine operator.

Dordevic admitted that Garcia and Paz complained to him in April 1985 "one after another" regarding the piece rate, and requested an increase in that rate.

About 17 April she and Paz spoke about the Union and called the Union.

On 19 April, Dordevic asked Garcia if she called the Union. That day, Milkenvoic asked her if she signed papers for the Union, and Garcia told her that everyone wanted benefits. Later that day, Garcia and Paz went to the Union, and on 22 April Garcia signed a card. Thereafter from 22 April until she was laid off, Garcia solicited other employees to sign cards, helped others fill them out in the presence of the union agent, and was seen on 23 and 24 April by Milkenvoic doing so.

On 22 April, Milkenvoic asked Garcia if she signed for the Union. Garcia denied doing so, and Milkenvoic replied that she knew she wanted the Union, and asked who else signed. On 23 April, Milkenvoic told her that Paz forced another worker to sign for the Union. Garcia replied that that worker was lying. On 24 April, Milkenvoic again asked Garcia if she signed for the Union and Garcia denied doing so.

On 25 April, Dordevic told her that since many orders had been canceled she could receive unemployment benefits.

Garcia testified that when she was laid off, she had the usual amounts of work to do, and that from January 1985 until her layoff she always had work to do.

7. Mercedes Paz

Paz was hired in June 1978 or 1979 and was laid off on 23 April 1985.

Dordevic admitted that Paz complained to him very often about the piece rates.

On 19 April, Paz spoke with her fellow workers about the Union and went to its offices. She signed a card on 21 April and, thereafter, she spearheaded the Union's organizing drive. Beginning on 22 April until she was laid off the next day, she distributed cards at the factory, before and after work and at lunch, and she visited employees at their homes. She stood outside the shop with union agents and spoke to the workers about the Union. Milkenvoic spoke to her numerous times on 22 April about the Union, accusing her of "making" employees sign cards, criticizing her for supporting the Union, and threatening that those who signed cards would be laid off and the factory closed if the Union organized it. Milkenvoic asked Paz if she called the Union and Paz admitted doing so.

The following day, 23 April, Paz again distributed cards before work in front of the shop with Union Agent Guzman present. During the day, Milkenvoic again warned her several times that if she signed a card or called the Union she would be fired and the factory would close. As Paz left work that day, Dordevic told her that a customer canceled an order and that she was laid off.

The following day, 24 April, on the demand of the union agents to reinstate Paz, Dordevic refused and said that he would close the shop if the Union came in.

Paz stated that when she was laid off, she had much work still left to do and that in 1985, the merrow operators always had work. She conceded, however, that when work was slow, she left at 2:30 p.m.; the normal quitting time was 3:30 p.m.

Dordevic testified that in July 1984 Paz "made problems" by causing her family and one or two friends to leave work for 3 days. Their complaint concerned the low piece rates. Before leaving, Paz said she could earn more by collecting unemployment and working under someone else's social security number.

Dordevic testified that in February 1985 Paz complained that workers should not be sent home at 1 or 2 p.m. He told her that he was the boss, and that she could not give orders to him. Also in that month, she threw a sweater at a customer. When Dordevic protested, she said that she did not care—the factory was no good. Dordevic replied that if she did not like it she could leave.

In March, Dordevic installed new machinery for use on a new order. Paz asked him why he bought new equipment if he could not raise the piece rate. Dordevic replied that if he did not buy the new machinery, he would lose work.

In April, according to Dordevic, business declined and Respondent paid the same piece rate as the prior year. Paz asked for higher rate and Dordevic explained that for work previously done, the same rate had to be paid. Dordevic stated that from 18 to 20 April, Paz again complained about the piece rates and Dordevic answered that he had no time to argue. Finally, on 23 April, Paz again began to complain, and this time Dordevic told her to see him after work. Later, he told her to collect unemployment for 2 or 3 weeks. She threatened to close the factory and then left.

C. The Return to work of Maria Garcia and Mercedes Paz

Following their layoff by BMD in April, Garcia and Paz returned to work at BMD on 11 November as [16] Otero told Nunez that he did not tell Mira that she signed a card. He was not asked if he told Bora that she expected a card.

merrow machine operators. Dordevic stated that he recalled them because work had increased.

Prior to their layoff in April they had worked on merrow machines, located in the central area of the factory, where 29 such machines were located in four rows. Paz had worked at the same machine for 7 years, and Garcia had worked at her machine during her last 8-month period of employment. During that time, their machines adjoined each other.

However, on their return in November, they were assigned to adjoining merrow machines but this time outside the merrow area in a place where such machines had never been before. They had the only merrow machines in that area. The new location was 8 feet away from the closest merrow machine in the merrow machine area. Separating the new location from the merrow machine was a 3-foot open hallway. Their new machines' location was about 30 feet from their former location. In addition, the new location was 3 to 4 feet from a steam machine where material is cut, pressed, ironed, and steamed, and 2 to 4 feet from a large, 14-foot floor-to-ceiling roll-up gate used to bring in material from the street. The new work station was also situated close to button and blind stitch machines.

Beginning on 12 November, Garcia and Paz were subjected to the combined effect of steam on their backs from the steam machine, and cold air from the roll-up gate when it was in an open position. They put piles of material between themselves and the steam machine as a barrier. Although the steam did not have a very adverse effect on them, the cold air from the gate affected them badly. They repeatedly complained to Milkenvoic about the open door. She told them that perhaps they would be moved to a different area but they never were. Their requests to her that the door, which was open "all the time," be closed, were ignored. In contrast, when other workers complained about the cold air, the door was shut. Garcia and Paz covered themselves with material in order to keep warm, and this was met with laughter by Mrs. Dordevic.

Garcia and Paz' repeated requests that their machines be moved were also ignored, notwithstanding that there were four vacant merrow machines in the merrow machine area where they formerly worked.

At times employees would be assigned to work at the blind stitch and button machines, which were closest to Garcia and Paz. But those employees would work at those machines sporadically, two or three times per week for 2 hours at most. When Garcia left, no one replaced her at her machine.

On 14 November, Paz took four photographs and Garcia took two photographs of their work area. The picture-taking took 2 minutes. Paz stated that Dordevic approached her and asked why she took the pictures. She replied that she wanted proof of the location in which she was working. Dordevic then told her that she had no permission to take the pictures, that the shop was a private place, and that he would call the police and have her arrested for doing so. Later that day Dordevic gave her a letter, provided by his attorney:

Re: Unauthorized Photographs on November 14, 1985

It has come to my attention that you took several photographs of BMD's equipment and your co-workers in the shop this morning. At the time these photographs were taken, you were supposed to be working at your machine. You did not have BMD's permission to take these photographs nor did you obtain the permission of your co-workers.

Your actions caused disruption in BMD's operations and greatly upset many of your co-workers.

Future incidents of disruptive conduct will not be tolerated and will result in further discipline up to and including your discharge.

Please indicate your receipt of this written warning by signing in the space provided.

Paz refused to sign the letter. Dordevic warned her that she could not interrupt work, and if she did so two more times she would be fired. Paz told him that he hated her because she called the Union. Dordevic said she should forget about the past. That letter was the first ever given to an employee.

There was evidence that photographs had been taken in the shop before, at such times as parties, or when a coworker left for a trip. In fact Paz took photos before and had not been required to obtain permission and had not been warned about such conduct.

Dordevic conceded telling Paz that she should have asked his permission to take the photos and admitted threatening that he would call the police because she did not have his permission. He also stated that Paz asked him why he did not dismiss her. Dordevic replied that he did "not need to."

Garcia and Paz stated that their machines were heavy, inefficient, and hard to operate. Garcia immediately told Milkenvoic of this and continued her complaints in succeeding days. Milkenvoic said that she would call a mechanic, but the mechanic did not come and the machine was not repaired. Paz' machine was repaired, but it still did not operate well. Garcia asked Milkenvoic why her worksite was moved, and Milkenvoic replied that boxes of material were placed in her old position, and there was no room for her machine. Garcia testified that before her April layoff boxes were also situated near her machine but she had no difficulty working.

Garcia stated that on 19 November, her last day of work, the roll-up door was open. The air was not cold, but the sun beat down on her back through the gate, making her feel as though she were at the beach. Her request that Milkenvoic close the door was ignored. However, later that day, as the sun changed its position, it became very hot for another worker who then complained and the door was immediately closed.

Paz stated that before her layoff in April, she produced 30 to 35 dozen sweaters per day and earned $450 to $600 per week, for a 9- or 10-hour day. In November, however, she produced only 17 to 25 dozen and earned $270 to $290 per week, for an 8-hour, or less, day. Paz attributed this to the harder work that she and Garcia were given. She stated that in November, she was assigned to work on material that was thick and loose, hard to sew, and had lines that had to be matched on each side. This work was paid at $2.50 per dozen, whereas because of the nature of the work, it had formerly been paid at $3.50.

Paz testified that before her April layoff all the workers shared the easy and hard work, but that in November only she and Garcia did that complex, low-paying work. Other operators were paid $2.50, but according to Paz, such work was easier and the material sewed was different, with no matching required. She accordingly stated that she was unable to make as much money because of the difficulty in working with the material and the inefficient machinery; the time-consuming line matching combined with the low piece rate held her earnings down.

Garcia stated that she did not return to work because she could not bear the working conditions—the cold, the sun, and the steam. She felt isolated from other workers.[17] She conceded that the nearest merrow operator, 8 feet away, also complained about the cold, but Garcia was much closer (about 4 feet) to the door, and also the other workers did not have the steam at their backs.

Paz last worked on 20 December. She stated that she did not return thereafter because of the intense cold from the door and the steam. because Dordevic looked at her in an angry way, because of the poor treatment she received, because she was given the worst work, and because the piece rate was too low. She stated that she may have continued working but for the machine she worked at and the type of work she was given.

Dordevic testified that the work that Garcia and Paz received was the same as given other employees. He added that if a particular order was small he gave the entire lot to two or three workers, and noted that Garcia and Paz did not work on any lots that were unique to them.

The photos taken on 14 November, the date the door was open all day according to Garcia, show the door closed and Garcia and Paz smiling in apparent good spirits. Garcia stated that she did not complain about the door being open that day and they testified that they did not want to look as miserable as they felt for the pictures.

IV. SUZAN KNITWEAR CORP.

A. Facts

The certificate of incorporation for Suzan was filed on 24 April 1985. Its officers, owners, directors, and stockholders are Jovo Milosevic and his wife Mira. Jovo is the brother of Bora Dordevic. Jovo had been a resident of the United States since 1968, and had owned and operated a small grocery store for the 4 years preceding the opening of Suzan. He had some experience in the textile industry in Europe more than 20 years ago, but his wife had worked in the sweater industry in the United States 5 years ago.

In March 1985, Milosevic and Dordevic purchased a building at 20–36 Harmon Street, a 5- to 10-minute drive or a 20-minute walk from BMD. Dordevic "lent" Milosevic $20,000 toward the purchase price of $65,000. The building is Suzan's location. In addition, Dordevic lent him another $20,000, half of which was used to open Suzan's initial bank account, and the other half was for a later $10,000 deposit into the same account. No loan documents were executed for this transaction and the loan is still outstanding.

Suzan began work about 3 May with five or six merrow machines and Singer, crochet, and tacking machines, all bought from Dordevic for $16,000, which sum Suzan paid Dordevic in October 1985.[18] In addition, certain small supplies were given to Suzan by BMD.

Dordevic ordered and paid, in part, for ironwork performed at Suzan's premises.[19] However, Milosevic showed the ironworker what he wanted done, and the work was performed based on Milosevic's instructions.

BMD and Suzan use the same corporate attorney, accountant, insurance agent and insurance company, bank, and suppliers for certain materials.

Dordevic denied having any position, title, or ownership interest in Suzan.

Dordevic testified that he helped his brother open Suzan because of familial obligation and because Milosevic helped him when he arrived in the United States in 1974 by paying his transportation from Europe, permitting him to live in his apartment, and giving him money for furniture. In fact, Dordevic borrowed $10,000 from his brother to go into business in 1978. He defended his loans to Jovo also on the ground that he lent money to other companies and to employee Paz.[20]

Dordevic stated that he helped Milosevic set up Suzan, gave him advice, and recommended companies with which he might do business. He also recommended that prospective employees who sought work at BMD apply for jobs at Suzan or other companies.

The testimony of Dordevic and Milosevic was quite contradictory concerning Suzan's securing work from AM Knitwear.

Milosevic testified that 1 week before Suzan opened he, alone, went to AM Knitwear and asked for work. He further stated that he did not know that BMD worked for AM. In contrast, Dordevic stated that he called AM in late March and asked that work be given to Suzan. Dordevic called again in mid-April and AM sent a box of samples to Suzan, where the sample garments were made by the wives of the two brothers. Thereafter, AM continued to give work to Suzan and, according to Respondents, AM was Suzan's sole customer.[21]

[17] On cross-examination Garcia conceded that whenever she returned from trips out of the country she would be assigned to a different merrow machine. However she noted that the machines were all located in the central merrow machine area, unlike the position outside that area to which she returned in November.

[18] In fact, BMD placed the order for two new merrow machines from Belmont Sewing Machine Co., which were delivered to Suzan. BMD paid Belmont, and Suzan repaid BMD.

[20] The loan to Paz was for $2000, which was repaid.

[21] I credit the testimony of Dordevic as to his solicitation of AM. It is hard to believe that AM would give work to Milosevic on his request—especially since he had no current experience in the textile industry. It appears that the introduction of Suzan by Dordevic, who works for AM at times, caused that company to employ Suzan.

Dordevic admitted that in the first month or so of Suzan's operations, he occasionally visited Suzan for about 30 minutes in the morning, two to three times per week or after work, to help, and show Milosevic how to do the work. Thereafter Dordevic visited Suzan once per week.

The Respondents' testimony that AM Knitwear was Suzan's sole customer was contradicted by Suzan employee Janet Khalil who testified that Suzan worked for two companies, including one that used the label "Kenneth Too." In fact she stated that 70 percent of her work consisted of Kenneth Too sweaters. BMD also performed work for Kenneth Too.

Union Representative Aldrich testified that on 10 January 1986, he observed boxes with what he believed were finished goods being transported from Suzan to BMD.

Cousins Janet Khalil and Maria Lopez, who had stopped working for BMD in early 1985, testified that in mid-May they together sought work at BMD. Dordevic told them that work at BMD was slow, and that he had many problems with the Union and the employees, but he suggested that they work at Suzan, where work was plentiful. Lopez told him that she did not know how to perform tacking work, and Dordevic said he would bring a device to make that work easier. Lopez began work at Suzan the next day, on 15 May. Dordevic brought the tacking piece and told the floorlady to give her work.

Lopez worked at Suzan less than 1 month when, before the BMD election on 21 June, Dordevic asked her whether she liked the work. She replied that she did. Dordevic asked her where Khalil was. Lopez said that Khalil left and she would leave soon too.[22] Dordevic asked why, and Lopez said because of "problems of Paz with the Union." Dordevic answered that he had problems also, and would tell Milosevic not to let Paz work for Suzan, but Lopez and Khalil could continue to work at Suzan. Dordevic also told them that if the union problem continued he was contemplating closing BMD and expanding operations at Suzan.

Khalil began work at Suzan about 2 weeks after Lopez, and was given work by the floorlady. No one at Suzan interviewed her for the position. She worked about 6 weeks and left because she was not paid enough. When she complained to Milosevic's wife, Mira, about the low pay, either Mira or Khalil called Dordevic at BMD and Khalil told him that the workers should be paid more than $2.75 for the complex work of matching lines. Dordevic told her that he paid $2.75 at BMD and only three lines had to be matched. Khalil left and collected unemployment benefits, but in about 1 month returned to Suzan—in late July or early August— and spoke to Dordevic's wife who told her that Dordevic was upset that while Khalil was collecting unemployment benefits, she was working at another company. She warned Khalil that if she did not stop collecting she would be reported. Khalil went to BMD where Dordevic told her the same thing. She asked to return to BMD but Dordevic told her that there was no work there, and he had many problems because the workers wanted to bring a union in, and he did not want a union, and would rather close. He then asked Khalil if she was involved with the Union; whether she signed a card for it; and whether she knew who signed union cards. Khalil admitted signing a card, and Dordevic told her to report for work at Suzan.

Shortly after Khalil returned to work for Suzan in late July or early August, friends visited her at work. Milosevic told her that he saw her talking to Paz around the corner and asked why those people visited her at work and also asked whether she signed a card for the Union. Khalil denied doing so. Milosevic then said that he knew that she signed. Khalil then admitted having signed and, when asked why, she replied that she wanted to support Paz and others and return to work. Milosevic said that he did not want to have the same problems as his brother, and he did not want her to receive visitors or phone calls.

Lopez stated that when she began work at Suzan, Dordevic was there every day, in the morning, for 2 or 3 hours, bringing samples and work, checking the work done by the operators, and fixing machines. In June, July, and August and thereafter, Khalil and Lopez saw Dordevic at Suzan much less often—twice a week and in some weeks not at all. They both saw Dordevic's wife at Suzan several times, giving work to the employees, and Lopez saw Radmila Rajkov, BMD's secretary at Suzan, writing on the piecework tickets. Dordevic also asked Suzan's workers if they could work on Saturday.

Dordevic, while at Suzan, yelled at Mrs. Milosevic that the work was not done correctly, and told her to make sure that it was done better. When the work was not done correctly, Dordevic would be called, and he came to Suzan and the problem was resolved. However, when workers complained to Dordevic about Milosevic, nothing was done.

At times, when the workers disagreed with Mrs. Milosevic as to how to do the work, she called Dordevic for instructions. Khalil asked Mrs. Dordevic for a job for her husband and was told to call Dordevic. Khalil called Dordevic who told her to have him report to Suzan the same day, which he did.

Employees of Suzan testified that they worked on sweaters that bore a Kenneth Too label. BMD worked for Kenneth Too, also. Dordevic stated that BMD employees do not work for Suzan during BMD's worktime. Otero, the BMD cutter, was seen working at Suzan on Saturdays.

Milosevic told the workers that they should do good work because Dordevic and the representative of a customer were coming to their work area.

B. Analysis

The General Counsel alleges that about 24 April Suzan was established by BMD as a subordinate instru-

[22] According to Khalil's testimony she began work at Suzan about 1 June, and left in mid-July. Thus, before the 21 June election, Lopez could not have told Dordevic that Khalil had already left. However, I credit Lopez as to this conversation because she testified in detail about a matter that affected her and Khalil directly. I believe that either she was mistaken about the date of this conversation, or Khalil incorrectly set forth her dates of employment at Suzan.

ment to and a disguised continuation of a part of the business of BMD and, since that time, BMD and Suzan have been affiliated businesses with common officers, ownership, directors, and operators; the directors and operators formulate and administer a common labor policy for the aforenamed companies, affecting the employees of the companies, and that BMD and Suzan are, and have been, alter egos and a single employer within the meaning of the Act.[23]

The factors for finding single employer and alter ego status are "much the same." Mine Workers Local 1329 (Alpine Construction), 276 NLRB 415 fn. 3 (1985).

The Board stated in Contee Sand & Gravel Co., 274 NLRB 574 (1985):

> The Board finds more than one enterprise to be a single employer where there is common ownership and financial control which is actual rather than potential, common management, interrelation of operations, and centralized control of labor relations. . . . But it is not essential that all of these elements be present. . . . As to whether an enterprise is the alter ego of another, the Board looks to a greater number of factors such as whether the enterprises have substantially identical ownership, management, business purpose, operation, equipment, customers, and supervision of employees. . . . There is also an additional factor which the Fifth Circuit describes in Carpenters Local 1846 v. Pratt-Farnsworth, 690 F.2d 489, 508 (5th Cir. 1982), in the following words:
> > However, the focus of the alter ego doctrine, unlike that of the single- employer doctrine, is on the existence of a disguised continuance or an attempt to avoid the obligations of a collective-bargaining agreement through a sham transaction or technical change in operations.

However, "absent a disguised continuance, the Board generally finds alter ego status only where the two enterprises have substantially identical ownership, business purpose, management, supervision, customers, operation and equipment." T. E. Elevator Corp., 268 NLRB 1461 (1984). It should be noted that "no one factor is controlling and all need not be present. Complete identity in ownership is not a requisite, particularly where ownership resides in members of the same family. Centralized control of labor relations is the most important single factor." Super Save, 273 NLRB 20, 28 (1984).

The General Counsel alleges in the complaint that Suzan was established by BMD as the disguised continuation of a part of the business of BMD, and in her brief states that the timing of the creation of Suzan, inter alia, shows that BMD attempted to shift its operations to Suzan in order to avoid unionization. A threshold question therefore is whether Suzan's creation was related to the Union's campaign at BMD.

The evidence establishes that the first contact with the Union by BMD employees was made on 17 April, and the first mention of the Union by a respondent official was on 19 April. However, there was unrebutted testimony that the building that was to house Suzan was purchased 1 month earlier, in March,[24] and the certificate of incorporation for Suzan was filed with the New York Secretary of State on 24 April. Even if action was taken on Friday, 19 April, to incorporate Suzan, the first day of Respondent's knowledge of the union drive, it is unlikely that incorporation could have been achieved 3 working days later, on 24 April.[25]

As set forth above, however, even if Suzan was not created for the purpose of shifting operations to it from BMD, its existence for that purpose would be unlawful. Samuel Kosoff & Sons, 269 NLRB 424, 429 (1984) (disguised extension). Nevertheless, an alter ego relationship may be found even in the absence of a disguised continuance. T. E. Elevator Corp., supra.

BMD and Suzan have virtually identical operations, in that they are both garment industry contractors that sew sweaters. They utilize the same types of machinery and the same classifications of employees to perform the same functions—at locations not too distant. Certain machines were given to Suzan by BMD.

There is some dispute as to the identity of customers, and no definite finding can be made that Suzan performs work for Kenneth Too.[26] However, AM Knitwear is a joint customer of both Companies, with Suzan perform-

[23] Respondents object to the inclusion of Suzan as a respondent after 4 days of hearing had taken place. Their argument is essentially that Suzan was denied due process inasmuch as Suzan, by virtue of the claim that it was a single employer or alter ego of BMD, was not present at the earlier part of the hearing before it was alleged as a respondent, and thus could not defend as to the underlying unfair labor practices testified to in that period. I affirm my ruling made at the hearing to permit Suzan to be named as a respondent. Suzan was served with a copy of the charge and complaint that alleged its alter ego and single employer status. Thereafter, at the hearing, these issues were fully litigated with Suzan being given full opportunity to develop evidence as to that. The new charge was filed on 7 January 1986 and the complaint issued on 21 January. The hearing resumed on 18 February, and continued thereafter for 7 days. Suzan's attorney attended the hearing on only 1 day, 17 March, when its president testified. Compare George C. Shearer Exhibitors, 246 NLRB 416 fn. 3 (1979).

In addition, Suzan and BMD were given the opportunity to call and recall witnesses, as to the alter ego and single employer issues, who testified about such matters in the initial 4 days of hearing.

Although Suzan was not "present" at the initial 4 days of the hearing because it had not yet been served with the complaint or named as a party, nevertheless, once found as BMD's alter ego, Suzan cannot complain that it was not present at the early part of the hearing because the interests of alter egos are identical, and Suzan was present and did defend itself through the representation of BMD. Southeastern Envelope Co., 246 NLRB 423, 424 (1979). See also Hopkins Hardware, 271 NLRB 175 (1984). Seaward International, 270 NLRB 1034 (1984), cited by Respondent is inapposite. In that case, the General Counsel adduced testimony only as background material and not in support of a separate violation. However, following the close of the General Counsel's case and testimony by most of the respondent's witnesses, the General Counsel moved to amend the complaint to include an independent violation based on that testimony. Here, the amendment, including Suzan as a respondent and naming it as an alter ego and single employer, was made during the General Counsel's case early in the hearing and no misrepresentation was made as to the purpose of the amendment.

[24] No conclusive evidence, such as contract of sale or deed was offered, however.

[25] No conclusive evidence, such as copies of filed documents or postal return receipts were offered.

[26] Kenneth Too's records were not offered in evidence.

ing most of its work for that Company, and BMD doing such work when it needs jobs to fill in.

As to ownership, "the Board does not view legal ownership in a vacuum, but instead looks to the totality of the circumstances to determine where the real control exists." East Tennessee Packing Co., 270 NLRB 520, 524 (1984). Suzan is owned entirely by Jovo Milosevic and his wife. BMD is owned by Bora Dordevic, the brother of Jovo. Thus, although the two Companies have different owners, the "totality of the circumstances" must be viewed. When that is done, the evidence is that (1) Bora and Jovo jointly purchased the building that houses Suzan, (2) Dordevic "lent" Milosevic $20,000 toward the purchase of the building; (3) Dordevic "lent" Milosevic $20,000, which was deposited in and became Suzan's initial bank deposits, for which no loan documents were executed and which is still outstanding; (4) BMD ordered and paid $16,000 for two new machines, which Suzan repaid; and (5) BMD ordered and paid in part for ironwork performed at Suzan. Such is evidence of alter ego status. Denzil S. Alkire, 259 NLRB 1323, 1324 (1982); Farmingdale Iron Works, 249 NLRB 98, 107 (1980).

Regarding management, supervision, and control of labor relations, Dordevic admittedly played an active role in the startup of Suzan, giving Milosevic advice and soliciting customers and prospective employees, and he was concededly present, at first, to help his brother and show him how to do the work. The testimony was that although Dordevic was present at Suzan frequently in the beginning of its operation, his presence tapered off, and he was there less often, but when he was present he checked the work done by the operators, brought samples, and fixed machines. Although he may have remained in the background at Suzan, his presence was felt, even when he was not there, and in his relationship with the Suzan employees he did exercise supervisory control. Super Save, supra.

Thus, employees Khalil and Lopez, former workers of BMD, were actually hired by Dordevic to work at Suzan.[27] When disagreement with the pay or the work at Suzan occurred, calls were made to Dordevic at BMD, who resolved the problems. Dordevic and his wife, an official of BMD, warned Khalil, who was then a Suzan former employee, that if she continued to collect unemployment benefits she would be reported. The only explanation for Dordevic's being upset at Khalil's abuse of Suzan's unemployment insurance account is that Dordevic was closely involved with the management and labor relations activities at Suzan.

In addition, Dordevic's wife, an official of BMD and an admitted supervisor, distributed work at Suzan, and BMD's secretary was observed writing on the piecework tickets at Suzan. It should be noted that Suzan has its own, separate floorlady.

It is clear that inasmuch as Jovo Milosevic lacked the management experience and expertise in the industry, he would have to and did rely on Dordevic to supply the expertise in setting up and running Suzan. Rogers Cleaning Contractors, 277 NLRB 482, 488 (1985).

It is clear that Dordevic, a close relative of Milosevic, dominated the management of both companies, J. M. Tanaka Construction, 249 NLRB 238, 241 (1980), and "continued to have influence and played a substantial role in the operation (of the company)" Denzil S. Alkire, supra.

When the above evidence is considered in the context of the credited statements about Dordevic's reaction to the Union, a finding of alter ego status is compelled. Thus, Supervisor Milkenvoic repeatedly threatened the workers that if they selected the Union, Dordevic would close the factory, and reopen it under another name or owner and replace the employees. Dordevic also told employees that he would close the shop before recognizing the Union, and told Suzan employee Lopez that if the union "problem" continued he was contemplating closing BMD and expanding operations at Suzan. Although the opposite, in fact, occurred—Suzan was closed in February 1986—in the beginning of Suzan's operation, when Khalil and Lopez were hired, Dordevic suggested that they work at Suzan where the work was plentiful, and not at BMD, where the work was slow. Thus, the statements set forth above show an intention by BMD to use Suzan as an alter ego to divert its operations to Suzan and avoid unionization of that company. Nabco Corp., 266 NLRB 687, 694 (1983); Fugazy Continental, 265 NLRB 1301, 1303 (1982). This is made all the clearer by Dordevic's telling Suzan employee Lopez that he would tell Milosevic not to hire Paz who was an outspoken union advocate.

Respondent, citing L & J Equipment, 274 NLRB 20 (1985), argues that alter ego status should not be found where a brother helps another get started in business, especially given the assistance extended to Dordevic by Milosevic when he arrived in the United States. While I agree that a close family member should not be prejudiced or placed at risk for helping another, the facts as set forth above establish that Dordevic went far beyond simple assistance to Milosevic. L & J is inapposite because the two companies there were totally independent corporations as to their operations and control of labor relations. The employees in L & J, unlike here, were separately hired and assigned, and there was no common supervision. Here, Khalil and Lopez were hired by BMD to work at Suzan, and Dordevic and his wife exercised supervisory authority over Suzan's employees.

I, accordingly, find and conclude that the preponderance of the evidence supports a finding, which I make, that Suzan is the alter ego of BMD, and that they constitute a single employer.

V. THE ALLEGED INTERROGATIONS, WARNINGS, AND THREATS

The complaint alleges that Respondent interrogated employees; warned and directed them to refrain from becoming members of the Union; and threatened them with discharge and with plant closure if they became or remained members of the Union and if they gave any assistance and support to it.

[27] Even the recommendation of employees, admitted by Dordevic, has been found to be a factor leading to a finding of alter ego status. Denzil S. Alkire, supra at 1325.

The General Counsel alleges that, in certain of the conversations, in which Antonio Otero acted as the interpreter, Respondents are responsible for the statements uttered through Atero at the times he interpreted for Respondents' officials. I agree. I, accordingly, find that Otero was an agent of Respondents when he interpreted their statements. Tweel Importing Co., 219 NLRB 666, 671 (1975).[28]

BMD and Suzan's witnesses denied interrogating, warning, or threatening employees. I credit the testimony of the employee witnesses who testified concerning these matters. They all testified, as to these conversations, in a straightforward, honest, consistent manner about matters that had a great impact on them and that must have impressed them strongly. Their testimony is believable also because of the numerous instances of similar remarks being made in a short span of time when the union campaign was at its height.

I, accordingly, find the following, all set forth in detail above, to violate Section 8(a)(1) of the Act.

(a) Dordevic's question to Garcia on 19 April if she and Paz called the Union.

(b) Milkenvoic's question to Garcia on 19 and 24 April whether she signed any papers for the Union, and her further inquiry on 19 April as to why she was supporting Paz.

(c) Milkenvoic's questions on 22 April to Garcia whether she signed papers that Paz had for the Union and inquiry as to who else signed, and her statements to Paz that she was silly and stupid; her accusation that Paz forced workers to sign cards; and her threat that Dordevic would lay off everyone who signed cards, close the shop, change its name, and replace the workers; and her question whether Garcia called the Union.

(d) Milkenvoic's threat to Paz on 23 April that if she signed cards for the Union or called it she would be fired, and her repeated threat that Dordevic, because of his dislike for the Union, would close the factory, change its name, and replace its workers.

(e) Milkenvoic's question on 23 April to Chunga whether she liked the Union and if she signed a card for it.

(f) Milkenvoic's question to Rivera during the week of Paz' layoff as to why Paz did not get a job in a union shop if she was in the Union, and her statement that Dordevic's friend's reaction to the same problem with a union was to close and move, and Dordevic would do the same.

(g) Dordevic's threat on 24 April to Paz that he would close the shop if the Union came in.

(h) Mira Dordevic's questions on 24 April to Nunez if she knew of the Union, whether she spoke to the union agents, and whether she was in the Union or signed a union card.

(i) Bora Dordevic's questions on 24 April to Nunez if she knew about the Union, who spoke to her concerning it, and whether she signed a card; his warning that if she did not sign she could continue to work; and his statement that he would close his shop before the Union entered and that if the Union came in he would close.

(j) Milkenvoic's statement to Cedeno, before the election, that if the Union won the election, Dordevic would close the factory.

(k) Dordevic's statement to Lopez before the election that if the union problem continued he contemplated closing BMD and expanding operations at Suzan.

(l) Dordevic's statement to Khalil in the summer of 1985 that he would rather close if the Union were to organize BMD; and his questions whether she was involved with the Union, whether she signed a card for it, and whether she knew who signed union cards.

(m) Jovo Milosevic's question in late July or early August to Khalil whether she signed a card for the Union; and his statement that he knew she signed such a card.

(n) The sign posted in the shop that said "please vote for BMD and Save our job. Thank you."

The Board held in Rossmore House, 269 NLRB 1176, 1177 (1984), that the basic test for evaluation of whether interrogations violate the Act is: ". . . whether under all of the circumstances the interrogation reasonably tends to restrain, coerce, or interfere with rights guaranteed by the Act." The Board also pointed out:

> Some factors which may be considered in analyzing alleged interrogations are: (1) the background; (2) the nature of the information sought; (3) the identity of the questioner; and (4) the place and method of interrogation. See Bourne v. NLRB, 332 F.2d 47 (2d Cir. 1964). These and other relevant factors are not to be mechanically applied in each case. Rather, they represent some areas of inquiry that may be considered in applying the Blue Flash test of whether under all the circumstances the interrogation reasonably tends to restrain, coerce, or interfere with rights guaranteed by the Act. [269 NLRB at 1178 fn. 20.]

The evidence is clear that the questions and inquiries of the employees, which I have credited as set forth above, constitute unlawful interrogation. The atmosphere in which the questioning occurred was charged with and accompanied by hostility and unlawful threats of discharge and plant closure. Master Security Services, 270 NLRB 543, 550 (1984). There was no need to know the information sought and the questioning was conducted, in part, by the owners of BMD, and Suzan, which must have tended to restrain and coerce the workers. Thus, the questions of employees whether they called the Union; whether they signed cards for the Union;[29] who else signed cards for the Union; whether workers liked the Union; why Paz did not get a job in a union shop if she was a union member; whether employees knew of or spoke to the union agents all are unlawful interrogations and violate Section 8(a)(1) of the Act. Moe Warehouse & Accessory, 275 NLRB 1132, 1140–1141 (1985); Carpenter Trucking, 274 NLRB 300, 302 (1985).

[28] In her brief, the General Counsel also claims that Otero was Respondents' agent in connection with a conversation, described above, with employee Amalia Paredes. I disagree. Otero, a rank-and-file employee, spoke to Paredes alone, and was not interpreting at that time. Moreover, no complaint allegation identified Otero as having specifically, independently, violated the Act. In addition, at the hearing, the General Counsel expressly stated that she named Otero as an agent solely with respect to those occasions when he acted as an interpreter. It would thus be unfair to now allege that Otero independently violated the Act.

The evidence is also clear that the numerous threats to employees, set forth above, as to discharges and plant closure, because of the Union, constitute unlawful threats in violation of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act.[30] Moe Warehouse, supra; J. & G. Wall Baking, 272 NLRB 1008, 1011 (1984); Central Motors, 269 NLRB 209 (1984); Bronx Metal Polishing, 268 NLRB 887, 889 (1984); Atlas Microfilming, 267 NLRB 682 fn. 2 (1983).

The sign that said, "Please vote for BMD and save our job. Thank You." was posted in the shop for several days before the election. It was prepared and posted by employees, and there is no credible evidence that Respondents promoted its preparation of posting. However, the evidence is clear that Respondent was aware of its presence (Dordevic told his wife to look at it), and permitted its continued presence. In addition, the message was consistent with other threats made by Respondents. Thus, the message in effect stated that employees' jobs would be saved if they voted against the Union,[31] with the implication being that if they voted for the Union they would lose their jobs. I accordingly find that Respondent ratified the act of the employees in preparing and posting the sign, and in permitting it to remain posted, and that therefore the sign also threatened employees with job loss if the Union was selected by them.

VI. THE LAYOFFS

All the seven laid-off employees discussed the Union among themselves and signed cards for the Union shortly before their layoff. Lopez, Paz, and Paredes signed their cards in front of the shop. Chunga, Garcia, Nunez, and Paz were subjected to unlawful interrogation 1 to 3 days before their layoffs, and Nunez and Paz were the subjects of unlawful threats 1 day before their layoffs.

Dordevic knew of the Union at least on 19 April and certainly not later than 22 April.

Given the timing of the layoffs, which began on 23 April, coming on the heels of the Union's organizing campaign, and the animus of Respondent BMD as demonstrated in its interrogations of employees about their union activities and threats to lay off workers who signed cards or called the Union, and its threats that it would close the shop, and replace its employees and reopen under a different name, I find that the General Counsel has made a prima facie showing that the union activities of five of the seven employees was a motivating factor in Respondent's decision to lay them off. Wright Line, 251 NLRB 1083 (1980).

Specifically, Chunga was employed for 2-1/2 years at the time of her layoff. She discussed the Union with her fellow employees, and on 22 April signed a union card. On 23 April, she told Milkenvoic that she liked the Union and signed a card for it. The next day she was laid off.

Lopez was employed for 2-1/2 years at the time of her layoff. She spoke about the Union with Paz, and on 24 April signed a card outside the shop in the presence of Paz, who had already been laid off, and a union agent, who was by then known to Respondent. The next day she was laid off.

The union agents were conspicuously present on 22 and 23 April speaking to employees in front of the shop, and on 23 April Milkenvoic observed them.

Mejia spoke with her fellow employees including Garcia and Paz at work about the Union. Although Milkenvoic was nearby, there was no evidence that she could understand the Spanish conversations. On 22 April, Mejia signed a card at home and the next day was laid off with Paz.

Mejia was not subjected to any interrogations or threats. On these facts, I cannot draw an inference that Respondent was aware of her union activities. There was no evidence that Respondent knew that she spoke with anyone about the Union, or of her card signing at home. The small-plant theory was not asserted by the General Counsel, nor could it be applied here where 75 employees were working at that time. I accordingly find that the General Counsel has not made a prima facie showing that Mejia's layoff was motivated by her union activities.

Paredes worked for about 1 year, was asked at work by Paz on 23 April to sign a card, and did so after work one block from the factory.

She was laid off on 3 May. There was no evidence that Respondent saw or understood her conversations with Paz, or that it was aware of her card signing one block from the shop. Unlike other employees who were laid off almost immediately after they signed cards in front of the shop, she was not laid off for 1-1/2 weeks after she signed a card away from the shop. She was not the subject of interrogation or threats. On these facts I cannot find that the General Counsel has made a prima facie showing that Paredes layoff was motivated by her union activities.

Nunez was employed for 1 or 2 months in 1984 and for 3 or 4 weeks in 1985 at the time of her layoff. On 23 April she spoke to Paz at lunch about the Union, and signed a card at home. The next day, after waving to the union agents, she was interrogated by Mira Dordevic and later by Bora, and admitted signing a card. She was also threatened with layoff and that the shop would be closed. She was laid off the next day. Respondent's witnesses testified that Nunez was hired as a temporary employee to work only until a certain job that she was working on was finished. I reject this testimony. There was no evidence as to what job she was working on, or how long it was to last. Her prior employment, also as a presser, for 1–2 months in 1984 ended because she could not locate a babysitter, and not because she was hired then as a temporary employee. Moreover, the abruptness of her layoff coming 1 day after she waved to union agents from inside the shop and was then immediately interrogated and threatened with layoff by Bora and Mira Dordevic, and admitted signing a union card, lend strong support to a finding that her layoff was motivated by her union activities.

"m" above). Respondent BMD objected on the ground that the amendment was untimely. I reserved decision. The charge against Respondent Suzan was filed on 7 January 1986, and alleged that that Company was a single-integrated enterprise or alter ego of Respondent BMD. The interrogation, as testified by Khalil, which I have credited, occurred in late July or early August 1985. The charge's language that "by these and other acts, the employer has interfered with, restrained and coerced employees in the exercise of Section 7 rights," covers the interrogations alleged at the hearing. In addition, the interrogations occurred within 6 months of the filing of the charge. I, accordingly, overrule the Respondents' objection, and permit the amendment to the complaint. J. M. Tanaka, 249 NLRB 238, 243 fn. 1 (1980).

[30] Milkenvoic's report to the employees of Dordevic's intentions violate the Act as unlawful threats on their own, and as reports that Dordevic had made these threats. A & E Stores, 272 NLRB 737 (1984).

Garcia and Paz were the most active and vocal union supporters. They called the Union, signed cards, actively solicited others to join the Union, stood with the union agents outside the shop and spoke to their fellow workers, and were the subjects of interrogations and threats shortly before their layoffs. Garcia was told by Milkenvoic that she knew that Garcia wanted the Union. Similarly, Milkenvoic criticized Paz for supporting the Union and Paz admitted having called the Union. She was warned that if she called the Union or signed a card for it she would be fired.

I accordingly find and conclude that a prima facie showing has been made that the decision to lay off Chunga, Paredes, Nunez, Garcia, and Paz was motivated by their union activities. Wright Line, supra.

Dordevic denied laying off the five employees because of their union activities or sympathies. Rather, Respondent asserts that the workers were laid off for lack of work. BMD's records received in evidence, however, do not support this defense. Thus, Dordevic testified that some orders were canceled in February, more were canceled in March, and most were canceled in April. He began laying off personnel in February. Dordevic also stated that his slow season ran from early March to late May 1985.

The important period of time to examine is the period preceding BMD's knowledge of the Union's campaign.

BMD's records show the following number of employees employed as of the week ending:

1 March—73	19 April—75
8 March—73	26 April—76[32]
15 March—73	3 May—71
22 March—76	10 May—65
29 March—75	17 May—64
5 April—75	24 May—63
12 April—75	31 May—62

Respondent was first aware of the employees' interest in the Union on 19 April.

The week ending 26 April was the week in which the bulk of BMD's unlawful interrogations and threats occurred, and in which six of the seven alleged discriminatees were laid off.

The following week, 3 May, the payroll numbered 71, and thereafter, until 15 November, it ranged from 59 to 65.[33]

Thus, the records reveal that prior to the advent of the Union, weekly employment levels in March and April were quite high—from 73 to 76 workers. What is curious and suspect is that these high levels existed at a time when, according to Dordevic, substantial amounts of orders were being canceled by its customers and layoffs were taking place.

In addition, although Dordevic identified the slow season as running from early March to late May, the number of employees employed weekly in that period averaged 71 workers. In contrast, from the week ending 7 June until 15 November, presumably Respondent's busy season, the employee complement averaged 62.

These payroll records simply do not support a finding that some orders were canceled in February, more in March, and most in April, with accompanying layoffs because of the reduction in orders, as testified by Dordevic. In contrast, the records show that in March and April, employment was at its highest, with more workers employed in April than in March.

It thus appears that notwithstanding BMD's claimed reasons for the layoffs in the week ending April 26—lack of work due to cancellation of orders—employment remained at high levels during the period 1 March to 26 April, when the records should have revealed lower employment. It was not until the Union's appearance as an active force on 22 April that the layoffs of workers began, and the payroll dropped markedly.[34]

In sum, Respondent has not met its burden that it would have laid off the employees in the absence of their union activities. Wright Line, supra.

Additionally, even assuming BMD had insufficient work and was therefore justified in laying off the five employees, inasmuch as I have found that Suzan was the alter ego of BMD, Suzan, which began operations on May, had sufficient work and hired other employees,[35] and could have employed the five laid off here.

In making this finding, I have considered the fact that in late July, former Suzan employee Khalil told Dordevic that she signed a card for the Union and no action was taken against her. Rather, Dordevic told her to return to work at Suzan. This would tend to indicate that Dordevic took no action against a card signer, and thus had no animus toward the Union in the layoffs of the five BMD employees. However, I believe that it supports a finding of the discriminatory layoff of the five. In the same conversation, Dordevic told Khalil that he did not want a union at BMD and would rather close, and he did not accept her for work at BMD because, in addition to having no work, he had many problems due to the employees' desire for union representation. Thus, he [32] That number is apparently the total number of employees employed in that week, according to Secretary Rajkov's testimony. The layoffs that week would therefore reduce the number.

[33] The period 1 March to 15 November was the only period offered in evidence.

[34] I am aware that two employees were laid off on 29 March and one on 19 April.

[35] Milosevic testified that Suzan began operations with 6 to 15 employees.

suggested that she return to Suzan, which was not the object of the Union's organizing campaign.

VII. THE RETURN TO WORK OF GARCIA AND PAZ

A. Action Taken Against Them

Garcia and Paz were recalled to work on 11 November, following their layoffs in late April. A charge had been filed concerning their layoffs, and on 24 October a complaint had issued alleging that the layoffs violated the Act.

The General Counsel asserts that, on their return to work, they were subject to certain unlawful actions, designed to force them to quit, and their subsequent quitting constituted their unlawful constructive discharge.

The actions alleged in the complaint are the:

(a) Assignment to more arduous and less agreeable job tasks.
(b) Reduction of their rate of pay by their assignment to lower paying job tasks.
(c) Isolation of their work stations.
(d) Issuance of a warning letter to Paz.

It is further alleged that those actions against Garcia and Paz were taken because of their union activities and because they gave testimony under the Act.

As set forth above, Garcia and Paz were returned to work and placed in an area separate from that occupied by other merrow machine operators. Although the distance between their work stations and that of the other operators was not that great—only 8 feet across an open hallway—their segregation into a separate area served to mark them as pariahs, and as persons not welcome in the BMD family.

The area that they were assigned to had never before been used as a merrow machine workplace, and merrow machines had ever been situated there. The only reason given for their assignment to that location was that boxes of material blocked Garcia's regular workplace. Garcia had worked without difficulty in her usual place in the past with boxes around her machine, and even if this were true, there was no showing as to why the boxes could not be moved, and also the reason given does not explain why Paz could not have returned to her regular workplace. Indeed, Paz' regular workplace and machine were available and unoccupied. Garcia and Paz' repeated requests to be moved were ignored; nothwithstanding that there were four vacant machines in the merrow area. Pilliod of Mississippi, 275 NLRB 799 (1985).

In addition, Garcia and Paz, by virtue of their new work area, were subject to the combined effect of heat from the steam machine and cold air from the open door. While it is true that the nearest merrow operator to them, only 8 feet away, would surely have also been exposed to the cold air, almost to the same extent as them, it appears that they were placed in that location so that they would suffer the most intense effect of these conditions. Thus, they were the closest to the steam machine, and also nearest to the roll-up gate. The discriminatory nature of their assignment so close to these adverse elements is clearly seen in Respondent's ignoring their pleas that the door be closed; telling them that perhaps they would be moved but never doing so, and laughing at their attempts to keep warm; while at the same time honoring the request of others that the door be closed.

I also find that they were assigned to machines that were inefficient and difficult to operate, and that Paz' requests for repairs to the equipment were ignored. Although Garcia's machine was repaired, it still did not operate well. The discriminatory nature of the assignment to these machines is readily seen in the failure of Respondent to move the two to other machines, despite their repeated requests. Their assignment to these machines did result in a reduction in their earnings because they could not be operated as efficiently as their former machines.

I find, as alleged, that the issuance of the warning letter to Paz violated the Act. She took the photos, in a space of 2 minutes, to document her claim that she worked in an isolated location. Photographs had freely been taken before this, without permission, by Paz and others, on social occasions. Dordevic issued the warning letter because she did not obtain permission and disrupted the operation. This is in contrast to Respondent's argument that pieceworkers' attendance was irrelevant to it because if they do not work they are not paid. Dordevic's exaggerated response to the picture taking—threatening to call the police and have her arrested—emphasize that the warning letter was discriminatory.

That the letter was issued because of her activity in the past as a union advocate and outspoken leader of the Union's campaign is clear in view of the illegal interrogations, threats, and layoff that she was subject to before. Moreover, Dordevic told an employee prior to her recall that he would tell Milosevic not to hire Paz. The fact that Dordevic, when accused by Paz of hating her because she called the Union, told her to forget about the past, does not minimize the discriminatory nature of the warning letter, the first of its kind ever given to a BMD worker. In addition, the reaction to the picture taking demonstrated Dordevic's animosity toward Paz for her union activities because, by taking the pictures, she sought to document her later charge that her work station was discriminatorily located. In fact she told Dordevic, when he asked why she took the photos, that she wanted to show her work location.

However, I cannot find, as alleged in the complaint, that Garcia and Paz were discriminated against by their assignment to lower paying job tasks. Paz testified that on her return to work in November, the piece rate for all the merrow operators, including she and Garcia, was $2.50. There can be no discrimination against her if the new piece rate was applied equally to all the workers. There has been no allegation nor has it been proven, that the piece rate was unlawfully unlawfully reduced. Rather it was applied equally to all.

Paz' complaint, however, is that her ability to earn the same pay as before her April layoff was reduced because she and Garcia were assigned to the tedious jobs of matching lines on loose, heavy material. Such time-consuming work caused them to complete fewer pieces and they therefore received less pay in the piece-rate system.

Dordevic testified that he assigned work equally to all the workers, and he gave small lots to two or three workers without favoritism. Other workers testified that the complex work of matching lines was given to the more experienced workers. Paz gave contradictory testimony about the prices paid for the work. First she testified that on her return in November, jobs were priced at $2.50 and $3.50 per dozen. Then she stated that all jobs were $2.50, but she did very little work priced more than $2.50, and was not given the same amount of higher priced work as the other merrow operators. This indicates that she was given some higher priced work. Garcia too gave testimony that did not support this allegation. She stated that in November the thick material work at issue was shared among all the workers.

On such testimony, and in the absence of proof of rates of pay and gross pay earned by Garcia, Paz, and the other workers, and the amounts of various types of work performed by the merrow operators, I cannot find that Respondent assigned them to lower-paying job tasks.

In sum, I find that the General Counsel has made a prima facie showing that the (a) isolation of the work stations of Garcia and Paz, at which they suffered adverse conditions in terms of their location near the steam machine and gate, (b) assignment to inefficient machines, and the resulting reduction in the amount of earnings they received, and (c) issuance of a warning letter to Paz were motivated by their union activities.

It is clear that the isolation of Garcia and Paz and their location near the steam and gate causing them to build a barrier of material and cover themselves to keep warm, which was met by Mrs. Dordevic's laughter, was designed to and did hold them up to ridicule before the other employees and its purpose was to discredit their militant advocacy of the Union. Silver State Disposal Co., 271 NLRB 486, 491 (1984). Similarly, I find that their assignment to inefficient machines and the reduction of the amounts of earnings they received due to the machines' inefficiency were in reprisal for their union activities. City Service Insulation Co., 266 NLRB 654, 659 (1983). In addition, the issuance of the warning letter was also in retaliation for Paz' leadership in the union campaign.

I accordingly find that these actions were motivated by their union activities. However, I am not persuaded that the General Counsel has established a prima facie case showing that Respondent violated Section 8(a)(4) and (1) of the Act. Dordevic in his remarks to Garcia and Paz made no reference to their participation in the Board proceeding in Case 29–CA–11824–1, –2 or Case 29–CA–11929.

To establish a violation of Section 8(a)(4) of the Act the record must show that Respondent's discrimination against employees was "because they had filed charges or given testimony under the Act." I find no such showing has been made. Accordingly, I shall recommend dismissal of the allegation that by its treatment of Garcia and Paz, Respondent also violated Section 8(a)(4) of the Act.

Respondent has not met its burden of showing that it would have taken the same actions against Garcia and Paz in the absence of their union activities. Wright Line, supra.

B. The Constructive Discharges

The General Counsel alleges that the actions taken against Garcia and Paz on their return to work in November caused their constructive discharge.

> The Board [citing Crystal Princeton Refining Co., 222 NLRB 1068, 1069 (1976)] has held that a constructive discharge occurs when an employee quits because an employer has deliberately made working conditions unbearable. Two elements must be proven to establish a constructive discharge:
> > First, the burdens imposed upon the employee must cause, and be intended to cause, a change in his working conditions so difficult or unpleasant as to force him to resign. Second, it must be shown that those burdens were imposed because of the employee's union activities. [Algreco Sportswear Co., 271 NLRB 499, 500 (1984).]

The record must demonstrate that the conditions imposed on Garcia and Paz "were so intolerable as to force them to resign, or that the Respondent would reasonably have expected [them] to quit." Algreco, supra.

Garcia and Paz, the most vocal and active of the union advocates, initiated the Union's organizing campaign, actively solicited other employees in and out of the shop to sign cards, and stood with union agents outside the premises and spoke to and solicited their fellow employees. It is clear that Respondent harbored great animosity toward them, and I have found that Garcia, the subject of illegal interrogations, and Paz, the object of interrogations and illegal threats, were in fact laid off in April because of their union activities.

Garcia and Paz were recalled, and at the same time subject to discriminatory treatment because of their advocacy of the Union.

I believe that the evidence supports a finding that the isolation of Garcia and Paz to a location near the steam machine and gate which subjected them to adverse conditions causing them to build barriers and cover themselves to keep warm held them up to ridicule; assignment to inefficient machines which caused them to earn less than they might have and the issuance of the warning letter to Paz accompanied by an overblown reaction to innocent picture taking to indicate her right to a nondiscriminatory work location, all show that Respondent sought to make work so intolerable that they would have to quit, thus ridding Respondent of prominent union supporters. Ace Machine Co., 249 NLRB 623, 632 (1980). I believe that the isolation (Hall of Mississippi, 249 NLRB 775, 778 (1980)), the adverse work conditions, and the inefficient machines that affected their earnings, so that they were forced to resign (City Service Insulation Co., supra; Ellis Toyota, 266 NLRB 442, 455 (1983)), and the issuance of the warning letter to Paz for a brief, minor photo session were all designed to and did cause the resignations of Garcia and Paz.

Further evidence of the motive in making conditions unbearable to force the resignations of Garcia and Paz may be seen in Dordevic's conversation with Paz when she took the pictures. According to Dordevic's testimony, Paz asked him why he did not fire her. Dordevic replied that he did not need to. I infer from this that he correctly believed that he did not have to fire her, and face another charge, because he would make life at BMD so intolerable that she would have to, and did quit.

The facts that their attempts to protect themselves from the steam and keep warm when the door was open were met with laughter by Mrs. Dordevic, while at the same time their request to be moved were ignored, all demonstrate that these burdens, when combined with the inefficient machines, the reductions in earnings, and the warning letter caused and were intended to cause conditions that forced them to resign, and Mrs. Dordevic's laughter and Mr. Dordevic's statement that he did not need to fire Paz also show that Respondent reasonably expected them to quit because of these intolerable conditions.

The conditions made Garcia and Paz' continued employment with Respondent untenable and compelled their resignation. Furthermore, the foreseeability of their resignations coupled with Dordevic's union animus, combine to support a finding that this was the intended result of the conduct. Bronx Metal Polishing Co., 276 NLRB 299, 305 (1985).

VIII. THE OBJECTIONS TO THE ELECTION

The Union's objection is as follows:

> The Employer threatened its employees with plant closure if the Petitioner won the election.

Inasmuch as I have found violations by Respondent of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act by threatening employees with plant closure in the critical preelection period, this objection is sustained, and I will recommend that the election be set aside and the Regional Director be directed to conduct a second election.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. Respondent BMD Sportswear Corp. is and at all times material herein has been an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of the Act.

2. Respondent Suzan Knitwear Corp. at all times material herein has been an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of the Act.

3. Respondent Suzan Knitwear is the alter ego of Respondent BMD Sportswear, and they constitute a single employer.

4. Knitgoods Workers Union, Local 155, International Ladies Garment Workers Union, AFL–CIO is a labor organization within the meaning of the Act.

5. By laying off Gloria Chunga, Carmen Lopez, Edilma Nunez, Maria Garcia, and Mercedes Paz because of their membership in and activities on behalf of the Union, Respondent violated Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act.

6. By constructively discharging Maria Garcia and Mercedes Paz because of their membership in and activities on behalf of the Union, Respondent violated Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act.

7. By isolating the work stations of Maria Garcia and Mercedes Paz, causing them to be subject to adverse conditions in terms of their location to the steam machine and gate; by their assignment to inefficient machines and the resultant reduction in the amount of earnings they received; and by the issuance of a warning letter to Mercedes Paz, all because of their membership in and activities in behalf of the Union, Respondent violated Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act.

8. By asking employees if they called the Union; whether they signed cards or any papers for the Union; why employees were supporting Mercedes Paz; who signed for the Union; why Paz did not get a job in a union shop if she was in the Union; if they knew of the Union; and whether they spoke to union agents; if they were in the Union; and who spoke to them about the Union, Respondent violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act.

9. By telling employees that they were silly and stupid in connection with the Union; by accusing employees of forcing workers to sign cards; by threatening that it would lay off employees who signed cards and close the shop, and change its name and replace the workers; by threatening employees that if they signed cards for the Union or called it they would be fired; by telling workers that if they did not sign a card they would continue to work; by threatening employees that Respondent would close the shop if the Union came in or won the election; by telling employees that if the union problem continued Respondent BMD comtemplated closing and expanding operations at Suzan; by permitting a sign to be posted that stated: "Please vote for BMD and save our job Thank You.", Respondent violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act.

10. The acts and conduct set forth in Conclusion of Law 9, above, relating to threats to close the shop, constitute objectionable conduct warranting the setting aside of the representation election conducted on 21 June 1985.

11. Respondent has not violated the Act with respect to the layoffs of Bertha Mejia and Amalia Paredes; by the assignment of Maria Garcia and Mercedes Paz to lower-paying job tasks or that they were discriminated against in violation of Section 8(a)(4) of the Act.

12. The aforesaid unfair labor practices are unfair labor practices affecting commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

THE REMEDY

Having found that the Respondent has engaged in certain unfair labor practices, I find it necessary to order it to cease and desist and to take certain affirmative action designed to effectuate the policies of the Act.

Having found that Respondent unlawfully laid off Gloria Chunga, Carmen Lopez, Edilma Nunez, Maria Garcia, and Mercedes Paz and constructively discharged Maria Garcia and Mercedes Paz, I recommend that Respondent be ordered to recall Chunga, Lopez, and Nunez and reinstate Garcia and Paz and make them whole for any loss of earnings they may have suffered as a result of the discrimination against them. The amount of backpay shall be computed in the manner set forth by Isis Plumbing Co., 138 NLRB 716 (1967), as modified by Florida Steel Corp., 231 NLRB 651 (1971).

DECISION AND ORDER

BY MEMBERS BABSON, STEPHENS, AND CRACRAFT

On 24 November 1986 Administrative Law Judge Frank H. Itkin issued the attached decision. The Respondent and the General Counsel filed exceptions and supporting briefs. The General Counsel also filed a brief in opposition to the Respondent's exceptions.

The National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the decision and the record in light of the exceptions and briefs and has decided to affirm the judge's rulings, findings,[1] and conclusions and to adopt the recommended Order.[2]

ORDER

The National Labor Relations Board adopts the recommended Order of the administrative law judge and orders that the Respondent, Culmtech, Ltd., Inkerman, Pennsylvania, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall take the action set forth in the Order.

[1] The Respondent has excepted to some of the judge's credibility findings. The Board's established policy is not to overrule an administrative law judge's credibility resolutions unless the clear preponderance of all the relevant evidence convinces us that they are incorrect. Standard Dry Wall Products, 91 NLRB 544 (1950), enfd. 188 F.2d 362 (3d Cir. 1951). We have carefully examined the record and find no basis for reversing the findings.

We agree with the judge that the General Counsel established a prima facie case of discrimination with respect to the discharges on 7 January 1986 of employees Donald Pachucki, Sr. and Donald Pachucki, Jr. We agree particularly with the judge's analysis of the evidence as to timing in relation to the telephone call from union official Fred Casaia and the pretextual reasons for the discharges. See Wright Line, 251 NLRB 1083, 1088 fn. 12 (1980), enfd. 662 F.2d 899 (1st Cir. 1981). As to evidence of the Respondent's knowledge of prounion sentiment among employees we note that the Respondent's foreman, Dick Troup, admitted to be a supervisor within the meaning of Sec. 2(11) of the Act, had a conversation in December 1985 with employee David Gostinski, himself later a victim of a discriminatory discharge, wherein Gostinski voiced his support for a union and his belief that a union would "straighten this plant out." We further note the otherwise unexplained remark by Plant Superintendent John Barney to Pachucki, Sr., made at the summary discharge meeting held about 1 hour after the delivery of the telephone message, that Pachucki, Sr., was "unhappy" with his job. In this light we conclude that the circumstances surrounding the 7 January discharges are sufficient to infer that the Respondent suspected that one of the Pachuckis was engaged in union activity and fired them both for that reason. We do not find it necessary to find, as to the Respondent's direct knowledge of the Pachuckis' union activity based on the telephone message itself, that Casaia necessarily mentioned his union position in identifying himself and rescheduling his meeting with Donald Pachucki.

With respect to the discriminatory discharges of Gostinski, George Boston, and John Ward, the judge found that the Respondent learned of their union activities when Foreman William Tocheny overheard their conversation at the timeclock on 24 January 1986. Testimony by the Respondent's plant manager, John Bianco, reveals that Tocheny was a supervisor within the meaning of Sec. 2(11) of the Act in that he was the only foreman on the night shift, used independent judgment in assigning work and changing work assignments, had independent authority to permit employees to leave work early, and was considered by Bianco to be "in charge" of the night shift.

[2] As part of the remedy the General Counsel seeks an order which will include a visitatorial clause authorizing the Board, for compliance purposes, to obtain discovery from the Respondent under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure under the supervision of the United States court of appeals enforcing the order. We have concluded that under the circumstances of this case such a clause is not warranted.

Carmen P. Cialino, Esq., for the General Counsel.
Richard M. Goldberg, Esq., for the Employer.

DECISION

FRANK H. ITKIN, Administrative Law Judge. Unfair labor practice charges were filed in the above cases on February 6 and April 14, 1986. A consolidated complaint issued on June 30, 1986. The General Counsel alleges that Respondent Employer violated Section 8(a)(1) and (3) of the National Labor Relations Act by threatening an employee to close its facility; by soliciting employee complaints and grievances and promising increased benefits; by soliciting an employee to dissuade other employees from supporting the Union; and by terminating and refusing to reinstate employees Donald Pachucki Jr., Donald Pachucki Sr., John Ward, David Gostinski, and George Boston. Respondent Employer denies violating the Act as alleged.

Hearings were held on the issues raised in Wilkes-Barre, Pennsylvania, on August 11 and 12, 1986. Upon the entire record, including my observation of the demeanor of the witnesses and, after due consideration of the briefs filed by counsel, I make the following

Respondent Culmtech is an employer engaged in commerce as alleged. The United Steelworkers of America and the International Union, United Mine Workers of America are labor organizations as alleged. As the parties stipulated, the Employer was engaged in the construction of its coal mining and processing facility at Inkerman, Pennsylvania, from about July 1 to December 31, 1985. On January 1, 1986, the Employer began production at Inkerman. George Boston was hired on August 14, 1985; Donald Pachucki Jr. was hired on September 26; Donald Pachucki Sr. was hired on October 28, 1985; David Gostinski was hired on November 2, 1985; and John Ward was hired on November 2, 1985. The Employer had in effect a policy whereby it fully paid insurance premiums to Blue Cross/Blue Shield on behalf of production and maintenance employees who had successfully served a probationary period. Pursuant to this policy, the Employer notified Blue Cross/Blue

Shield on November 12, 1985, that employee Boston would receive coverage on the effective date of November 13, 1985. Blue Cross/Blue Shield was similarly notified on December 5, 1985, for employee Pachucki Jr. and his effective date was December 25, 1985; on January 6, 1986, for employees Gostinski and Ward, and their effective dates were January 31, 1986; and on January 6, 1986, for employee Pachucki Sr., and his effective date was January 26, 1986. See G.C. Exh. 2.[1]

Fred Casaia is subdirector of the United Steelworkers Union. His office is in the IBE Building in Wilkes-Barre. Casaia testified that on January 7, 1986, he telephoned Respondent Employer. Casaia explained:

> I felt it was very necessary for me to get hold of Don Pachucki. I have an organizing staff under me and they had set up a meeting with this gentleman to discuss organizing at [his] place of employment . . . . [Prior] commitments wouldn't allow me to be there the day that the meeting was scheduled, so I wanted to postpone that meeting for, I believe it was [to] the 10th of January. . . . I had no way of getting in touch with Mr. Pachucki other than calling [his] place of employment.

Casaia recalled his telephone conversation to Culmtech, as follows:

> The young girl that answered the phone . . . asked who I was. I told her who I was and what I wanted. . . . I was told that he [Pachucki] was out in the field . . . that she would make sure that he would get the message.[2]

Donald Pachucki Sr. testified that he was the "head equipment mechanic" for the Employer; that his son Pachucki Jr. worked as his "helper for mobile equipment"; and that during the latter part of December 1985, he had spoken to Paul Vida, David Gostinski, John Ward, Lenny Schall, and Mike Andrew at work "regarding getting a Union into" Culmtech. Vida, at the time, was a foreman. These "conversations" took place "frequently" at the "plant garage," in the "breaker" and "more or less all over." It was decided among the employees that Gostinski and Ward "were going to contact the Union" and Pachucki Sr. "would be the spokesman."

Pachucki Sr. next testified that about 6 a.m. on January 7, 1986, he started work at the plant. He was to install new brakes on a "Hough 400." This assignment had been given to him by David Small, the owner of Culmtech. He had to "take the parts down to State Equipment . . . to try to match them up with new parts" and was, consequently, "out of the facility" during the day. After he returned to the plant about 2:30 p.m., Pachucki Jr., his son, handed him "a phone memo" and said "Jeanie [the plant secretary] handed me this . . . I don't know who this person is . . . it's got to be for you." (See G.C. Exh. 3.) The "phone-memo," dated January 7, is addressed to "Don Pachucki," from "Fred Casaia," and states: "reschedule for Friday morning 9 or 10 a.m.," and requests a "call back" at the Union's telephone number.

Later that same day, about 3:10 p.m., Pachucki Sr. "quit work" for the day. He went to his truck which was parked in front of the garage and "started it up." However, Plant Superintendent John Barney and Foreman Kevin Lewis "stood behind his truck." Barney approached Pachucki Sr. and said that "he wanted to see [Pachucki Sr.]." Barney, according to Pachucki Sr., then questioned the employee "about the parts" for the "Hough 400" and "who gave [him] authorization to start working on the machine." Barney instructed Pachucki Sr. "to see" Barney "in his office" and "bring [his] boy with [him]." Pachucki Sr. and Pachucki Jr. immediately went into Barney's office, where they had the following conversation:

> . . . Mr. Barney told me [Pachucki Sr.] I was unhappy there with my job, and I told him I wasn't unhappy. . . . He said, I made up my mind I can [get] rid of the department and . . . you're through. . . . I asked him, what do you mean, I'm through? . . . He said, you're done . . . get going . . . take [your son] with you. . . .

Pachucki Sr. had never received any complaints or warnings about his work; he had never been told that he was violating company procedures; and he had in fact received "compliments" from Small, the owner. Further, Pachucki Sr. had been told that his son, Pachucki Jr., was "doing a good job."[3]

Donald Pachucki Jr. testified that he started working for Respondent as a laborer, he then became a plant mechanic, and he "started helping his father as a mechanic's helper." He identified General Councel's Exhibit 3 as the telephone message from the secretary, Jeanie. He gave this message to his father and they were both fired by Barney later that same day. Pachucki Jr. recalled:

> He [Barney] told my dad that he was unhappy there, and my dad kept asking, what do you mean unhappy, and he wouldn't say . . .; at the end . . . he just said, you're through . . . take your boy with you . . . . Barney had stated: "we're phasing out the department." Pachucki Jr. added: "but we had work there for another two weeks."[4]

[1] It was also stipulated that Boston received a $2 hourly pay raise effective December 30, 1985, and the "reason for raise listed on personnel records" was "transfer—merit increase"; Gostinski received a $1.50 hourly pay raise effective the same date for the same "reason"; Pachucki Jr. received a $1.50 hourly pay raise effective October 7, 1985, and the "reason" was "merit increase"; and Ward received a $1.50 hourly pay raise effective December 30, 1985, and the "reason" was "transfer." Pachucki Sr., who was then receiving a $10 hourly rate, was not given a raise.

[2] On cross-examination, Casaia noted that Pachucki "and others" were scheduled to be at the "meeting"; the "purpose" of the "meeting" was "for putting together a campaign"; "they were my committee people." On redirect, Casaia further noted that he did not specify in his telephone conversation to Culmtech "whether it was [for] junior or senior" Pachucki—he "was not aware of the fact there was a junior and a senior at the time."

[3] Pachucki Sr. identified G.C. Exh. 4 as a "want ad" appearing in the local newspaper for Culmtech "the Saturday after I got fired." Barney did not testify in this proceeding.

[4] Pachucki Jr. acknowledged that once he had received a verbal warning from Plant Manager John Bianco. Pachucki Jr. had been assigned to David Gostinski worked as a welder for the Employer. He testified that he started working at the facility while it was being constructed and, when the plant started production, he was kept on as a welder. Plant Manager John Bianco informed Gostinski that "we have heard nothing but good about your work . . . we did like your work . . . and we are going to keep you as a permanent employee." Employees Pachucki Sr., Pachucki Jr., Boston, and Ward were also in this "group of men they wanted."

Gostinski next recalled that he spoke with coworkers Ward, Boston, Clark, Vida, Pachucki Jr., Pachucki Sr., Tomaselli, and Magione "regarding unionization of the plant." These "daily" conversations took place "in the breaker, in the shop, in front of the time slots." In December 1985, Gostinski also had a conversation pertaining to unionization with Plant Foreman Dick Troup. Gostinski explained:

> Mr. Troup and I were alone. We were talking about the problems the plant had . . . he mentioned that he was in the Mine Workers at one time . . . I said, well, they have a lot of expertise in this field so they could probably help us find a lot out . . . I voiced my support of a union and said that would be what would straighten this plant out . . . he said, we could fix the plant ourselves, we don't need the union . . . .

Gostinski similarly told Foreman Bernie Gorcenski about "the problems we were having" and they both "agreed" that "a union could help the plant."

Thereafter, on January 22, 1986, Gostinski reported for work at 11 p.m. He was to work until 7 a.m. the next day. Foreman William Tocheny told Gostinski that they were going to work in the "sizing plant." Apparently, to do the particular job there, they would have to let the plant "run down"—"you can't work on it while it's moving . . . they had to run the system out." Therefore, there was at least a 45-minute delay in getting started. During this delay, Gostinski assisted Tocheny in getting the necessary tools and explaining to Tocheny "how to pack the heavy media pump." Then, from about 12 midnight until 2 a.m., Gostinski assisted in "packing the pump" with Foreman Tocheny. At 2 a.m., "we went to a different site to assist two men who were helping" the onsite contractor foreman for Hamilton Industries, Norman Ward. Hamilton Industries. Hamilton Industries was engaged in "rebuilding the cam shaft system" in the "breaker." In performing this particular job, Norman Ward "became very angry because we didn't have the tools we needed." Nevertheless, they "continued to perform that task until the end of [the] shift." There was, however, as Gostinski further noted, a "power outage" between 4 and 5 a.m. and "we were ordered out of the breaker by our foremen, both foremen, "Tocheny and Norman Ward—because it was unsafe." At 7 a.m., Gostinski "punched out."

Gostinski next testified that after he "punched out," Foreman Troup "called" him to the office, and the two had the following conversation:

> He [Troup] called me into the office, and he says I understand that—and we were alone—I understand you were in my desk the other day. And I said, yes, I was. And he said, what were you looking for? And I says I was looking for a three-quarter inch drive extension tool I needed for the job. And he says, what were you on, and I says I was fixing a belt, refuse return or refuse line, and he said that if you needed a tool, he says, where do you usually go? I said, well, I usually go here, because we always come here for the tools. That's where they are kept. Or we go in the breaker.
> And then he said, well, I understand you were looking at a union book. And I said, well, I was looking where I was supposed to look for the tool. I lifted it up and I saw, right on top where the tool usually is, there is a small union book, about this big around, it was the 1978 bylaws book for the United Mine Workers, and he says, what were you doing looking at it?
> I says, well, I picked it up for 30 seconds. You know, when you pick up something, you are going to look at it. If you identify a tool you pick up, you have to look at it, look at what you pick up, and I took about 30 seconds. I looked at it, put it down and found the tool I needed.
> . . . .
> He said that we didn't need a union and that he could take care of the problems in the breaker . . . we could solve the problems in the breaker.
> And I did voice my opinion freely to him. Because he was a mineworker at one time, I said that it's evident that you can't straighten the breaker's problem out. We need somebody else to help us with them.
> He said that, you know, we were considering you to take over Paul's position. That was a foreman on the third shift. They had just removed him. And I says, well, I wouldn't take it anyway. He says I know you wouldn't, he says, but that's the reason you didn't get the job, because you were reading that book about unionization.

Gostinski, as he further testified, reported for work at 11 p.m. on January 23. He worked his full shift that night. About 7 a.m. on January 24, as Gostinski was getting "ready to punch out," Gostinski, John Ward, Boston, and Clark "were talking about starting a union." Foreman Tocheny was "two or three feet away." Gostinski recalled:

> We did talk about a union . . . we said the plant has problems [and] we want to solve the problems put oil into pumps and gear boxes. Pachucki Jr. was then instructed to do another job. Consequently, he did not "put" the oil "into the gear boxes." Bianco later faulted Pachucki Jr. for this and Pachucki Jr. explained that he "was taken off the job by" Foreman Dick Troup. As noted supra, Pachucki Jr. had received a merit pay increase during October 1985. He also had successfully completed his probationary period during December 1985.

Later that same day, January 24, coworker John Ward telephoned Gostinski at home "and said John Bianco just gave me a call and said not to bother coming in, that we're fired." Gostinski nevertheless reported for work on the evening of January 24. He was then informed by Foreman Gorcenski that he was "fired."

On the following day, January 25, Gostinski went to the plant and spoke with Plant Manager Bianco. They discussed, inter alia, a "letter" or "memo" pertaining to his firing. (Cf. G.C. Exh. 8.) Gostinski then pressed Bianco, "Why was I fired?" Bianco replied: "It's none of your business." Later, by letter dated February 3, 1986 (G.C. Exh. 5), the Employer notified the Pennsylvania Office of Employment Security that Gostinski was fired "due to leaving the jobsite without foreman's permission and was caught rummaging through foreman's desk . . . ."[5]

John Ward testified that he started his employment at Culmtech on November 2, 1985, and he received a pay increase in early 1986. Initially, he was "put on steel erection" as an ironworker in the "sizing plant." Later, during January 1986, he was "hired on permanent as a welder/mechanic" on the third shift. Ward, on or about January 6, 1986, "called the United Steelworkers in Wilkes-Barre" and "set up a meeting for Wednesday the 8th . . . to get pledge cards and get everything started to organize." Ward then apprised the Steelworkers' representative that coworker "Pachucki is interested in it . . . he would be the one . . . to talk to . . . ." Ward also spoke to his coworkers frequently at the plant "about a Union [and] about better working conditions . . . ."

Ward recalled that Pachucki Sr. and Pachucki Jr. were both "discharged" on January 7; "we figured it was because of the Union activities"; "and we just sort of eased off a little bit for a couple of days . . . ." Then, Ward and his coworkers (including Gostinski and Boston) contacted the United Mine Workers. Ward explained "why" they then turned to the United Mine Workers:

> Well, at that point, because of the confidence breach with calling the Steelworkers for one reason, and for another reason that Boston and Vida knew a person with the Mine Workers.

Ward reported for work at 11 p.m. on January 22, 1986. William Tocheny was his foreman. The employees were "going to work with Norman Ward [of Hamilton Industries] in the sizing plant to redo the shaker . . . ." Ward, like Gostinski, related the ensuing sequence of events on his shift until 7 a.m., when they checked out. He too noted the absence of "proper tools," the "power outage," and resulting delays. Thereafter, Ward reported for work at 11 p.m. on January 23. "Nothing was said at all" to Ward or his coworkers "concerning the performance of the night before." At the end of this shift, on the morning of January 24, > when we were punching out, we were gathered around the timeclock and we were talking among ourselves about the Union because . . . George [Boston] was supposed to have pledge cards . . . we were just wondering when he would be getting the pledge cards and when he could start handing them out and try to get everything going.

This group included Ward, Gostinski, Vida, Clark, Tommaselli, and Boston. Foreman Tocheny was "right behind us . . . about two or three feet."[6]

Later that same day, January 24, Ward received a telephone call at home from Plant Manager Bianco, "stating that I was not to report to work that night . . . we're being fired." Bianco stated: "[Ward] did not perform [his] duties on the night of the 22nd." Bianco also apprised Ward that Gostinski and Boston were "fired"—Gostinski "is getting fired for the same reason" and Boston "was fired for another reason which was none of [Ward's] business." Ward then testified:

> I asked him what the real reason was, why I was being fired . . . and he just told me it was none of my business.

Ward had "never" received any complaints or warnings about his work. In fact, Norman Ward of Hamilton Industries had complimented his work.

George Boston's testimony corroborates in significant part the testimony recited above (Tr. 130–148). He worked for the Employer in the construction of the plant and was later made a "permanent employee" with Gostinski, Ward, Pachucki Sr., and Pachucki Jr. He was twice asked to be a foreman, but declined the offer. He never received any complaints or warnings about his work. He was repeatedly complimented by his superiors.

Boston participated in the "conversations at Culmtech regarding unionization of the plant." He spoke with Gostinski, Ward, and other coworkers "quite often" about a union. He contacted an "official" with the United Mine Workers in an effort to get the organizational effort at the plant underway. The following week he was fired.

Boston worked on January 22. Foreman Tocheny assigned him his duties. He recalled the absence of proper tools and a power outage that evening. He worked the next night, January 23. He was not criticized or faulted for his work on January 22. He discussed the Union with his coworkers as he checked out on the morning of January 24. Foreman Tocheny was standing nearby. Later that day, Foreman Troup telephoned him at home and said, "You are discharged." Troup then faulted Boston for "shitting around" at work on January 22. Boston pressed Troup for the "real reason" and was told: "It's none of your business."[7] [5] Gostinski had filed a complaint with the Pennsylvania Human Relations commission. He claimed that "one of the reasons [he] was fired was because of [his] religious affiliation." See Tr. pp. 77–101, G.C. Exhs. 6 and 7. The commission did not find any basis for this complaint and an appeal is presently pending.

[6] Tocheny had been appointed foreman that week. As foreman, he assigned Ward "his duties."

[7] Boston later went to the plant and was told by Bianco that he was fired for "proscrastination of assigned duty." He pressed Bianco for the "real reason," and was again told: "It's none of your business."

Paul Vida was employed by Culmtech from August 1985 until March 1986. He served as a foreman from mid-December until mid-January. In that capacity, he "assigned" work to the employees and was "responsible for their work." While serving as foreman, he frequently discussed "unionizing the plant" with Boston, Gostinski, Ward, Pachucki Sr., and Pachucki Jr. He even gave Boston the telephone number of an official of the United Mine Workers.

On February 17, 1986, Vida was called into Bianco's office, and there they had the following discussion:

> Well, he [Bianco] said he was getting some complaints about me. I said, what, my work? He said, no, your work is fine. He said, you are trying to organize a Union. I said, yes. We then talked about it a little bit, discussed, you know, what the plant was like being built, and he said that the Company [is] just starting out, a Union wouldn't be good at this time, and if the Union did get in it would be a sinking ship, and he will not get off a sinking ship . . .; he said the plant would probably close down if the Union came in . . . .

Later, on February 26, Vida attended a meeting in the plant. All the employees were present. David Small, the owner, spoke. Vida testified:

> He [Small] said there is no reason why the Union should come here; you will have to pay Union dues. We will offer you an incentive pay on the amount of coal that is produced. He said, if a strike did occur, he would shut the plant down and get new employees.
> A man asked him, why the five men were discharged, he said for not doing their work. A man asked what about a pension plan, he said he would check with the board . . . if there was a strike he would close the plant . . . he wanted an open door policy. In other words if you have a complaint, he wants the men to come to the management and work it out without the Union.

Two days later, on February 28, Bianco again called Vida into his office. Bianco "said, I [Vida] had a lot of influence with the men and I could control them, because there was something in the plant concerning the Union . . . he said, I could control the men . . . in other words I could have it stopped if I wanted to . . . ."[8]

John Bianco, plant manager for Respondent, testified that he had "two meetings" with employee Vida in his office. Bianco asserted:

> What they pertained to was an employee at the plant had approached me . . . feeling pressured by Vida and other employees concerning Union issues.
> I did call in Vida and told him that I had had a complaint and I would appreciate it if he did his Union soliciting, his handing out of literature, that it must be done on his own time and not the Company's time. It must be done on his time and the fellow-worker's time.

Bianco placed this meeting in mid-February 1986. Two or three days later, according to Bianco, Vida was again observed handing out literature "in front of the shop during Company hours." It was "right after a shift change." Bianco again faulted Vida in his office. Bianco claimed that was "the extent of [his] discussions with" Vida. He denied, inter alia, making any threatening or coercive statements attributed to him by Vida.

Bianco later attended a meeting of employees on February 26. Small, the Company president and owner, spoke to the employees about the Union. According to Bianco:

> What we did was tell all the employees to become fully aware of the issues so they can make an honest decision . . . .

Bianco claimed that an employee then "asked" about a "pension plan." Small responded: "We were going to try and put one in effect." Bianco insisted that this subject "was brought up [earlier] at the Christmas party" in mid-December.[9] Small, assertedly, did not "make any promises to the employees on February 26. Small, assertedly, told the employees on February 26:

> Nothing had been done with the pension plan; he could not himself put a pension plan into effect . . . he would have to check with the board . . . he was very interested in seeing it go through . . . .

Bianco next testified that Pachucki Sr. and Pachucki Jr. were both terminated previously on January 7, 1986. Bianco asserted that "we ran into quite a few problems" with Pachucki Jr. "and he had been warned on numerous occasions" by myself and the shift foreman about "the quality of work and about his applying himself . . . ." Bianco claimed that Pachucki Jr. had been transferred from "plant mechanic" to "mechanic helper" under his father because of his "problem." Bianco also claimed that: "We felt that if we let Don Jr. go that his father would walk off the job, and we needed [the father for a particular job.]" Elsewhere, Bianco claimed that Pachucki Sr. also "started dragging his feet" and that he was "warned" about "purchasing parts" "on his own." Bianco insisted that on January 7, when the two Pachuckis were fired, he had no "idea anything was going on" about a union.

As for the later firing of employees Ward, Gostinski, and Boston on January 24, according to Bianco, manage-

[8] On cross-examination, Vida acknowledged, inter alia, that management had discussed "giving an incentive on coal produced" "from the beginning of the plant." Vida explained:

> There was talk before the plant went into production, but there was never anything that ever came of it . . . .

Vida also acknowledged that Bianco did not ask him "to talk to anybody else to try to get them not support the Union" "in so many words." And, Vida recalled that Bianco, on February 17, "said the plant would probably close if the Union comes in . . . . It is too early. . . . The plant is just starting out . . . ."

[9] According to Bianco, the "pension plan," an "incentive plan," "wages," "vacation and holiday benefits" were all "brought up at the Christmas party."

ment had decided that, because of the "numerous incidents in the plant prior to this discharge date . . . the verbal recommendation of Norman Ward [of Hamilton Industries] and the letter that [Norman Ward] submitted and the problems that the plant was going through, warranted the discharge of these three . . . ." Bianco, assertedly, had "warned" Boston on "numerous occasions" about his work. Then, on January 22, Boston, and apparently his coworkers, failed to complete the "repair work to be done in the clean coal sizing station." Bianco insisted that there was a "complete set of tools" and the delay in finishing the job was because Boston was a procrastinator. The assigned repair job was "very critical." Bianco further insisted that on January 24, when Ward, Boston, and Gostinski were fired, he was not aware of any union activity at the plant "not to [his] knowledge." He claimed that he first learned of union activity at the plant in mid-February.

On cross-examination, Bianco acknowledged that Pachucki Sr. was discharged on January 7 "in the middle of a job" involving the repair of brakes on a machine necessary "to move coal." Bianco identified Jean McIntyre as the office employee "involved with employee relations" who would, inter alia, relay telephone messages to personnel and file their workmen's compensation papers. In addition, Bianco acknowledged that during late December or early January, he became "aware" that Gostinski was "very dissatisfied" with his pay and was "complaining." Bianco then warned Gostinski "to quit causing trouble."

Bianco testified that Norman Ward of Hamilton Industries was, in effect, his "co-supervisor" on the night shift on January 22—Norman Ward of Hamilton Industries had "authority over the employees." Bianco identified General Counsel's Exhibit 8, a memorandum dated January 24, as the only written communication received from Norman Ward concerning the performance of the night shift on January 22. According to Bianco:

> The following morning [January 23] [Norman Ward] was very upset verbally and we asked him to put it in a letter . . . .

General Counsel's Exhibit 8 states:

> This memo is to make aware that on Wednesday evening, the writer reported to the site, at 11 PM, to work on modifying the Clean Coal Sizing Screen with men from the night shift. It must be noted that their [sic] was no urgency in getting down to work. First I was told that they did not have enough tools to do the job, after hunting around, some tools were found.
> They did not have burning equipment—this was found in the Prep. Plant. Most of the remarks were made by the millwrights (J. Ward, D. Gostanski, G. Boston). By 1:30 AM we got down to a steady turn of work. At 6 AM these men were assisted by the Winniedorffers. We made good time, but were slowed down due to the conrod ends which had to be ground down to make a fit in the bearings at the screen ends.
> This grinding added two hours extra to the job.

Bianco acknowledged that there were "more people involved" on January 22 other than Ward, Gostinski, and Boston, and they were not "discharged or disciplined." Bianco was not present at the plant during the night of January 22, and Norman Ward did not testify in this proceeding. Tocheny, the Employer's foreman and supervisor on the night shift, no longer employed by the Company, also did not testify. Tocheny was then "supervisor over maintenance."

Richard Troup, a foreman for the Employer, testified that he was "over the construction part of the plant" when the two Pachuckis were terminated. He denied knowledge of any union activity at the time. He denied knowledge of any union activity when Gostinski, Ward, and Boston were later fired. He claimed that "if there was any talk about the Union," he "would have heard." He also denied telling Gostinski, inter alia, that "he did not get a foreman's job . . . because of reading a Union book or any Union activity."

Bernard Gorcenski, now a welder mechanic for Respondent, testified that he was a "lead man" on January 24; that on January 24, Ward and Boston were "contacted by phone that their employment was terminated"; and that "they couldn't get hold of Gostinski so they told [him] when he came in that night . . . ." He asserted that he was not aware of any Union activity at the time, "I had no knowledge of that."

David Small, the president and chief executive officer of Respondent, testified that he held employee meetings on February 26, 1986, "to make the Company's position known" on the union organizational effort. He, assertedly, was "asked questions" about a "pension plan." He had "discussed" this subject earlier at the Christmas party. He again indicated that he "was in favor of it." He, assertedly, was "asked" about an "incentive plan." He had "discussed" this subject earlier at the Christmas party. He again indicated that he "was in favor of it." He again repeated that "employees of a company should share in the profitability and we would tie that sharing to the productivity of coal"—"once [the Company] did become profitable . . . that kind of plan would be instituted."

Small denied any knowledge of union activity when Pachucki Sr., Pachucki Jr., Boston, Gostinski, and Ward were fired. He particularly faulted Boston, Gostinski, and Ward because they "basically doped off and dragged their feet and procrastinated and the job wasn't done" on the night of January 22. He claimed that "was the straw that broke the camel's back"—"we felt that the problem was that the maintenance crew on the graveyard shift was simply not getting the jobs done . . . ." He asserted that Norman Ward of Hamilton Industries "made it quite clear that the reason that the work wasn't done was because of these three individuals" Ward, Gostinski, and Boston. As noted, Norman Ward did not testify. (Cf. G.C. Exh. 8, quoted supra.)

On cross-examination, Small faulted the performance of Pachucki Sr. as "one of the prime causes of problems in the plant" the "mobile equipment didn't run"; "he was too slow"; "he dragged his feet." Small similarly faulted the performance of Pachucki Jr. And, as for the "graveyard maintenance shift," Small acknowledged that Ward, Gostinski, and Boston were "not the only individuals working the shift" on January 22. The others, as noted, were not fired.

I credit the testimony of Casaia, Pachucki Sr., Pachucki Jr., Gostinski, Ward, and Boston as detailed above. Their testimony is in significant part mutually corroborative. They impressed me as trustworthy and reliable witnesses. And their full and complete account of the pertinent sequence of events withstood the test of cross-examination. On the other hand, I do not credit the testimony of Bianco, Small, Troup, and Gorcenski insofar as their testimony conflicts with the above testimony of Casaia, Pachucki Sr., Pachucki Jr., Gostinski, Ward, and Boston. The testimony of Bianco, Small, Troup, and Gorcenski was at times vague, incomplete, inconsistent, and shifting. They did not impress me as reliable or trustworthy witnesses. In particular, I find incredible here management's asserted nondiscriminatory reasons for the sudden firing of Pachucki Sr., Pachucki Jr., Gostinski, Ward, and Boston. As discussed below, I find these belated, unsubstantiated, shifting, and contradictory reasons advanced by the Employer for the sudden firing of the five employees to be pretextual, and the real reason to be the suspected union activities of these employees.[10]

In addition, on this record, I am persuaded that the testimony of Vida, as recited above, is more complete and reliable than the testimony of Bianco. Bianco admittedly called Vida into his office on February 17 and 28. I find incredible Bianco's assertion that he twice summoned Vida to his office only to tell Vida that he, Bianco, received a "complaint" from a fellow employee and he "would appreciate it if" Vida solicited and distributed for the Union "on his own time" and "the fellow-worker's time." The purpose of this meeting, according to Bianco, was to protect a complaining employee who assertedly had been "pressured by Vida and other employees concerning Union issues." Further, I find Vida's recollection of Small's statements to the assembled employees on February 26 to be credible. Small's recollection and Bianco's recollection of Small's statements to the employees were at times vague and incomplete. And, as stated, I do not regard Small and Bianco, on this full record, to be reliable witnesses.

Discussion

The credible evidence of record, as recited supra, makes it clear that management summarily discharged employees Pachucki Sr. and Pachucki Jr. on January 7 because of their suspected union activities, in violation of Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act. Pachucki Sr. and Pachucki Jr. were both hired by the Employer during the construction of its Inkerman facility. Management was pleased with their work and they were later kept on as permanent employees. Management complimented the work of both employees. Pachucki Sr. was made "head equipment mechanic" receiving a $10 hourly rate. Pachucki Jr. was given a "merit increase" and later assigned to assist Pachucki Sr. "as a mechanic's helper." The two employees had received no reprimands from the Employer.

Then, during late December, Pachucki Sr. spoke to his coworkers, including employees Gostinski and Ward, about "getting a Union into" Culmtech. The employees decided that Gostinski and Ward "were going to contact the Union," the United Steelworkers, and Pachucki Sr. "would be the spokesman." Arrangements were made for the employees to meet with the Union's representatives. However, Casaia, the Union's subdirector, could not attend a scheduled meeting and, consequently, he telephoned the plant on January 7 to so advise Pachucki. Casaia was then unaware that there was a Pachucki Sr. and Pachucki Jr. working at the plant. Accordingly, he simply left a message with the plant secretary, Jean McIntyre, for Pachucki, explaining to her that the scheduled meeting was postponed. Later that same day, Superintendent Barney summoned Pachucki Sr. and Pachucki Jr. into his office. There, Barney faulted Pachucki Sr. for being "unhappy" at Culmtech. Barney then apprised Pachucki Sr., "You're through . . . take your boy with you . . . ." Barney, at the same time, claimed that the Employer was "phasing out the department." There was, however, work which remained to be done, including the repair of a machine critical to the processing of coal. In fact, management promptly placed a "want ad" in the local newspaper for a replacement "mechanic." Elsewhere, Plant Manager Bianco claimed that Pachucki Sr. had been "warned" about "purchasing parts" "on his own" and he had "started dragging his feet" at work. Bianco also claimed that "we ran into quite a few problems" with Pachucki Jr., but "we felt that if we let Don Jr. go that his father would walk off and we needed [him]." The credible evidence of record does not support these inconsistent assertions by the Employer.

I find and conclude that the Employer became aware of the union activities of Pachucki Sr. by January 7, when Union Representative Casaia telephoned the plant to advise Pachucki that the scheduled union organizational meeting was postponed. That same day, management summarily fired both Pachucki Sr. and Pachucki Jr. Significantly, Casaia's telephone message pertaining to the postponed union meeting did not specify Pachucki Sr. or Pachucki Jr. The credible evidence shows that, up to this point, both employees were highly regarded by management. And, it was only hours after this union activity surfaced when they were suddenly fired. Further, I reject as pretextual management's unsubstantiated, inconsistent, contradictory, shifting, belated, and incredible reasons assigned for this firing. The weaknesses of these asserted reasons only serve to bolster the inference that management suddenly fired both Pachuckis on January 7 because of suspected union activities, in violation of Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act.

Subsequently, when employees Gostinski, Ward, and Boston attempted to renew this organizational effort at the plant, management summarily fired them too, in further violation of Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act. Gos-tinski, Ward, and Boston, like Pachucki Sr. and Pachucki Jr., started working for the Employer during the construction of the plant. Later, they were kept on as permanent employees. They were given pay increases.[11] Gostinski credibly testified that he was complimented by management for his good work. Gostinski was even told that he was being "considered" for a foreman's position. And, Boston was twice asked to become a foreman—he too was repeatedly complimented by his superiors.

Employee Ward credibly recalled that when Pachucki Sr. and Pachucki Jr. were both fired on January 7, "we figured it was because of the Union activities" and "we just sort of eased off a little bit for a couple of days." Then, Ward and his coworkers—including Gostinski and Boston—turned to the United Mine Workers for organizational assistance. As Ward explained, on January 24:

> When we were punching out, we were gathered around the time clock and we were talking among ourselves about the Union because . . . George [Boston] was supposed to have pledge cards . . . we were just wondering when he would get the pledge cards and when he could start handing them out and try to get everything going.

This group included Ward, Gostinski, and Boston. Tocheny, the Employer's foreman and supervisor on the night shift, was standing "right behind" them "about two or three feet."

Earlier, Gostinski had made known to Foreman Troup his strong "support of a Union." Troup, however, informed Gostinski, "we don't need the union." Then, on the morning of January 23, Troup faulted Gostinski for "looking" in his desk at a "Union book." Gostinski explained to Troup that he was looking for a tool and saw the union book there. Troup instructed Gostinski, "We didn't need a union." Troup, at the same time, revealed to Gostinski: "We were considering you to take over . . . foreman on the third shift . . . the reason you didn't get it the job [was] because you were reading that book about unionization."

During the afternoon of January 24, Gostinski, Ward, and Boston were notified at home that they were fired. Management claimed that they had failed to "perform" their "duties on the night of [January] 22nd." The employees had not been warned or criticized about their work. And, when they pressed management for the "real reason" for their firing, they were told: "It was none of [their] business."

Management claims that the three employees were fired because of proscrastination on the night of January 22. As noted, Tocheny, the Company's supervisor on the night shift, did not testify. In addition, Norman Ward, foreman of Hamilton Industries, who was also directing the night shift, did not testify. The credible evidence of record, detailed above, fails to support this and related assertions. Indeed, management later notified the Pennsylvania Office Of Employment Security that Gostinski was fired "due to leaving the jobsite without foreman's permission and was caught rummaging through foreman's desk . . . ." Here, too, management's unsubstantiated, inconsistent, contradictory, shifting, belated, and incredible reasons assigned for this sudden firing only serve to bolster the inference that it was really their union activities which caused this action.

In sum, I find and conclude that the Employer violated Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act by discriminatorily discharging employees Pachucki Sr., Pachucki Jr., Ward, Boston, and Gostinski.

The General Counsel alleges that Respondent Employer also violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act by threatening an employee that it would close its facility if the employees selected union representation and, in addition, by soliciting this same employee to dissuade his coworkers from supporting the Union. The credible evidence of record supports this allegation. Thus, as employee Vida credibly recalled, Plant Manager Bianco summoned Vida to his office; stated "you are trying to organize a Union"; warned that a "Union wouldn't be good at this time . . . if the Union did get in it would be a sinking ship . . ."; and then "said the plant would probably close down if the Union came in." Later, Bianco again summoned Vida to his office. This time, Bianco said that Vida "had a lot of influence with the men" and "could control" them with respect to the union effort. Vida understood that Bianco was, in effect, saying that Vida "could have it stopped if he wanted to . . . ."

I find and conclude that Bianco's conduct, assessed in the context of the Employer's discriminatory firing of the five union protagonists, tended to interfere with employee Section 7 rights, in violation of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act. Cf. Purolator Armored, 268 NLRB 1268, 1275–1280 (1984). Bianco threatened Vida with the closing of its facility if the employees chose union representation. Bianco then enlisted the support of Vida in opposing the Union. This conduct, in context, tended to impinge on employee Section 7 rights.

The General Counsel also alleges that the Employer solicited employee complaints and grievances and promised its employees increased benefits and improved terms and conditions of employment if they voted against union representation. In my view, the credible evidence of record does not sufficiently support this allegation. Thus, employee Vida credibly recalled how Company Owner Small addressed the assembled employees. Small, during his meeting, was asked, inter alia, "about a pension plan" and said "he would check with the board" of directors. An "incentive plan" was discussed. Small also "wanted an open door policy." Management had discussed these and similar improved benefits with the employees a few months earlier. The testimony of record falls far short of sufficiently establishing an unlawful solicitation and promise of benefits. I would therefore dismiss this allegation of the complaint. Cf. American Laster Corp., 280 NLRB 483 (1986).

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. Respondent is an employer engaged in commerce as alleged.

[11] The Employer's "reason for the raise" for Boston and Gostinski stated "merit increase." The "reason for the raise" for Ward was "transfer."

2. The United Steelworkers of America and the United Mine Workers of America are labor organizations as alleged.

3. Respondent violated Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act by discriminatorily discharging employees Pachucki Sr., Pachucki Jr., Boston, Gostinski, and Ward.

4. Respondent violated Section 8(a)(1) by threatening an employee to close its facility if they chose union representation and by soliciting an employee to dissuade his coworkers from supporting the Union. Respondent has not committed other 8(a)(1) violations alleged.

5. The unfair labor practices found above affect commerce as alleged.

REMEDY

To remedy the unfair labor practices found above, Respondent Employer will be directed to cease and desist from engaging in such unlawful conduct or like and related conduct and to post the attached notice. Respondent Employer will also be directed to offer employees Pachucki Sr., Pachucki Jr., Gostinski, Ward, and Boston immediate and full reinstatement to their former jobs or, in the event such jobs no longer exist, to substantially equivalent jobs, without prejudice to their seniority or other rights and privileges, and make them whole for any loss of earnings they may have suffered by reason of their unlawful discharges, by making payment to them of a sum of money equal to that which they normally would have earned from the date of Respondent Employer's discrimination to the date of its offers of reinstatement, less net earnings during such period, with backpay and interest to be computed as prescribed in F. W. Woolworth Co., 90 NLRB 651 (1977), with interest as provided in Florida Steel Corp., 231 NLRB 651 (1977). See generally Isis Plumbing Co., 138 NLRB 716 (1962). In addition, Respondent Employer will be directed to preserve and make available to the Board, on request, all payroll records and reports and all other records necessary to determine backpay and reinstatement under the terms of this decision. Further, Respondent Employer will be directed to remove from its files any reference to the disciplinary actions and discharges found unlawful herein in accordance with Sterling Sugars, 261 NLRB 472 (1982).

On these findings of fact and conclusions of law and on the entire record, I issue the following recommended[12]

ORDER

The Respondent, Culmtech, Ltd., Inkerman, Pennsylvania, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall

1. Cease and desist from

(a) Discouraging membership in the United Steelworkers Of America, the United Mine Workers Of America, or any other labor organization, by discriminatorily discharging and failing or refusing to reinstate its employees.

(b) Threatening employees that it would close its facility if the employees chose union representation.

(c) Soliciting employees to dissuade other employees from supporting the Union.

(d) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing its employees in the exercise of their rights guaranteed by Section 7 of the Act.

2. Take the following affirmative action necessary to effectuate the policies of the Act.

(a) Offer employees George Boston, David Gostinski, Donald Pachucki Sr., Donald Pachucki Jr., and John Ward immediate and full reinstatement to their former jobs or, in the event their former jobs no longer exist, to substantially equivalent jobs, without prejudice to their seniority or other rights and privileges, and make them whole for any loss of earnings they may have sustained by reason of Respondent's unlawful action, with interest, as provided in this decision.

(b) Preserve and, on request, make available to the Board or its agents for examination and copying, all payroll records, social security payment records, timecards, personnel records and reports, as well as other records necessary or useful in analyzing and computing the amount of backpay due under the terms of this Order.

(c) Remove from its files any reference to the discharges of Boston, Gostinski, Pachucki Sr., Pachucki Jr., and Ward, and notify them in writing that this has been done and that evidence of their unlawful discharges will not be used as a basis for future personnel actions against them.

(d) Post at its Inkerman, Pennsylvania facility copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix."[13] Copies of the notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 4, after being signed by the Respondent's authorized representative, shall be posted by the Respondent immediately upon receipt and maintained for 60 consecutive days in conspicuous places including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by the Respondent to ensure that the notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(e) Notify the Regional Director in writing within 28 days from the date of this Orderwhat steps the Respondent has taken to comply.

IT IS FURTHER RECOMMENDED that the remaining allegations of the complaint be dismissed.

[12] If no exceptions are filed as provided by Sec. 102.46 of the Board's Rules and Regulations, the findings, conclusions, and recommended Order shall, as provided in Sec. 102.48 of the Rules, be adopted by the Board and all objections to them shall be deemed waived for all purposes.

APPENDIX

NOTICE TO EMPLOYEES
POSTED BY ORDER OF THE
NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD
An Agency of the United States Government

The National Labor Relations Board has found that we violated the National Labor Relations Act and has ordered us to post and abide by this notice.

WE WILL NOT discourage membership in the United Steelworkers of America, the United Mine Workers of America, or any other labor organization, by discriminatorily discharging and failing or refusing to reinstate our employees.

WE WILL NOT threaten our employees that we will close down our facility if they choose union representation.

WE WILL NOT solicit our employees to dissuade their coemployees from supporting the Union.

WE WILL NOT in any like or related manner interfere with, restrain, or coerce our employees in the exercise of their rights guaranteed by Section 7 of the Act.

WE WILL offer employees George Boston, David Gostinski, Donald Pachucki Sr., Donald Pachucki Jr., and John Ward immediate and full reinstatement to their former jobs or, in the event their former jobs no longer exist, to substantially equivalent jobs, without prejudice to their seniority or other rights and privileges, and make them whole for any loss of earnings they may have sustained by reason of our unlawful conduct, with interest.

WE WILL remove from our files any references to the discriminatory discharges of Boston, Gostinski, Pachucki Sr., Pachucki Jr., and Ward, and WE WILL notify them that this has been done and evidence of their unlawful discharges will not be used as a basis for future personnel actions against them.

CULMTECH, LTD.

Martin Marietta Energy Systems and Oil, Chemical and Atomic Workers International Union, Local 3-288. Case 10-CA-21503

4 March 1987

DECISION AND ORDER

BY MEMBERS JOHANSEN, BABSON, AND STEPHENS

On 29 September 1986 Administrative Law Judge Howard I. Grossman issued the attached decision. The Respondent filed exceptions and a supporting brief.

The National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the decision and the record in light of the exceptions and brief and has decided to affirm the judge's rulings, findings, and conclusions and to adopt the recommended Order.

ORDER

The National Labor Relations Board adopts the recommended Order of the administrative law judge and orders that the Respondent, Martin Marietta Energy Systems, Oak Ridge, Tennessee, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall take the action set forth in the Order.

Howard Trimble, Esq., for the General Counsel.
W. Bruce Swain, Esq., of Bethesda, Maryland, for the Respondent.
John Williams, District Director, of Knoxville, Tennessee, for the Charging Party.

DECISION

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

Howard I. Grossman, Administrative Law Judge. The charge was filed on 21 January 1986[1] by Oil, Chemical and Atomic Workers International Union, Local 3-288 (Local 3-288), and complaint issued on 13 May. It alleges in essence that Martin Marietta Energy Systems (the Company, or the Respondent) unilaterally and without bargaining with Local 3-288 implemented a health benefit plan for its employees in violation of Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the National Labor Relations Act (the Act).

A hearing was held before me on this matter on 24 June 1986 in Oak Ridge, Tennessee. Thereafter, the General Counsel and the Respondent filed briefs. On the entire record, and on my observation of the demeanor of the witnesses, I make the following

I. JURISDICTION

The Company is a Maryland corporation with an office and place of business in Oak Ridge, Tennessee, where it is engaged in the operation of laboratories and nuclear facilities for the Department of Energy. During the past calender year, a representative period, the Company sold and shipped from its Oak Ridge, Tennessee, facility finished products valued in excess of $50,000 directly to customers located outside the State of Tennessee. The Company is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

II. THE LABOR ORGANIZATION INVOLVED

The pleadings establish and I find that the Union is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

III. THE ALLEGED UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES

A. Background and Issues

Local 3-288 has been certified since 1946 as the representative of hourly employees in the Department of Energy's gaseous diffusion plant at Oak Ridge, Tennessee. The contractor operating those facilities at that time was Union Carbide Corporation, and Local 3-288 entered into a series of collective-bargaining agreements with that contractor, the last one terminating in October 1984. In that year, the Respondent was awarded a contract to perform these functions, and, in October 1984, entered into a current collective-bargaining agreement with the "International Union . . . and its Local 3-288."[2]

Two memoranda of agreement made a part of the contract specify that the Company agrees to provide for its employees as Special Medical Expense Plan and a Hospitalization and Surgical Plan, both administered by Connecticut General Life Insurance Company. The cost of the first plan is divided equally between the Company and participating employees, and the cost of the second plan is borne wholly by the Company. Employee participation in both plans is voluntary.[3]

Article XV Section 1 of the collective-bargaining agreement reads as follows:

> Section1. It is hereby agreed that this contract contains the complete agreement between the parties or their successors, and no additions, waivers, deletions, changes or amendments shall be made during the life of this contract except by mutual consent, in writing, of the parties.[4]

Although the complaint, as noted, alleges the unfair labor practices to be the Company's unilateral implementation of a health benefit plan, at the hearing the General Counsel asserted that a "broader issue" was involved, to wit, a midterm change in the collective-bargaining agreement in violation of the proviso to Section 8(d) of the Act. Company counsel agreed that this was an issue, that it had been advanced in the past by the General Counsel, and the Company's position was that no "midterm change (was) involved."

B. December 1985 Meeting of the Parties Concerning a New Health Benefit Plan

1. Company notice of the meeting

Local 3–288 protests lack of notice to its International of meeting held on 19 December 1985 concerning a new health benefit plan offered by the Company. Company Superintendent of Personnel Relations Donald H. Blanton testified without contradiction that he called Local 3–288 President John Herron on 18 December 1985, and told him that the Company and the Local needed to get together so that the Company could communicate information on health care. Herron made no response.

Company Personnel Director Harry G. Conner affirmed that company practice in the past had been to inform the local president of such meetings. International representatives appeared in such meetings from time to time; however, the Company did not notify them separately. Although International Representative John Williams stated that International representatives were present at meetings, he agreed that the procedure on occasion had been for the Company to notify the local president, who then informed the International. Williams asserted that he first learned of the health benefit meeting on the day after it was held, i.e., 20 December 1985.

2. The December meeting

Representative of the Company, Local 3–288, and another labor organization were present during the meeting on company premises. Company Director of Personnel Administration Robert E. Burnett told the union representatives that the Company intended to make a health maintenance organization plan (HMO) available to employees beginning in January 1986. Although Burnett did not discuss any specific HMO plan, he compared HMO's generally with the existing indemnity health benefit plan being administered by Connecticut General, and utilized slides in his presentation. Only those employees living in counties serviced by the HMO would be eligible. However, there would be no change in the existing indemnity benefit plan, and an employee could elect to continue with that plan. Like the old plan, the HMO program was optional. However, an employee could not elect to be covered by both plans—if the employee opted to remain under the indemnity benefit plan, he could not enroll in an HMO program even if he paid for it himself.

Various union representatives asked questions of Burnett and received answers. The principal factual issue is whether the Company stated that its intention to introduce HMO's was not negotiable, or whether it told the unions that the provisions of an HMO plan were not negotiable. Minutes of the meeting kept by Company Labor Relations Specialist D. E. Anderton, affirmed by him to be accurate, show that Burnett was asked whether HMO plans were negotiable. Burnett's reply: "They are not negotiable. HMO's themselves decide what they offer."[5] Anderton's testimony elaborated on Burnett's reply—"[t]he HMO's themselves decide what they put into the package that they offered employees. We were not a part of that. We were not in the decision making in that aspect of the benefit plans package itself." An officer of Local 3–288, Mike Church, testified that he also kept minutes of the meeting, and that Burnett's reply to the question was that "benefits are strictly determined by the HMO and are not negotiable."

On the basis of this consistent evidence, I find that the Company did not tell the union representatives that its decision to offer HMO's was not negotiable. Rather, it informed them that details of an HMO plan were formulated by the HMO's, and were not negotiable.

The evidence also shows that Local 3–288 did not agree or disagree with Burnett's statements, and that Burnett did not ask whether Local 3–288 had any objections. In response to a question on whether there would be further meetings on this issue, Burnett replied that there would be further information in the mail, and that the HMO's themselves would schedule meetings to explain the HMO programs.[6]

C. Dissemination of Further HMO Information

A company newspaper dated 26 December 1985 stated that the Company had been evaluating HMO's and planned to offer one to "employees in the near future as an alternative to the present group medical plan."[7] On 6 January 1986, the Company sent letters to employees advising them that two HMO plans (Blue Cross and Whittaker Health Services) would be made available with the enrollment period from 15 January to 15 February 1986, and that coverage would be effective 1 March 1986. The letter stated that employees could remain with the current plan if they chose to do so.[8] A notice further explaining the plans was placed on company bulletin boards on 15 January 1986,[9] and a local newspaper carried a story giving similar information.[10]

D. Other Company Programs

Company counsel stated at the hearing that the HMO plan was a "classic case of a new program offered to the collective-bargaining agent for his acceptence or comment." The Company elicited evidence of other such programs. Thus, Personnel Relations Superintendent Blanton testified to the implementation of a special accident insurance plan, a service award program, and a scholarship program.[11] Blanton averred that Local 3–288 was made aware of these programs about the time of their implementation, but never requested bargaining about them.

[6] On the question of whether Burnett was asked about further meetings, I credit Anderton's minutes—which state that Mike Walls, a member of the other labor organization, asked this question—rather than Anderton's denial during his testimony. Jt. Exh. 1, p. 3.

The Company document describing the special accident insurance plan states that it constitutes "supplemental coverage" in cases of death, dismemberment, or total disability. The eligibility requirements do not exclude employees who are already covered by the existing hospital and surgical plan.[12] Although the collective-bargaining agreement also provides for dental, group insurance, and pension plans, there is no special accident insurance plan other than treatment for injury caused by accidents in the basic hospital and surgical plan.[13] Blanton testified that the service award program did not replace any benefit in the existing contract, and examination of that document shows that it does not contain a service award program or a scholarship plan.[14]

E. Legal Analysis and Conclusions

As set forth above, although the complaint alleges only the Company's unilateral implementation of a new health benefit program, counsel for the General Counsel stated at the hearing and the Respondent's counsel agreed that the issue is whether the Respondent engaged in a midterm modification of the collective-bargaining agreement violative of the proviso to Sec. 8(d).[15]

The Board has recently explained the different principles involved in allegations of this nature:

> Sections 8(a)(5) and 8(d) establish an employer's obligation to bargain in good faith with respect to "wages, hours, and other terms and conditions of employment." Generally, an employer may not unilaterally institute changes regarding these mandatory subjects before reaching a good-faith impasse in bargaining. Section 8(d) imposes an additional requirement when a collective-bargaining agreement is in effect and an employer seeks to "modif[y] . . . the terms and conditions contained in" the contract: the employer must obtain the union's consent before implementing the change. If the employment conditions the employer seeks to change are not "contained in" the contract, however, the employer's obligation remains the general one of bargaining in good faith to impasse over the subject before instituting the proposed change. [Illinois Coil Spring Co., 268 NLRB 601, 602 (1984), enfd. sub nom. Auto Workers Local 547 v. NLRB, 765 F.2d 175 (D.C. Cir. 1985).]

The Respondent argues there was no midterm modification of the contract. "No change occurred in the negotiated medical insurance plan contained in the collective-bargaining agreement." Accordingly, no provision "contained in" the contract was modified.[16] After receiving notice of the Company's intention to offer a new health benefit plan, "[t]he Union consciously chose to sit back not protest and file charges with the NLRB after enrollment in the HMO's had commenced."[17] Local 3–288 thus waived its rights to bargain on the issue of the HMO's. The Company cites authorities in support of its position, and the General Counsel cites similar authorities, but seeks to distinguish them on the ground that Local 3–288 was given inadequate notice of the time and subject matter of the December meeting.[18]

The basic premises on which the Company's waiver argument depends is its position that there was no midterm change in the contract. The record shows that there was no change in "the negotiated medical insurance plan"—the employees were free to continue with the plan if they chose to do so. However, it does not follow from this fact that there was no change in the collective-bargaining agreement. The Respondent's substitution of an HMO plan for the existing indemnity benefit plan constituted a unilateral change in the contract.

Further, as set forth above, the contract provides that there shall be no "additions, waivers, deletions, changes or amendments (to the contract) . . . except by mutual consent in writing." The Company's unilateral implementation of the HMO program, without Local 3–288's written or other consent, modified this provision of the contract.

The other programs made available to employees without Local 3–288's consent did not necessarily constitute midterm modifications, because their subject matters were not covered by the contract, and the employees could receive the new benefits without sacrificing any contractual right. Nor did Local 3–288's silence when they were implemented constitute acquiescence in any future modifications of the contract. In this case, an employee could sign up for an HMO plan only as an alternative to the contractual indemnity benefit program, which would then be denied to him. It is clear that the HMO plan was thus an "addition" to, a "change" in, or an "amendment" to the existing contract.[19] Its implementation without Local 3-288's written consent constituted an abrogation of the contractual provision requiring such consent, and thus further modified the collective-bargaining agreement.

[19] The Respondent's action would have been unlawful even if the employees had not been compelled to sacrifice the existing benefit plan. By making a new plan available, the Respondent was adding an additional and possibly advantageous feature to a benefit already covered by the contract. It is unlawful for an employer unilaterally to pay employees

None of the many waiver cases cited by the Respondent[20] or distinguished by the General Counsel[21] involved the midterm modification of a collective-bargaining agreement. The issue is not whether Local 3-288 waived a bargaining right, but, rather, whether it abandoned a contractual right for which it had already bargained and had obtained in a written agreement. In such cases, the requirements of the proviso to Section 8(d) are explicit, as set forth above. The Respondent did not serve the required written notices, offer to meet with the other party, notify the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service, or continue in full force the existing agreement.[22] The following language of an administrative law judge has been accepted by the Board with judicial approval:

> It is undisputed that Respondent implemented changes in an existing collective-bargaining agreement without the Union's consent. Such conduct is violative of Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act because Section 8(d), which defines the duty to bargain, prohibits such changes . . . In this case, the Union did not agree to Respondent's proposed modifications. In these circumstances, the Board and the Courts have clearly and consistently found an employer's mid-term modification of a fixed term contract to be unlawful. See Oak Cliff-Golman Baking Co., 207 NLRB 1063, 1064 (1973), enfd. 505 F.2d 1302 (5th Cir. 1974), cert. denied 423 U.S. 826 (1975); C & S Industries, Inc., 158 NLRB 454, 457-458 (1966); We-Care Trading Co., Ltd., 265 NLRB No. 56, slip op. at 7 (1982). La Porte Transport Co., JD-152-84, quoted in Herman Brothers, Inc., 273 NLRB 124, 125 (1984), enfd. mem. 780 F.2d 1015 (3d Cir. 1985).[23]

In accordance with my findings above, I make the following

Conclusions of Law

1. Martin Marietta Energy System is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

2. Oil, Chemical and Atomic Workers International Union, Local 3-288 is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

3. At all relevant times the foregoing labor organization has been and continues to be the exclusive representative of Respondent's employees in the following unit found appropriate for the purposes of collective-bargaining within the meaning of Section 9(b) of the Act:

> All hourly employees, excluding guards and salaried employees (monthly or weekly) employed by the Respondent at its Oak Ridge Gaseous Diffusion Plant, Oak Ridge, Tennessee.

4. At all relevant times the Respondent and the foregoing labor organization have been parties to a collective-bargaining agreement concerning employees in the unit described above which, inter alia, provides for a Special Medical Expense Plan and a Hospitalization and Surgical Plan, and, further, provides that no additions, waivers, deletions, changes or amendments in said agreement will be made except by mutual consent, in writing, of the parties to the contract.

5. By offering to the employees in the unit described above and by implementing without the written consent of said labor organization, a new Health Maintenance Organization plan as an alternative to the foregoing contractual rights, which would be sacrificed upon employees acceptance of the new plan, the Respondent thereby unilaterally added to, deleted from, changed, or amended said collective-bargaining agreement, and modified by abrogation that section of the contract requiring that any such modification be by mutual consent and in writing.

6. The Respondent's action described above constitutes a refusal to bargain within the meaning of Section 8(d) of the Act, and thus constitutes a violation of Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act.

7. The aforesaid unfair labor practices affect commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

The Remedy

Having found that the Respondent has engaged in certain unfair labor practices, I shall recommend that it cease and desist therefrom and take certain affirmative action designed to effectuate the purposes of the Act, including the posting of the attached notice. I shall recommend that the Respondent be ordered to rescind its unlawful modification of the collective-bargaining agreement by withdrawing its offer of Health Maintenance Organization benefits as an alternative to the existing medical benefits under the contract.

It is the Board's established policy not to require rescission of an unlawful wage increase previously granted, because of the injury thereby sustained by employees.

European Parts Exchange, supra, 270 NLRB at 1245. Inasmuch as some of the Respondent's employees may have accepted the new medical plan being administered by third-party health maintenance organizations, and abrupt termination of said plans might similarly be injurious to said employees, I shall recommend that nothing in the Order be construed to require the Respondent to terminate any such existing individual plan. However, the evidence shows that such plans have coverage for a specific period of time, with employee option thereafter to change to another plan. The rescission order recommended shall apply to any subsequent renewal of the new plan, absent the Respondent's compliance with its contractual obligation to obtain the written consent of the aforesaid labor organization.

On these findings of fact and conclusions of law and on the entire record, I issue the following recommended[24]

ORDER

The Respondents, Martin Marietta Energy Systems, Oak Ridge, Tennessee, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall

1. Cease and desist from

(a) Offering or implementing new health benefit programs which offer benefits otherwise covered by its existing collective-bargaining agreement with Oil, Chemical and Atomic Workers International Union, Local 3–288, without the written consent of said labor organization.

(b) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing its employees in the rights guaranteed them by Section 7 of the Act.

2. Take the following affirmative action necessary to effectuate the policies of the Act.

(a) Rescind its offer of a Health Maintenance Organization plan made available to employees in the unit described above, absent the written consent thereto by the above-name labor organization, provided that nothing shall be construed so as to require the Respondent to rescind an already existing individual plan prior the end of the period when it expires according to its terms.

(b) Post at its Oak Ridge, Tennessee, Gaseous Diffusion plant, copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix."[25] Copies of the notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 10, after being signed by the Respondent's authorized representative, shall be posted by the Respondent immediately upon receipt and maintained for 60 consecutive days in conspicuous places including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by the Respondent to ensure that the notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(c) Notify the Regional Director in writing within 20 days from the date of this Order what steps the Respondent has taken to comply.

APPENDIX

NOTICE TO EMPLOYEES

POSTED BY ORDER OF THE NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD
An Agency of the United States Government

The National Labor Relations Board has found that we violated the National Labor Relations Act and has ordered us to post and abide by this notice.

WE WILL NOT offer or implement any new health benefit plan which offers benefits otherwise covered by our existing collective-bargaining agreement with Oil, Chemical and Atomic Workers International Union, Local 3-288, without the written consent of said labor organization.

WE WILL NOT in any like or related manner interfere with, restrain, or coerce our employees in the rights guaranteed them by Section 7 of the Act.

WE WILL rescind our prior offer and implementation of a new health benefit plan and will not renew it without the written consent of the aforesaid Union, except that we will not interfere with any existing individual plans for the period of their existing coverage as specified in the said plans.

Case 22-CA-13631

4 March 1987

DECISION AND ORDER

BY CHAIRMAN DOTSON AND MEMBERS JOHANSEN, BABSON, STEPHENS, AND CRACRAFT

On 11 June 1985 Administrative Law Judge James F. Morton issued the attached decision. The Respondent filed exceptions and a supporting brief, and the General Counsel filed an answering brief.

The National Labor Relations Board has considered the decision and the record in light of the exceptions and briefs and has decided to affirm the judge's rulings, findings,[1] and conclusions, but not to adopt the recommended Order.[2]

ORDER

The National Labor Relations Board orders that the Respondent, Lenape Products, Inc., Trenton, New Jersey, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall

1. Cease and desist from

(a) Discharging its employees for engaging in a lawful work stoppage.

(b) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them by Section 7 of the Act.

2. Take the following affirmative action necessary to effectuate the policies of the Act.

(a) Offer its Division 3 day-shift employees who were discharged for having engaged in a work stoppage on 27 December 1984, including Charles Bernhardt Sr., Charles Bernhardt Jr., Lottie Dillon, Isabel Elisio, Maria Bruno, Mayra Torres, Sarran Doogah, and Beverly Martinez, immediate and full reinstatement to their former jobs or, if those jobs no longer exist, to substantially equivalent positions, without prejudice to their seniority or any other rights or privileges previously enjoyed, and make them whole for any loss of earnings and other benefits suffered as a result of the Respondent's unlawful discharge of them, in the manner set forth in the remedy section of the judge's decision.

(b) Remove from its files any reference to the unlawful discharges and notify the employees in writing that this has been done and that the discharges will not be used against them in any way.

(c) Preserve and, on request, make available to the Board or its agents for examination and copying, all payroll records, social security payment records, timecards, personnel records and reports, and all other records necessary to analyze the amount of backpay due under the terms of this Order.

(d) Post at its facility in Trenton, New Jersey, copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix."[3] Copies of the notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 22, after being signed by the Respondent's authorized representative, shall be posted by the Respondent immediately upon receipt and maintained for 60 consecutive days in conspicuous places including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by the Respondent to ensure that the notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

[1] In sec. II,A, par. 3 of his decision, the judge incorrectly spelled Hermann Glinecke's first name as "Herman." In that same paragraph, as well as in his recommended Order, the judge erroneously stated that the Respondent's Division 3 plant is located in Pennington, New Jersey. While the Respondent's main office and two other plants are located in Pennington, its Division 3 plant is located in Trenton, New Jersey.

In sec. II,A, par. 11, the judge incorrectly spelled Isabel Elisio's first name as "Isabella" and as "Isabelle" in his recommended Order and notice.

In sec. II,B, par. 2, the judge incorrectly cited Dirt Digger, which is now published at 274 NLRB 1024 (1985).

We correct these inadvertent errors.

Chairman Dotson would overrule Abilities & Goodwill, 241 NLRB 27 (1979). In his view an unlawfully discharged striker must unconditionally request reinstatement in order to trigger an employer's backpay obligation. He would therefore follow the Board rule as it existed prior to Abilities & Goodwill and as set forth in Bartlett-Collins Co., 230 NLRB 144 (1977).

[2] We shall issue a new Order and notice reflecting the proper spelling of Isabel Elisio's first name and properly identifying the location of the Respondent's Division 3 plant.

DECISION

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

JAMES F. MORTON, Administrative Law Judge. The complaint alleges that Lenape Products, Inc. (Respondent) violated Section 8(a)(1) of the National Labor Relations Act, by having discharged certain employees for having engaged in a strike. Respondent, in its answer, avers that the employees involved in this case had quit and Respondent denies it violated the Act.

The hearing was held before me in Newark, New Jersey, on April 17 and 18, 1985.

Based on the entire record in this case, including my observation of the demeanor of the witnesses, and after full consideration of the briefs filed with me by the General Counsel and Respondent, I make the following

FINDINGS OF FACT

I. JURISDICTION

The pleadings establish that Respondent is engaged in the business of manufacturing and in the nonretail sale of ceramic products and that its operations annually meet the Board's nonretail standard for the assertion of jurisdiction.

II. THE ALLEGED UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES

A. The Facts

There is very little dispute about the events in this case.

The employees involved in this case have not been represented by a labor organization for purposes of collective bargaining.

In late August 1984 (all dates hereafter are for 1984 unless specified otherwise), Respondent hired Herman Glinecke as its production control manager to put its Division 3 plant in Pennington, New Jersey, on a profitable basis and also to ensure that a $240,000 order for the production of 40,000 ashtrays would be processed through its Division 3 phase by January 1, 1985, and to completion by January 31, 1985, to avoid paying a contractual penalty.

Shortly after he took over, Glinecke made a number of changes to which many of the Division 3 employees objected. Thus, he stationed himself behind employees for long periods as they worked and timed their operations with a stopwatch. He disallowed an employee a "grace period" whereby employees could punch in up to 4 minutes late without penalty, by instead docking her for being a minute late. He asked another employee to work overtime on Sunday to assist in clearing out an area, but assigned him instead to production work. When that employee protested, he was sent home and informed that he would no longer be assigned to overtime work. Some of the employees at Division 3 perceived that Glinecke was responsible also for excessive fumes resulting from the method he used to ignite gas in the kilns. They also thought he was not doing as much as his predecessor to keep a rat infestation problem under control. They expressed their concern about techniques, introduced by Glinecke in handling ceramic objects, which they perceived as having caused skin rashes and related illnesses. One of the perceived concerns of the Division 3 employees pertained to Glinecke's moving them from their normal assignments to other duties, e.g., assigning a presser to the work of making clay. In mid-December, Glinecke brought in to the Division 3 plant an operation that was normally done at another of Respondent's facilities, located 9 miles distant. That operation involved the redoing of defective work at the other facility. The increased workload at Division 3 resulting from the transfer stimulated further changes in work assignments.

Charles Bernhardt Sr., the charging party in this case, was one of the Division 3 employees. He testified that he and the other Division 3 employees complained among themselves about the foregoing matters. He testified further that he spoke to Glinecke about them and that Glinecke responded that he did not care what the employees thought. Bernhardt testified that the Division 3 employees decided that they would get nowhere with Glinecke and that he asked Glinecke to tell "Pete" Hexter (Respondent's principal stockholder and its de facto chief executive officer[1]) that the employees wanted "to meet with him to discuss (their) working conditions and the problems at Division 3." According to Bernhardt, Glinecke replied that he would tell Hexter of this request. Glinecke and Hexter testified for Respondent. Glinecke did not controvert Bernhardt's testimony respecting the desire of the Division 3 employees to meet with Hexter. Instead, Glinecke's account suggests that he handled all the problems at Division 3 in a manner satisfactory to Bernhardt and the other employees there. I credit Bernhardt's testimony that the employees had, through Glinecke, sought a meeting with Hexter.

Hexter testified that he has always been on a first name basis with Respondent's employees and has always been available to discuss their problems. He testified also that he regularly visited the Division 3 facility. To the extent that Hexter's account suggests that the Division 3 employees had no concerns, I reject it as Glinecke himself acknowledged that he had received complaints from employees about the changes he made in their work assignments.

Bernhardt testified also that he and the other Division 3 employees on the day shift then talked about starting a union. Bernhardt called Nathan Rutkin, Respondent's traffic manager at the Division 1 plant, 9 miles away. Rutkin is also president of Local 185A, Glass, Pottery, Plastics & Allied Workers International Union, AFL–CIO, CLC. Rutkin gave Bernhardt the union's telephone number. Bernhardt later obtained authorization cards for that union and, on December 19, he and other Division 3 employees filled out those cards. That testimony and the signed authorization cards were offered solely to establish that the Division 3 employees were serious in their concerns about their complaints regarding their working conditions under Glinecke. Thus, they met with a union representative and told him they may walk out because of their complaints. The union cards were not offered for the purpose of proving that their termination of employment, a week or so later, was due to their union activities, inasmuch as there is no complaint allegation that Respondent has violated Section 8(a)(3) of the Act.

Defective work from another plant, Division 4, was brought to Division 3 to be reworked. By December 27, the Division 3 employees "couldn't take no more [and] decided to walk out . . . but . . . would try to get a hold of Mr. Hexter" first. Bernhardt telephoned Hexter on December 27. There is a variation between their respective accounts of that telephone discussion. Bernhardt's testimony is that he asked Hexter if it was possible for the employees to meet with him. He testified further that Hexter put him off by saying he had meetings elsewhere to attend and by suggesting that the employees wait until after the holidays. Bernhardt testified also that he then accused Hexter of giving him "the runaround" and that he also told Hexter that the employees would walk out by noon if Hexter did not come to the Division 3 plant by then. Bernhardt concluded his account of the conversation by his testimony that Hexter told him, "God dammit, Charlie, if you want to walkout, walkout. I'll just get other people to replace you." Hexter's version of the call is that Bernhardt told him that the employees wanted him to come right down and that when he told Bernhardt that he would be there at 1 p.m. because he had another meeting scheduled, Bernhardt told him that the employees would walk out if he was not at the Division 3 plant by 11 a.m. Hexter testified that he told Bernhardt to either wait until 1:00 p.m. or the meeting with the employees would have to wait until after the holidays. I see no material difference in the respective accounts. If a credibility resolution were necessary, I would credit Bernhardt's account particularly as Hexter's subsequent actions, as he related them and as set out below, disclose that he was not going to wait until after the holidays to talk with the employees if they walked out.

Bernhardt had the telephone conversation with Hexter about 10:15 a.m. He informed his coworkers of it and placed a call to Glinecke, who was at another facility. Bernhardt told Glinecke that the employees were walking out. Glinecke drove to the Division 3 plant and arrived in time to see the employees there punching out. It was then about 11 a.m.

On the afternoon of the same day of the walkout, December 27, Hexter met with Respondent's president and they instructed Respondent's payroll administrator to write each of the employees who walked out. Her letter to each was dated December 27 and stated, "[o]n December 27, 1984, you abandoned your position . . . [and] therefore your position is no longer available." On December 28, the employees came in to pick up their paychecks. Glinecke testified that Bernhardt told him then that what the employees did "was a dumb thing to do" and asked if Hexter was ready to talk. Glinecke told them that Hexter instructed him not to hire back any of the employees who walked out.

The parties stipulated that the names of the employees who walked out on December 27 and who received a December 27 letter from the payroll administrator are:

Charles Bernhardt, Sr.
Sarran Doogah
Lottie Dillon
Mayra Torres
Maria Bruno
Isabella Elisio

Beverly Martinez testified for the General Counsel that she was also one of the Division 3 employees who walked out on December 27 and who heard Glinecke state, on December 28, that Hexter would not hire back those who had walked out. It is not clear whether she was sent a letter from the payroll administrator as the others were sent.

There may have been other day-shift employees who joined in the December 27 walkout.[2]

On January 9, 1985, nine employees signed a letter sent to Hexter seeking to talk to him about plant conditions and also stating that they wanted their "jobs back." That letter was offered by the General Counsel to demonstrate that the employees who walked out on December 27 did not thereby quit.[3] There is no allegation that on January 9, 1985, they were unlawfully refused reinstatement.

[2] At one point in the hearing, the General Counsel asserted that a day-shift employee, Michele Tirado, had also been unlawfully discharged on December 27 because she joined in the walkout that day. The testimony offered by Respondent, however, established that Tirado had been laid off for lack of work on December 21 and thus was not even at work on December 27. On the record before me, I find that she did not participate in the December 27 walkout. I cannot say, based on the record herein, however, that only the ones named above did.

B. Analysis

Respondent contends first that the General Counsel failed to offer credible evidence that the employees were engaged in a concerted act as, in Respondent's view, the evidence established that the Charging Party effectively manipulated the employees because he had been passed over for promotion. That contention is without merit and is based solely on Respondent's speculation.

Respondent next asserts that the December 27 walkout was unprotected as, in its view, Respondent was not given timely notice of the employees' intention to engage in a work stoppage. The facts do not support that contention either. The credited evidence establishes that Respondent wanted to delay a walkout until after the holidays, at least. It should not be the Board's function to weigh tactical advantages either side may seek. Respondent, in its brief, extracts a quotation from the dissenting opinion in Tri-State Truck Service v. NLRB, 616 F.2d 65 (3d Cir. 1980), to suggest that the General Counsel here is engaged in an overly enthusiastic prosecution of a marginal case. Tri-State factually has little resemblance to the instant case in which employees had numerous complaints for which they sought relief. In recent and analogous cases, the discharge of employees who walked out in similar circumstances as in the instant case was held unlawful. See Dirt Digger Inc., 274 NLRB 1024 (1985). See also Seminole Mfg. Co., 272 NLRB 365 (1984). Thus, I find that the employees involved herein did not quit their employ but, instead, had been discharged on December 27 because they engaged in concerted activities protected by Section 7 of the Act.

[3] One of the nine who signed was Charles J. Bernhardt Jr., the son of the Charging Party. Other testimony before me establishes that he was among the employees present on December 28 when Glinecke informed them that Hexter would not take them back. It appears, however, that he may not have been sent a December 27 letter from the payroll administrator referred to above. I find that the General Counsel has made out a prima facie case that Bernhardt Jr. was among the employees who walked out on December 27 and who were informed the following day that they thereby would not be taken back. The Januray 9, 1985 letter also was signed by Michele Tirado, whose status is discussed, supra.

Conclusions of Law

1. Respondent is an employer engaged in commerce as defined in Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

2. Respondent has committed an unfair labor practice violative of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act, by having discharged Division 3 day-shift employees who engaged in a work stoppage on December 27, 1984, including Charles Bernhardt Sr., Charles Bernhardt Jr., Sarran Doogah, Lottie Dillon, Mayra Torres, Maria Bruno, Isabelle Elisio, and Beverly Martinez.

3. The unfair labor practice found above affects commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

Remedy

It having been found that the Respondent has engaged in certain unfair labor practices, it is recommended that it cease and desist therefrom and take certain affirmative actions designed to effectuate the policies of the Act. It having been found that Respondent unlawfully discharged employees, including Charles Bernhardt Sr., Charles Bernhardt Jr., Lottie Dillon, Isabelle Elisio, Maria Bruno, Mayra Torres, Sarran Doogah, and Beverly Martinez and that it has since failed and refused to reinstate them to their former positions or equivalent positions in violation of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act, it is recommended that the Respondent be ordered to remedy such unlawful conduct.

In accordance with Board policy, it is recommended that the Respondent be ordered to offer these employees immediate and full reinstatement to their former positions or, if such positions no longer exist, to substantially equivalent positions, without prejudice to their seniority or other rights and privileges enjoyed, dismissing, if necessary, any employees hired on or since the date of their discharges to fill the positions and to make them whole for any loss of earnings they may have suffered by reason of the Respondent's unlawful conduct, by payment to them of sums of money equal to the amounts they would have earned from the date of their unlawful discharges to the date of an offer of reinstatement, less net earnings during such period, with interest thereon, to be computed on a quarterly basis in the manner established by the Board in F. W. Woolworth Co., 90 NLRB 289 (1950), and Florida Steel Corp., 231 NLRB 651 (1977). See also Isis Plumbing Co., 138 NLRB 716 (1962).

DECISION AND ORDER

BY CHAIRMAN DOTSON AND MEMBERS JOHANSEN AND STEPHENS

On 31 January 1985 Administrative Law Judge Claude R. Wolfe issued the attached decision. The Respondents filed exceptions and a joint supporting brief and the Charging Party filed cross-exceptions. The General Counsel filed a brief in support of the judge's decision.

The National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the decision and the record in light of the exceptions and briefs and has decided to affirm the judge's rulings, findings, and conclusions, as modified,[1] and to adopt the recommended Order.[2]

ORDER

The National Labor Relations Board adopts the recommended Order of the administrative law judge and orders that the Respondents, Local 449, United Automobile, Aerospace & Agricultural Implement Workers of America (UAW) and International Union, United Automobile, Aerospace & Agricultural Implement Workers of America (UAW), their officers, agents, and representatives, shall take the action set forth in the Order.

Barbara S. Van Auken, Esq., for the General Counsel.
Robert C. Long, Esq., for the Charging Party.
Michael B. Nicholson, Esq. and Ann C. Hodges, Esq., for the Respondent Unions.

DECISION

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

CLAUDE R. WOLFE, Adminstrative Law Judge. This[1] consolidated proceeding was litigated before me at Rockford, Illinois, on October 18, 19, 22, and 23, 1984, pursuant to charges filed and served on November 14, 1983, and a consolidated complaint issued on January 30, 1984, and amended both before and at the hearing, which alleges that both Respondent Unions (Local 449 and the International) have maintained an unlawful restriction on members' rights to resign their union membership; have unlawfully refused to honor or accept such resignations tendered to them; and have unlawfully threatened resigned employees with internal union charges for crossing a picket line. Local 449 and the International deny the commission of unfair labor practices, and advance the affirmative defenses that the complaint is barred by Section 10(b) of the Act, the doctrine of laches, and the doctrine of res Judicata and/or collateral estoppel.

On the entire record,[2] and after considering the testimonial demeanor of the witnesses and the posttrial briefs, I make the following

FINDINGS AND CONCLUSIONS

I. JURISDICTION AND LABOR ORGANIZATIONS

The pleadings established that the employer involved meets the Board's jurisdictional standards and is an employer engaged in commerce with the meeting of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act. Local 449 and the International are each a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

[1] As noted by the judge, the Respondent Local's executive board, by letter sent 2 November 1983, notified the employees that it had "approved" the internal union charges filed concerning their resignations and that such charges would be "administered" under the International constitution. The judge concluded that the letter did not violate Sec. 8(b)(1)(A) of the Act. Although we do not find a separate violation of Sec. 8(b)(1)(A) based on the letter, we note, as the judge found that the letter was the first notification to the employees that their resignations had not been accepted and we conclude that the letter was part and parcel of the Respondent's unlawful refusal to accept the employees' resignations from union membership.

We also disagree with the judge's finding that the evidence does not establish that the Respondent Local's executive board is an agent of the Respondent International Union. The executive board represents the Respondent Local between membership meetings when urgent business so requires and, as found by the judge, for the purpose of receiving resignations the executive board is clearly an agent of the Local. Because, as the judge also found, the Local is an agent of the International it follows that the executive board is also an agent of the Respondent International Union.

In affirming the judge, we find it insignificant that the constitutional provision restricting resignations cannot be enforced by the imposition of fines. In Sheet Metal Workers Local 73 (Safe Air), 274 NLRB 374 (1985), we reaffirmed our holding in Machinists Local 1414 (Neufeld Porsche-Audi), 270 NLRB 1330 (1984), approved by the Supreme Court in Pattern Makers v. NLRB, 473 U.S. 95 (1985), that any restriction on resignation from union membership is invalid, irrespective of the period of restriction, and that the mere maintenance of a constitutional provision restricting resignation restrains and coerces employees from exercising their Sec. 7 rights. Because the Respondents in this case have maintained a provision restricting the submission of resignations to a 10-day period, we agree that they have violated Sec. 8(b)(1)(A) and that the entire provision as it pertains to the restrictions is invalid.

[2] The judge also ordered the Respondents to expunge from the constitution of the International Union and any other of the governing documents of Local 449 and/or the International in which it may appear art. 6, sec. 17, of the constitution of the International Union. We agree. See Auto Workers Local 73 (McDonnell Douglas), 282 NLRB No. 64 (Dec. 18, 1986), in which we ordered expunction of the same provision and in doing so elaborated on the reasoning of Neufeld, supra.

II. THE ALLEGED UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES

A. Relevant Facts and Law

Local 449 and the International were each a signatory party to a collective-bargaining agreement covering the production and maintenance employees of Keystone Consolidated Industries, Inc., of which the Charging Party is a division, who are employed at Rockford, Illinois plants, including that of the Charging Party. The agreement expired on April 13, 1983, by its terms, but was extended through April 16, 1983, by agreement of all parties to the contract. No new agreement was reached and a strike was voted for by members of Local 449 and authorized by the International. A picket line was established and the strike and picketing of the Rockford plants previously referred to commenced about April 19, 1983, and was continuing at the time of the hearing.

During the strike employees submitted resignations from union membership. The constitution of the International Union adopted in May 1983 and the previous one adopted in June 1980 contain an identically worded section, denominated article 6, section 17, in both, reading as follows:

> A member may resign or terminate membership only if s/he is in good standing, is not in arrears or delinquent in the payment of any dues or other financial obligations to the International Union or to her/his Local Union and there are no charges filed and pending against her/him. Such resignation or termination shall be effective only if by written communication, signed by the member and sent by registered or certified mail, return receipt requested, to the Financial Secretary of the Local Union within the ten (10) day period prior to the end of the fiscal year of the Local Union as fixed by this Constitution, whereupon it shall become effective sixty (60) days after the end of such fiscal year; provided, that if the employer of such member has been authorized either by such member individually or by the Collective Bargaining Agreement between the employer and the Union to check off the membership dues of such member, then such resignation shall become effective upon the effective termination of such authorization, or on the expiration of such (60) day period, whichever is later.

The bylaws of Local 449 expressly provide: "The Constitution of this organization shall be the Constitution of the International Union, UAW, and these By-Laws shall be in all respects subordinate to said Constitution and all applications and interpretations thereof." The testimony before me established that Local 449, as this quotation provides, does indeed conduct its affairs in accord with the provisions of the International constitution, and looks to that document for guidance in so doing.

The maintenance of article 6, section 17, by the International and Local 449 is a violation of Section 8(b)(1)(A) because it places unlawful restrictions on union members' right to resign. The Board has recently held that union members have a right to resign from membership, and a union cannot lawfully restrict that right. The restrictions on resignation set forth in article 6, section 17, of the Unions' constitution are therefore invalid under Machinists Local 1414 (Neufeld Porsche-Audi), 270 NLRB 1330 (1984), and the mere maintenance of such restrictions violates Section 8(b)(1)(A) of the Act. Engineers & Scientists Guild (Lockheed-California), 268 NLRB 311 (1983); Typographical Union (Register Publishing), 270 NLRB 1386 (1984).

The complaint alleges that Local 449 and the International have refused to honor or accept resignations from the members named below because those resignations did not comply with article 6, section 17, of the International constitution.[3] Set forth after each employee's name in the first column of dates is, in most cases, the postmark date on his or her letter to Local 449 notifying Local 449 of the sender's desire to resign or, as some writers put it, withdraw from union membership. The date following Robert Bartell's name is the date of mailing to which he credibly testified. There was no proffer of any letter of resignation from Gary Hare or Jody Wills. Although Local 449 has letters of resignation in its possession from Gerald Cole and Don Smith, they are not dated. The postmark on Rudi Sobirai's envelope containing his letter of resignation is unreadable, thus the date on the letter appears after his name. With respect to Joe Avendano, Leonard Forsell, Patrick Horkheimer, Andrew Larson, Pat Smith, and Charles Woodard, no envelopes were produced for their letters of resignation, and I have therefore set down after their names the dates they wrote on the letters. The letter of Larry Hare was mailed to National Metalcrafters, but was in Local 449's possession at the time of the hearing. Perry Wilhite resigned by telegram. The second column contains the dates of rehire[4] for these employees.

[3] The fact that the resigning members submitted their resignations in writing, and many by certified mail, return receipt requested, persuades me they were aware of the constitution's requirements, but whether members had sufficient notice would make no difference in this case because the restrictions on resignation in art. 6, sec. 7, of the International constitution are invalid and unenforceable. Newspaper Guild Local 47 (Pulitzer Publishing), 272 NLRB (1984); Newspaper Guild Local 3 (New York News), 271 NLRB 1251, 1252 fn. 8 (1984).

Certain other members of Local 449, including its president, Stanley Mayer, and its vice president, Jerry Fields, filed charges against all those above named except John Marks on October 3, 1983, for engaging in conduct unbecoming a member, such conduct being resigning from Local 449 improperly under article 6 of the International constitution and crossing the picket line to perform work while a strike against the Employer was in progress. On November 2, 1983, the executive board of Local 449 "approved" the charges and directed that they be administered as set forth in article 31 of the International constitution. One must not place too much emphasis on the use by the executive board of the word "approved" because other record evidence makes it clear that it does not take a position on the merit of the charges, but only certifies that the charges may be brought under existing provisions of the International constitution. Pursuant to its "approval" of the charges, the executive board, on November 2, 1983, sent the following letter, on Local 449 letterhead in a Local 449 envelope, to all of the members listed above in column A except possibly Gerald Cole and Koren Haggard:

> The Executive Board of Local 449 on November 2, 1983, approved charges filed by the Members of Local 449 against you for engaging in conduct unbecoming a member of said Local Union.
> The charges are resigning from Local 449 UAW improperly under Article 6 of the UAW International Constitution and crossing the picket line to perform work while a strike against the employer, National Metalcrafters is in progress.
> These charges shall be administered as per Article 31 of the UAW International Constitution.
> The Executive Board
> Local 449

Nine addressees[5] did not claim or open their letters and they were returned to the sender. The fact the letter was directed to all the employees named above obviously established that their resignations had then been received by Local 449.

[5] Robert Bartell, Harold Cooper, Mary Ferdon, John Marks, Curtis Smith, Donald Smith, Pat Smith, Juanita Woods, and LaVerne Melvin.

The complaint alleges that both unions, by Local 449's executive board, on November 2, 1983, threatened the employees named above in column A with internal union charges for crossing the picket line. The threat is allegedly contained in the November 2 letter quoted above. Apart from the failure of the evidence to support the General Counsel's contention that the executive board is an agent of the International,[6] all the letter does is advise the charged member that a charge had already been filed. The executive board is required by article 31 of the International constitution to give such notification. I cannot believe the General Counsel is contending that a charged member should not be notified of the charge, and the notice of a charge already filed is hardly a threat of a charge. The letter contains nothing of a threatening nature and does not violate Section 8(b)(1)(A) of the Act.

None of the charged members have appealed the executive board's action set forth in its November 2 letter. Neither Union has taken any further action on the charges. No fines have been imposed and none can be imposed on the charged members because a constitutional convention was held from May 15 to 20, 1983, during which the International constitution was amended to eliminate all provisions for fining members, and to expressly set forth the only action that can be taken against a member found guilty as charged, which is suspension or removal from union office or suspension or expulsion from membership.

The Respondents' contention that their inability to levy fines against the resigning members is a defense is without merit. The controlling rule set forth in Neufeld Porsche-Audi, supra, is that a union may not place restrictions on a member's right to resign. Whether charges are filed or fines levied is only significant in that they may be coercive restrictions on the exercise of that right. The refusal to honor a resignation tendered, without more, violates the Act, and an issue in this case is whether there has been a refusal to honor the resignations. The resignations, as the executive board letter of November 12 acknowledges, reached Local 449. I am also persuaded that the filing of charges against resigning members on October 3 is evidence that resignations tendered prior to that time had been received. Many of the resignations were sent by certified mail, return receipt requested, in compliance with the directive in article 6, section 17, of the International constitution. The others were in writing,[7] but were either sent by regular mail or delivered by other unspecified means, including, in one case, by telegram. Local 449 received these resignations, and whether they were sent by registered or certified mail, requested a return receipt, or were hand delivered would seem to be of no discernible importance to the recipient inasmuch as the registry and/or certification and return receipt provisions redound to the benefit of the sender, not the receiver, by establishing receipt of the message sent. Moreover, the requirements of registry and/or certification and return receipt for written resignations are themselves restrictions on resignation that accomplish nothing but to make the process of resignation more difficult. Finally, the Board has long held "the failure of employees to follow union rules and regulations in terminating their union membership will not deprive them of the protection of the Act where they have clearly indicated they no longer wish to remain members of the Union." Auto Workers (Paulding, Inc.), 130 NLRB 1035, 1043 (1961); and see Distillery Workers Local 80 (Capitol-Husting), 235 NLRB 1264, 1265 (1978). For all of these reasons I conclude and find the written resignations of the employees were effective on receipt[8] and should have been honored[9] more than 6 months prior to the filing and service of the charges in this case, but this raises a question of statutory limitations because Section 10(b) of the National Labor Relations Act provides, in pertinent part, that "no complaint shall issue based upon any unfair labor practice occurring more than six months prior to the filing of the charge with the Board and the service of a copy thereof upon the person against whom such charge is made." The question is whether the resignations submitted before May 14, 1983, were rejected before or after that date. The first and only communication to the resigning members with respect to their resignations was the executive board's letter of November 2, 1983, well within the 6-month period. This letter was a clear notice to the resigning members that their resignations were not being honored by Local 449. The 6-month limitation period under Section 10(b) does not begin to run until the alleged unlawful activity with which a respondent is charged becomes actually or constructively known to the person adversely affected. Carpenters Wisconsin River Valley Council (Skippy Enterprises), 211 NLRB 222, 227 (1974). Accordingly, I find the 6-month limitation period on the refusal to honor the resignations began to run on November 4, 1983, the date the November 2 letters were received, because it was on that date and by that letter the employees were first put on notice that their resignations had not been accepted. The Board recently reaffirmed that a union violates Section 8(b)(1) by refusing to acknowledge the effectiveness of its members' resignations when its bylaws contain an invalid restriction on resignation. Typographical Union (Register Publishing), 270 NLRB 1386 (1984). Here, the restriction is in the International constitution, which contains the rules on resignation to which Local 449 adheres and on the basis of which its executive board concluded the charges against resigning members were properly brought. Neither the International nor Local 449 has ever acknowledged the effectiveness of the resignations. I find that the failure to acknowledge the resignations or [6] The executive board is plainly a creature constructed by Local 449, and is its agent. Local 449 bylaws specifically provide for the executive board to consist of Local 449's executive officers, and specifically set forth in detail its duties. It does not act in a vacuum, as the Respondents seem to suggest, but is an arm of Local 449 erected by that Local for specific purposes of the Local, and operates under authority delegated to it by Local 449.

[8] Newspaper Guild of Local 3 (New York News.), 271 NLRB at 1252.

[9] The letters addressed to Local 449 or its officers and mailed are presumed to have been received in the ordinary course of mail. Communications Workers Local 11500 (American Telephone), 272 NLRB 850 (1984). The presumption has not been rebutted.

notify the affected employees that the effectiveness of their resignations was still in question until November 4 was not a mere oversight but a deliberate refusal to honor the resignations. Local 449, by so refusing, violated Section 8(b)(1)(A) of the Act. Inasmuch as the International constitution and the testimony of Sam Casazza, the subregional director of the International, establishes that a resignation from membership submitted to Local 449 also constitutes a resignation from the International, Local 449 is found to be an agent of the International for the purpose of receiving such resignations. I therefore conclude and find that the International, by its agent Local 449, failed and refused to honor the resignations submitted by the employees named hereinabove and by so doing violated Section 8(b)(1)(A) of the Act.

The evidence that Casazza is an agent of Local 449 for all purposes and Meyer an agent of the International for all purposes is not particularly persuasive, but, for the purposes of this case, it is unnecessary to resolve that issue.

B. Affirmative Defenses Raised by the Respondents

The Respondents urge that the maintenance of the constitutional provision involved in this case for 38 years without challenge by the Board may not now be challenged due to the time limitation in Section 10(b) of the Act[10] and the doctrine of laches. It is true that the enactment of the provision long preceded the statutory limitation period and may not now be found to be an unfair labor practice. This does not, however, bar a finding that the maintenance within the period is unlawful. With respect to the laches argument it is clear, as the Charging Party points out, that a laches defense is inapplicable to the Board. Merrell M. Williams, 265 NLRB 506, 508 (1982). The defense of res judicata is not applicable because the issues in this case have not been litigated, and nothing substantial has been offered to support a bare claim of collateral estoppel.

The Respondents' contention that the failure of resigning members to contest the intraunion charges against them through the Union's internal appeal procedures requires dismissal of the unfair labor practice charges requires no discussion other than to say it is totally without merit. Carpenters Ventura County Council (Commercial Constructors), 259 NLRB 541, 546 (1981).

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. The Charging Party is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

2. Local 449 and the International are labor organizations within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

3. Local 449 and the International violated Section 8(b)(1)(A) of the Act by maintaining invalid restrictions on resignations from membership.

4. Local 449 and the International violated Section 8(b)(1)(A) of the Act by refusing to accept employees' effective resignations from membership.

5. The aforesaid violations of Section 8(b)(1)(A) of the Act are unfair labor practices affecting commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

6. The Respondents have not violated the Act in any other manner alleged in the complaint, as amended.

On these findings of fact and conclusions of law and on the entire record, I issue the following recommended[11]

ORDER

The Respondents, Local 449, United Automobile, Aerospace & Agricultural Implement Workers of America (UAW) and the International Union, United Automobile, Aerospace & Agricultural Implement Workers of America (UAW), their officers, agents, and representatives, shall

1. Cease and desist from

(a) Maintaining in their governing documents article 6, section 17, of the constitution of the International Union, United Automobile, Aerospace & Agricultural Implement Workers of America (UAW).

(b) Interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of rights guaranteed in Section 7 of the Act by refusing to acknowledge or accept their effective resignations from membership in Local 449 and the International.

(c) In any like or related manner restraining or coercing employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them by Section 7 of the Act.

2. Take the following affirmative action necessary to effectuate the policies of the Act

(a) Remove from the constitution of the International Union and any other of the governing documents of Local 449 and/or the International in which it may appear article 6, section 17, of the constitution of the International Union.[12]

(b) Acknowledge and approve the resignations from membership received from the employees found in this decision to have tendered such resignations, give each of the employees written notification of the acknowledgment and approval, and dismiss any intraunion charges pending against any of them for crossing a picket line to work after submitting a resignation from union membership,[13] with written notification to them of the dismissal.

[10] Sec. 10(b) provides, in pertinent part, that no complaint shall issue based on any unfair labor practice occurring more than 6 months prior to the filing of the charge with the Board and the service of the charge on the charged party.

[11] If no exceptions are filed as provided by Sec. 102.46 of the Board's Rules and Regulations, the findings, conclusions, and recommended Order shall, as provided in Sec. 102.48 of the Rules, be adopted by the Board and all objections to them shall be deemed waived for all purposes.

[12] The removal remedy in this case does not preclude UAW local unions located in Canada and serving Canadian nationals and industries, and over which the Board has no jurisdiction, from maintaining art. 6, sec. 17 in their local governing documents.

[13] The dismissal of the pending intraunion charges for working after resigning from membership is essential to assure affected members such charges will not be acted on. With respect to those members who returned to work before the Union received their resignations, the charges filed against them for so doing may not be found by me to have been either improperly filed or improperly considered by the executive board

(c) Post at their offices and meeting halls Rockford, Illinois, copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix."[14] Copies of the notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 33, after being signed by the Respondents' authorized representatives, shall be posted by the Respondents immediately upon receipt and maintained for 60 consecutive days in conspicuous places including all places where notices to members are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by the Respondents to ensure that the notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(d) Deliver to the Regional Director signed copies of the notice in sufficient number to be posted by the employer involved, if willing.

(e) Notify the Regional Director in writing within 20 days from the date of this Order what steps the Respondent has taken to comply.

(Newspaper Guild Local 3 (New York Times), 272 NLRB 338 (1984)), but this does not alter my finding that their resignations were effective on receipt and must be approved by the Respondents.

APPENDIX

NOTICE TO EMPLOYEES AND MEMBERS
POSTED BY ORDER OF THE
NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD
An Agency of the United States Government

WE WILL NOT restrain or coerce employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them in Section 7 of the National Labor Relations Act by maintaining in our governing documents article 6, section 17, of the constitution of the International Union, United Automobile, Aerospace & Agricultural Implement Workers of America (UAW), which reads as follows:

> Section 17. A member may resign or terminate membership only if s/he is in good standing, is not in arrears or delinquent in the payment of any dues or other financial obligations to the International Union or to her/his Local Union and there are no charges filed and pending against her/him. Such resignation or termination shall be effective only if by written communication, signed by the member and sent by registered or certified mail, return receipt requested, to the Financial Secretary of the Local Union within the ten (10) day period prior to the end of the fiscal year of the Local Union as fixed by this Constitution, whereup it shall become effective sixty (60) days after the end of such fiscal year; provided, that if the employer of such member has been authorized either by such member individually or by the Collective Bargaining Agreement between the employer and the Union to check off the membership dues of such member, then such resignation shall become effective upon the effective termination of such authorization, or on the expiration of such sixty (60) day period, whichever is later.

WE WILL NOT refuse to acknowledge or grant resignations from union membership tendered to us in writing.

WE WILL NOT in any like or related manner restrain or coerce you in the exercise of the rights guaranteed you by Section 7 of the Act.

WE WILL remove from our governing documents article 6, section 12, of the constitution of the International Union, United Automobile, Aerospace and Agricultural Implement Workers of America (UAW).

WE WILL acknowledge and grant membership resignation requests tendered to us in writing. The resignation requests previously tendered to us in 1983 by the employees named below are acknowledged and granted:

Joe Avendano	Andrew Larson
Robert Bartell	Juanita Lawrence
Roger Bougord	Larry Lewis
Teri Casas	Wesley Kleasner
Julie Chorak	John Marks

INTERNATIONAL UNION, UNITED AUTOMOBILE, AEROSPACE & AGRICULTURAL IMPLEMENT WORKERS OF AMERICA (UAW)

Schurpack, Inc. and Douglas Seiter. Case 17–CA–12854

11 March 1987

DECISION AND ORDER

BY CHAIRMAN DOTSON AND MEMBERS JOHANSEN AND BABSON

On 23 September 1986 Administrative Law Judge Irwin H. Socoloff issued the attached decision. The General Counsel filed exceptions and a supporting brief.

The National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the decision and the record in light of the exceptions and brief and has decided to affirm the judge's rulings, findings, and conclusions[1] and to adopt the recommended Order.[2]

ORDER

The National Labor Relations Board adopts the recommended Order of the administrative law judge and orders that the Respondent, Schurpack, Inc., St. Joseph, Missouri, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall take the action set forth in the Order.

[1] We adopt the judge's conclusion that the Respondent did not violate Sec. 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act by not considering employee Seiter for, and refusing to promote him to, a leadman position. In so doing, we find that the General Counsel has established a prima facie showing that Seiter's union activity was a motivating factor in the Respondent's decision. We, however, further find, based on the judge's crediting of the asserted business reason for the decision by the Respondent's owner, Harding, that the Respondent has demonstrated that it would have denied Seiter a promotion to a leadman position even absent his union activity. See Wright Line, 251 NLRB 1083 (1980).

[2] The General Counsel's exceptions urge modification of the recommended Order to include a provision for a visitatorial clause authorizing the Board, for compliance purposes, to obtain discovery from the Respondent pursuant to the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure under the supervision of the United States court of appeals enforcing the Order. Under the circumstances of this case, we find it unnecessary to include such a clause.

Constance Traylor, Esq., for the General Counsel.
William G. Haynes, Esq., Topeka, Kansas, for the Respondent.

DECISION

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

IRWIN H. SOCOLOFF, Administrative Law Judge. On a charge filed on 21 January 1986, by Douglas Seiter, an individual, against Schurpack, Inc. (the Respondent), the General Counsel of the National Labor Relations Board, by the Regional Director for Region 17 issued a complaint dated 4 March 1986, alleging violations by Respondent of Section 8(a)(3) and (1) and Section 2(6) and (7) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended (the Act). Respondent, by its answer, denied the commission of any unfair labor practices.

Pursuant to notice, trial was held before me in St. Joseph, Missouri, on 7 April 1986, at which the General Counsel and the Respondent were represented by counsel and were afforded full opportunity to be heard, to examine and cross-examine witnesses, and to introduce evidence. Thereafter, the parties filed briefs which have been duly considered.

On the entire record in this case, and from my observations of the witnesses, I make the following

FINDINGS OF FACT

I. JURISDICTION

Respondent, a Delaware corporation, is engaged, at its St. Joseph, Missouri, facility, in the manufacture of plastic film and sheeting. Annually, Respondent, in the course and conduct of its business operations within the State of Missouri, sells goods and services valued in excess of $50,000 directly to customers located outside the State of Missouri. I find that Respondent is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

II. LABOR ORGANIZATION

Teamsters Local 460, affiliated with International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen and Helpers of America (the Union), is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

III. THE UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES

A. Background

Respondent opened its facility in 1983, utilizing some 14 production employees. At present, there are 17 or 18 such individuals working at the plant, including 5 of the original workers.

On 2 September 1984, Soren Harding became Respondent's president. That month, he instituted lead positions, nonsupervisory in nature, and designated two production workers as leadmen. Thereafter, two additional positions were created and one of the original appointees left Respondent's employ. Accordingly, Respondent appointed leadmen on 12 December 1984, 4 February 1985, and 17 December 1985.

In the instant case, the General Counsel contends that Respondent violated Section 8(a)(3) of the Act by refusing to promote Charging Party Douglas Seiter to a lead position, in late December 1985, because of his activities on behalf of the Union. Respondent urges that Seiter was not considered for the position for lawful reasons, namely, his earlier use of illegal drugs while working at the plant. Also at issue is whether Respondent violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act by informing its leadman, Steve Housewirth, in mid-December 1985, that he must forego union activity in order to continue in his duties as a leadman and whether, Respondent, in early January 1986, violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act by telling Seiter that he must forego union activity in order to obtain promotion to the leadman position.

B. Facts

Douglas Seiter has been employed by Respondent, as an extruder operator, since the day the plant opened in the middle of 1983. Seiter testified that, in September 1984, shortly after Soren Harding became Respondent's president, Harding met with Seiter in the presence of the plant production manager, Douglas Carver. Harding told Seiter that several employees had reported that Seiter was smoking marijuana in the plant. Harding, according to Seiter's testimony, further stated that he, Harding, had initially decided to fire Seiter but, instead, would give him another chance because he was a valuable employee. Harding told Seiter that he could keep his job if he behaved himself, straightened up, and did a good job. Seiter denied that he had smoked marijuana while at work.

Several days later, Seiter testified, he met with Carver. Carver asked the employee to confess to having smoked marijuana at work and Seiter said that he had nothing to confess. Carver said that four or five employees had stated that they did not like to work with Seiter because he was always high. Carver further said that Seiter would not be considered for appointment to future lead positions unless he confessed to smoking marijuana in the plant. Shortly thereafter, Seiter confessed.

A few weeks later, in October, 1984, Seiter and another employee contacted the Serial Workers Union for purposes of organization. They obtained authorization cards from that union and Seiter solicited the signatures of his fellow employees, at the plant, in the break room and in the parking lot. In all, some five or six employees signed cards at Seiter's behest. Seiter testified that, early in October, Carver asked him "when is the vote." Seiter asked "what vote" and Carver replied, "the union vote." Carver, according to Seiter, asked "who started this" and Seiter stated that that did not matter as it was already started. The employee told Carver that the workers wanted to meet with Harding.

The next day, Carver placed a telephone call to Seiter and talked about setting up a meeting with Harding. Seiter stated that a meeting was needed as the employees were upset about the way they were getting pushed around and threatened. When Carver asked if a meeting would do any good, Seiter said that if the employees got what they wanted from the meeting, there probably would not be a union. Carver stated that he would see what he could do and warned Seiter that if the employees signed union cards, they were subject to layoff or discharge.

Later in October, the employees ceased their organizational efforts on behalf of the Serial Workers Union and, instead, sought representation by Teamsters Local 460. On 11 October, the Union filed a representation petition with the Board and an election was conducted on 6 November 1984. Following a hearing on the Employer's objections to conduct affecting the results of the election, the Union was certified on 27 June 1985. During the course of the representation proceedings, Seiter was twice subpoenaed to testify and he showed the subpoenas to Carver. The employee did, in fact, testify on behalf of the Union at the hearing on objections.

After the Union was certified, it met with Respondent's officials, for purposes of collective bargaining, during a period of 6 to 7 months and an agreement was concluded on 1 March 1986. During negotiations, the Union's business agent, McMillan, was assisted by Seiter and employee Steve Housewirth, a leadman. On the day the contract was signed, the employees elected Housewirth as their shop steward and Seiter as assistant steward.

On 17 December 1985, Respondent decided to appoint employee Carey Williams to a lead position. Thereafter, early in January 1986, Seiter met with Carver and asked why he, Seiter, had not been awarded the position. According to Seiter's testimony, Carver stated that, as he had told employee Housewirth, "you can't be a leadman and a union steward at the same time." Seiter pointed out that he had not, at that time, been designated a steward and he asked Carver if the matter had anything to do with his union activities. Carver, Seiter testified, stated that Seiter should "take it for what it's worth" and added that "besides, I can work better with Carey Williams than I can with you." Seiter further testified that, on a prior occasion, Carver had told him that he had no chance for a lead position because he had smoked marijuana in the plant.

Steve Housewirth, like Seiter, has been employed by Respondent since the 1983 opening of the plant. In December 1984, he was appointed to a leadman position and, as noted, he served on the Union's negotiating committee, beginning in September 1985. Housewirth testified that he met with Carver in the middle of December 1985, at which time Carver told him, "By the way, Steve, if and when the Union does get in, you're going to have to make a choice. You either will have to be a leadman or shop steward. You can't be both." Housewirth responded, stating that the stewards had not yet been selected. Carver said that Housewirth would have to think about it. Housewirth further testified that, on 1 March 1986, the day he was elected Steward, he met with Harding and Carver and asked if this would cause any problems. Both Harding and Carver stated that there would not be a problem.

Carver testified that, at the time Harding assumed the presidency, in September 1984, Respondent was experiencing low productivity and running an inordinate amount of scrap. Shortly after Harding arrived, he told Carver that he had caught employees "smoking something" in the plant and that Seiter was involved.

Carver denied Seiter's account of their early January 1986, conversation. According to Carver, when Seiter asked why Williams had been chosen as leadman, Carver pointed to Williams' educational background and his experience as a tool and dye maker. Seiter asked if the fact that he, Seiter, had not been selected had anything to do with his union activities and Carver said, no.

With respect to the December 1985 meeting of Carver and Housewirth, Carver testified that, at that time, Housewirth asked if working as a leadman and, at the same time, serving on the Union's negotiating committee, created a conflict of interest. Housewirth also stated that he feared that his union activities would prove detrimental to future advancement with the Company. Carver stated that he did not make decisions regarding promotions and he asked Housewirth why he felt there was a conflict. Carver further testified that, at the 1 March 1986 meeting, attended by Harding, Carver, and Housewirth, Housewirth spoke about his impending selection as steward and voiced the fear that there would be a conflict of interest in light of his leadman position. Harding said tht he saw no difficulty whatever and he assured Housewirth that the Company would work with him.

Harding, too, testified about the productivity and quality problems faced by Respondent at the time he assumed the presidency on 2 September 1984. He further testified that, in mid-September, he walked into the plant and believes he saw Seiter smoking marijuana. The next day, two employees reported to Harding that Seiter had, in fact, been smoking marijuana in the plant.[1] At that time, Harding decided to institute the lead positions "so that we didn't have the guys do things like that while they were supposed to work." Harding appointed the first two leadmen on 17 September, and he conducted an employee meeting at that time to announce the appointments. He also told the employees that Respondent would not stand for drug use in the plant and that, thereafter, individuals so involved would be discharged.

Finally, Harding testified that he had not given consideration to Seiter when he selected the leadmen. Thus, he testified, Seiter was the reason that the leadman positions were instituted in the first place, to prevent drug abuse in the plant following Seiter's activities in that regard.

C. Conclusions

Seiter and, particularly, Housewirth, impressed me as honest and forthright witnesses in possession of clear recollections of their December 1985 and January 1986 conversations, with Carver. Carver did not impress me as a witness attempting truthfully to relate the facts. His testimony concerning the conversations with Seiter and Housewirth was more vague than the testimony of those employees and Carver, generally, exhibited a selective memory of the details of events. In light of these factors, I credit the testimony of Seiter and Housewirth and, based thereon, find and conclude that Respondent, in December 1985 and January 1986, violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act by informing employees that they must forego union activity in order to attain or retain the position of leadman, a unit position.

I found Respondent's president, Soren Harding, to be an honest and believable witness. His testimony was in harmony with the general flow of events and it contained the ring of truth. Harding's testimony establishes that, in September 1984, Respondent formed the belief that Seiter had engaged in serious misconduct. Thereafter, and during the periods both preceeding and following Seiter's union activities, Respondent did not give consideration to Seiter for leadman positions because of its belief that Seiter had engaged in misconduct. Thus, Respondent has shown that, even if Seiter had not engaged in protected activities following the September 1984 drug incident, it would have denied to him designation as leadman. I find and conclude that Respondent did not violate the Act in that regard.

[1] Harding later learned of Seiter's confession to Carver.

IV. THE EFFECT OF THE UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES ON COMMERCE

The activities of Respondent set forth in section III, above, occurring in connection with its operations described in section I, above, have a close, intimate, and substantial relation to trade, traffic, and commerce among the several States and tend to lead to labor disputes burdening and obstructing commerce and the free flow of commerce.

V. THE REMEDY

Having found that Respondent has engaged in certain unfair labor practice conduct in violation of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act, I shall recommend that it be ordered to cease and desist therefrom and to take certain affirmative action designed to effectuate the policies of the Act.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. Respondent, Schurpack, Inc., is an employer engaged in commerce, and in operations affecting commerce, within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

2. Teamsters Local 460, affiliated with International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen and Helpers of America, is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

3. By informing employees that they must forego union activity in order to attain or retain the position of leadman, Respondent has engaged in unfair labor practice conduct within the meaning of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act.

4. The aforesaid unfair labor practices affect commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

On these findings of fact and conclusions of law and on the entire record, I issue the following recommended[2]

ORDER

The Respondent, Schurpack, Inc., St. Joseph, Missouri, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall

1. Cease and desist from

(a) Informing employees that they must forego union activity in order to attain or retain the position of leadman.

(b) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them in Section 7 of the Act.

2. Take the following affirmative action necessary to effectuate the policies of the Act.

[2] If no exceptions are filed as provided by Sec. 102.46 of the Board's Rules and Regulations, the findings, conclusions, and recommended Order shall, as provided in Sec. 102.48 of the Rules, be adopted by the Board and all objections to them shall be deemed waived for all purposes.

(a) Post at its St. Joseph, Missouri, facility, copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix."[3] Copies of the notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 17, after being signed by the Respondent's authorized representative, shall be posted by the Respondent immediately upon receipt and maintained for 60 consecutive days in conspicuous places including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by the Respondent to ensure that the notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(b) Notify the Regional Director in writing within 20 days from the date of this Order what steps the Respondent has taken to comply.

12 March 1987

DECISION, ORDER, AND DIRECTION OF SECOND ELECTION

BY CHAIRMAN DOTSON AND MEMBERS BABSON AND STEPHENS

On 9 July 1982 Administrative Law Judge J. Pargen Robertson issued the attached decision. The Respondent and the General Counsel filed exceptions and supporting briefs, and the Respondent filed an answering brief.

The National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the decision and the record in light of the exceptions and briefs and has decided to affirm the judge's rulings,[1] findings,[2] and conclusions[3] and to adopt the recommended Order.[4]

[1] We deny as lacking in merit the Respondent's motion to dismiss or to remand the petition in Case 15-RC-6750.

We assert jurisdiction over the Respondent because we find that it was not, as alleged by the Respondent, a political subdivision of the State of Louisiana. See NLRB v. Natural Gas Utility District of Hawkins County, 402 U.S. 600 (1971). We note that jurisdictional concerns raised in National Transportation Service, 240 NLRB 565 (1979), recently reiterated in Res-Care, Inc., 280 NLRB 670 (1986), are not present here given the record evidence and the nature of the Respondent's jurisdictional arguments.

[2] The judge erroneously stated that Charles Hamilton had occasionally written up employees for disciplinary action. We find the error to be nonprejudicial because Hamilton's duties were otherwise sufficient to establish his supervisory status.

The Respondent and the General Counsel have excepted to some of the judge's credibility findings. The Board's established policy is not to overrule an administrative law judge's credibility resolutions unless the clear preponderance of all the relevant evidence convinces us that they are incorrect. Standard Dry Wall Products, 91 NLRB 544 (1950), enfd. 188 F.2d 362 (3d Cir. 1951). We have carefully examined the record and find no basis for reversing the findings.

[3] In adopting the judge's findings of 8(a)(1) interrogations, we rely on the standard set forth in Sunnyvale Medical Clinic, 277 NLRB 1217 (1985), and Rossmore House, 269 NLRB 1176 (1984), enfd. 760 F.2d 1006 (9th Cir. 1985).

Chairman Dotson disagrees with his colleagues' adoption of the judge's 8(a)(1) interrogation findings with respect to employees Jacqueline Jones, Bertha Smith, and Yolanda Scott. In accord with the principles of Sunnyvale and Rossmore, he would find that none of the three supervisor-employee conversations at issue took place in coercive circumstances.

Inasmuch as we agree with the judge's conclusions that the Respondent engaged in objectionable conduct when the Respondent threatened employees with the loss of benefits and coerced employees against the Union during the critical period, we find it unnecessary to pass on whether the Respondent's director of material management's comments about replacing employees if they went on strike were objectionable.

In adopting the judge's conclusion that the Respondent violated Sec. 8(a)(1) by threatening employees with loss of jobs if they joined or assisted the Union, Member Babson relies only on the remarks by Supervisors Alexander and Betz to employee Wilson on 12 February and in mid-February 1981, respectively.

[4] In response to the General Counsel's exceptions, we shall modify the notice to include a provision remedying the Respondent's unlawful assignment of more difficult jobs to employee Susan Quiett because she engaged in union activities.

[5] We agree with the judge that the Respondent committed objectionable conduct during the critical period that warrants setting aside the first election and directing a new election. In reaching that conclusion, we note that this case is distinguishable from Clark Equipment Co., 278 NLRB 498 (1986), in which the Board found that certain isolated 8(a)(1) violations in a unit of more than 800 did not warrant setting aside the election. Here the violations included two violations of Sec. 8(a)(3)—the layoff of employee Warner Wilson because of his extensive union activities and the imposition of more onerous work assignments on employee Susan Quiett after she was seen handbilling in support of the Union. Such violations are, by their nature, not fleeting in their effects, and they are unlikely to escape the notice of fellow employees. This is thus not a case in which "it is virtually impossible to conclude that the misconduct could have affected the election results" (Clark Equipment Co., supra, 278 NLRB at 505), and therefore not a case in which we may properly depart from our usual policy, set out in Dal-Tex Optical Co., 137 NLRB 1782, 1786 (1962), of directing a new election when an unfair labor practice has been committed during the critical period.

ORDER

The National Labor Relations Board adopts the recommended Order of the administrative law judge and orders that the Respondent, Baton Rouge General Hospital, Baton Rouge, Louisiana, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall take the action set forth in the Order, except that the attached notice shall be substituted for the one recommended by the judge.

[Direction of Second Election omitted from publication.][5]

APPENDIX

NOTICE TO EMPLOYEES POSTED BY ORDER OF THE NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD An Agency of the United States Government

The National Labor Relations Board has found that we violated the National Labor Relations Act and has ordered us to post and abide by this notice.

WE WILL NOT interrogate you about your union sentiments.

WE WILL NOT threaten you with loss of jobs if you join or assist Service Employees' International Union Local 275, AFL-CIO or any other labor organization.

WE WILL NOT threaten you that you will not be allowed to discuss work scheduling problems if the Union is selected as your representative.

WE WILL NOT threaten you that, if the Union is selected as your bargaining representative, you will not be able to work overtime, adjust work schedules, or come to supervision with your problems or complaints.

WE WILL NOT assign you more difficult work assignments because or your union activities.

WE WILL NOT layoff or refuse to reinstate you because of your union activities.

WE WILL NOT in any like or related manner interfere with, restrain, or coerce you in the exercise of the rights guaranteed you by Section 7 of the Act.

WE WILL offer Warner Wilson immediate and full reinstatement to his former position or, if that position no longer exists, to a substantially equivalent position, without prejudice to his seniority or other rights and privileges.

WE WILL make Warner Wilson whole for any loss of earnings he may have suffered by reason of our discrimination against him, with interest.

WE WILL expunge from our records any reference to the layoff of Warner Wilson and WE WILL notify him in writing of our action in that regard.

DECISION

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

J. PARGEN ROBERTSON, Administrative Law Judge. This case was heard in Baton Rouge, Louisiana, on February 8 through 11 and March 1 through 3, 1982. The charge in Case 15-CA-8016 was filed on January 27, 1981. A complaint in that case issued on March 3, 1981. The charge in Case 15-CA-8050 was filed on February 18, 1981, and amended on February 26, 1981. The charge in Case 15-CA-8050-2 was filed on March 29, 1981. The complaint in those two cases issued on April 10, 1981. An order consolidating the three above unfair labor practice cases issued on April 10, 1981. On June 19, 1981, a Supplemental Decision and Order directing hearing on objections issued in Case 15-RC-6750. On June 22, 1981, an order issued consolidating the three above unfair labor practice cases and Case 15-RC-6750. On January 27, 1981, the Regional Office issued amendments to the above-mentioned complaints.

The Supplemental Decision and Order directed a hearing on the following "objection to conduct of election" filed by the Union following a May 7, 1981 secret-ballot election conducted by Region 15 of the National Labor Relations Board:

> (1) Management, it officers, agents and representatives threatened employees with the loss of benefits and possible loss of jobs if they voted for SEIU, Local 275.
> . . . .
> (3) Employees were threatened with loss of previously enjoyed benefits for engaging in protected, concerted and/or union activities.
> . . . .
> (9) Agents of management continue to coerce workers against the union from about February 9, 1981, through May 7, 1981, reference:
> Consolidated Complaint No. 15-CA-8050 and 15-CA-8050-2 issued by the Regional Director, Fifteenth Region dated April 10, 1981.

The complaint alleged numerous independent 8(a)(1) violations and 8(a)(3) allegations including denying an employee a merit wage increase, laying off eight employees, changing work assignments of one employee, and terminating another employee.

FINDINGS OF FACT[1]

During the hearing the parties stipulated that the following individuals were, at material times, supervisors and agents:

David Frank Robertson[2]—(Housekeeping)
Gayle Caillouet—(Nursing Services)
Tom Alexander—(Vice President)
Gerald Colston—(General Stores)
Tom Webb—(Vice President of Employee Relations)
Claude Kilpatrick—(President-until January 1982)
Joann Lappin—(Nursing Services)
George Munn—(Director of Material Management)
Tom Sawyer—(Vice President)
Shelia Jacobs—(Public Relations Director)
Tom Hagen—(Vice President)
James Walters—(Administrative Director of Radiology)
Joyce Burkeen—(Director of Nursing)
William Snider—(Director of Environmental Services)
Dorothy Jones—(Director of Housekeeping)
Gladys Couraville—(Housekeeping)

---

[1] Through its answer as amended and through stipulations, Respondent admitted the commerce allegations in the complaint. The complaint alleges, Respondent admits, and I find that, at all times material, Respondent, a Louisiana corporation with a hospital facility located in Baton Rouge, Louisiana, provided nursing and health care services and, during the past 12 months, a representative period, Respondent purchased and received goods and materials valued in excess of $50,000 from points located directly outside the State of Louisiana.

At the hearing, Respondent also admitted, and I find, that the Charging Party (the Union) is, and has been at all times material, a labor organization within the meaning of Sec. 2(5) of the Act.

Despite the above, Respondent contends the Board lacks jurisdiction on the ground that it is a political subdivision of the State. Respondent offered evidence showing it benefited from a $20 million bond issue from the East Baton Rouge Parish Hospital Service District No. 2 and that authority, which is composed of five commissioners, was created by the East Baton Rouge city-parish government pursuant to authority created by an Act of the legislature of the State of Louisiana. All the five commissioners were, at material times, members of Respondent's (the corporation) 45-member board of trustees. Moreover, 4 of the 5 commissioners are on the 21-member board of Respondent's hospital (Baton Rouge General Hospital). However, there was no showing that District 2, or any other political subdivision controls, to any extent, Respondent's employees' terms and conditions of employment. In fact, the record clearly revealed, and I find, that Respondent retains sufficient control over its employees' terms and conditions of employment so as to be capable of effectively bargaining with a representative of the employees (National Transportation Service, 240 NLRB 565 (1979)). I find that Respondent is not a political subdivision but is an employer within the meaning of Sec. 2(6) and (7) of the Act, and subject to the Board's jurisdiction.

[2] Throughout the record this particular supervisor is identified as David Robinson. I have referred to him as David Robertson in view of his spelling of the name in conference reports signed by him.

Loren Beard—(Central Supply)
Nella Guilbeau—(Nursing Services)
Gloria Cyrus—(Housekeeping)
Hilda Dewesse—(Assistant Director of Nursing)
Louis Champagne—(Director of Personnel)
Larry Betz—(Laundry)
Robert Mancell—(Chief X-ray Technician)
Ernest Peters—(General Stores, Assistant Supervisor)
Linda James—(Assistant Director for Food Services)
Betty Falgout—(Director of Nursing CDU)
Linda Alumbaugh—(Director of Chemical Dependency Unit)
Era McRae—(Supervisor)
Melda Pace—(Director of Housekeeping)
George Miley—(Director of Laundry)
Eva Lewis—(Housekeeping)
Betty Ward—(Assistant Director of Nursing Services)

I. THE 8(A)(1) ALLEGATIONS[3]

The 8(a)(1) allegations are considered below regarding the named supervisors:

A. Gerald Colston

Former employee Yolanda Scott testified that she had a conversation with Gerald Colston in his office in "January 1981 about two or three weeks at the beginning of January," and "Mr. Colston asked me if I knew about the union and I said to Mr. Colston that I did, but I hadn't participated in the union activities because of the illness I had in my family." Scott also testified about Colston, "He also asked me if I knew Susan Quiett; and I told him that I did know Susan Quiett, personally I didn't; I knew her sister real well." She went on to testify Colston "asked me if I was for the union; and I told him that I hadn't made a decision yet, whether I was going to, you know, vote yes or no on that."

Scott stated, "After [Colston] asked me if I knew Susan Quiett and I said that I didn't know her personally, that I knew her sister—he said that some black people be going around talking about things they didn't know what they were talking about." Scott asked Colston, "What did he mean," and "He said when he worked at the Uniroyal plant that the black people, you know, black guys that he was working with were striking and didn't know what they were striking for." "And he said black people nowadays go around talking about a lot of things they don't know what they are talking about. And he said Susan going pushing the union and she doesn't know anything about the union or she doesn't know anything about what she is talking about." On cross-examination, Scott testified that Colston "Asked me if I had been to any of the union meetings and if I were for the union." "I told him that I hadn't been to any of the union meetings because I had illness in the family. My grandmother was real sick in the hospital at the time." "But I was communicating with the people that had been at the meetings every week. And he asked me if I was for the union. And I also told him that I hadn't made my decision yet, or whether I was for the union but I was best for whatever best for me."

Former employee Susan Quiett testified that she attended a meeting conducted by Gerald Colston and "also Donald from pharmacy" around the end of January or the beginning of February. Quiett testified that an assistant supervisor, Lawson, was also present along with five employees from housekeeping and nursing services. Quiett testified that Colston:

> Told us that he was involved in a chemical plant that had a union and that they were trying to get a union, but then things didn't go the way the union wanted. And he said that the union took the employees out on strike.
> He said the union could do all sort of things and some bad things. He told us that if the union comes in—if the union is voted in we would start out with zero—and he held up a blank sheet of paper. And he also told us that different companies that had unions or that was trying to get a union that the benefits we had now we won't have if the union is voted in. And that they will have people to replace us.
> He said people they would hire to replace us, they would be by the experience they had, would decide who would get our jobs.

Susan Quiett also testified she had a conversation with Gerald Colston about 2 weeks before she was laid off on February 20, 1981, that Colston approached her as she was coming out of the cafeteria. Quiett testified that Colston said to her:

> Susan, I would like to talk to you. So he brought me to the side and he asked me if I knew what I was doing. And I said yes. And he said, what do you think the union can do for you?
> And I said the union can do great things for me. And he said, well, why do you feel that the union can do good things for you? And I said, because the union can give me better working conditions. And he went on to say that the union can also take your job and he said when we go out on strike we will not get paid while we are on strike. He said that they will have people to replace us.

In regard to alleged conversations which Colston had with Yolanda Scott, Colston testified that he had conversations with Scott "But the same conversation I had with all the other employees I spoke to. So, if you're asking if whether or not Ms. Scott had a special conversation with me about the union, no." Colston was asked if he ever asked Scott "if she was for the union?" Colston replied that he had not. He testified that Scott would only say that "my husband does not want me to get involved with the union." Colston testified he did not ever recall asking Scott if she knew Susan Quiett and he testified that to the best of his knowledge that he never told Yolanda Scott that Susan Quiett does not know anything about the Union or does not know anything that she is talking about.

[3] Numerous 8(a)(1) allegations were also alleged by the Union to constitute objectionable conduct. Those include allegations considered below regarding Supervisors Tom Sawyer, Betty Falgout, Hilda Dewesse, Tom Alexander, Tom Webb, Louis Champagne, Claude Kilpatrick, Larry Betz, David Frank Robertson, Loren Beard, Gayle Caillouet, Nella Guilbeau, and Shelia Jacobs. Additionally, it was alleged that Respondent committed objectionable conduct by changing its policy to provide free parking to its employees, by denying an employee a merit wage increase (also alleged as an 8(a)(3) violation), and by laying off eight employees (8(a)(3) allegations).

Note: Re Shelia Jacobs: The complaint allegations refer to Alexander Jacobs. However, the supervisory stipulation shows only Shelia Jacobs. The evidence demonstrates that two supervisors, Alexander and Jacobs, conducted one of the group meetings. As shown below, my findings herein reveal that the speakers at the group meetings whether Jacobs or other supervisors, used prepared text. Therefore, the confusion regarding Jacobs name neither adds nor detracts from my overall finding. My findings as to Jacobs are included within the section dealing with the allegations referring to Tom Alexander.

Colston admitted giving group talks to employees at the hospital but he testified that he simply read the material from the prepared text.

Colston denied having a conversation with Susan Quiett as she was leaving the cafeteria. He admitted that on one occasion he saw Susan Quiett on the elevator and that she was crying. Colston testified that he inquired of Susan Quiett about what was wrong and her answer was "That's why we need the union in this damn place. And that is as much as she would say." Colston asked Quiett if she felt like talking about it and she said no. According to Colston, that was the extent of this conversation with Susan Quiett. Colston was asked if he questioned Susan Quiett, "Why do you feel that the union can do good things for you?" He replied, "Not that I recall." Colston denied telling Susan Quiett in his conversation with her that the Union can take your job and that when you go out on strike you will not get paid and that they will have people to replace you.

Discussion

1. The group meetings[4]

Susan Quiett testified regarding a meeting she attended and conducted by Colston, which she referred to as the first of Respondent's speeches to its employees. The written text that Colston testified he read to the employees is in evidence. Quiett's testimony, although remarkably similar to the written text, contains comments by Colston that would constitute predictions of disadvantages which would result from unionization. According to Quiett, Colston indicated that employees would lose benefits and employees would be replaced.

On the other hand, the written text states, inter alia, that bargaining begins at the zero point and everything you currently have would go on the bargaining table and be subjected to the give and take of bargaining. The text then points to examples of loss of benefits, including a specific case where employees' pay was reduced through bargaining. The text also points out that the only weapon the Union has to try and force its demands is to strike. It then illustrates that strikers will not be paid nor will they receive other benefits and the employees "could lose your job" because they could be replaced during an economic strike.

I am convinced that Quiett's testimony reflects her recollection of what Colston meant in the group meetings. However, in view of Colston's testimony and the entire record, including my observations in footnote 4 above, plus the close similarities between the text and Quiett's recollection, I find that the text was actually followed by Colston.[5]

2. Yolanda Scott and Susan Quiett

Gerald Colston denied having conversations with Scott and Quiett to the extent of their respective testimony. I am persuaded, on the basis of the demeanor of the witnesses and the entire record, that Scott and Quiett should be credited over the testimony of Colston regarding those conversations. In considering this credibility issue, the background of the employees union activity is of particular importance. Susan Quiett was a visible union supporter. Perhaps her most visible activity was her handbilling for the Union across from the hospital by the "new parking lot." Her handbilling, which started on December 7, 1980, and occurred on three or four occasions before her February 20, 1981 layoff, was observed by supervisors of Respondent. Against that background,

[4] The unfair labor practice allegation apparently involved only the first of several addresses to employees. Although different groups were addressed at various times, the same address was used for each of these groups. Subsequently the same process was repeated with different speeches. A consensus of the testimony from witnesses of all three parties convinces me that in each of the first group of meetings several employees were addressed by two representatives of Respondent, and those representatives received from Respondent prepared texts for their addresses to the employees. Respondent's witnesses, identified as speakers in those meetings, indicated that they spoke from a prepared text which, on its face, dictated which of the two speakers presented pertinent parts of the address. Respondent's witnesses admitted answering employee questions during those meetings and one witness for the General Counsel, Warner Wilson, indicated in his testimony that he questioned the speakers during the course of the address. However, with the exception of Wilson, none of the witnesses for the Union or the General Counsel demonstrated by their testimony that the allegedly unlawful comments during the meeting arose in response to employee questions.

In considering the credibility of the group's meetings testimony, I must and do consider that the evidence establishes that all the speakers were presented with prepared texts for those meetings. Obviously, in the absence of other factors, a witness that has available for pretrial examination the text of the speech that he had before his speech and that he used during the speech would have a broader basis for accurate recall of the events during the speech than someone attempting to recall what he heard on the one occasion of the speech. I shall fully consider that point in determining the probability of the accuracy of the witnesses' recall. Due to consideration of the written text, I will be more reluctant to credit evidence that is contrary, but similar, to comments in the text (e.g., evidence that benefits will be lost as opposed to language in the text showing that negotiations may result in loss of certain benefits).

Moreover, although I shall consider the evidence in its entirety, I do not find totally determinative of the question of variance from the written text testimony that the speaker looked up at the audience or that the speaker did not appear to read from notes. The evidence did not reveal with precision the dates of the speeches. Those speeches were repeated, often times by the same speakers, to different groups of employees. Therefore, it is apparent that depending on how often the particular speaker had given the speech at issue, he may have been so familiar with the text at the time of the speech in question that frequent referrals to the text were no longer necessary.

[5] Concerning Quiett's testimony, I note that it is not disputed that various speakers made comments in the nature of answers to questions from employees that were not contained in the written text. However, in the case of Quiett's testimony, and on most other situations involving the speeches, the material comments (i.e., alleged illegal comments) are so similar to comments in the written text that I am convinced and find that actual remarks were taken from the text and were not made in response to employee's questions.

I find Yolanda Scott's testimony that, when Colston questioned her about the Union during 1981, he specifically asked about her acquaintance with Susan Quiett, gives a clear appearance of credibility. Scott's testimony in that regard evidenced a clear recollection of comments that would logically follow considering Respondent's knowledge of Quiett's activities. On the other hand, in consideration of whether Scott fabricated her version of the Colston conversation, I cannot conclude from the record that she was otherwise aware of Respondent's knowledge of Quiett's union activities. According to Scott's testimony, she had not, at that time, participated in union activities because of her grandmother's illness. Moreover, regardless of her knowledge of Quiett's activities, I find it unlikely that Scott could fabricate such a conversation by including references to another employee's union involvement that fits so reasonably into the established time pattern of Quiett's activities.

Additionally, a comparison of Scott's and Quiett's testimony showed a continuing pattern of comments by Colston—i.e., when Colston talked to Scott in January, he commented that Susan Quiett was pushing the Union and she does not know anything about "what she is talking about"; when Colston talked to Susan Quiett in February 1981, he asked her if she knew what she was doing; what did she think the Union could do for her.

Conclusions

The complaint alleges that Respondent's supervisor and agent, Gerald Colston, engaged in 8(a)(1) violations by orally interrogating employees concerning employees union activities on three separate occasions; creating the impression of surveillance of employees union activities; threatening that should the Union successfully organize, bargaining would commence with a blank sheet of paper; threatening loss of benefits if the Union was successful; and threatening that if the Union was successful, employees would be required to strike and would lose jobs.

Apparently the threats noted above allegedly occurred during a group meeting addressed by Colston. In view of my findings herein that material speakers at those meetings followed a written text and the evidence failed to establish that the speakers make arguably violative comments not contained in the text, I shall consider below all the allegations which arose during those meetings under a common heading.

Therefore, as to Colston individually, I shall now consider only the allegations of interrogations and impressions of surveillance. In essence, the credited evidence demonstrates Colston asked Yolanda Scott in his office during January 1981 if she knew about the Union, if she had been to any of the union meetings, if she was for the Union, and if she knew Susan Quiett. Colston also told Scott that Quiett was pushing the Union and did not know what she was talking about. Concerning Quiett, the credited evidence demonstrated that Colston talked to her outside Respondent's cafeteria in February 1981 and asked her if she knew what she was doing; what did she think the Union could do for her; and told her the Union could take her job and that she would not get paid although on strike; and people would replace the employees.

I see nothing in the above conversations that would support a finding that Colston created an impression of surveillance. He did imply knowledge of Susan Quiett's activities. However, the record clearly proved that Quiett's activities before that conversation, included handbilling for the Union in open view of employees and supervisors alike. Therefore, Colston's comments demonstrated awareness of nothing that was not common knowledge. I fail to see how a supervisor's comments indicating that he did nothing beyond observing such open activities could be considered coercive. I find that the General Counsel failed to prove that particular allegation. See Regal Tube Co., 245 NLRB 968, 973 (1979); Carrick Foodland, 238 NLRB 568, 569 (1978).

On the other hand, I find Colston's questions to Scott and Quiett were coercive. In that regard, I note that Scott was questioned in Colston's office; his questions to Scott were extensive (i.e., if she knew about the Union; had she attended any union meetings; if she was for the Union; and did she know Susan Quiett, a known union advocate); and his comments included an implication that union advocate Quiett was engaged in union activities without being fully knowledgeable of the possible ramifications of that activity. I note that Quiett was queried on what she thought the Union could do for her; and if she knew what she was doing. Additionally, Colston threatened Quiett with possible loss of her job because of the Union. Both the Board and the courts have traditionally found such comments constitute an 8(a)(1) violation especially when, as here, they occur in an atmosphere of other violations. See Agri-Seeds, 237 NLRB 911, 916 (1978); Backstage Restaurant, 232 NLRB 1082, 1088 (1977); NLRB v. W. C. McQuaide, Inc., 552 F.2d 519, 533 (3d Cir. 1977); Jody Tootique, 245 NLRB 734, 739 (1979); Pelton Casteel, Inc., 246 NLRB 310 (1970); and Cerro CATV Devices, 237 NLRB 1153, 1156 (1978). Respondent proved no valid purpose behind its questioning of Scott and Quiett and the record indicated that no valid purposes existed. There was no showing, for example, that Respondent was checking on a union claim of majority status nor was any motive shown other than the one apparent in Colston's efforts to require the two employees to identify and support their respective positions. Additionally, Colston was not a low-level, firstline supervisor. Although the record did not fully reveal his position in Respondent's supervisory structure, it is apparent from his testimony that he supervised firstline supervisors.

Concerning Quiett, even though Respondent knew of her union activities, the Board has found similar questioning, as here, violative (TRW-United Greenfield Division, 245 NLRB 1135, 1139 (1979)).

B. Gloria Cyrus

Former employee Joann Tate testified that she had a conversation with Gloria Cyrus in the presence of two other employees on February 9, 1981, at the hospital. According to Tate, she and two other employees were talking when Cyrus came up and asked, "Were we discussing the union." The employees asked why and Cyrus stated, "Because every where she go people are talking about the union." The employees then told Cyrus that they were talking about the Union.

Tate stated that later on that same day after she had returned to her work station, Cyrus came to her and asked Tate what she thought about the Union and was she going to vote for the Union. Tate testified that she replied, "Sure, if I thought it could get there." At that point Cyrus stated, "Well, that she didn't have anything else to do with it because she needed her job."

Gloria Cyrus testified that she did not have a conversation with Joann Tate and others about union activities. Cyrus testified that she did recall one conversation when she went to Joann Tate and Julia Kelly and asked them what they needed on the carts and that one of the employees asked her if she received a letter from the hospital. Cyrus replied that she said yes, Cyrus testified that Tate did not say anything about the Union, but that Tate said, "I don't know what they are sending me mine for because people are going to do what they want to do any way." Cyrus testified that was the end of the conversation. Cyrus testified that she did not ask Tate if she was going to vote for the Union nor did she ever ask Tate if she, Kelly, and Stevenson were talking about the Union.

Discussion

The dispute between the testimony of Joann Tate and Gloria Cyrus presents a difficult credibility problem. Although both witnesses evidenced good demeanor, they also demonstrated weakness in recollection during cross-examination. Concerning Tate, her testimony conflicted with her pretrial affidavit regarding the substance of the above-mentioned conversation with Cyrus and with her layoff interview. Cyrus' cross-examination demonstrated weak recollection in several areas, most noticeably in regard to union discussions at the hospital and the meetings held by the hospital regarding the union efforts. Moreover, Cyrus appeared to change her testimony on redirect regarding the practice of moving relief maids to another floor. Nevertheless, it remains the General Counsel's burden to prove its allegations by substantial evidence.

Due to the conflicts between Tate's testimony at the instant hearing and her pretrial affidavit, I am unable to find that the General Counsel has established through substantial evidence that the above conversation occurred as testified by Tate.

Conclusion

In view of my credibility findings above, I find that the General Counsel has failed to prove the 8(a)(1) allegations regarding Gloria Cyrus.

D. Hilda Deweese

Former employee Dorothy Huges testified that she attended a meeting conducted by Deweese and a man she did not know at the hospital on February 9, 1981. There were approximately 20 employees at the meeting. Huges testified, "They said if the union would come in they would call a strike—and we would lose our jobs—and our family would be deprived of needed things—and we would lose all our benefits." Huges said, "They said if the union came in we would automatically lose our jobs and all our benefits." Huges also testified, "They said if the union did come in they would call a strike; and we would lose our jobs." Later, under cross-examination, Huges was asked if the employees were told they would automatically lose their jobs and she replied, "Yes, and you would be laid off from work."

Hilda Deweese admitted giving group talks to employees at the hospital. However, she denied making the comments alleged in Huges' testimony. Deweese testified that she followed the script of the speech although she admitted answering employees questions.

Discussion

Again, as in the case of the address by Gerald Colston (above), Dorothy Huges' testimony is very similar to comments found in the written text. Although, I am convinced that Huges endeavored to recall what was said, her observations reflect her understanding of the message rather than the actual words. The text reveals that the actual speech was long, almost 20-typed pages, and contains specific examples underscoring possible consequences of unionization. I find it less than surprising that Huges and other employees came away from the speeches with the impression that they had been warned against certain dangers created by unions.

However, on the other hand, I find it unlikely that any employer would, in a situation like we have here when numerous mid-level and high-level representatives addressed employee groups, encourage the speakers to depart from the written text. Such a practice would most likely result in a confused and nonproductive message. I find it more probable that when, as here, both the employee witness and the speaker witnesses appear credible, the speech was actually given as written with the result that one or more of the listeners may have understood the speech's predictions to be more definite than actually expressed.

Conclusion

As indicated above, in view of my findings that Deweese followed the written text in her February 9, 1981 address to the employees, I shall consider this allegation below along with allegations going to other supervisors regarding the group meeting.

D. Tom Alexander

Former employee May Ella LaCour testified that she attended a meeting at the hospital around January 20, 1981, conducted by Alexander, Jacobs,[6] and a black man from purchasing. LaCour testified:

> Well, Mr. Alexander did most of the talking and he said that unions wasn't any good for hospitals and unions wasn't any good for patient care. And then he also talked about strikes, mostly, the two or three people were going out on strikes and that you can be at home and you wouldn't know anything about it and he named several places that had had strikes and people lost their jobs. And then he said that—that you can lose all your benefits, that if the union would come in you wouldn't have no one to talk to. You'd have to go to the Board. And then he also told us—he held up a blank piece of paper—saying that you would have to start bargaining from a blank sheet of paper. And then he also told us that there was a big layoff coming up.

LaCour was asked if Alexander gave the reason for the big layoff and she replied, "He said a shortage of staff nurses."

LaCour testified that approximately 20 employees attended the above meeting.

1. Alexander's meeting with Warner Wilson

Former employee Warner Wilson testified that he was called into Tom Alexander's office on February 12, 1981, and in addition to Tom Alexander, Supervisors Bill Snider and Larry Betz were also present. Wilson testified Alexander told him, "We just got the result of who was eligible to vote yesterday. And you are a supervisor and you fall under management; therefore, you are not eligible to vote." Wilson testified that Alexander told him:

> You are a supervisor. You are not allowed to vote. I don't want you to say anything, speak up for the union. I don't want you to discuss the union with anyone or it could mean your job. I know how strongly—I know how strongly you feel about the union—you know, how strongly I feel about the union, you know, wanting it. So I personally called you up here to tell you not to discuss anything about the union, or not to say anything to anybody about the union, because it could mean your job.

Wilson stated that he asked Alexander, "Since I'm a supervisor, why aren't I drawing supervior's pay?" Alexander replied, "Well, you are going to have to take that up with Mr. Gene Miley, which is the laundry manager."

According to Wilson, Snider then said, "If you don't like the pay you are getting you can quit." Alexander stated, "Do you understand what I mean." Wilson replied, "I understand exactly what you mean."

2. Alexander and the director of nursing

Warner Wilson also testified about a meeting conducted by Tom Alexander along with a lady that he believes was the director of nursing. Wilson stated that other people in attendance included a lady named Louise Harold, a man that worked in maintenance, a lady from nursing service, and two other employees he did not know. Wilson's testimony about that meeting was as follows:

> During the course of the meeting the lady said, "Well, if the union win and we go to the bargaining table, we'll go with this." And she held up a blank piece of paper. So I asked her, I said, "Well, is it good faith to go to the bargaining table with a blank sheet of paper?"
> She said all that we have to do is go to the bargaining table. So I don't know which one said it, the next statement about—if it was Mr. Tom Alexander or the lady—but if we go the bargaining table and we can't reach an agreement then the union would call a strike.
> And I said, I told them, Well, the union can call a strike, the union members have to vote on a strike. And if they vote on a strike they have to give the hospital 90 days notice. And I think a 90-day and then a 30-day notice, and then 10-day notice. I think that's federal law.
> And if they don't reach agreement by then they are not bargaining in good faith. So, Mr. Alexander went on and was talking about this hospital in Lake Charles had voted a union in and wound up making less money. And he also was speaking about strikes. He said if the employees go on a strike they can bring in a catering service or whatever—you know, to replace the employees that's on a strike.
> And then after the strike is over—when the strike is over some of the employees might be out of a job.
> He also said that all the union wanted to do was take your money. They don't do anything for you. And I told them—I spoke up and I said, well, I would rather pay $6.00 or $12.00 a month union dues for job security because right now anyone can come in, you know, and tell me I am fired without any really good reason. And I would be out of a job. At least with the union I have some type of security. They would have to have a good reason to fire me.
> So they kept on talking. He said, well, you know—they kept on talking more or less like if the union came in there could be trouble. There could be violence and things like that, you could lose holidays.
> And they kept on talking and I just turned a deaf ear to the meeting at that point.

Wilson testified that the meeting conducted by Alexander was before Alexander told him that he was not eligible to vote.

Tom Alexander testified that he along with Edward Silvey, Louis Champagne, Shelia Jacobs, and the Company's attorney, Lindsey, participated in the formulation of a group of speeches to be delivered to the employees during the union organizing campaign. Alexander testified there were five or six speeches in all. Each of those speeches was presented to several groups of employees.

The first of the five or six speeches contained a reference to a blank sheet of paper. According to Alexander, he was one of the persons that presented that speech which was given on February 9, 1981, Alexander testified:

> We, of course, had a speech typed out. We followed it to the word. Basically, that speech said that if bargaining—if the union got in and bargaining commenced we would bargain in good faith with the union, but bargaining started at the zero point, item by item and there was no guarantee that anyone would come out better or worse, during the bargaining process.

The blank sheet of paper was held up and displayed that bargaining would start from zero point.

According to Alexander, there was reference during the speeches to Clarence Crayton, the secretary-treasurer and chief organizer for the Union at the hospital. He stated that the reference to Crayton was that Crayton was negligent in performing some of his duties in bargaining and it was questioned whether this negligent type of person was the kind of individual that Baton Rouge General Hospital employees would want bargaining on their behalf. In support of this position regarding Crayton, Respondent distributed to the employees during the speeches a letter purportedly from Crayton to the executive vice president of AMI in which Crayton indicated he was negligent because he failed to bargain properly on behalf of the employees.

Alexander denied that he participated in any meeting with Warner Wilson concerning Wilson's supervisory status and his working for the Union at Baton Rouge General Hospital. However, admitted Supervisor Larry Betz testified:

Q. Did you ever attend a meeting involving either Mr. Alexander or Mr. Munn or Mrs. Beard, or Mr. Snider where Mr. Wilson was present and he was told that he was a supervisor and that he could not participate in the union activities?

A. I remember a meeting.

Q. Did you attend the meeting?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. Who was present?

A. Mr. Alexander, Mr. Miley, myself and Warner Wilson.

Q. And what was told to Mr. Wilson?

A. That part of the conversation I really don't remember.

In regard to the speeches to employees, Alexander admitted that there were question and answer periods and that he answered questions extemporaneously. Alexander admitted discussing strikes and strike violence with employees during those meetings and showing clippings of strike violence to the employees.

Under redirect examination, Alexander denied that in answering any employee questions, he told the employees that they would lose their hospital benefits if the Union successfully organized the hospital. He also denied that in answering questions he told employees that they would no longer have anyone with whom they could discuss their problems and would have to go to the National Labor Relations Board. Alexander denied that he informed any employees that strikes would be provoked and loss of jobs would occur if the Union successfully organized. On recross, Alexander admitted that they did "Inject union stewards in this situation, and to whatever extent the steward would have to get involved [the employees] would have to involve him."

3. Tom Alexander re Charles Hamilton

In the General Counsel's case, Charles Hamilton was called and testified to a conference he had with George Munn, who Hamilton described as being over purchasing, housekeeping, and the laundry. Hamilton testified the conference was in Munn's office and included Harris and Beard. Hamilton was recalled during the rebuttal portion of the General Counsel's case and he testified that he then recalled that Tom Alexander was present along with Munn and Beard.

During the General Counsel's case-in-chief, Hamilton recalled that George Munn did the talking and that Munn told him that he heard rumors that Hamilton was affiliated with the Union but that he now knew for a fact because he had seen Hamilton on the property passing out leaflets. Munn told Hamilton, you know that you are a supervisor and supervisors cannot be affiliated with the Union. According to Hamilton, Munn told him, "You either leave the union alone or take a reduction in pay and continue with the union."

Tom Alexander admitted that he attended a meeting involving Hamilton along with Harris and Munn. Alexander recalled telling Hamilton, "That it had come to my attention that he was actively engaged in the union organizing campaign and we felt because he was a supervisor that he has the responsibility to uphold the hospital position." Alexander asked Hamilton to cease his activities as a union organizer. According to Alexander, Hamilton admitted that he was a supervisor, and that Hamilton felt like he knew he should not engage in union activities on hospital time but he thought he had the right to do it on his own time. Alexander told him that it was his responsibility as a supervisor to uphold the Hospital's position 24 hours a day, 7 days a week, and that, "We expected that of him." Alexander denied telling Hamilton that if he chose to continue organizing for the Union to take a reduction in pay, or he could stop being affiliated with the Union and keep his job as a supervisor.

Henry Harris, chief patient care assistant, testified that he attended the meeting involving Tom Alexander, George Munn, and Charles Hamilton in Munn's office.

Harris was asked what Alexander said to Hamilton about the Union. His testimony was:

Well, he told—he ask him was he a stewardess [sic] for the union, and Mr. Hamilton said yes.

And he said that from this point he would not hold anything against him for believing what he believes in, but at this point and time that he wants him to stand along with the hospital, being the supervisor.

Q. And did Mr. Hamilton respond?

A. Well, he just—nodded his head like he agreed and understood what they are saying.

. . . .

Q. And how long after the meeting did you go visit Mr. Hamilton.

A. Four hours later I went to Mr. Hamilton's house after the meeting.

Q. Now, as best as you can, would you tell us the conversation that you had with Mr. Hamilton.

A. I went to Mr. Hamilton's residence and I explained to him about the meeting we had earlier, did he understand what was said in the meeting from Doctor Alexander. And we elaborated on that and I told him that by being a company—he could understand that by being a company man he was suppose to stand with the hospital and not be with the union.

And some of that he disagreed. And I told him about that if he wanted to be with the union step back in the staff and renounce his position, he wanted to help the union. He couldn't be in the position that he had and be with the union.

On cross-examination, Harris testified that when he went to Hamilton's house following the meeting with Alexander, Hamilton told him that he still was going to fight for the Union.

George Munn Jr. testified that in November 1980 he was materials manager and director of pharmacy. Munn testified that he attended the meeting involving Hamilton, Henry Harris, and Tom Alexander and that the meeting occurred on November 26, 1980. Munn was asked, "What did Alexander say to Hamilton," and his response was:

Basically it was his position of assistant supervisor over other PCA's. He did know that Charles Hamilton was working with the union activity and for him to cease to do so because of the hospital's feeling toward unions.

And he just asked—because the hospital's attitude toward—their relationship with union activity—at that point we were against unions in the hospital. He, as a supervisor, was not eligible for, in our interpretation, to be involved in union activities. We requested that he not do so.

Q. Did Mr. Hamilton say anything about whether or not he was a supervisor?

A. No he was a supervisor.

Q. Did Mr. Hamilton acknowledge the he was a supervisor or did he deny being a supervisor?

A. He didn't deny it.

On cross-examination, Munn testified that they did not tell Hamilton that further disciplinary action would involve discharge but that they did tell him that if he did not agree to cease further union activities there will be disciplinary action in the future.

Discussion

4. The group meetings

As in the case of other witnesses, May Ella LaCour's testimony was in substantial accord with the written text of the first series of addresses. However, LaCour's testimony that was supported by her earlier pretrial affidavit testimony, indicated that Alexander made comments in addition to those that appear in the text. I note that LaCour recalled Alexander telling them that two or three people could go out on strike even though the employees who attended the meeting may be at home and not know about the strike.

I am convinced and find, for reasons outlined above regarding other group meetings, that Alexander read or gave the speeches stated in the text. However, I also find that he made other comments, whether or not in response to questions, that included the comment about two or three people initiating a strike. That statement appears reasonable in view of other comments that are included in the text regarding strikes. In view of my observation of LaCour's demeanor, I am convinced that she testified to the best of her recollection regarding the group meetings. Even though I find that her recollection did not establish statements that were made in direct conflict with the written text, I do credit LaCour's testimony that Alexander told them that two or three employees could initiate a strike.

Concerning the meeting attended by Warner Wilson, I noticed that Wilson's testimony appears to substantially in accord with the written text. Therefore, and in line with the reasons stated above regarding other meetings, I am convinced and find that Alexander, and the other speaker, followed the printed text on that occasion. I credit Wilson's testimony that he questioned the speakers during their presentation rather than afterwards.

5. The meeting with alleged Supervisors Wilson and Hamilton

In defense of alleged violations regarding Warner Wilson and Charles Hamilton, Respondent contends that both men were supervisors at material times and not subject to the Act's protection afforded employees. Both Wilson and Hamilton testified that they were cautioned by Tom Alexander to cease their union activities because of Respondent's assertion they were supervisors. Alexander denied having such a conversation with Wilson, but admitted having one with Hamilton.

I find Wilson's testimony believable on the basis of demeanor and the entire record. I noticed in that regard his recollection of Alexander's warning that he was a supervisor and should cease union activities was similar to what Alexander admittedly told Charles Hamilton. Additionally, Supervisor Larry Betz recalled attending that meeting between Alexander and Wilson.

Concerning Hamilton, Alexander and other supervisors admitted that Alexander called Hamilton in and cautioned him not to engage in union activities. Generally, I do not credit Hamilton's testimony to the extent it conflicts with other testimony regarding that meeting. Hamilton demonstrated in testimony during the General Counsel's case-in-chief and when called in rebuttal that his recollection was poor.

However, I do not credit Alexander's and Henry Harris' testimony that during their conversation, Hamilton admitted that he was a supervisor. I find the testimony of Materials Manager George Munn Jr. (another of Respondent's witness) more believable. Munn testified in response to the question did Hamilton acknowledge that he was a supervisor, "He didn't deny it."

I specifically discredit Hamilton's testimony that he was told during the meeting at the hospital that he should take a reduction to a unit job if he wanted to assist the Union. In that regard, I credit Chief Patient Care Assistant Henry Harris' testimony that he, an admitted supervisor, made that suggestion to Hamilton, but that the suggestion was made after the meeting with Alexander when Harris visited Hamilton's home. Additionally, I specifically credit the testimony of George Munn Jr. that Hamilton was warned of further disciplinary action if Hamilton did not agree to cease his union activities.

Conclusion

6. The group meetings

In view of my findings that Alexander followed the written text in his addresses to employees and that he added a comment that a strike could be initiated by two or three employees, I shall make a determination on the allegations arising from those speeches, along with allegations regarding other supervisors' comments in their speeches, below.

7. The meetings with Warner Wilson and Charles Hamilton

In considering the import of comments made to Wilson and Hamilton, it is first necessary to consider whether Wilson and Hamilton were supervisors and not entitled to the Act's protection as employees.

8. The supervisory status of Warner Wilson

Warner Wilson testified that his stated duties for Respondent were those of washman in Respondent's laundry facility. Wilson testified there were 17 or 18 other employees in the laundry that worked with him on his shift. Wilson testified that he loaded dirty clothes up in the washer, would wash them by sending them through the wash cycle, then pull them out and load them on a conveyor where they would go to the rest of the workers to finish the laundry process. Wilson stated his pay came to $4.97 per hour. Wilson testified that he had no authority to hire, fire, or recommend that an employee be hired or fired. Wilson stated that he did not have the authority to either layoff or recommend employees for layoff; nor did he have authority to recommend an employee for a wage increase. Wilson recalled that he did not give written warnings to employees, discipline any employees, nor grant them time off.

Wilson's supervisors were Larry Betz and Gene Miley. Neither Betz nor Miley worked on weekends.

Wilson and three other laundry employees were classified as leadermen. Because both supervisors, Betz and Miley, were absent on weekends, Wilson and another leaderman, Fleming Fountain, rotated working Saturdays. Wilson testified that on those occasions it was his obligation to assist coworkers in getting the clothes out and that if there was a breakdown, he had a number to call a mechanic and if an employee failed to show up for work, he was instructed to call to see if other employees could come in. Wilson stated that he was never told that he had the authority to discipline employees; however, he testified, "If somebody messes up or somebody comes in late," he was to write a note and leave it on Miley's desk and Miley would take care of the situation. Wilson was asked if he had an occasion to write a note as indicated above, and his response was, "I don't think so." On cross-examination, Wilson was asked about an occasion, a Saturday, when an employee would just sit down and smoke a cigarette rather than work, and he responded that he could just tell them that they might do a little better or he would have to report it to Miley, but that he did not have authority to tell employees what to do.

Wilson indicated on cross-examination that he did not know whether he had attended any supervisory meetings.

Although Wilson admitted that Gene Miley told him that he could call for help if he was short-handed, he testified that he never received any telephone numbers of other employees he was supposed to call, and that during the times when they were short they either doubled up and did the work themselves, or when he knew that an employee was absent he may ask someone to come in and work that Saturday. On occasion he had called some of the employees that he knew to come in and work on Saturdays.

Gene Miley did not testify. Larry Betz testified that Warner Wilson's job was that of "leaderman, working washerman." Betz testified that on weekends Wilson's responsibility was to make sure he had a crew—working crew, designated places to work, etc. He testified that Wilson had authority on weekends to call other employees to fill a slot if someone did not show up without first calling a supervisor. Betz also testified that Wilson had the authority to reprimand employees if they were either late or had some adverse reaction during the day, but generally Wilson would send him home and report the incident to either him or the laundry manager the following workday. He testified that Wilson assigned different jobs on Saturdays.

On cross-examination, Betz admitted that he had never told Warner Wilson that Wilson had authority to reprimand employees. Betz also admitted that he did not know of any written warnings that Wilson had ever issued, nor did he know of anyone that Wilson had ever sent home. Betz also admitted that the only jobs assigned by Wilson on weekends were routine jobs of putting clothes in the washer, taking them out, putting them in the dryer, and folding them.

Although Betz testified that Wilson had the authority to give employees time off if they were sick, he admitted that he was not aware of a specific example of Wilson doing that and he had never told Wilson that Wilson had that authority.

I find that Wilson was not a supervisor at material times. The Board has consistently held that even though an employee may perform some supervisory functions, he will be found not to be a supervisor, when he lacks authority and independent judgment and spends a substantial portion of his workday performing rank-in-file work of a repetitive nature (Air Filter Corp., 231 NLRB 782 (1977)). It was apparent that Larry Betz had no firsthand knowledge of what Warner Wilson had been told regarding his authority. Betz testified concerning his knowledge of Wilson's authority and activities. However, when examined by the General Counsel, Betz admitted that he had no knowledge of Wilson ever exercising any supervisory authority over employees nor was he actually aware that Wilson had been told that he possessed such authority. Therefore, I shall fully credit Wilson's testimony regarding his authority and duties. That testimony revealed, and I find, that Wilson was nothing more than a leaderman and was not a supervisor as defined in the Act.

9. The supervisory status of Charles Hamilton

Charles Hamilton's duties differ somewhat from those of Warner Wilson. Whereas Wilson was one of four leadermen in his department, Hamilton was designated as the only assistant chief patient care assistant. Patient care assistant's duties included catheterizing patients, walking patients, assisting with patients' baths, dressing patients, restraining patients, and getting patients out of chairs. Both Hamilton and his immediate supervisor, Henry Harris, the chief patient care assistant, performed all the functions normally performed by patient care assistants (PCAs).

However, Harris and Hamilton were also charged with assigning jobs to available PCAs as the jobs appeared throughout the hospital. Although Hamilton spent most of his time during the week performing PCA duties, he also, during those periods, assigned jobs, trained employees, and on occasion counseled PCAs about their work performance. Hamilton admitted counseling employees Gerald McRay and Horace Johnson.

On Sundays and Mondays, Hamilton assumed the role normally occupied by Chief Patient Care Assistant Henry Harris. Harris did not work on Sundays and Mondays. On those occasions, according to Henry Harris' testimony, which I credit, Hamilton called in employees to replace no-show employees, granted employees permission to leave early, sent employees home for disciplinary reasons, had the right to and, on occasion, actually wrote up employees for disciplinary action, counseled employees about their job performance, and trained employees in their PCA duties. Hamilton testified that on Sundays and Mondays it was up to him to see that the job went on fine. Hamilton admitted that his pay was about $1.50 per hour higher than the highest paid PCA.

According to Loren Beard, the supervisor directly over Henry Harris, Hamilton was informed by her that he also had the authority to recommend discharge of an employee.

I am convinced on the basis for the record that Hamilton acted in a supervisory capacity. His supervisory duties were routinely administered on Sundays and Mondays when he was the only firstline supervisor on the job and, also, on regular occasions during his workdays even though less frequently because of the presence of the chief PCA. (See Butler-Johnson Corp., 237 NLRB 688 (1978); Flexi-Van Service Center, 228 NLRB 956 (1977); Elliott River Tours, 246 NLRB 935, 943 (1979); Famous Amos Cookie Corp., 236 NLRB 1093 (1978).)

10. Findings regarding Hamilton and Wilson

The complaint alleges that Alexander threatened an employee on February 12, 1981, with termination if the employees supported the Union.

Obviously, because Hamilton had been found to be a supervisor, I find no violation occurred during his meeting with Alexander nor was there a violation by Harris in his subsequent visit to Hamilton's home.

Concerning Wilson, his testimony, that I have credited, proves that during a February 12, 1981 meeting in Alexander's office he was told that he was a supervisor. Alexander cautioned Wilson not to speak up for the Union or it could mean Wilson's job. I find that constitutes a clear threat in violation of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act.

E. Tom Webb

Former employee LoRita Marshall testified that she attended a meeting at the hospital in the middle of February 1981 conducted by Tom Webb. Marshall testified as follows regarding that meeting:

> OK, he talked about how there had been violence in the unions. How the unions caused violence. He told us that if the employees would go on strike that we could lose our jobs.
> He said that the hospital had a contract with some other company and if we were on strike that they would supply the hospital with new employees. And he told us that in the past they had had violence, truck drivers would have guns and some people got shot.
> And he had some clippings on violence.
> . . . .
> Yeah, he told us that he wouldn't tolerate—that the hospital wouldn't tolerate having a union push it.

Louis Champagne, director of personnel, testified that Tom Webb was employed by the hospital as one of its vice presidents until January 30, when Webb was involved in a reduction in force. Champagne testified that Webb did not participate in any of the group talks that began on February 9, 1981. Champagne testified that he made up the schedule for the group meetings and he knew that Tom Webb was not present at the hospital and did not participate in any of those meetings.

Discussion

In view of the unrebutted evidence showing that Tom Webb was not employed by Respondent after January 30, and evidence that the group talks did not start until February 9, I find that LoRita Marshall was mistaken in her testimony that Tom Webb conducted a mid-February employee meeting that she attended.

Conclusion

In view of my credibility determination, I find that the General Counsel failed to prove that Tom Webb engaged in any activity violative of Section 8(a)(1).

F. Louis Champagne

Former employee Sharon Thompson testified that she attended a meeting of approximately 10 employees on February 12, 1981, conducted by Champagne, who told the employees:

> The bargaining would come to us with a blank sheet of paper. That the union would strike the hospital. And they would hire people in our places. And we would be put on a picket line. And if we tried to cross the picket line that we'd be hit over the head and our homes would be burned down.
> And they said we could lose our raises, our holidays and sick time, vacation. We probably wouldn't get none of this. They also said that Baton Rouge General didn't need a union and they didn't want a union.

Louis Champagne testified that he made up the schedule for the group talks and that the first of the group talks was presented during the period February 9 through 14, 1981. The text of the first of the group talks was received in evidence. Champagne testified that "the blank-sheet-of-paper" was included in only the first of the group talks. Champagne testified that he presented approximately six of the first of the group talks and that the script was followed. Champagne stated that each of the talks involved two individuals and that it was necessary to read the text because each person had a certain part to follow. During the presentation when the portion regarding the blank sheet of paper was read, he, along with the other speakers giving that particular talk, held up a blank sheet of paper. Champagne admitted that a question and answer period was held and that he responded to employee questions. Champagne denied making a statement during his presentation of the first of the group talks that "the union will strike the hospital." Champagne testified that there was a statement in the text indicating that the Union could strike the hospital. Champagne also denied that he ever made the statement that employees would be hit over the head or that houses would be burned down.

Discussion

Sharon Thompson's testimony regarding a group meeting addressed by Louis Champagne did not vary from the subject and issues covered in the text for the first series of meetings. In line with my reasoning mentioned above, I shall credit Champagne's testimony that he followed the text of that speech.

Conclusion

As in situations noted above, I shall consider the question of an 8(a)(1) violation regarding Champagne's address to employees in group meetings below.

G. Claude Kirkpatrick

Former employee Teresa Thomas testified that although she was handbilling for the Union across from the hospital parking lot, before Christmas 1980, Kirkpatrick came by and asked, "[C]an I see some of you [sic] propaganda?" Kirkpatrick read the leaflet and stated, "[I]t will never work." Thomas then said, "Well, there's nothing wrong with trying." Kirkpatrick laughed and walked on.

Kirkpatrick did not testify.

Discussion

Although Thomas' testimony was unrebutted, I shall credit her testimony as reflected above.

Conclusion

I see nothing coercive about Kirkpatrick's conduct related by Thomas, and the General Counsel cited no authority on which I can find his conduct violative. I find that nothing occurred on that occasion that violates Section 8(a)(1).

H. Ernest Peters

Yolanda Scott testified that she had a conversation with Peters on February 11, 1980, in the big storeroom at the hospital. Scott testified as follows:

> And I ask Mr. Peters—Mr. Peters didn't say anything—I ask him, you know, at the time, if he was for the union. And was he going to be able to vote.
> And he said he was not for the union. He didn't know if he was going to be able to vote. And he also stated that everything he had worked for he had gotten on his own. And he said unions could make it hard on you.

Ernest Peters did not testify.

Discussion

I shall credit Yolanda Scott's testimony regarding her conversation with Ernest Peters that is unrebutted.

Conclusion

The complaint alleges that Ernest Peters threatened to make work harder on an employee for supporting the Union. The testimony of Yolanda Scott fails to establish such a violation. I note especially significant the fact that Scott initiated the conversation about the Union with Peters by asking Peters if he was for the Union. Peters' position was such that neither he nor Scott knew whether he would be eligible to vote as an employee. Therefore, even though Peters was stipulated to be a supervisor he was a low-level supervisor. His response to Scott's question was limited to the scope of her query. Although the comment "unions could make it hard on you," could imply a threat, it seems more in line with Peters response to the Scott question (i.e., his feelings concerning the effect it may have on him and not the possible effect on an employee). I find that statement is innocuous.

I. Larry Betz

Warner Wilson testified that he discussed the Union with Larry Betz in either July or August 1980. Wilson testified that Betz said, "He hoped the Union would win and come in." Wilson replied, "Well, don't worry; you know, they are going to do it. They are going to win."

Subsequently, in mid-February 1981, according to Wilson, he had another conversation with Betz in the laundry at the hospital where Betz told him, "Warner, you better watch yourself." Wilson asked, "What do you mean?" and Betz stated, "Well, they are out to get you—they are out to get your job." Wilson replied that, "as long as I do my eight hours and come to work there is not too much they can do about it; and if they harass me I know where to go." Betz stated, "Well, just watch yourself." Wilson testified that there was no mention of the Union during that February conversation.

Larry Betz denied that he ever told Warner Wilson that Wilson had better watch himself because the hospital was out to get him because of his union activities.

Discussion

I was generally impressed with Warner Wilson's testimony on both direct and cross-examination. Wilson was subjected to lengthy questioning and his response was usually clear without indication of reservation. On two occasions, Respondent's counsel cited apparent conflicts between Wilson's testimony and his pretrial affidavit, but in each of those instances Wilson's explanation appeared candid. Regarding his second conversation with Betz in consideration of whether Wilson fabricated that testimony, I note that Wilson testified that Betz did not mention the Union even though it was obvious that, had Betz coupled his warning directly to Wilson's union activity, the incident would have significantly benefited Wilson's discrimination case. That fact tends to indicate that Wilson's testimony was not a fabrication.

Betz, on the other hand, did not impress me with his demeanor. He appeared evasive and undecided especially when testifying about his knowledge of Wilson's union activity.

I find Wilson to be a credible witness and I credit his version of the conversations with Betz.

Conclusion

In view of the close proximity to the union organizing campaign; Wilson's outspoken queries at the time of Alexander's group meeting (see above under Alexander); the warning from Alexander to Wilson that Wilson must refrain from supporting the Union; and Wilson's February 20, 1981 layoff, it appears obvious, and I find, that Betz was threatening Wilson with loss of job because of Wilson's union activities. The complaint alleges that Betz violated Section 8(a)(1) by telling an employee that he had better watch himself because of his union activities. I find that Wilson's testimony, which I credit, proves that allegation.

J. Era McRae

Former employee Mary Ann Hickman testified that she had a conversation with Era McRae on October 20, 1980, at the hospital. Hickman's testimony in that regard was as follows:

> October 20, 1980, I went to Era McRae to see about changing my days to attend a friend's funeral in New Orleans. And we got that straight. And after that she say: Now may I talk to you.
> And she say: I know you heard about—I know you heard about what is going on about the union. I said: Wait a minute: Well, I've been out sick for a while, about a month and a half. And I don't know very much about what's going on.
> She said: Well, let me tell you about it. She said: If we had a union in here we wouldn't be able to talk like we are doing now. You wouldn't be able to talk about schedules. And then she said you might be bargaining with your benefits.
> She say: When they sit down to bargain they don't mean that the General has to agree with what they ask for. And after that she say you could lose your benefits.

Era McRae testified that she did not recall calling Mary Ann Hickman into her office about October 20, 1980, and she did not recall telling Hickman I know you heard about what was going on about the Union. McRae testified that she did not recall ever telling Hickman that if we had a union in the hospital that we would not be able to talk like we are doing now and that you would not be able to talk about schedules or that they would be bargaining about your benefits. She also indicated that she did not recall ever telling Hickman that when they sit down to bargain that they do not mean that the "General" has to agree with what they ask for and that the employees could lose their benefits.

Discussion

I was impressed with Hickman's demeanor. In regard to the alleged conversation with Era McRae, Hickman's testimony evidenced a clear recollection. Although Respondent examined her pretrial affidavit, no conflicts were evidenced between her testimony at hearing and the affidavit regarding her conversation with McRae. Moreover, several matters were mentioned by Hickman that could have been, but were not, disputed by documentary evidence. For example, Hickman testified that she went to McRae on October 20, 1980, to change "her days to attend a friend's funeral in New Orleans." Also, Hickman testified that she had been out sick before her conversation with McRae and, for that reason, she knew little of the Union. Obviously, if Hickman was mistaken, Respondent's records may have shown the mistakes. No documents were offered showing that McRae did not approve Hickman changing "her days" around October 20, nor was it shown that Hickman was not out sick before October 20.

On the other hand, Era McRae's testimony regarding the alleged conversation with Hickman was vague. In fact, McRae admitted that she did not recall whether she talked with Hickman on October 20. I find that admission significant because, as noted above, McRae had attendance records available that may have prompted her recollection. McRae did admit talking to employees about the Union in the fall and early winter of 1980

McRae testified that she had been instructed by Director of Nursing Joyce Burkeen to tell employees how the hospital felt about the Union. McRae also testified that she had approximately 175 employees "under her" and that she would not recognize Mary Ann Hickman if she saw her.

Against that background, I find that Hickman's testimony should be credited.

Conclusion

The complaint alleges that McRae created an impression of surveillance of the employees' union activities and threatened an employee that employees would not be allowed to discuss scheduling changes with supervisors if the Union was successful in organizing the employees.

I find nothing in Hickman's testimony that would support my finding that McRae created an impression of surveillance. Her comment to Hickman was simply, "I know you heard about what is going on about the union." The evidence proved that the organizing efforts were oftentimes open, with little or no effort being made to conceal those activities from supervision. Therefore, I cannot find that McRae's comment had the tendency to create, in Hickman's mind, the impression that Respondent was engaged in efforts to unlawfully observe the employees' union activities.

However, McRae's comments clearly imply that selection of the Union would remove the employees' privilege of resolving scheduling problems with their supervisors. Hickman was talking with McRae with an object of doing just that, i.e., changing her schedule to attend a friend's funeral, and McRae's comments included the threat to such actions would not continue if the Union was selected. K. Eva Lewis

Susan Quiett testified that as she was handbilling for the Union on December 7, 1980, across from the new parking lot, several supervisors came out of the hospital and one, Eva Lewis, approached and asked Quiett if she knew what she was doing. Quiett replied, "Yes." Lewis walked away, came back, and asked again if Quiett knew what she was doing. Quiett replied, "Yes," and Lewis went into the hospital.

Housekeeping Supervisor Eva Lewis admitted that on an occasion when she was leaving the hospital Susan Quiett tried to give her a union leaflet. Lewis testified that she told Quiett, "No, indeed; I don't want this Susan. And you don't know what you're doing." Lewis then went back into the hospital to report the incident to her supervisor and as she walked away Quiett repeated what Lewis said to her in a "sarcastic way."

Discussion

I found Eva Lewis to be a credible witness. She admitted the above incident in substantial accord with Quiett's version and she also admitted reporting the incident to higher supervision. Because Lewis obviously found the incident an unpleasant one, I am convinced and find that her recollection remained vivid. Therefore, I credit her account of the incident.

Conclusion

I see nothing coercive in Eva Lewis' comment to Susan Quiett. It appears to constitute nothing more than a normal reaction without accompanying threats or interrogation. Therefore, I find that no violation occurred on this occasion.

L. David Frank Robertson

Former employee Jacqueline Jones testified that she had a conversation with Robertson at the hospital during January 1981. Jones testified:

> OK, he approached me, he said, Jackie, could I speak with you for a moment? I said, yes. He said, we supervisors are on a campaign at this time and asking those how do we feel about the union.
> I said, what do you mean how do I feel about the union? He said, well, some unions are good, some unions want you for your dues and some unions can really help you. He started talking about this place he once worked at which was called Payne and Keller. And he said that at the time he was working for them they were on strike. They tried to get the union into that. And I said, well, my father worked at Payne and Keller but I never heard him speak of a strike.
> And that time he said, well, he may have gotten hired during that strike time. And he said as far as he's concern they never got what they wanted, even though they had strikes.

Robertson denied that in January 1981 he went to Jackie Jones and told her that "We supervisors are on a campaign to find out how you feel about the union."

Discussion

Although David Robertson denied telling Jones that supervisors were on a campaign to find out how employees felt about the Union, he admitted he was instructed to discuss the union campaign with at least five employees. Robertson did not recall what those instructions included. He testified he was not instructed concerning asking employees about their union sentiments.

In view of Robertson's admissions, and in the absence of an explanation of what he actually told the employees he contacted regarding the union campaign, I credit Jones' testimony. Her testimony appears logical in view of Robertson's admissions and I was impressed with her demeanor.

Conclusion

The complaint alleges that Robertson unlawfully interrogated an employee about her union sentiments.

Robertson's comments served two purposes, they alerted Jones that supervisors were systematically investigating employees' union sentiments and they served to question Jones concerning her feelings about the Union. When considered against the background of other 8(a)(1) activity both at the time of the Robertson-Jones conversation (January 1981) and before, I find Robertson's comments constitute illegal interrogation as alleged.

M. Loren Beard

Mary Ann Hickman testified she attended a meeting conducted by Beard and a gentleman Hickman did not know around mid-January in a small conference room at the hospital. On direct examination, Hickman testified:

> Mostly in that meeting Ms. Beard was doing most of the talking. And she told us that the union could call us out on strike. And they could get someone off the street to come and to work. You wouldn't be drawing a paycheck; you wouldn't be—you wouldn't have any benefits. And you wouldn't be able to draw unemployment.
> And after the strike was over that didn't mean that they had to call us back to work. They wanted us to—they wanted us to vote, but they wanted us to vote no because Baton Rouge General didn't need the union.
> And then she told—then she told us that when they sit down to bargain they start off with a blank sheet of paper and that didn't mean that the General had to agree with them—what the union asked for. And said that we could, when they sit down to bargain, we could lose—we would lose our benefits such as sick leave, vacation, so on.
> And then she told us about a hospital in Lake Charles that—that had got rid of a union. And she told us about—they had clippings about other places—about strikes.
> And then she told us that all the union wanted was our money. That we'd pay like $10.00 a month union dues—from 100 to 120 thousand a year in dues. And that was mainly about all that conversation.

On cross-examination, Hickman admitted testifying in her pretrial affidavit to the Regional Office that Beard told the employees in the meeting:

> Things might go up or they might go down. You might be bargaining with your benefits. They might promise you this or that; that didn't mean that the General is going to give it to us. And when they sit down to bargain with we might lose our benefits.

Former employee Lily Cato testified that she attended a meeting conducted by Beard in a conference room about January 22, 1981, along with about 15 employees. Her testimony was as follows:

> Well, mostly she was talking about the union—if the union came in—if we got a union into the hospital it would go out on strikes. And these strikes would cause us to lose our jobs.
> And, you know, and if, you know, we didn't lose our jobs, and if we did have a union that we would have to pay union dues. And also, you know, that all the benefits that the hospital had given us that, you know, we would lose that and would start from, you know, start from the beginning.
> Q. What would you have to start over from the beginning with?
> A. Well, all the benefits that the hospital had given us, you know, that we would, you know, have lost all our benefits that we already had and then would start all over.
> Q. Was the subject of bargaining brought up in the meeting?
>
> A. Bargaining?
> Q. Bargaining between the company and the union. Was that discussed at the meeting?
>
> A. I think this is what she was really talking about, you know, because like when she was saying that if the union did get into the hospital then anything that, you know, that we would ask for, you know, the hospital would say no.
> And lots of times could have lost your job.
> Q. All right. Do you recall the subject of strikes being discussed at the meeting?
> A. Really, you know, really, I mean, I didn't—you know, really I didn't—really, I just was in the meeting, you know, to see what was the discussion about. But, like I said, in the beginning it was basically, mostly what she talked about, strikes.
> Q. Uh-huh.
> A. You know, what affect strikes would mean to us.

On cross-examination, Cato admitted that Loren Beard made the following statement during the above conference:

> Would you like to see a copy of the union contract in hospital if the union should win an election here? Let me show it to you—and she would hold up a blank piece of paper—there's nothing on it. If the union should win the election here, and we don't believe that's going to happen, but just assume for a moment that it did, the hospital would be obligated to bargain in good faith with the union. That is all. We would do that bargaining with the intention of reaching an agreement.

Although Cato admitted Loren Beard made the above statement, she denied that Beard held up a blank sheet of paper.

Loren Beard admitted giving group talks to employees at the hospital. However, she denied that any of those talks occurred in January 1981. Beard, along with other witnesses for Respondent, testified that the talks began in February 1981. Beard admitted that she discussed what could happen to benefits during negotiations. She testified that she followed the text of the speech. She testified that she described that bargaining would start from a blank piece of paper—the hospital would bargain in good faith but the bargaining would start from zero. Beard stated that she conducted a question-and-answer session during her group talks and, of course, the answers were not prepared beforehand.

On cross-examination, Beard testified that she told the employees that anything the employees got would be bargained for—they could either get more or less than they had at the time. She denied that she told the employees that there would probably be strikes if the Union came in. Instead, according to Beard, she told the employees, "there was a possibility" of strikes. She also admitted telling the employees that there was a possibility of physical harm and a possibility that they could be replaced if there was an economic strike.

Discussion

Again, as in many cases discussed above, I note the attending employees' testimony is in substantial accord with the written text of the first of Respondent's series of speeches. The testimony of Mary Ann Hickman appears in line with the speeches concerning both the issues covered and the actual language used (i.e., Hickman recalls the speech included references to what could happen although Cato recalled predictions that certain disadvantages would occur).

I find, in line with my previously stated reasons, that the speech was given by Beard in accord with the written text.

Conclusion

See below regarding findings on the speeches.

N. Gayle Caillouet

Former employee Shirley Trosclair testified to a conversation with Gayle Caillouet around January 1981 at the hospital. Trosclair stated Salains, the assistant supervisor, was also present. Trosclair testified she was asked if she had heard of any union organizing in the hospital. Trosclair testified she replied no and she was then told, "Well, if you hear anything come and contact me in charge—Ms. Caillouet." Trosclair said that Caillouet told her "Don't talk to anyone outside, just come to them and talk."

Gayle Caillouet denied asking Shirley Trosclair if she had ever heard of any union organizing at the hospital and that she told Trosclair that if she heard anything to contact her. However, Caillouet admitted that she tried to talk to all her employees about the Union and that she told her employees that she wanted to tell them facts about the Union and this Union in particular. Caillouet admitted attending meetings with supervisors during which the estimated strength of various departments regarding employees' union support was discussed and it was her recollection that the strongest departments for the Union included housekeeping and nursing services.

Discussion

Although Caillouet denied the specific allegations of Shirley Trosclair, Caillouet admitted she tried to talk to all her employees about the Union. Moreover, Caillouet admitted attending supervisory meetings where the Union's strength in various departments was discussed. Those admissions lend strength to the likelihood that Trosclair's recollection was correct because the alleged comments by Caillouet were specifically directed toward learning about employees' activities. With that background, I am convinced and find that Trosclair's above-mentioned testimony should be credited.

Conclusion

The complaint alleges that Caillouet's comments constituted illegal interrogation.

It is noteworthy that Caillouet's conversation occurred around the same time that Supervisor David Robertson advised employee Jacqueline Jones that the supervisors were on a campaign to determine how Respondent's employees felt about the Union. Additionally, along the same line, Caillouet admitted attending supervisory meetings where the estimated union strength in the various departments was discussed. Those facts, which I also considered in making my credibility findings, would have the tendency to support a finding that interrogations have a coercive affect. In the case of Caillouet's conversation with Trosclair, Trosclair was not only questioned but she was also advised to inform the supervisor in charge of anything she learned about the union campaign. That comment places the employee in a position of either reporting her knowledge or running the risk of Caillouet discovering that the employee was holding out important information. I am convinced and find that Caillouet's comments constituted illegal interrogation.

O. Nellie Guilbeau

Former employee Ruth Stevenson testified that she was involved in a conversation with Guilbeau during the first week of February 1981. Stevenson placed that conversation in the coffeeshop on the fifth floor of the hospital. She said other employees including Elizabeth Day, Fanny Griffin, Georgia Payne, and Nancy, the secretary, were also present. Stevenson testified as follows:

> Ms. Guilbeau said she would like to tell us about the union. She said the union was bad and she said in her hometown one year a union went on strike and the people didn't have food to eat. Some lost their cars and home.
> And she said if we had a union we wouldn't be able to work overtime, adjust the schedule, or to come to her with our problems or complaints.
> Q. Was the topic of jobs mentioned in the conversation?
> A. Yeah, she said that we would lose our jobs while the union was out on strike. And we'd be replaced by, you know, other employees.

On cross-examination, Stevenson admitted that she testified in her pretrial affidavit as follows:

> Guilbeau said she would like to tell us how she felt about the union. She said that unions was bad. That in her hometown one year the union called a strike and the people didn't have food to eat. Some lost their homes and their cars. Guilbeau said that she—Guilbeau said that if we went on strike we wasn't guaranteed our jobs once the strike was over and we would be replaced.

Guilbeau said, for instance, if we got the union we would be—wouldn't be able to work overtime, adjust the schedule, or come to her with our problems or complaints.

Nellie Guilbeau was called by Respondent and her testimony regarding the allegations of Ruth Stevenson was as follows:

Q. Did you ever tell this group of employees, and more specifically Ruth Stevenson, that the union was bad?

A. No.

Q. Did you ever tell these employees, including Ruth Stevenson, that if we have a union in the hospital that we wouldn't be able to work overtime, adjust schedules, or to come to you with their problems and complaints?

A. If I did speak to them on this issue, which I'm sure I probably did, it's my understanding on all three of those issues that if the union came into the hospital their time schedules, their grievances, their overtime would be negotiated between management personnel and our hospital and a union representative. And that was my opinion.

Q. Is that what you told those employees? Or is that what you told employees in general?

A. In general. That's my understanding. And when this would come and I was asked that's what I would say.

Discussion

Although Guilbeau denied telling Stevenson that the Union was bad, she admitted advising Stevenson and other employees that unionization could affect their benefits. Moreover, Guilbeau did not deny Stevenson's allegation that Guilbeau threatened her with loss of jobs while the Union struck. I shall credit Stevenson's version of the Guilbeau conversation to the extent of her pretrial affidavit testimony that appeared more logical than her testimony at trial.

Conclusion

The complaint alleges that Guilbeau threatened employees that should the Union be successful overtime would be eliminated, work schedules would not be adjusted, and employees would not be allowed to discuss complaints and problems with supervisors.

The credited evidence (i.e., Stevenson's pretrial affidavit testimony that was corroborated by her at the hearing) shows that Guilbeau told approximately five employees during early February 1981 that "[i]f [the employees] got the union [the employees] would be—wouldn't be able to work overtime, adjust the schedule or come to her with [employee] problems or complaints."

Again I note that these comments, like those from other supervisors, occurred around the same time that Respondent was engaged in other 8(a)(1) conduct. The credited evidence clearly reveals that Guilbeau expressed the threats alleged by the General Counsel and I so find.

P. Joann Lappin

Former employee Minnie Coleman testified that she was called into Lappin's office in late January or early February 1981. Coleman testified that in addition to Lappin, Lappin's secretary and the assistant supervisor were present for portions of the conversation. Coleman testified her conversation with Lappin was as follows:

She proceeded to tell me that, Minnie, you know that the union is coming into the hospital. And I said, no I don't know. The only thing I know is what you all tell me and the pamphlets I receive in the mail.

And she proceeded to say that the union was not good for me and I wasn't a person for the union.

And I said—so after that she told me that we would be—the hospital would run with us or without us. And I said that I didn't know anything about that.

So she proceeded to tell me that they would work night and day to keep the hospital going if we go out on a picket line or anything. And they would hire new people to replace us. And we would be—and then she proceeded to tell me that some of us would be laid off because of the union.

And I asked her—then she said, how do you feel about the union? And so I proceeded to tell her, I don't know how I feel about the union because I am only hearing one side of the story, that's what you all telling me.

And I said, well, why don't you all let the union come in and have a debate and let us hear the union's side of the story; and then we can decide.

And then she proceeded to tell me that they wasn't going to let the union come to the hospital but we got out and found time to seek the union, so get out and find time to see what it was all about.

Then she proceeded to tell me to go ahead on back to work.

Joann Lappin denied that she ever had a one-on-one conversation with Minnie Coleman regarding the Union. However, Lappin admitted that she had conversations with nurses aides, and especially with Minnie Coleman, when other nurses aides were present. Lappin admitted talking to the employees regarding the Union and telling the employees that the hospital would work night and day to keep the hospital going if the employees went out on the picket line. Lappin denied telling Coleman or any other nurses aides that the Union was not good—was not good for her and that she was not the person for the Union. Lappin denied threatening Coleman that she would be laid off because of the Union or questioning Coleman on how she felt about the Union. Lappin testified that Coleman never suggested to her that the Union be permitted to come and debate their side of the story. Lappin denied ever telling any employee that if the Union successfully organized the hospital, union membership would be mandatory.

Discussion

I was impressed with Joann Lappin's demeanor. Moreover, she appeared to testify candidly on both cross and direct. She admitted discussing the Union with Minnie Coleman although she denied it was a one-on-one conversation as related by Coleman and she denied some of the contentions by Coleman. I was also impressed with the openness with which Lappin responded to the General Counsel's questions about supervisory meetings regarding the Union. I shall credit Lappin's version of her conversation with Coleman.

Conclusion

I find nothing in the credited version of the Lappin-Coleman conversation that supports the General Counsel's allegations of impression of surveillance, threat of layoff, interrogation, and a threat that union membership would be mandatory should the Union win. I recommend dismissal of the allegations relating to Joann Lappin.

Q. Robert Mancell

Former employee Bertha Smith testified that she was approached by Robert Mancell in one of the X-ray rooms on December 10, 1980.

> He asked me had I heard whether they was trying to organize a union at the hospital. And he asked me how did I feel toward the union. I told him a union wouldn't be such a bad idea.
> And he went on to say that his son participated in a union and he said if they—if they get a union and they go out on strike that I might not get my job back.

Robert Mancell denied ever having a conversation limited to him and Bertha Smith during which the Union was discussed. However, Mancell admitted discussing the Union with a group of employees that included Bertha Smith. Mancell testified that he did not direct any question directly to Smith. On cross-examination, Mancell testified regarding his union conversations with the employees as follows:

> I would say, what is your view point on the union. What is your opinion? That was at this particular meeting—the one and only—that I had with them. And I just wanted to hear what they had to say. Not to ask whether they were going to join or not, just if they had an opinion. Everybody is suppose to have one.

Mancell also admitted approaching two other employees, Will Chapman and Thomas Jackson, and saying basically the same thing as above to those employees. Mancell denied he ever told the employees that if the Union came in the employees would go on strike. Instead, he testified that he told the employees that "[t]hey might have a strike."

Discussion

Despite his denial, Robert Mancell's testimony regarding the contents of his conversations reveals that he did interrogate employees concerning their "opinion" or "view point on the union." In view of that admission and my observation of Bertha Smith's demeanor, I shall credit her version of the conversation. Even though Smith was discharged by Respondent for alleged misconduct, she appeared to answer Respondent's questions about her discharge, as well as questions about her conversation with Mancell, candidly.

Conclusion

In line with my findings above, and in consideration of the credited testimony of Bertha Smith, and evidence of other violative conduct of Respondent during that same period of time, I find that Robert Mancell illegally interrogated employee Smith about her and other employees union activities.

R. Edward Silvey

Former employee Willie Freeman testified that he had attended an employee meeting at the hospital in the early part of February 1981, conducted by Silvey. Freeman testified:

> At this meeting Mr. Silvey said that the union can cause a lot of trouble. The union causes strikes and violence. We would be out without any pay. The union would set up picket lines and others would come across the line; this would be bad.
> He also added that we would be out without pay. All we would have would be bills. And he said have the union sign a statement as to what they can guarantee you. He held up a blank sheet of paper and said this is where you start with the union.
> He said the union can't force Baton Rouge General to do anything. Such as your raises and so forth.
>
> Then he had some newspaper clippings also he would like for us to read. I didn't read any of them. This meeting lasted about an hour, close to that.
>
> . . . .
> He said that—that Baton Rouge General would hire other people and if they could come into the hospital it would cause trouble.
>
> . . . .
> And strikes would, you know, have us out with no pay.

Edward Silvey admitted that he was one of the speakers during the group meetings to employees regarding union organization. Silvey was asked if he told the employees that if the Union was successful that bargaining would commence from scratch. He responded that he did not believe he said it like that but that he held up a piece of paper and said this is a blank piece of paper and that we would bargain in good faith and that benefits or wages could go up or down or they could remain the same.

Discussion

Willie Freeman's testimony appears to follow the general scope of issues covered in the written text. As in the situations noted earlier, I am convinced, and find, that Silvey's comments during this meeing were in accord with the written text.

Conclusion

I shall consider Silvey's presentation, along with addresses by other supervisors below.

S. The Group Meetings

1. The first series of group meetings

The record evidence reveals that the unfair labor practice contentions regarding the group meetings when speakers addressed groups of employees—(other than those indicated above where prepared texts were not used)—involved the first of Respondent's several speeches. That speech was used in meetings beginning on February 9, 1981.

As indicated above, I have credited evidence showing that the prepared text of that first series of meetings, which was received in evidence, was read to employees at the group meetings. A reading of the text reveals a clever antiunion speech showing that Respondent was strongly opposed to the union efforts of its employees. In fact, the speech clearly states that was Respondent's position.

However, no evidence was offered to show that any of the information revealed in the speech was untrue.

The speech was carefully constructed to show employees the dangers that may result from unionization. After identifying the object of the talk, the text states Respondent's position as being "100 percent against having a union in the Hospital." The text then summarizes the procedure for an NLRB election.

Next the text deals with the alleged union promises and counters with Respondent's version of what will occur if the Union wins the election, by asking, "Will you like to see a copy of the union contract in the Hospital if the union should win an election here?" The speaker holds up a blank sheet of paper, which is shortly followed by the following, inter alia:

> If the union should win an election here—and we don't believe that is going to happen, but just assume for a moment that it did—the hospital would be obligated to bargain in good faith with the union. That is all. We would do that bargaining with an intention of reaching an agreement. You should know, though, that there would be no automatic wage increases, no automatic benefits improvements, no automatic policies, no automatic anything else.
> We would start right from this blank sheet of paper, and not one word, not one sentence, not one paragraph would go on that sheet of paper unless the hospital and the union agreed that it should be on there. Bargaining begins at the zero point, and everything which you currently have—your paid holidays, your wages, your vacations, your hospitalization insurance, your retirement plan—everything would go on the bargaining table and be subject to the give and take of bargaining.
>
> Under the law, the only thing that the Hospital would be required to do should the union win the election, is to sit down and bargain in good faith over your pay and your jobs. We would do that. A union win, however, would mean an automatic increase in nothing! Here is the proof of what I am saying (hold up copy of Government leaflet). Let me read the section which is circled in red. (You read indicated phrase.) That's the law and we would obey the law.
> Before you think about voting for the union, you need to know how bargaining works. You should understand that bargaining can be cold-blooded and impersonal. Nothing is automatic about bargaining between a hospital and a union. No one knows what will happen or what will come out of bargaining. The union has made a lot of promises already and will probably be making more about their getting you more pay, more benefits, and that you will not have to work so hard. That's the name of the game with unions—promises. Under the law, there is absolutely no limit on how extravagant promises can be—the sky is the limit!

The cases have customarily found that threats to bargain from scratch, or from a blank sheet of paper, do not violate Section 8(a)(1), when the context of the statement shows the comments relate to the give and take of bargaining and when it is revealed that benefits may go up or down during negotiations. I find that to be the case here. General Electric Co., 246 NLRB 1103, 1107 (1979); Delchamps, Inc., 244 NLRB 366, 372 (1979); Rapid Mfg. Co., 239 NLRB 465, 471, 472 (1978).

Following the above, the speakers cited cases indicating that an employer may inform its employees that bargaining would have to begin at the zero point and that bargaining may actually result in reduced benefits.

Subsequently, the speaker asked what may the Union do if its demands are rejected during negotiations and he responded that the "[s]trike is the only weapon." The speaker then points out, inter alia, that strikers do not get paid; that, in Louisiana, strikers do not get unemployment compensation; and that strikers could lose their jobs because Respondent has the right to replace strikers with new employees.

In considering this portion, I noticed that the speaker did not specifically contend that strikes were inevitable when a union is selected. Rather, the text indicates, inter alia:

> What would happen if we said NO to the union's demands? What could the union do? What would the union do? What could the union do to try to force us to give in to their demands. There's only one thing that the union could do to try to force us to give in to their demands—and that would be call you out on strike. The strike is the only weapon that > the union has to try to force the Hospital into giving in to its demands—and you would be the union's ammunition.

The above statement may constitute an exaggeration. Although the power to strike, or the strike itself, may be one of the Union's strongest weapons, it is not the "only weapon" as indicated in the text. However, I find that statement does not constitute misrepresentation in view of the strike being the most likely recognized weapon available to labor organizations. Where, as here, the speech does not stress that a strike is inevitable, no violation is found (see Tipton Electric Co., 242 NLRB 202 (1979)).

Moreover, an employer does not violate the Act by telling employees they will not receive pay during a strike and that it has the right to replace economic strikers.[7] (See discussion in Puritech Industries, 246 NLRB 618, 622 (1979).)

The speech then deals with the examples of strikers losing out—examples of strikers being replaced at work during a strike.

The text then addresses itself to violence in strikes with the statement, "Unfortunately, along with strikes very often comes violence." This is followed by specific examples of death and serious injury occurring during strikes.

Subsequently, the text advised the employees that it is difficult to remove a union once employees select one, but subsequently decide they made a mistake.

The speech then closes with the following:

> Mr. Kirkpatrick and Mr. Sawyer asked that you discuss this important matter among yourselves and with your supervisors. If any union pushers ask you to vote for the union, demand a written, signed, notarized guarantee that you won't lose your job—you won't be involved in a strike or in strike violence. Get it in writing—demand proof! You shouldn't take a chance on the outside union organizer and their strike—happy union. They have members out of work now and they are simply looking for someone—you—to make up the money which those out of work people are no longer paying. Make no mistakes—this whole thing is nothing but a big money deal for the union and the union's bosses. They plan on taking over and you are right to figure a hundred thousand dollars from you, each and every year, if they can get in here and can get their hands in your pockets.
> Well, that is all we have time to cover today. But—if you have any questions or comments about what was covered, feel free to ask those questions or voice those comments. We hope we have cleared up some of the mysteries surrounding what the union can and cannot do. If anything later, you are unsure of something we have covered or that the union has claimed—we encourage you to ask your supervisor or come by and see another member of management. We want to be sure you get all the truthful answers to your questions before this election.
> Are there any questions?

I find the above speech troublesome. It comes close to speeches found illegal by the Board and courts. Nevertheless, I am constrained to find that no violations were proved. The speeches do not advise the employees of the inevitable consequences of unionization. It does, with a heavy hand, alert the employees to some of the most blatant examples of what has occurred during other union campaigns. However, even in consideration of the entire text against the background of unfair labor practices found herein, I am unable to find anything that ventures into the area of illegal threats or coercion. Reliable Mfg. Corp., 240 NLRB 90, 100 (1979).

2. Improved benefits

The General Counsel alleges that Respondent violated Section 8(a)(1) by changing from a retirement system that, among other things, required employee contributions to one requiring no employee contributions, and by changing its policy regarding employee parking in its garage to permit the employees to park free during the union organizing campaign.

There appears to be no dispute regarding the facts. Respondent learned of the union campaign on or before November 24, 1980, when the Union wrote Respondent advising it of the campaign and naming certain employees on the organizing committee.

By notice to all employees dated December 2, 1980, Respondent advised that effective with the pay period starting December 14 there would no longer be a charge to employees for parking in the parking garage.

By notice to all employees dated January 12, 1981, Respondent advised that "[e]ffective January 1, 1981, the Board of Trustees has approved a retirement program which is fully funded by the Hospital."

On January 15, 1981, the Union filed its representation petition.

Employer's are generally found to violate Section 8(a)(1) by announcing improved benefits during an election campaign unless the evidence reveals that the employer would have announced and granted those improved benefits even in the absence of the union. Tekform Products Co., 229 NLRB 733, 742, 743 (1977).

3. The pension plan

Prior to January 1, 1970, Respondent, along with two other hospitals in Louisiana, was a Baptist institution and its retirement plan was administered by the Southern Baptist Convention. Even though Respondent ceased being a Baptist institution in 1970, the Southern Baptist Convention continued to administer its retirement plan. The Employment Retirement Security Act of 1974 (ERISA) granted certain exemptions to churches. Due to Respondent's unique position as a former institution of the Baptist Church, with its retirement plan currently administered by that church's governing body, questions, arose as to its entitlement to those exemptions.

[7] The text shows from its contexts that it was addressing economic strikes—the context indicates the speaker is referring to a strike resulting from rejection of the union negotiating demands.

By an August 9, 1978 letter from the Annuity Board of the Southern Baptist Convention's (Annuity Board) general counsel, Respondent was notified that the Annuity Board was seeking clarification from Internal Revenue Service and the Department of Labor, concerning its entitlement under the Internal Revenue code as a tax shelter annuity program. That letter advised that similar church plans had obtained favorable rulings from the government agencies.

By its letter to the Southern Baptist Annuity Board dated February 27, 1979, Respondent advised that it had learned that the two other Louisiana hospitals that were formerly Baptist institutions had withdrawn from the Annuity Board. The letter asked for an opinion concerning whether Respondent should also withdraw in light of decisions and problems regarding ERISA. The Annuity Board responded on March 8, 1979, by recommending that Respondent investigate withdrawal from the Annuity Board and advising that the ERISA questions had not been resolved.

Minutes from committees under Respondent's board of trustees and letters to outside agencies, that were received in evidence, show further study, investigation, and consideration was given to the possible withdrawal of Respondent's employees' retirement plan from the Annuity Board during the period May 4, 1979, through December 22, 1980.

The unrebutted evidence indicated that during the above-mentioned period of time, more and more attention was given to withdrawal from the Southern Baptist Annuity Board due to the ERISA problems and due to the low interest rate received from the Annuity Board.

Louis Champagne testified that Respondent was notified of an amendment to ERISA effective September 26, 1980. That amendment clarified Respondent's status. Whereas before the September 26, 1980 amendment, Respondent felt it may possibly "grandfather" under the ERISA exemptions as a former church institution, that amendment indicated that continued church exemptions were no longer possible for Respondent.

Against that background, the personnel committee of Respondent's board of trustees was notified on December 22, 1980, that retirement moneys would be placed with a private insurance company. By letter dated January 2, 1981, Respondent notified the Annuity Board of its decision effective January 1, 1981, to change its retirement plan and place the funds with Union Mutual Insurance Company. Union Mutual submitted its plan to Respondent on July 10, 1980.

The above evidence conclusively proves that initial events necessitating Respondent's change in the employees' pension plan predated the union organizing campaign by several years. Although some of the consequent events occurred after the Union first appeared, some of those material events, such as the September 26, 1980 ERISA amendment, were clearly beyond Respondent's control. Moreover, the actual plan that was adopted by Respondent was submitted on July 10, 1980. There was no showing that Respondent was aware of its employees' union campaign when it first considered Union Mutual's proposal.

Moreover, the timing of Respondent's change appears logical in view of the above evidence. The funds held by the Southern Baptist Annuity Board exceeded $2 million. In view of the facts establishing that Respondent received Union Mutual's proposal in July 1980, and the ERISA amendments becoming effective September 26, 1980, I do not find that Respondent unduly delayed implementation to coincide with the union campaign. The January 1, 1981 effectuation of the plan evidences prompt and reasonable action under the circumstances regardless of the timing of the union campaign. The evidence is convincing, and I find, that Respondent would have implemented the new plan on January 1, 1981, in the absence of the union organizing campaign. Therefore, I find that the General Counsel has failed to prove a violation by Respondent in implementing the new pension plan in January 1981.

4. Free parking

Respondent opened its parking garage in August 1977. By notice dated August 5, 1977, employees were notified of parking privileges in the garage with fees at the rate of $6.92 per pay period.

Through its news to employees publication, "The Vine," dated May 31, 1978, Respondent notified its employees of a reduction in parking fees to $4.62 per pay period.

Louis Champagne testified without rebuttal that by 1980 Respondent was providing free parking in the garage as an encouragement to the evening and night-shift employees to park in the garage as a security measure.

According to Respondent's comptroller, Lynn Lanoux, he learned that medicare was changing their attitude regarding accountability of reimbursable parking cost. Funds were available to reimburse hospitals for parking of staff and employees as opposed to visitors. The attitude change affected whether the hospital could simply allot certain areas to staff and employees parking as opposed to the old method of accounting for the parking on an individual-by-individual basis. Against that background, Lanoux was directed in the summer of 1980 to investigate whether it was beneficial to Respondent to continue the system of charging certain employees parking fees or changing to a system that would provide for medicare reimbursement—(allowable as cost attributable to that percentage of patient care that was subject to medicare reimbursement)—for all or a portion of the parking cost.

By memo to Respondent's president dated November 28, 1980, Lanoux advised that his study showed the parking garage could receive pro rata medicare reimbursement for staff employee parking of approximately $54,000 per year as opposed to fees currently collected from employees of $50,000 per year. Lanoux recommended that Respondent discard the procedure of charging fees to employees and seek reimbursement from medicare.

Subsequently, Lanoux' recommendation was approved and the employees were notified of the change on December 2, 1980.

Again, as in the case of the pension plan, I note that Respondent's actions that ultimately resulted in free parking for the day-shift employees commenced before it had knowledge of the union campaign. The employees other than day shift received free parking in the garage and Lanoux's study, which resulted in free parking for the day shift, all occurred before the union campaign.

The evidence reveals that Respondent acted properly and in a logical fashion following Lanoux's November 28, 1980 recommendation. I find, under the circumstances, that the facts demonstrate that the change in parking would have resulted absent the employees' union activities. Therefore, I shall recommend dismissal of the allegation.

II. THE 8(A)(3) ALLEGATIONS

A. The Layoffs

The complaint alleges that Respondent terminated or laid off employees Charles Hamilton, Ethyl Booker, Jacqueline Jones, Mae Ella LaCour, Susan Quiett, Ruth Stevenson, Teresa Thomas, Lucille Wilson, and Warner Wilson because of their protected activities.

The evidence conclusively proves, and the General Counsel concedes in its brief, that Respondent's decision to lay off a substantial segment of its work force during February 1981 was motivated by economic considerations. Due to a continuing decline in its patient census and its continuing inability to recruit and retain a sufficient number of registered nurses to support its employee complement, Respondent decided to lay off some 53 employees from all departments including 4 employees in housekeeping, 1 leaderman in the laundry, and 20 employees from nursing services.

The evidence revealed that an acceptable level of staff-to-patient census was in the range of 3.3 to 3.6 employees per patient. In December 1980, Respondent was operating at the level of 4.5 employees per patient. Although some reduction in the number of employees had been achieved through normal attrition, it became apparent during early 1981 that a layoff would be necessary in order to reach an acceptable level of employees.

In view of the unrebutted evidence and the General Counsel's concession that the overall decision was not discriminatorily motivated, I find that Respondent's overall layoff action was not illegal.

The General Counsel does contend and I shall now consider, whether Respondent engaged in illegal conduct by selecting for layoff, among others, the nine alleged discriminatees.

1. The nurses aides

The General Counsel contends that of all the nurses aides selected for layoff, the following would not have been selected but for their union activity: (1) Ethyl Booker, (2) Mae Ella LaCour, (3) Ruth Stevenson, (4) Teresa Thomas, and (5) Lucille Wilson.

Vice President Edward Silvey testified regarding the need to reduce the number of nurses aides. In the spring of 1980, Silvey, in consultation with Tom Alexander, decided a staff reduction was necessary. It was decided that the reduction, which would be attempted by attrition, should involve 60 nurses aides. However, by late 1980, 108 nurses aides were still employed. The reduction by attrition had been only partly successful. Forty of the needed 60 reductions had occurred through attrition. In December 1980, Silvey, along with Alexander, decided it would be necessary to lay off 20 employees in nursing services, 18 nurses aides, and 2 operating room aides.

Silvey advised the director of nursing services to select the employees for layoff based on job performance.

Joyce Burkeen was director of nursing services at material times. Burkeen testified that on being advised by Silvey to select employees for layoff, she discussed the aides' job performance with their supervisors and reviewed all the employees' personnel records. Through that initial process, approximately 40 employees were found to be outside the area of consideration for layoffs because of their good performance. Those 40 were thereupon eliminated from the selection process.

Of the remaining employees, Burkeen decided on a process of evaluating job performance on the basis of the employees availability at work. She elected to select those employees with the poorest absentee-tardy records. Each employee file was examined and a list established on the basis of the employees with the most absences and tardies over the past 1-year period. However, according to Burkeen, 3 of the top 20 were passed over and not selected for layoff.

Those three included one employee that was out sick because she had contacted hepatitis at work in the hospital and was drawing workmen's compensation benefits. Burkeen testified that she was advised that state law prohibited discharge of an employee because of illness that resulted in a workmen's compensation award.

Another of the three was a nursing student working as a nurses aide. Her absences were frequent because of class conflicts. Burkeen testified that arrangement was made when the employee was hired and the hospital was in hope of retaining the employee on her graduation as a registered nurse—a critical job that the hospital had trouble manning and that contributed to the need to lay off nurses aides. Therefore, Burkeen elected to excuse that employee's absences for purposes of layoff consideration.

The third employee passed over for layoff was an employee that frequently volunteered to work back-to-back shifts and received a number of tardies when she took too long returning after working consecutive shifts—i.e., 16 hours. Burkeen excused that particular type of tardiness due to the strain of working consecutive shifts and having only 8 hours before returning the next day.

In order to prevail, in view of my finding that the overall decision to lay off the employees in the nursing services was legally motivated, the General Counsel must now establish that either (1) the overall layoff selection process in nursing services was discriminatorily designed; or (2) the process was discriminatorily applied in such a fashion that Respondent was able to unfairly select the named discriminatees.

Regarding item (1) above, the General Counsel offers no evidence showing that Burkeen's decision to select employees with the highest absentee/tardiness rates was discriminatorily designed. Obviously, other processes could have been used in measuring job performance, but no evidence was introduced illustrating that Burkeen's absentee/tardiness method was used because it provided a means to discriminate; nor was any other grounds offered on which I could find fault with Burkeen's system. Burkeen testified that she resorted to the absentee/-tardiness procedure after examining the personnel files and determining the employee evaluations were not sufficiently reliable to use in that process. She stated that unfortunately she discovered that personnel records were not "very well kept." Burkeen's absentee/tardiness system appears on its face to be a logical, although perhaps an inexact method of judging performance, i.e., an employee does not perform well when they are not on the job. Therefore, I find no basis to determine that the method of selection was discriminatory.

Next, I must look to see if the system was discriminatorily applied.

Regardless of the apparent inequities involved in selecting an employee, perhaps a longtime employee such as several employees involved, on the basis of her absentee and tardiness record, and regardless of the extent of the employee's union activity and other elements tending to show a prima facie case, I must conclude Respondent acted lawfully if the employee would have been selected under the Burkeen system absent their union activities (see Wright Line, 251 NLRB 1083 (1980)). I shall consider, in making this analysis, Respondent's union animus that has been illustrated through the supervisors' speeches to employees and the numerous 8(a)(1) violations that I have found herein. I am also mindful of the timing of the layoffs coming a little over a month after the Union filed its representation petition. Additionally, I am aware of the evidence showing that employees Ethyl Booker, Mae Ella LaCour, Ruth Stevenson, Teresa Thomas, and Lucille Wilson engaged in union activities. Three of the alleged discriminatees, Booker, LaCour, and Thomas were included on the Union's organizing committee list mailed to Respondent on November 24, 1980. Ruth Stevenson handbilled for the Union at the hospital during early February 1981, and was allegedly seen by supervision. The company knowledge element is weak as to alleged discriminatee Lucille Wilson. There was no direct evidence showing awareness of Wilson's union feelings other than an alleged conversation involving Wilson and alleged Supervisor Bogen.

However, the above facts establish to my satisfaction that the General Counsel should prevail if it is shown that the above alleged discriminatees were treated in a discriminatory manner. Obviously, regardless of animus, knowledge, timing, and employee union activity, no allegation of illegal termination should survive absent a showing that the alleged discriminatees were treated with disparity.

In the instant case, 18 nurses aides were laid off during February 1981. Prior to that time some 40 other employees from nursing services had been eliminated through attrition.

Respondent proved that of those employees listed as members of the organizing committee in the Union's November 1980 letters, 20 remained in Respondent's employ on May 7, 1981, the day of the NLRB election. Three of the remaining 10 from the organizing committee voluntarily resigned before May 7. One member of the committee was discharged for neglect on duty and that employee was not alleged as a discriminatee. The six remaining union committee members were included in Respondent's layoff. Three of the six were nurses aides Booker, LaCour, and Thomas. The remaining three were also alleged by the General Counsel as discriminatees (see below).

As indicated above, the employees involved in Respondent's February 1981 reduction in force totaled 53 from all departments.

Concerning the specific number of absences or tardies by nurses aides, counsel for the General Counsel was supplied with those records that she used in her Rule 611(c) examination of Director of Nursing Burkeen. There was no evidence offered showing that any of the five alleged nurses aides discriminatees failed to qualify for layoff on the basis of those absentee/tardy records for the year before the layoff.

Therefore, I must find that the General Counsel failed to establish that former employees Booker, LaCour, Stevenson, Thomas, and Wilson were treated in a disparate manner. It is well established that an employee does not receive immunity from personnel actions simply by engaging in union or protected activity. There must be a showing that the respective employee was treated differently. Here, that element was not proven. I shall recommend dismissal of the allegations regarding those five alleged discriminatees. International Computaprint Corp., 261 NLRB 1106 (1982).

2. The housekeeping employees

The General Counsel alleges that Respondent laid off employees Jacqueline Jones and Susan Quiett because of their union activities. Both Jones and Quiett were employed as maids in housekeeping.

Jones and Quiett were among the four maids laid off during Respondent's February 19, 1981 reduction in force. As shown above, the force reduction, which included a total of 53 employees, was found to have been economically motivated. The sole question remaining is whether, as the General Counsel alleges, employees Jones and Quiett were selected for layoff because of their protected activities.

Bill Snider, hospital manager for the management service charged with overseeing Respondent's laundry and housekeeping department, testified that shortly after coming to the hospital in April 1980 he advised Tom Alexander that a reduction of housekeeping employees was necessary. However, by December 1980, Respondent had reduced the housekeeping complement by only five employees through attrition. In February, with housekeeping remaining overstaffed, the head of housekeeping, Melda Pace, was advised to reduce the housekeeping force by four through layoffs.

Pace, faced with an assignment similar to that of Joyce Burkeen in nursing, decided on a procedure of selecting those four employees with the largest number of disciplinary offenses in their personnel records. The four selected were Susan Quiett and Sharon Thompson with five conferences[8] each; and Jacqueline Jones and J. Tate with four and three conferences, respectively. A listing of the conferences among all housekeeping employees showed that no maid other than Thompson, who was laid off, received as many disciplinary conferences as alleged discriminatees Quiett and Jones.

a. Susan Quiett

Susan Quiett's personnel file included reports on conferences with employee dated December 30, 8, and 7, 1979, and July 16 and May 28, 1980. However, none of the disciplinary incidents were alleged as violations.[9] Moreover, the General Counsel does not argue and no evidence was offered to prove that any of those disciplinary actions were precipitated by Quiett's union activities. I make special note of that fact because the obvious concern dictated by an awareness that at least three of Quiett's conferences occurred after Respondent learned of Quiett's prounion position—i.e., on November 24, 1980, the Union notified Respondent that Quiett, among others, was on the Union's organizing committee. Thereafter, on December 7, 1980, and afterwards, Quiett engaged in handbilling for the Union near the hospital and her activity in that regard was observed by supervision. Two of Quiett's conferences occurred in alarming proximity to her initial handbilling activity. On December 7, the day she first handbilled, Quiett, along with four other employees, received a conference report from Supervisor David Robertson for overstaying their break. Nevertheless, Susan Quiett's testimony removed doubt regarding the integrity of that incident. Although Quiett testified that she was not shown the conference report, she admitted that David Robertson "did demand we get up. He said that we had over stayed our break." The record shows that Robertson also conferenced the other employees involved in that incident.

On December 8, Melda Pace completed a conference report on Susan Quiett for "late 12 times, self-sick 9 times, absent 9 times, illness in family 15 times."[10] When questioned about the December 8, 1980 conference report, Susan Quiett admitted the conference with Pace even though she testified that Pace told her the report would not go on the record if Quiett did not sign it.[11] Moreover, it appears that this was not an incident where Pace arbitrarily selected Susan Quiett for absentee counseling. Counseling reports were offered for the four housekeeping employees laid off in February. All four received counseling in December 1980 for attendance problems; Joann Tate on December 29, 1980; Jacqueline Jones on December 16, 1980; Susan Quiett on December 8, 1980; and Sharon Thompson on December 9, 1980.[12]

Likewise, concerning Susan Quiett's last conference report before she was laid off, when questioned about the December 30, 1980 conference report on the condition of her uniform, Quiett admitted the occurrence.

Susan Quiett also acknowledged awareness of her earlier conference reports dated before her union activity—a verbal warning on July 16, 1980, and a warning for smoking dated May 28, 1980. The May 28, 1980 conference was the only one of her five conference reports that was signed by Quiett.

Despite Quiett's candid testimony acknowledging her various conferences, I am deeply troubled by their timing, especially when viewed against Respondent's proven animus, Quiett's very visible union involvement and Respondent's knowledge of that involvement, and the overall 8(a)(1) activity, and Quiett's direct involvement in some of that activity. Moreover, as shown below, I am convinced that Quiett was awarded more burdensome work assignments following Respondent's learning of the union activities.[13]

I am also mindful of various devices by which warnings may be unduly increased during a union campaign, but the evidence does not establish that occurred here. Nor was there evidence that Susan Quiett's conferences involved occurrences for which employees were not routinely conferenced.

The bottom line here, as in the case of the nurses aides, is that the evidence failed to prove disparity. There was no showing that the selection process was discriminatorily designed and there was no showing that Susan Quiett was discriminatorily disciplined on the five occasions that led to her layoff. Regardless of my feelings of concern, I am not empowered to substitute conjecture and suspicion for evidence. Regardless of the difficulty of proof, the case must fail absent a showing of discriminatory treatment. (International Computaprint Corp., 261 NLRB 1106.)

b. Jacqueline Jones

The record proved that Jones received four conference reports during the year before she was laid off.

On December 16, 1980, Jacqueline Jones received a conference report from Melda Pace for her attendance during the December 30, 1979, through December 8, 1980 period. The conference reflected "late 32 times, self-sick 17 times, absent 7 times, illness in family 4 times. The conference report was signed by Jacqueline Jones.

On December 5, 1980, Jacqueline Jones received a conference report from Supervisor Jones for questioning

[8] Disciplinary writeups were referred to as conferences.

[9] The General Counsel does allege as an 8(a)(3) violation that, beginning in the first week of December 1980, Respondent changed Susan Quiett's work assignments because of her union activities. The evidence supports that allegation as shown hereafter.

[10] The conference report covered the December 30, 1979, through December 8, 1980 period. In addition to the above, the conference report showed, "maternity leave: January 26, 1980–April 8, 1980. Surgery leave: August 24, 1980–October 27, 1980."

[11] Although I found Quiett to be a credible witness, I do not credit her testimony in this regard. It simply makes no sense that the supervisor would reward an employee because the employee refused to sign a conference report. I am convinced that Quiett misunderstood what Melda Pace said on that occasion.

[12] Jacqueline Jones testified that December was the first time housekeeping employees had been called in and counseled about their attendance. However, Jones testified that the entire department was included in that procedure. Therefore, even if this conference report is discontinued regarding all employees counseled, there would be no change in the relative positions of the employees on the listing of conference reports.

[13] The General Counsel did not argue and the evidence failed to show that Quiett's changed work assignments contributed to any of the conference reports she received in December 1980.

her work assignments, telling supervisors that they were scared of another employee, and telling that employee that the supervisors must be "scared" of her. Jacqueline Jones acknowledged that particular incident in her testimony although she contested some of the facts related in the conference report.

On September 16, 1980, Jones was awarded a conference report for "not reporting to work" and "not giving correct information." Jones admitted the incident occurred as a result of her involvement in a police action at a party she attended that resulted in her not being able to work. Jacqueline Jones admitted receiving the conference report.

Jones denied knowledge of an incident and a conference dated September 20, 1980. That conference report was signed by Supervisor David Robertson.[14] Following Jones' testimony, Respondent called David Robertson, who testified as follows regarding the September 20, 1980 conference report:

> A. Yes, I went in and I told her that her break was over and it was time to leave. And as I was walking away she mumbled something and I turned around and said, what was that?
> And the words was, you're getting kind of smart here lately.
> Q. And did you write her up?
> A. Yes, I didn't write up—I wrote—what I did I just wrote the paper that I had warned her of overstaying her break. And as far as writing it up, it wasn't what you'd call a writeup, it was just a warning so I could know myself that I had told her about this incident.

On cross-examination, Robertson admitted that he did not tell Jones he had written the September 20, 1980 conference report. Robertson's above testimony is unrebutted because Jones was not called to deny his specific testimony regarding the incident.

As in the case of Susan Quiett, I find the record fails to justify a determination that Jones was treated in a discriminatorily manner. The only housekeeping employees with more conference reports than Jones were Susan Quiett and Sharton Thompson, both of whom were also laid off. The record fails to show that Jones' December 16, 1980 conference on attendance was discriminatorily awarded because there was no showing that any housekeeping employee with a worse attendance/trady record failed to receive a conference report. Moreover, there was no showing that any employee would not have been awarded conference reports, as Jones was on December 5, September 16, and September 20, 1980.

In view of the above, I reluctantly find that the evidence does not support a determination that either Susan Quiett or Jacqueline Jones was discriminatorily laid off.

c. Charles Hamilton

The General Counsel's case in support of Charles Hamilton is totally dependent on my determining Hamilton was not a supervisor. In that regard, counsel for the General Counsel contends, "Hamilton's refusal to withdraw support from the union was the precipitating event which caused his discharge." In view of my determination that Hamilton was a supervisor, the General Counsel's case must fail. An employer may legally discharge a supervisor for refusing to withdraw support for a union.

I am in agreement with counsel for the General Counsel's contention that Hamilton's extensive activities on the Union's behalf were known to management. Moreover, as shown above, I credit the testimony showing that Hamilton was warned to cease his union activities or risk further disciplinary action.

It is apparent from the record that Hamilton, a valued employee, was treated with disparity. But for my finding that Hamilton was a supervisor, I would have found a violation. The facts reveal that Hamilton was selected for termination because of his union activities. However, as shown above, that does not constitute a violation in view of his supervisory position. Parker-Robb Chevrolet, 262 NLRB 402 (1982).

d. Warner Wilson

Wilson, like Charles Hamilton, was cautioned by supervision to cease his union activities (see above). Wilson's union activities were extensive. He signed one, and distributed other, union authorization cards. As shown above, Wilson had conversations with Supervisor Betz about the Union and Betz cautioned Wilson that they were out to get Wilson's job. Also, as shown above, Wilson was an outspoken advocate of the Union during one of Respondent's group meetings. Therefore, the record establishes, as it did in all the termination cases discussed above, the elements of animus, knowledge, union activities, and timing. Additionally, Wilson was threatened with discharge because of his union activities.

Moreover, the evidence also revealed that Wilson was treated in a discriminatory fashion. There is no question but that Warner Wilson was a valued employee—Respondent did not argue otherwise. He held the responsible position of leaderman and, as shown above, on regular occasions he was the senior employee present on the job with significant responsibilities.

Respondent contends it was necessary to lay off one of its leadermen. However, no evidence was offered to show why a leaderman position was selected over another nonsupervisory position. Respondent alleged that Wilson was the junior leaderman. However, Wilson's testimony, which I credit as shown above, demonstrated that he was senior to the woman who occupied the leaderman position on the night shift. Wilson testified that he was never offered the opportunity to transfer to the night shift to avoid lay off.

[14] Jones did not sign her September 20, 1980 conference report and the document does not show that she refused to sign. However, the conference reports received in evidence on housekeeping employees Jones, Tate, Quiett, and Thompson (the laid-off employees) show numerous conference reports that do not contain either the employee's signature or a "refused to sign" notation. David Robertson issued conference reports to Jones, Quiett, and Thompson and none of his reports contain either the employee's signature or the notation "refused to sign." Also, Supervisors Johnson and Courville issued conference reports that do not include the employee's signature or an indication "refused to sign."

Therefore, the evidence is overwhelming and I find that Warner Wilson was laid off on February 20, 1980, because of his union activities.

e. Susan Quiett's change in work assignments

Susan Quiett testified that for the first time during her employment with Respondent, on December 8, 1980, the day following her first handbilling for the Union near the hospital, she was reassigned three different work areas during her shift. She was assigned 3d west, but subsequently sent to 4th west; later to 2d west and finally back to 3d west. Quiett complained that after December 8 she was assigned to clean and mop walls and to mop brick on the ground floor in pediatrics without assistance even though that work was normally performed by porters. She was also assigned to sweep and mop stairs from the fifth floor down to the ground floor. Additionally, Quiett was assigned to clean 42 rooms without help. According to Quiett, she had not received similar assignments before her handbilling activity. He request for assistance from Supervisor Cyrus was denied.

Melda Pace testified that "Hard cleanup jobs" such as scrubbing walls, were normally performed by both maids and porters. When asked if those jobs normally involved more than one person, Pace testified, "It would be according to how big an area it would be."

Respondent offered assignment records that appeared to show the general assignments of the relief maids, and contended that those records demonstrated that Quiett's project and patient room assignments had remained consistent.

However, I am convinced on the basis of Quiett's testimony, which I credit, that she was assigned more difficult jobs without assistance after being observed handbilling for the Union. Such activity provides a convenient means for an employer to express how adverse consequences may flow from union activity and that action is prohibited by Section 8(a)(1) and (3) of the Act.

B. Denial of a Merit Wage Increase

Counsel for the General Counsel contends that Ethel Booker was denied a merit pay increase in January 1981 because of her union activities. Booker testified that Supervisor Gillespie promised her an increase in January 1981, following an evaluation. When Booker did not receive the increase, she inquired of Gillespie and was referred to Personnel Director Champagne. However, Booker never had an opportunity to discuss the matter with Champagne.

Respondent, through documents (including checks signed by Booker), and testimony of Louis Champagne, offered evidence that Ethel Booker received a general increase in pay in September 1980, and a merit increase effective October 19, 1980. Champagne testified that the above increases brought Booker to the top of her pay scale, making her ineligible for an increase in January 1981.

I find Respondent's evidence convincing. The General Counsel did not overcome the evidence that Booker was ineligible for a January raise due to her earlier increases. Therefore, I find that if Booker was informed by Gillespie that she was scheduled to receive another wage increase in January, that information was incorrect. I am inclined to believe that Booker was mistaken and that she confused the time she received information about her merit raise. In any event, I credit the evidence showing that Booker was not denied an increase, which she would have received but for her union activities.

III. ADDITIONAL OBJECTIONS EVIDENCE

At the beginning of the hearing, the Union called three witnesses that it relied on, in addition to evidence offered during the unfair labor practice case mentioned above,[15] to support its objections.

A. Margaret Walter

The first witness for the Union, employee Margaret Walter, testified she attended several meetings regarding the union campaign, which were conducted by Respondent at the hospital. Walter testified the first of those meetings was held in February and Sawyer and Walters (from X-ray) spoke. Walter recalled Sawyer mentioning the following:

> And then if they a union come in the first thing it would do was to call us out on strike. And, then, if we went out on strike our time that we go out on strike wouldn't—we wouldn't be paid for. And they would have somebody to come in and replace us.
> Q. Okay. What else did he say about strikes?
>
> A. Well, I think, you know, I think at that meeting that was mainly all that he said.
> Q. All right. Did he cite any examples of strikes?
> A. Well, Mr. Walters read some things about strikes happening in other hospitals over the state. And one particular one, I think, was about employees who had been off 107 days or so. And he told how much money the people had lost from being out on strike. And that we wouldn't get paid if we go out any certain length of time like this. And that they would have to come in and replace us because they couldn't stand for us to be out.
> Q. Okay, you said he read from something. Did he have some document in his hand that he was reading from?
>
> A. Well, he had some type of paper, yes. I don't know exactly what it was.
> Q. All right. Did you get a copy of anything to read while this was going on?
>
> A. No.
> Q. Okay. Did he—Mr. Sawyer indicate what the—if the union won the election, how the hospital was going to bargain with the union?
> A. Well, he said that they would start off with—all of the benefits that we had then, we would have nothing. We would start off with a blank sheet of paper when they would sit down to the bargaining table.

[15] See fn. 3 above.

And we would start there and we would—it was no guarantee that we would get anything if they bargained with the union.

Q. Do you recall that Mr. Sawyer said what would happen if there was a strike and when it was over—what the consequences of the strike would be once it was over?

A. Well, he said if we were called out on strike and we went out and struck, then, the time that we were out we didn't get paid for. And then we wouldn't be able to come back to our jobs.

Q. You would not—

A. We

Q. You would not be able to come back to your jobs?

A. Right, because they would replace us.

Q. All right. When is the—that was the first meeting that you can remember. Did Mr. Walters say anything at this first meeting?

A. Well, he read from the paper about the strikes and he talked about—you know, he talked about the same thing; about strikes, during that meeting.

Walter attended a second meeting, some 2 or 3 weeks after the first. The speakers at that meeting were Munn and James (assistant director of food services). Her testimony was that Munn spoke first:

A. Well, he told us—the first thing that I can remember—he said his father was a member of a union but—which was no good—and that he thought unions was no good and it wasn't a good idea for us to have a union in the hospital.

Q. Okay, was he reading from something, as well?

A. Yeah, they did have a—some type of paper.

Q. I see. Did they hand out anything for you to read at this meeting?

A. Yeah, they gave us a booklet when we went in.

Q. Did the book have a title or a name?

A. I don't remember the title or name of it, but in the book they had all the different types of articles about striking in different places in different cities, hospitals and what not, for the unions.

Q. As best you can recall, can you tell us some of these places, what the book said, what it was about?

A. No, I can't remember exactly some of the places. But one particular picture in the book they talked about because it was a picture of violence being carried on at a strike. And they made the remark that would we want this to happen—that some of the people in this picture at this strike was killed at the time of the strike. And they said we didn't want that to happen here in Baton Rouge.

Q. I see. Again, at this meeting was anything said that if there was a strike, about what the consequences would be, once it was over, to you?

A. Well, Mr. Munn, he say that if we got the union in and they come to the bargaining table and they would bargain in good faith. But he also said that when you bargain in good faith it didn't really mean that we would get more than we had been. Probably it would mean that we would get less than what we had now.

Q. All right. That was his position on bargaining. What about on the—at the end of—if there was a strike, what would be the consequence to you as an employee?

A. Well, he said that if there was a strike and we would definitely be replaced and would not get our jobs back.

Q. You would not get your jobs back?

A. No.

Q. All right. Was that all that Mr. Munn said at the meeting?

A. Well, I think so.

Q. Okay, did Ms. James say anything, the assistant director of food services?

A. Yes, she read some documents about strikes at different places. And I can't remember where it was. But it was different cities and states, over a period of time. At different times they had strikes and things that happened during the strike.

Q. Okay, what—did she read from the same book that you—that they handed out at the meeting?

A. Well, I couldn't follow her in the book.

Q. Uh-huh.

A. I can't say for sure she wasn't reading from it, but when I tried to follow what article she was reading in the book I could never find the place she was reading from.

On the day before the May 8, 1981 election, according to Walter, she attended a third meeting. The speakers were Alexander and Jacobs. Shelia Jacobs spoke first:

A. Well, she gave us the procedures for voting and how—just what you do when you vote. Showed us a sample ballot and how to go about marking it.

Q. Okay, did she say anything else at this meeting?

A. Well, she said if the employees were off on election day—to come in and clock in and out—that they would be paid for it.

Q. I see. Did she say anything else?

A. Well, not too much more than that.

Q. Okay, then who spoke next?

A. Mr. Alexander.

Q. And what did he say?

A. Well, he talked mainly about Mr. Crayton.

Q. Who is Mr. Crayton?

A. Well, Mr. Crayton was one of the union representatives.

Q. Okay, go ahead.

A. He told us about Mr. Crayton being evicted or fired or something, from Lake Charles, during the strike. I don't know—he said something he didn't go for the Lake Charles peoples. And he didn't think he was the man that he would want to represent him.

B. Brenda Brown

Employee Brenda Brown also testified about the group meetings held by Respondent. Brown recalled that the speakers at the first meeting she attended in January 1981 were Betty Falgout and another counselor. Her testimony regarding that meeting was:

Q. All right, who spoke first?

A. The counsellor.

Q. All right, what did this counsellor say?

A. Well, he began talking on strikes out of a booklet, "Tell It Like It Is." And then they started talking about strikes.

Q. "Tell It Like It Is" was the name of the booklet?

A. Yes.

Q. All right. As close as you can recall, will you tell us what the counsellor said about strikes and how he used the booklet?

A. Well, as close as I can recall, strike—was saying that how it can hurt your family and can hurt you, may cause you to lose your job, someone causing you to lose your life or someone of your loved one's life. And it's just a whole tragedy in your life and your family.

Q. Did he say anything else about strikes, give any names of any hospitals or—

A. Well, he gave the name of one hospital. I don't recall—one in Lake Charles.

Q. Uh-huh.

A. I don't recall the name but somewhere in Lake Charles.

Q. Did they—did he bring out any other examples of the consequences of strikes?

A. Well, something—not just, you know, you could get hurt and while you are striking they can hire someone else to take your place. And he might even work for less to get the job while you're on strike. And that sometime some outsider can come in and cause a disturbance that will cause you to get into a disturbance and you might lose your life or a member of your family or something.

Q. Did the counsellor discuss—that spoke—discuss anything about the bargaining that would occur if the union won the election?

A. Yes.

Q. What did he say?

A. He said that if the union won the election they would go to the bargaining table with a blank sheet of paper and start from scratch.

Q. When you say "they" who do you mean?

A. I guess administration when you say "they."

Q. Okay. Would go with a blank sheet of paper with—what else did he say about that?

A. They would start from scratch and they don't have to agree to anything that would be said. They don't start from where your present salary is or anything. They start all over from the beginning. They will work up; they don't have to agree to anything.

Q. All right. Did he make any predictions about the results of this bargaining would be, for the employees?

A. He said it would be bad; you would come out with less than what you had from the bargaining. It could happen that way.

Q. Did the counsellor say anything about a union card—about signing a union card?

A. Yeah, that was at the second meeting I went to.

Q. All right. Well was there anything the counsellor said at the first meeting?

A. Well, they talked about strikes at manufacturing companies, and strikes at a hospital that he once worked for and the tragedy there.

A. What did he say?

A. People lost jobs; some was hired back, wasn't too many. And some lost their jobs. Some homes was burned or something or other. Exactly whose home it was I don't recall but he said that he recalled that happening. It was just an upset.

Q. I see. Did Ms. Falgout say anything at this meeting?

A. No, she didn't say anything until her turn came.

Q. All right. When her turn came did she say anything?

A. Just emphasized on what the counsellor said.

Brown attended a second group meeting in March 1981, and the speakers were Tom Hagen (vice president, chemical dependency unit) and Linda Alenbaugh (a head over nursing services). Tom Hagen spoke first:

A. Well, first he gave out "Tell It Like It Is." And they were reading from off some papers they had. And then they told us to open up the booklet. And they started—open to certain pages. And the page we opened up was to the salaries of the international union. And it showed the salaries people made.

Q. Uh-huh.

A. —That was being paid, how much these people was paying. And that's what it was, salary, first we talked about.

Q. Okay, what else did he say at the meeting?

A. He talked about Mr. Crayton and said that—that we—union dues—the dues that we paid would buy Mr. Crayton black cadillacs, and we could be buying our own needs for our purpose of life. And he was saying that how much money that they were making compared to what we were making. And instead of giving our money to them—union dues—how often they wanted it to be giving it to them—

Q. Uh-huh.

A. —to keep them in black cadillacs.

Q. All right. Anything else Mr. Hagen said at this meeting?

A. Well, yeah, he said that he would like everyone to come and vote and if you didn't have a way that they had some that would be working that day and just call—call and someone would pick you up and bring you and take you back.

Q. All right. Did—

A. But—

Q. Okay, excuse me. Did he say anything about negotiations at this meeting, bargaining?

A. No.

Q. Anything about strikes?

A. No.

Q. Did Ms. Alenbaugh spoke—speak at this meeting?

A. Yes.

Q. What did Ms. Alenbaugh say?

A. She spoke about fines and assessments.

Q. What did she say about fines and assessments?

A. She was telling us that if the union should get in and you signed cards for union dues to be paid, if you didn't pay your union dues in a certain length of time they would fine you. And you have to pay all that money at one time you'd lose your $100 something or other they give you—$100 death or something or other, you know, death of a family member, you know, if you're a union member.

C. Roger Thomas

Former employee Roger Thomas attended a group meeting in March 1981. The speakers were Tom Sawyer and Jim Walters. Thomas testified that Sawyer spoke first:

A. Well, it all begins about the union. And they passed out booklets telling—"Tell It Like It Is" booklets. And they discussed that—about how our benefits, we'd lose everything we have and we would start from a blank sheet. You know, they showed us a blank sheet of paper.

Q. Okay, is—when he brought up about the benefits and the blank sheet of paper can you tell us, as near as you can remember, exactly what Mr. Sawyer said about that?

A. Well, first he say that if the union get in we have to start all over again, blank sheet of paper. We'd lose everything.

Q. Uh-huh.

A. —our benefits. And the union's not going to promise anything that we should get it. We might get less or we might get more. But we will lose our benefits.

Q. Okay.

A. We'd start from zero and the union can't promise us anything.

Q. Uh-huh.

A. And in the booklet it showed strike, Coca Cola, and, you know, several people pushing and fighting on the strike. And this was discussed.

Q. Do you recall anything specifically in terms of what strike—did they mention any names of the hospitals or towns, or hospitals?

A. Well, it was in Lafayette. It was a picture of Coca Cola. It was East Jefferson Hospital and it was in Lafayette.

Thomas attended the second meeting 3 or 4 weeks after the first, which was also conducted by Sawyer and Walters:

Q. What did Mr. Sawyer say at the second meeting?

A. Well, basically on the same thing, benefits, a blank sheet of paper and about strikes.

Q. All right. What did he say about benefits?

A. Well, we can lose everything we have now and we'll have to start all over from zero.

Q. Okay, what did he say about strikes?

A. He really didn't say too much about strikes. The strike was the key word and the pictures. The pictures and strikes is what, you know, like using to upset a lot of people, you know. That we don't need the union here and if we go on strike this is what would happen, people fight among each other. Your car and something—you know, burn down your homes and all that. That was the thing that was used.

Q. Okay. Did he use the—at the second meeting did Mr. Sawyer say anything about the blank sheet of paper as he had in the first meeting?

A. Yes, he did.

Q. What did he say about that?

A. Well, he said that—okay, we would start all over from a blank sheet of paper. The union can't promise us anything; that they don't have to negotiate with the union or give anything. They have to start from blank. And we'll lose benefits; we'll start from zero. We might get more, we might not.

Q. Did you attend any other meetings?

A. No.

Discussion

The evidence is substantial that the "blank sheet of paper" comments were included in only the first of the group talks. I have credited testimony that the written text was used on that occasion. With that background, I am convinced that Roger Thomas was confused in his testimony regarding the subjects covered in the second group meeting that he attended. It appears, and I find, that his testimony in that regard actually refers to the first series of meetings. Therefore, I shall not credit his testimony to the extent it involves meetings other than those of the first series. Concerning the first series, I find the written text was used.

I was impressed with the demeanor of witnesses Margaret Walter and Brenda Brown and I credit their testimony regarding meetings after the first series. However, I see nothing in Brown's testimony that reveals objectionable conduct by Respondent during any of the subsequent meetings.

Regarding Walter, she testified that she attended a second group meeting some 2 or 3 weeks after the first and the speakers were Munn and James. According to Walter, Munn told the employees, among other things, "That if there was a strike and we would definitely be replaced and would not get our jobs back." Although Munn testified, he did not deny that he made the comment. I credit Walter's testimony in that regard.

Objections Findings

As shown above, the Union's objections include allegations of Respondent threatening its employees with loss of benefits, possible loss of jobs, and loss of previously enjoyed benefits. Also alleged are the matters included in the April 10, 1981 complaint in Cases 15–CA–8050 and 15–CA–8050–2

The petition in Case 15–RC–6750 was filed on January 15, 1981. The election was conducted on May 7, 1981.

My above findings concerning the alleged unfair labor practice allegations reflect that several 8(a)(1) violations occurred during the above-mentioned critical period.[16] Those violations that I find also constituted objectionable conduct, including the following:

(1) Gerald Colston interrogated employee Susan Quiett about 2 weeks before February 20, 1981 (sec. I,A, above).

(2) On February 12, 1981, Tom Alexander cautioned employee Warner Wilson to cease his union activities and threatened Wilson with discharge if he did not do so (sec. I,D, above).

(3) In mid-February 1981, Larry Betz cautioned employee Warner Wilson to watch himself because they were out to get him because of Wilson's union activities (sec. I,I, above).

(4) In early February 1981, Supervisor Nellie Guilbeau threatened employees that if the Union got in the employees would not be able to work overtime, adjust work schedules, or come to supervision with employee problems or complaints (sec. I,O, above).

Additionally, as shown above under "Discussion," I credit the testimony of Margaret Walter that she and other employees were told by Munn in a group meeting that they would be replaced and would not get their jobs back in the event of a strike. I find that statement constitutes objectionable conduct within the scope of Objection 1. In that regard, I note Respondent's continued emphasis to its employees of the likelihood of a strike (see above). Walter's total testimony reveals that group meeting was held in February or March 1981.

In view of my findings above, I recommend that Objections (1), (3), and (9) be sustained and the election set aside and a new election ordered.

Conclusions of Law

1. Respondent is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

2. Service Employees' International Union, Local 275, AFL–CIO is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

3. By interrogating its employees about their union activities; threatening its employees with discharge if the Union was successful in organizing its unit employees; threatening employees that they would not be allowed to discuss work-scheduling problems if the Union was selected; and threatening employees that if the Union was successful, employees would not be able to work overtime, adjust work schedules, or come to supervision with employee problems and complaints, Respondent has engaged in unfair labor practices within the meaning of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act.

4. By laying off its employee Warner Wilson on February 20, 1981, and, thereafter, failing, refusing, and continuing to fail and refuse to reinstate Wilson, Respondent has engaged in unfair labor practices within the meaning of Section 8(a)(1) and (3) of the Act.

5. By changing the work assignments of employee Susan Quiett to more onerous jobs about December 8, 1980, and continuing to assign more difficult work to Susan Quiett until her layoff on February 20, 1981, because of Quiett's union activities, Respondent has engaged in unfair labor practices within the meaning of Section 8(a)(1) and (3) of the Act.

6. Respondent did not otherwise engage in unfair labor practices as alleged in the complaint.

The Remedy

Having found that Respondent has engaged in unfair labor practices, I shall recommend it be ordered to cease and desist therefrom and take certain affirmative action designed to effectuate the policies of the Act. As I have found that Respondent unlawfully laid off employee Warner Wilson, I shall recommend that Respondent be ordered to offer Wilson immediate and full reinstatement to his former job or, if that job no longer exists, to a substantially equivalent position, without prejudice to his seniority or other rights and privileges. I shall further recommend that Respondent be ordered to make Wilson whole for any loss of earnings he may have suffered as a result of the discrimination against him. Backpay may be computed with interest as described in F. W. Woolworth Co., 90 NLRB 289 (1950), and Florida Steel Corp., 231 NLRE 651 (1977).[17]

On these findings of fact and conclusions of law and on the entire record, I issue the following recommended[18]

ORDER

The Respondent, Baton Rouge General Hospital Corporation, Baton Rouge, Louisiana, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall

1. Cease and desist from

(a) Interfering with, restraining, and coercing its employees in the exercise of their rights guaranteed to them in Section 7 of the Act, in violation of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act, by interrogating its employees concerning its employees union activities, by threatening its employees with discharge if the Union was successful; by threaten-

[16] Several of the matters, including from example Gerald Colston's interrogation of Yolanda Scott, were placed as occurring in January 1981. Because the evidence failed to show those matters occurred on or after January 15, I have not found them to fall within the critical period.

[18] If no exceptions are filed as provided by Sec. 102.46 of the Board's Rules and Regulations, the findings, conclusions, and recommended Order shall, as provided in Sec. 102.48 of the Rules, be adopted by the Board and all objections to them shall be deemed waived for all purposes.

ing its employees that the employees would not be allowed to discuss work scheduling problems if the Union was selected; and by threatening its employees that if the Union was successful, employees would not be able to work overtime, adjust work schedules, or come to supervision with employee problems or complaints.

(b) Changing work schedules of its employees because of its employees' support for the Union.

(c) Laying off and thereafter refusing to reinstate its employees because of the employees' union activities.

(d) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them by Section 7 of the Act.

2. Take the following affirmative action necessary to effectuate the policies of the Act.

(a) Offer immediate and full reinstatement to Warner Wilson to his former position or, if that position no longer exists, to a substantially equivalent position, without prejudice to his seniority, or other rights and privileges.

(b) Make Warner Wilson whole for any loss of pay he may have suffered as a result of the discrimination against him in the manner set forth in the remedy section of this decision.

(c) Remove from his files any reference to the layoff of Warner Wilson on February 20, 1981, and notify him in writing that this has been done and that the evidence of his unlawful layoff will not be used as a basis for future personnel actions against him.

(d) Preserve and, on request, make available to the Board or its agents for examination and copying, all payroll records, social security payment records, timecards, personnel records and reports, and all other records necessary to analyze the amount of backpay due under the terms of this Order.

(e) Post at its Baton Rouge, Louisiana facility copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix."[19] Copies of the notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 15, after being signed by the Respondent's authorized representative, shall be posted by the Respondent immediately upon receipt and maintained for 60 consecutive days in conspicuous places including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by the Respondent to ensure that the notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(f) Notify the Regional Director in writing within 20 days from the date of this Order what steps the Respondent has taken to comply.

SECOND SUPPLEMENTAL DECISION AND ORDER

BY CHAIRMAN DOTSON AND MEMBERS JOHANSEN AND STEPHENS

On 25 March 1981 the National Labor Relations Board issued a Decision and Order[1] in this proceeding (Otis Elevator I) finding the Respondent violated Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the National Labor Relations Act by: (1) refusing to bargain with the Union over the Respondent's decision to transfer and consolidate certain unit work from its Mahwah, New Jersey facility to other facilities in East Hartford, Connecticut; (2) refusing to provide the Union with information relevant to the Respondent's decision; and (3) refusing to bargain with the Union over the effects of the Respondent's decision.

The Union and the Respondent filed petitions for review of the Board's Decision and Order with the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit, and the Board filed a cross-application for enforcement of its Order. On 12 August 1981 the court granted the Board's motion to remand the case to the Board for reconsideration in light of the Supreme Court's decision in First National Maintenance v. NLRB, 452 U.S. 666 (1981).

On 6 April 1984 the Board issued a Supplemental Decision and Order[2] (Otis Elevator II) finding, contrary to its original Decision and Order, that the Respondent did not violate Section 8(a)(5) and (1) by refusing to bargain with the Union over its decision to transfer and consolidate unit work, or by failing to provide the Union with certain information. The Board in Otis Elevator II found that the earlier Board relied substantially on its conclusion that the Respondent unlawfully refused to bargain over its decision to transfer and consolidate unit work to find it also unlawfully refused to bargain about the effects of that decision. In light of its conclusion that the Respondent did not unlawfully refuse to bargain over the decision, the Board in Otis Elevator II remanded the effects-bargaining allegations of the complaint to the administrative law judge for further consideration.

On 31 January 1986 Administrative Law Judge Irwin Kaplan issued the attached supplemental decision. The Respondent filed exceptions and a supporting brief, and the Charging Party filed exceptions and a supporting brief.

The National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the decision and the record in light of the exceptions and briefs and has decided to affirm the judge's rulings, findings, and conclusions only to the extent consistent with this decision and to adopt the recommended Order.

Contrary to the judge, we find the Respondent did not violate Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act by failing to bargain in good faith with the Union over a relocation package for those employees the Respondent chose to transfer from its Mahwah, New Jersey facility to its facilities in East Hartford, Connecticut.

The facts are largely set forth in Otis Elevator I[3] and Otis Elevator II[4] as well as in the judge's supplemental decision. The Union discussed or wished to discuss with the Respondent two general transfer effects issues—the relocation package to be offered to the transferred employees and the selection criteria the Respondent would use to invite employees to transfer. We agree with the judge that the Respondent unlawfully refused to bargain with the Union about transfer selection criteria and unlawfully dealt directly with those employees whom it selected. Accordingly, we shall repeat here only those facts relevant to the parties' bargaining over a relocation package. Any additional facts we have added are based on uncontradicted record evidence.

United Technologies acquired Otis Elevator Company in 1975. Dr. William M. Foley thereafter conducted a study for the Respondent concluded that much of Otis' engineering activity was diffuse and duplicative. The Respondent's management believed Otis' engineering effort would be strengthened if research and development were conducted closer to Otis' research already conducted in Connecticut, and to other United Technologies development groups. The Respondent also concluded its Mahwah, New Jersey facility was outdated and inadequate. For these reasons, it decided to transfer its Mahwah product improvement group to Connecticut immediately and consolidate it with similar efforts already there. It also decided it would move its entire research and development, engineering, and cost-reduction efforts to Connecticut by mid-1979.

On 2 December 1977 Dr. Foley told the Union of the Respondent's plans. He stated certain changes were effective immediately "organizationally," but that "the physical change will be much more prolonged." He further stated 15 employees would be transferred from Mahwah to Connecticut within the next 5 months and that those chosen would be notified within the next 8 weeks.

On 17 January 1978[5] the Union gave Respondent Industrial Relations Manager J. J. Cronin a letter demanding that employees be contacted through the Union about "possible job opportunities at locations other than Mahwah." The Respondent rejected the Union's demand and on 25 January offered 13 unit engineers jobs in East Hartford, Connecticut.[6]

The parties thereafter met on several occasions in February and early April during which the Union demanded the Respondent negotiate its decision to transfer work, the effects of that decision, and recognition at the Connecticut facility. The parties did not substantially discuss at any of these meetings whether the Respondent would pay the employees' relocation expenses, give the employees time off to look for housing in Connecticut, or other issues associated with physically relocating from New Jersey to Connecticut. Although the Union on 27 April asked for certain reports that had an impact on the Respondent's decision to move, for information about the inducements that the Respondent offered to encourage employees to accept the Connecticut job offer, and for information on working conditions in Connecticut, it did not request information at any of these meetings specifically bearing on physically relocating to Connecticut.

On 27 April the Respondent also gave the Union a booklet detailing a relocation package "handled by an outside group called 'Trels.'" It offered this package to those employees it invited to transfer to Connecticut in January. Although the package was not made part of the record, certain facts about the package are known. Thus, the package provides, inter alia, that the Respondent will pay for two home-finding trips from Mahwah to Connecticut that may last a total of 6 days and 7 nights. Another provision states that the Respondent will pay for meals and lodging for relocating employees for up to 90 days, and for up to 30 additional days for their families. The Respondent also offered to pay one-half to 1 month's salary for miscellaneous expenses.

Although the Respondent stated in December 1977 there would be only two "waves" of engineers from Mahwah to Connecticut—immediately and again in mid-1979—the Respondent on 24 May announced for the first time an additional 15 engineers would be invited to transfer within the next 2 days.

The parties next met 29 June. The Union asked if the Respondent planned a "third wave." The Respondent's representative stated, "[W]hile that was our original plan, it's still being reviewed . . . . As soon as a definite answer is reached, we will be talking to you . . . ." The Respondent also stated it would not transfer any technicians.

On 4 August the Respondent offered a Mahwah technician a position in Connecticut. On 9 August it met with the Union to notify it that it had made the offer. The Union stated, "We're finding it very difficult to structure our demands the Company keeps changing position."

On 15 September the Union presented a "Partial List of Demands."[7] The Union demanded, inter

1) Update Trels Report to reflect current conditions.

2) Employee's relocation policy guide to be offered to all employees who relocate. This policy to be modified to include all demands put forth by Local 989, U.A.W.

3) Relocation package to be available for up to two (2) years after man starts work in Connecticut.

4) Pay any security and finders fees required on rentals.

5) Pay all temporary housing costs as required in both Connecticut and New York metro. area.

6) Pay entire cost of motel and associated costs including meals for employees who choose to reside in motels during the week and commute home on weekends.

7) Provide adequate time off for employees relocating to permit finding and purchasing the new residence as well as time off for the move.

8) Pay all moving costs.

9) Assist employee in obtaining nortgages.

10) Provide compensation payment for increased mortgage rate (use formula Government uses for condemnation proceedings) and increased cost for housing.

11) Make lump sum payment to apartment dwellers equal to first two years difference in rent.

12) Each employee who moves shall receive two months salary to cover misc. expenses.

13) Company shall pay all transportation cost in excess of employee's cost to new location for one (1) year, after which it will be included in employee's salary. Transportation cost shall include the following items:

A) 20 [cents]/mile and all tolls for those who drive to new location.

B) All fare cost for those who use public transportation.

C) Equal time off or payment for additional time used to commute to new location.

D) Cost to garage additional automobile used for transportation to new location.

E) Increased cost of automobile insurance.

F) Cost of renting a car while your car is in for repairs

14) Due to the higher risk of accident and the greater traveling time required to commute to the new facility, the Company shall:

A) Increase medical coverage.

B) Increase accident and sickness benefits.

C) Provide life insurance covering employees while traveling to and from work similar to that provided for employees while traveling on company business.

D) Pay cost of L.T.D. plan.

alia, reimbursement for certain costs associated with finding housing in Connecticut, compensation for added living and travel expenses, helicopter or airplane service to Connecticut, and a 20-percent salary increase for those transferred. It also demanded that senior employees be given the first opportunity to transfer, and that the Respondent accept all requests for voluntary layoff. The Respondent asked the Union to clarify certain demands, but made no counterproposals at this meeting.

The Respondent responded to the Union's demands at a meeting held 6 October. The Respondent's representative began by stating:

> I have reviewed the demands and in all fairness I would like to say I was disappointed in what was presented. I expected you to put together something more allied to something we hopefully could reach agreement upon. I said at the last meeting that I would probably have negative responses to several of your demands and I feel it's only fair to tell you that a number of your proposals will receive no answers.

Despite its statement to the contrary, the Respondent answered every demand, rejecting all but two. In response to the Union's demand that it accept all requests for voluntary layoffs, the Respondent said it would agree subject to "procedural clarification." In response to the Union's demand that the Respondent reimburse employees for certain transportation costs, the Respondent offered $60 per month for a year for those employees who would have to commute for more than 1-1/2 hours to the new location. The Respondent also stated:

> We are unwilling to modify the [Trels] package, but . . . in individual cases we would consider time extensions and minor adjustments and modifications, but we will not modify the entire policy.

The Union modified some of its demands at a meeting held 31 October, dropping its demands that the Respondent reimburse employees for garaging an additional automobile used for transportation to the Connecticut facility, pay increased automobile insurance costs, and pay rental costs while an employee's car is being repaired. The Union also stated it would accept bus service in lieu of helicopter service. The Respondent rejected the Union's demands as modified, but proposed procedures for accepting requests for voluntary layoff from the Mahwah facility. The Respondent also stated it had no information whether there would be a "third wave" of engineers to Connecticut.

The Union again modified its proposal 1 December, this time dropping its demand for "L.T.D. PLAN" reimbursement, and its demand for airplane service to Connecticut.

The parties last met on 30 and 31 January 1979. The Respondent then announced that within the next 2 days it would offer transfers to 20 engineers to fill 16 positions. If all 20 accepted, all would be permitted to transfer. If none accepted, it stated it would lay off 16 engineers from the Mahwah facility. The parties did not bargain over a relocation package at these meetings.

We conclude the Respondent violated Section 8(a)(5) and (1) by offering the Trels package directly to employees offered transfers in the first and second "waves." We regard that conclusion as encompassed within our finding that the Respondent unlawfully dealt directly with unit employees. We do not agree with the judge, however, that the Respondent failed to bargain about the relocation package it would offer those engineers who were to transfer to Connecticut in January 1979.

In finding a violation, the judge relied on his findings that the Respondent offered the Trels package on a "take-it-or-leave-it" basis, made no formal counterproposals, and rejected outright almost all the Union's demands. The judge also relied on the fact that the Respondent failed to timely provide meaningful information.

Hard bargaining alone, however, does not violate the Act. "A party . . . is entitled to stand firm on a position if he reasonably believes that it is fair and proper or that he has sufficient bargaining strength to force agreement by the other party."[8] The question is whether the totality of the Respondent's conduct demonstrates it unlawfully frustrated the possibility of arriving at any agreement rather than its having lawfully engaged in hard bargaining.[9]

We recognize that the Respondent unlawfully offered the Trels package directly to the first wave of engineers offered transfers in January 1978 and to the second wave in May. We also recognize that the Respondent failed to apprise the Union in a more timely fashion of each of its decisions to transfer employees. We do not, however, find the Respondent thus intended to frustrate, or in fact frustrated, bargaining from September through January 1979 over a relocation package.

When the Respondent offered its Trels package directly to those employees whom it chose to transfer to Connecticut in January and May, the Union had not yet provided its demands. Thus, its direct dealing at that time, while separately violating Section 8(a)(5) and (1), did not indicate that the Respondent would fail to negotiate with the Union once the Union had presented its demands.

The fact that the Respondent did not timely notify the Union of its decision to transfer employees also did not frustrate bargaining over a relocation package from September through January 1979. Although the Respondent's failure to notify the Union excused the Union's substantial delay in coming forward with proposals, the Union ultimately formulated its demands and the Respondent bargained with the Union once the Union presented them.

There are no other indications the Respondent lacked good faith. The Respondent met with the Union several times after the Union presented its demands in September, the Respondent answered each demand and agreed in principle with one of them, and made a limited financial offer in response. Although the Respondent remained steadfast in its insistence that the Union otherwise agree to its Trels relocation package, this alone cannot support a finding that the Respondent failed to bargain in good faith.

Accordingly, we find the Respondent did not violate Section 8(a)(5) and (1) by failing to bargain in good faith with the Union over a relocation package for those employees the Respondent chose to transfer to Connecticut in January 1979.[10]

ORDER

The National Labor Relations Board adopts the recommended Order of the administrative law judge and orders that the Respondent, Otis Elevator Company, a wholly owned subsidiary of United Technologies, Mahwah, New Jersey, and East Hartford, Connecticut, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall take the action set forth in the Order.

CHAIRMAN DOTSON, dissenting.

Contrary to my colleagues, I find the Respondent did not violate Section 8(a)(5) and (1) by failing to bargain with the Union about the effects of its decision to transfer unit work from its Mahwah, New Jersey facility to facilities in East Hartford, Connecticut, because I find the Union waived its right to bargain in its collective-bargaining agreement with the Respondent.

The parties' contract, which was effective 1 April 1977 through 31 March 1980, reserved for the Respondent the rights to "transfer"; "to schedule and assign the work"; "to assign employees among departments, offices or plants"; and "to determine the location of all Company offices."[1] Ac-

[10] Unlike our dissenting colleague, we do not find the Union waived its right to bargain over the effects of the Respondent's decision.

The parties' collective-bargaining agreement, on which our dissenting colleague relies, reserved for the Respondent the rights to "transfer"; "to schedule and assign the work"; "to assign employees among departments, offices or plants"; and "to determine the location of all Company offices." While the contract may or may not waive the Union's right to bargain about the Respondent's decision, it in no way "clearly and unmistakably," Timken Roller Bearing Co. v. NLRB, 325 F.2d 746, 751 (6th Cir. 1963), waived the Union's right to bargain about all of the effects of the Respondent's decision.

Westinghouse Electric Corp., 206 NLRB 812 (1973), which the dissent cites, does not support finding waiver here. In that case, the Board found the employer's contractual right to "direct employees in the available work" waived the union's right to bargain over the identity of those employees the employer would select for transfers to a new facility within the same unit. That case does not suggest, as the dissent's analysis implicitly assumes, that the reserved right to "direct employees in the available work" waives the union's right to bargain over every effect of that decision and not just the identity of those to be chosen. Further, that case involved an intraunit transfer, not a transfer, like the one here, to jobs outside the unit and which will necessarily result in a loss of unit jobs.

[1] Management Clause

Except as specifically limited by any provision of this Agreement, it is agreed that the management of the Company's business is the sole and exclusive right and responsibility of the Company and that this management right includes but is not limited to the right to employ, promote, demote, transfer, retire in accordance with the Company's established retirement plan' to discharge or discipline for cordingly, I find the Respondent was clearly privileged to transfer unit work without bargaining with the Union.

Despite the contract's clear language, my colleagues find the Respondent had a duty to bargain with the Union about the relocation package the Respondent would offer to employees chosen to transfer, the baiss on which employees are to be given the opportunity to transfer, and the identity of those employees. They argue that the contract's language, regardless of whether it would waive the Union's right to bargain abot the decision to transfer unit work, did not waive the Union's right to bargain about the effects of that decision.

I find, however, tha the parties' clause clearly contemplated that the Respondent could "transfer" work unhindered by bargaining with the Union. To read the clause as pertaining only to the decision itself, and not the decision's effects, is to hold that the Respondent may not freely transfer work.

Not only must the Respondent bargain with the Union under my colleagues' analysis, current Board law demonstrates that the Respondent must necessarily do so before it effects the transfer.[2] Thus, pursuant to the majority opinion, the Respondent is subject to a substantial bargaining obligation despite the fact that it reserved for itself the right to "transfer" work.

The principle I suggest is not a new or novel one. Thus, in Westinghouse Electric Corp.,[3] the Board in 1973 held that the employer's contractual right to "direct employees in the available work" waived the union's right to bargain over the identity of employees the employer would transfer to a new facility.[4] The facts in Westinghouse are stunningly similar to those in this case and Westinghouse should therefore control the result here.[5] cause; to maintain discipline and efficiency of employees; to lay off or recall employees in connection with a reduction or increase in the necessary working force; to schedule and assign the work; to assign employees among departments, offices or plants; to determine the location of all Company offices, the control and regulation of use of all equipment and other property of the Company; to increase or reduce working hours and workweek and to determine and establish any Company policy.

I would dismiss the complaint.[6]

[2] See Metropolitan Teletronics Corp., 279 NLRB 957 (1986). I dissented in Metropolitan Teletronics. I would not hold that an employer's failure to give notice before it makes the change necessarily violates Sec. 8(a)(5) and (1).

[5] My colleagues unpersuasively attempt to distinguish Westinghouse on the ground that Westinghouse involved an intraunit transfer and not, like here, a transfer outside the unit. Neither the contract in Westinghouse, nor the contract here, made such a distinction. Instead, in both cases the contracts broadly reserved for the employers the rights to "direct employees in the available work" or the right to "transfer," "schedule and assign," and to "assign employees amont . . . plants."

My colleagues' decision to read into the contract a distinction between intraunit transfers and other transfers is inconsistent with the contractual analysis in Indianapolis Power Co., 273 NLRB 1715 (1985), remanded sub nom. Electrical Workers IBEW Local 1395 v. NLRB, 797 F.2d 1027 (D.C. Cir. 1986), in which the Board refused to assume that a broad no-strike clause did not encompass sympathy strikes. See also Milwaukee Spring Division, 268 NLRB 601 (1984) (refusing to imply a work-preservation clause in a contract silent on the issue).

[6] I agree, for the reasons cited in the majority opinion, that the Respondent did not in any event violate Sec. 8(a)(5) and (1) by failing to bargain in good faith with the Union over a relocation package for those employees the Respondent chose to transfer to Connecticut in January 1979.

SUPPLEMENTAL DECISION ON REMAND

DECISIONAL BACKDROP

IRWIN KAPLAN, Administrative Law Judge. On 29 November 1979 I issued my initial decision upholding the allegations in the amended complaint (JD-823-79). In essence, I found that the Respondent (Otis Elevator Company, a wholly owned subsidiary of United Technologies) violated Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act, by failing to bargain with the Union (Local 989, United Automobile, Aerospace & Agricultural Workers of America), over its decision to discontinue its research and development activities in Mahwah, New Jersey, and to consolidate them with its operation in East Hartford Connecticut; by refusing to furnish the Union with the "Booz-Allen and Cole reports," admittedly relevant to Respondent's decision; and by failing and refusing to bargain over the "effects" of its decision on unit employees.

In connection with the "effects bargaining" allegations (the subject of this supplemental decision), I found initially, that Respondent not only failed to bargain in any meaningful fashion, but also that Respondent unlawfully bypassed the Union by unilaterally determining both the criteria for selecting employees for transfer to Connecticut and the employees who were offered such job opportunities. In this latter regard, I further found that Respondent unlawfully denied the Union a presence at these transfer interviews. On 25 March 1981 the aforenoted findings were affirmed by the Board in Otis Elevator Co., 255 NLRB 235 (1981) (Otis I).

Shortly after Otis I issued, the Supreme Court decided First National Maintenance Corp. v. NLRB, 452 U.S. 666 (1981). There the Court held that an economically motivated decision to shut down part of a business is not encompassed by terms and conditions of employment under Section 8(d) and, as such, it (the "decision") is not deemed to be a mandatory subject for bargaining purposes. On 6 April 1984 the Board, in light of the principles set forth in First National Maintenance, on reconsideration, issued a Supplemental Decision and Order reversing, in part, its earlier decision (Otis I), and finding, inter alia, that the Respondent was not obligated to bargain over its "decision" to discontinue certain functions in Mahwah, New Jersey, and to transfer those functions to its facility in East Hartford, Connecticut. Otis Elevator Co (Otis II), 269 NLRB 891 (1984).[1]

Further, the Board, having determined that Respondent was not required to bargain over its decision, concluded, a fortiori, that Respondent was not required to furnish the Union the Booz-Allen and Cole reports. Id. at 984. Still to be disposed of were the effects bargaining allegations, which had been upheld by the Board in Otis I. These allegations were remanded to me and form the subject of the instant supplemental decision.

In Otis II, the Board noted that the earlier Board "relied substantially on its holdings that the Respondent unlawfully refused to bargain over its consolidation decision and unlawfully withheld information from the Union."[2] As those holdings were subsequently reversed, the Board remanded the outstanding effects-bargaining allegations for my further consideration in light of the decision in Otis II.

For my reconsideration and preparation of this supplemental decision, I have reexamined the entire original record as well as the postremand supplemental briefs.[3]

Having done so, I reaffirm my initial credibility resolutions. In my original decision, I rejected certain representations mady by Respondent's chief witness, Dr. Foley, as conclusionary and not supported by documentary or other corroborative evidence. (See, e.g., 255 NLRB at 246.) I was also otherwise unimpressed with Dr. Foley as a witness. The record disclosed that at times he was evasive and equivocal and less than responsive or forthright. For example, Dr. Foley, when asked on cross-examination whether he knew at the 24 May bargaining session, the identities of the new group of engineers to be invited to transfer, he responded, "Not exactly. Earlier we [the Company] had a group, but we had an additional group we were going to ask." However, Dr. Foley, when asked the next question, admitted that in fact he had a list of names at that meeting. According to Dr. Foley, his memory was refreshed by counsel for the General Counsel. However, based on my observation of Dr. Foley, I find it more likely that it represented an effort by him to be less than candid or responsive. Similarly, I found Jack Williams, Respondent's other witness, to be conclusionary and unreliable.

On the other hand, I was impressed with Allan Newell, the Union's chief witness, as responsive, consistent, and forthright. In this latter regard, it is noted, inter alia, that Newell readily acknowledged that Respondent "discussed" all the Union's proposals (although for reasons explained, infra, this does not mean Respondent "negotiated"). I also note that Newell's testimony was substantially corroborated by Respondent's minutes. (G.C. Exh. 2.) In sum, on reconsideration, after carefully reviewing the entire transcript and the record as a whole, I credit Newell over Dr. Foley and Williams in all material respects.

A. Overall Effects-Bargaining

In finding in my original decision that Respondent failed to fulfill its bargaining obligations over the "effects" of its decision to transfer certain engineers (product improvement group) from Mahwah, New Jersey, to the Hartford, Connecticut area, I relied, inter alia, on the Board's retionale in Ozark Trailers.[4] There, I found instructive that the Board recognized situations in which "the effects are so inextricably interwoven with the decision itself that bargaining limited to effects will not be meaningful if it must be carried on within a framework of a decision which cannot be revised." Id. at 570. However valid this proposition may be, the Board in Otis II determined that the "decision" was not a mandatory subject within the meaning of Section 8(d)[5] and, as such, Respondent was not obligated to bargain thereon. This left open whether, in the circumstances of Otis, "meaningful" negotiations over "effects" were possible and, if so, whether Respondent met its "effects" bargaining obligations. With regard to the former, I find a plethora of valid reasons, supported by the record, justifying a response in the affirmative.

It is unidsputed, the record supports, and I find that the decision clearly impacted on unit employees. Not only were unit employees to be permanently transferred, but their jobs (product improvement group) would eventually be lost. As for the employees remaining in Mahwah, inter alia, an indeterminate number of them faced "possible" layoffs. As pointed out by Dr. Foley in his speech on 2 December 1977, "as the development ac-

[1] While First National Maintenance dealt basically with a partial closing, the Board in Otis II decided to take a lead from the Court's overall discussion to exclude from coverage under Sec. 8(d) those decisions which "affect the scope, direction or nature of the business" (269 NLRB at 893). On reconsideration, the Board found that the "essence of the decision" turned on a fundamental change in the nature and direction of the business, and thus (unlike "labor costs"), was not amenable to bargaining. (Otis II, 269 NLRB at 892–893). In short, the "decision" was not a mandatory subject.

[2] The composition of the Board in Otis II with the exception of Member Zimmerman had changed. Although Member Zimmerman joined the Board majority in Otis I, he concurred in the result with the Board plaurality in Otis II vis-a-vis the decision. On the other hand, Member Zimmerman would have affirmed the effects-bargaining holdings of Otis I and therefore dissented with regard to the remand.

[3] The Board's Order remanding this proceeding provided, inter alia, "any party . . . the opportunity to adduce further evidence on [effects-bargaining] allegations." Thereafter, I conducted an all-party telephone conference and all parties agreed that the record in Otis I was sufficient to decide the remand allegations without the need to reopen the hearing for the production of further evidence. In a position paper dated 2 May 1985 counsel for the General Counsel moved to amend the outstanding effects-bargaining allegations of the instant case with later-filed unfair labor practice charges. The motion was opposed by Respondent. I denied the motion noting, inter alia, that the later-filed unfair labor practice charges covered events subsequent to my original decision and, in part, related to matters not cognizable under the scope of the remand order. The order setting time for supplemental briefs and denying motion to amend complaint and consolidate cases is marked ALJ Exh. 1 and the positions papers submitted by the parties in connection therewith (attachments A, B, and C) are made part of the record.

[5] The duty to bargain as defined by Sec. 8(d) of the Act in relevant part is as follows:

> [T]o bargain collectively is the performance of the mutual obligation of the employer and the representative of the employees to meet at reasonable times and confer in good faith with respect to wages, hours, and other terms and conditions of employment, or the negotiation of an agreement or any question arising thereunder, and the execution of a written contract incorporating any agreement reached if requested by either party, but such obligation does not compel either party to agree to a proposal or require the making of a concession . . . .

tivity moves to Hartford, the test effort will also shift there leaving us with a possible excess of technicians and clerical personnel in Mahwah." (G.C. Exh. 2, p. 8, emphasis added.)

Noting that the "decision" impacted on unit employees, I find that matters involving, inter alia, the order of layoffs, recall, severance pay, input in the selection process, the transfer package, i.e., moving expenses, and a host of related considerations, particularly meaningful to the Union and the unit employees affected. This is so, and these matters are amenable to the bargaining process exclusive of the Union's power or right to reverse Respondent's "decision." The Supreme Court in First National Maintenance treated a decision involving a change in the scope and direction of the enterprise (as found herein in Otis II), as a nonmandatory subject. However, the Court also noted that "[a]t the same time, the decision touches on a matter of central and pressing concern to the Union and its member employees." (452 U.S. at 677, emphasis added.) It is now beyond dispute that the Respondent is under a duty to address these concerns by bargaining over the results or effects of such decision. Id. at fn. 15.

Having determined that the circumstances were conducive to meaningful bargaining over "effects" (exclusive of the "decision"), the case now turns on whether Respondent fulfilled its obligations. The Respondent, in its opening statement "readily concede[d]" its obligation to bargain over the impact of its decision but asserted that such obligation was fulfilled. Whether the Respondent engaged in "hard bargaining," but in "good faith" on one hand or "bad faith" or "surface bargaining" on the other, is determined on a case-by-case basis from an examination of the totality of the circumstances. See Chevron Chemical Co., 261 NLRB 44, 45 (1982); NLRB v. Pacific Grinding Wheel Co., 572 F.2d 1343, 1348 (9th Cir. 1978).

It has long been noted that a take-it-or-leave-it posture constitutes evidence of bad faith. See NLRB v. Insurance Agents, 361 U.S. 477, 485 (1960); General Athletic Products Co., 227 NLRB 1565, 1574 (1977). Although the Board in Otis I agreed with my rationale and reliance on Ozark Trailers, supra, concerning Respondent's failure to bargain over "effects," it also went further, characterizing Respondent's overall conduct as "a kind of 'take it or leave it' bargaining." In support thereof, the Board, in pertinent part, noted as follows:

> Thus, the Union sitting at "the bargaining table" was never certain about what actions Respondent was taking in effecting its reorganization; nor would Respondent commit itself to a timetable for anticipated changes in the bargaining unit. As a result of its uncertainty concerning what changes would occur, and when any changes would take place, the Union submitted its "Partial List of Demands" some 9 months after Respondent's announcement of its plans. Respondent made no formal counterproposals, and, in fact, rejected outright almost all of the Union's demands. Indeed, Respondent's answer to the Union's demands was that it was disappointed with what the Union presented, and that it had hoped that the Union would have submitted a request more closely aligned with what Respondent wished to accomplish. It thus becomes clear that Respondent engaged in a kind of "take it or leave it" bargaining, whereby Respondent would agree to clarify its actions "after the fact," but where meaningful bargaining seemed to have no place in Respondent's grand design.

255 NLRB at 237.

On reconsideration, after carefully reviewing the entire record, I find myself in total agreement with the Board's remarks describing the Respondent's failure to engage in "meaningful bargaining." Clearly, the Board was justified in ascribing the Union's delay in presenting its "Partial List of Demands" to the confusion, uncertainty, and failure of Respondent to timely provide meaningful information.

Thus, in addition to the reasons cited by the Board, it is also noted that at the time Respondent announced its decision to move to Hartford, "many of the details and background . . . were not covered." (G.C. Exh. 2B, p. 3.) Thereafter, the Union's efforts to learn more about Respondent's plans in order to structure its demands were continually frustrated by Respondent's unwillingness or inability to provide concrete or reliable answers. For example, at the 3 April bargaining session, the Company was asked by the Union whether lab mechanics and technicians would be leaving Mahwah and was told, "We do not know what is going to happen but we are in the process of analyzing and formulating plans." (G.C. Exh. 2A, p. 6.) Although at a subsequent session the Respondent informed the Union that technicians were not going to be transferred (G.C. Exh. 2E, p. 15), approximately a month later, Respondent decided to invite William Altridge, a technician, to relocate to the Respondent's research center in Hartford. (G.C. Exh. 2F.)

The Union expressed surprise at the offer to Altridge and questioned the Company regarding its intentions to invite other technicians and also engineers.[6] In response thereto, the Respondent's manager of industrial relations, J. J. Cronin, stated, "I don't know at this point if the Company has plans in either case." (G.C. Exh. 2G, p. 5.) Cronin's response was the same when questioned about draftsman and designers. (Id.) In circumstances when, as here, the Respondent provides little or no information on critical subjects, while at the same time undergoing changes in those areas regarding its originally announced plans, I find, in agreement with the Board, that the Respondent was at fault for any union delay in submitting

[6] Regarding engineers, the Respondent had initially advised the Union that it would physically transfer the product improvement group in the middle of 1979. This was to be accomplished in two stages: The first group of engineers was going to be invited to transfer to the Hartford area by late January 1978; the second group in January 1979. (G.C. Exh. 2A, pp. 5–8.) However, at the 24 May 1978 meeting, the Union was notified that still another group of approximately 15 engineers would be asked to transfer within a few days. (G.C. Exh. 2C.) As for the engineers who were supposed to be asked to transfer in January 1979 ("third wave"), little or no information was provided, although the Union continued to press the Respondent to state its intentions. (See, e.g., G.C. Exh. 2M, p. 1.)

its demands. Further, I find that such conduct tends to reflect adversely on Respondent's good faith.

I reject Respondent's notion that the Act requires merely that a company "discuss the impact of its decision to satisfy its bargaining obligations." (Supp. Br. 19–20.) Thus, I do not find it overly significant, contrary to Respondent, that I had concluded in my original decision that "Respondent discussed all these items ('Partial List of Demands') with the Union although only marginal agreement was achieved." (Otis I, supra at 248, emphasis added.) Rather, it is of greater significance, that I found there, and I now reaffirm that Respondent failed to negotiate in any meaningful fashion. The term "discuss," unless used in an agreed on context, does not, without more, mean "negotiate" as contemplated by the Act.[7] Compare National Metalcrafters, 276 NLRB 90 (1985). Although the Act does not compel the parties to make concessions, it does mandate that they bargain in "good faith" for the ultimate purpose of reaching an agreement. See NLRB v. American National Insurance Co., 343 U.S. 395, 403–404 (1952); NLRB v. Insurance Agents, supra at 485.

In the circumstances of this case, I join in the Board's assessment that "meaningful bargaining seemed to have no place in Respondent's grand design." (Otis I, supra at 237.) As the Board noted, inter alia, "Respondent made no formal counterproposals, and, in fact, rejected outright almost all of the Union's demands." Id.; compare Mack Trucks, 277 NLRB 711 (1985). The Union, for its part, as noted in my original decision, modified or eliminated many of its demands and conveyed a willingness to discuss and bargain over its entire package. As such, and on the total state of this record, I find that Respondent failed to make any reasonable or genuine effort to reach common ground on the outstanding proposals.

In short, I find that the record clearly established Respondent's bad faith with regard to overall effects-bargaining in violation of Section 8(a)(5) as alleged.

B. Selection Criteria Bypassing the Union and Dealing Directly with Employees

It is undisputed that Respondent unilaterally determined the selection criteria for the employees invited to transfer. Although the Respondent eventually informed the Union of certain factors comprising the selection process (longevity was not a consideration), this was expressed in the most general terms some 3 months after the first wave of engineers had already been selected for transfer and interviewed. (See generally G.C. Exh. 2B; G.C. Exh. 6.) It is also noted, as to this group of engineers, that the Union did not know their identities until long after the interviews had been conducted.[8] Further, Respondent concedes that concerning this group of engineers, it did not advise any of them of a right to have union representation at the interviews. However, Respondent asserted (and not controverted by the record), that the engineers selected for interviews in June 1978 ("second wave") were asked whether they wanted union representation but all of them declined. In any event, it is undisputed that the Union's insistence that it be permitted to attend all transfer interviews was refused by Respondent.

The Respondent defended its position mainly on the basis that the transfers involved employment at a different company location, in nonbargaining unit jobs. For reasons noted in my original decision and affirmed by the Board in Otis I, I found there, and on reconsideration reaffirm, that the Respondent unlawfully foreclosed the Union from effectively representing the bargaining unit as a whole in violation of Section 8(a)(5) as alleged. In rejecting Respondent's position insofar as denying the Union any input in the selection process, I relied in part on considerations assessed by the Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit in Cooper Thermometer Co. v. NLRB.[9] There the court dealt with this matter in pertinent part as follows:

> [T]he Board may reasonably interpret § 8(a)(5), as explicated in § 8(d), as requiring an employer relocating his plant not merely to give reasonable notice to a recognized union . . . but also to discuss with it the basis on which employees may transfer and, in that connection, to give information as to jobs in the new plant essential to the intelligent formulation of the union's requests. The most improtant interest of workers is in working; the Board may reasonably consider that an employer does not fulfill its obligation under § 8(a)(5) if he refuses even to discuss with employees' representatives on what basis they may continue to be employed . . . . While Cooper was not bound to agree to the Union's demand that the Pequabuck employees "be taken" to Middlefield with everything unchanged or even to less burdensome proposals, the Board could properly fault it for an attitude which, in effect, ousted the Union from any role in negotiating what might be offered to employees desiring to transfer. [Emphasis added.]

Here, too, the Union was wrongfully foreclosed from any role in the selection process and denied a presence at the transfer interviews. At the time Respondent commenced these interviews, the Union was the "exclusive" bargaining agent for the unit employees at Mahwah and had been for over 30 years. The transferees, as well as those employees not invited to transfer, were then still members of that unit. The Union's responsibilities ex-

[7] Clearly, the Respondent did not treat the terms synonymously at the bargaining table. While Respondent carried on discussions, it dodged the Union's inquiry regarding its "intent to reach an agreement" from these discussions. Thus, Thomas Bouchard, Respondent's vice president of personnel and industrial relations, responded, "They [the discussions] could, but it is too early for a yes or no to that question." Bouchard, in differentiating the term negotiate from discussion, opined, "For me, negotiations implies an adversary climate." (G.C. Exh. 2A, pp. 10–11.)

[8] Respondent's reliance on Westinghouse Electric Corp., 174 NLRB 636 (1969), ignores some material differences. For example, there, unlike the situation with the first wave of engineers in the instant case, the employees who transferred did so with the knowledge and consent of the union. Moreover, in Westinghouse, the changes did not "affect either the continuity of its operations or the employment of its employees." (Id. at 638.) In Otis, it is noted, inter alia, that in January 1979 respondent threatened to lay off some 16 engineers if a sufficient number of them failed to voluntarily transfer. (Tr. 36–37.) Some employees had already been laid off. See G.C. Exh. 15.

[9] 376 F.2d 684, 688 (2d Cir. 1967).

tended to all of them. See also Continental Insurance Co., 204 NLRB 1013, 1014 (1973), enfd. 495 F.2d 44 (2d Cir. 1974). Surely, the Union was vulnerable to failure-to-represent charges, if it refused to render any assistance requested by the transferees regarding such items as moving expenses and time off to look for new residences.[10] Indeed, subsequently, Respondent apparently recognized that an offer of prospective nonunit jobs to still current unit employees does not per se strip the Union of its bargaining role. Thus, Respondent began to ask engineers comprising the "second wave" (unlike the "first wave"), whether they desired to have the Union in attendance at the transfer interviews.

The Union's exclusivity, however, is predicated on majority support as defined by Section 9(a) of the Act[11] and does not turn on the whim of individual employees. While the Union's representative standing is limited by the first proviso to Section 9(a) insofar as permitting unit employees an option to adjust grievances on their own; significantly (as noted in my original decision), the second proviso protects the Union's overall exclusivity by providing that it be given "the opportunity to be present at such adjustment." The Union's presence enables it to monitor direct dealings between management and individual employees to frustrate "under the table" arrangements at the expense of other unit employees or the unit as a whole.[12]

In sum, on reconsideration, and in the absence of any waiver (and none found herein to exist),[13] I reaffirm my original effects-bargaining findings (upheld by the Board in Otis I), and consistent with the remand by the Board in Otis II, I do so for reasons independent of Respondent's refusal to bargain over the "decision."

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. Otis Elevator Company, a wholly owned subsidiary of United Technologies Corporation is an employer within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

2. Local 989, United Automobile, Aerospace and Agricultural Implement Workers of America is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

3. All classifications of employees employed in Respondent's Engineering Division located in Mahwah and Harrison, New Jersey, and Yonkers, New York, in the classifications described in Appendix A of the collective-bargaining agreement effective 1 April 1977 to 31 March 1980, but excluding nontechnical, secretarial, clerical employees not described in Appendix A, maintenance employees, guards, and supervisors as defined in the Act constitute a unit appropriate for the purposes of collective bargaining within the meaning of Section 9(a) of the Act.

4. Since sometime prior to 1 June 1950, the above-named Union has been, and is now, the exclusive representative of all the employees in the aforesaid appropriate unit for the purpose of collective bargaining within the meaning of Section 9(a) of the Act.

5. Respondent has engaged in unfair labor practices affecting commerce within the meaning of Section 8(a)(5) and (1) and Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act by

(a) Failing and refusing, on request, to engage in any meaningful good-faith negotiations with the Union concerning the effects of its decision on the employees in the unit described above in paragraph 3.

(b) Failing and refusing, on request, to permit the Union an opportunity to bargain about the basis on which employees were to be given the opportunity to transfer from its Mahwah, New Jersey facility to other of its facilities in Connecticut and on the identity of the employees selected for transfer interviews.

(c) Dealing directly with employees and failing and refusing to permit the Union the opportunity to be present at employee interviews that involve the loss of unit work and the transfer of employees from Respondent's Mahwah, New Jersey facility to Respondent's unrepresented facilities in Connecticut unless requested by the employees interviewed.

THE REMEDY

I will recommend that the Respondent be required to bargain in good faith with the Union over the effects on unit employees of its decision to transfer and consolidate. In this connection, I will recommend that Respondent's obligation include permitting the Union an opportunity

---

[10] To induce these employees to transfer, Respondent offered them a relocation package sometimes referred to as the "Trels Package." Trels is an outside contracting service that publishes a booklet reflecting monetary and benefit inducements in the Greater Hartford area. Under Respondent's agreement with Trels, all employees asked to transfer through November 1979 were offered the Trels relocation package. The Respondent refused to negotiate any modifications thereto, only a willingness to consider certain "extenuating circumstances" or "hardships" on an individual basis. (G.C. Exh. 2L, pp. 3–5; G.C. Exh. 2B, p. 9.)

[11] Sec. 9(a) in its entirety reads as follows:

> Representatives designed or selected for the purposes of collective bargaining by the majority of the employees in a unit appropriate for such purposes, shall be the exclusive representatives of all the employees in such unit for the purposes of collective bargaining in respect to rates of pay, wages, hours of employment, or other conditions of employment: Provided, That any individual employee or a group of employees shall have the right at any time to present grievances to their employer and to have such grievances adjusted, without the intervention of the bargaining representative, as long as the adjustment is not inconsistent with the terms of a collective-bargaining contract or agreement then in effect: Provided further, That the bargaining representative has been given opportunity to be present at such adjustment.

[12] See Valencia Baxt Express, 143 NLRB 211 (1963). See also Westinghouse Electric Corp., 206 NLRB 812, 822 (1973). While in Westinghouse the Board found merit in Respondent's exception to the judge's findings that Respondent was obligated to notify the Union of the positions in Manassas and bargain collectively concerning the identity of employees at Laurel who would be notified of the availability of the positions, it did so because the Laurel facility constituted an accretion to Manassas and, therefore, management's right to select employees for transfer was governed by contract.

[13] During the course of negotiations, Respondent defended its refusal to bargain with the Union over the transferees because they were to be employed at a location outside the bargaining unit. The Respondent did not then contend, as it apparently does now, that the Union waived by contract any role in bargaining over transferees. In my original decision, I noted that "a waiver to be effective would have to be clear and unequivocal and the record is devoid of evidence tending to show that this was done." Otis I, supra, 255 NLRB at 247 fn. 26. Noting that the Respondent has not proffered additional evidence, but relies solely on the original record, I reaffirm my original finding. Compare Mack Trucks, 277 NLRB at 711, in which, inter alia, virtually all of the so-called effects-bargaining subjects were secured within the master shop agreement and relevant supplements. There, the Respondent's outright rejection of certain union proposals was privileged under Sec. 8(d) of the Act.

to bargain about the basis on which employees are to be given the opportunity to transfer from its Mahwah, New Jersey facility to other of its facilities in Connecticut and on the identity of the employees selected for transfer interviews. I will also recommend that Respondent cease and desist from bypassing the Union in derogation of its exclusive bargaining status by dealing directly with employees concerning the transfer of unit jobs.

As for backpay, I find, in the circumstances of this case, that a traditional bargaining order without a limited backpay requirement will not effectuate the purposes of the Act. The record disclosed that some employees were laid off with others to follow as a result of Respondent's "decision."[14] Concerning such individuals, the Board has observed, "meaningful bargaining cannot be assured until some measure of economic strength is restored to the Union." See Gar Wood-Detroit Truck Equipment, 274 NLRB 113 (1985). I therefore recommend that Respondent be required to compensate the affected laid-off employees in a manner similar to that required in Gar Wood. Thus the Respondent should be required to pay the affected employees backpay at the rate of their normal wages when last in Respondent's employ from 5 days after the date of the Board's Decision and Order until the occurrence of the earliest of the following conditions: (1) the date the Respondent bargains to agreement with the Union on those subjects pertaining to the effects of its transfer and consolidation decision on its employees; (2) a bona fide impasse in bargaining; (3) the failure of the Union to request bargaining within 5 days of the Board's Decision and Order, or to commence negotiations within 5 days of the Respondent's notice of its desire to bargain with the Union; (4) the subsequent failure of the Union to bargain in good faith; but in no event shall this sum be less than these employees would have earned for a 2-week period at the rate of their normal wages when last in the Respondent's employ.

On these findings of fact and conclusions of law and on the entire record, I issue the following recommended[15]

ORDER

The Respondent, Otis Elevator Company, a wholly owned subsidiary of United Technologies Corporation, Mahwah, New Jersey, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall

1. Cease and desist from

(a) Failing and refusing to bargain with Local 989, United Automobile, Aerospace and Agricultural Implement Workers of America as the exclusive bargaining representative of the employees in the unit found appropriate herein over the effects on unit employees of its decision to transfer and consolidate certain of its engineering operations, including unit work from its Mahwah, New Jersey facility to other facilities in Connecticut.

(b) Failing and refusing, on request, to permit the Union an opportunity to bargain about the basis on which employees are to be given the opportunity to transfer from its Mahwah, New Jersey facility to other of its facilities in Connecticut and on the identity of the employees selected for transfer interviews.

(c) Dealing directly with employees and failing and refusing to permit the Union a full opportunity to be present at employee interviews that involve the loss of unit work and the transfer of the employees from Respondent's Mahwah, New Jersey facility to its unrepresented facilities in Connecticut.

(d) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them by Section 7 of the Act.

2. Take the following affirmative action necessary to effectuate the policies of the Act.

(a) On the Union's request, bargain collectively with the Union as the exclusive bargaining representative of the Respondent's employees in the appropriate unit with respect to wages, hours, and other terms and conditions of employment.

(b) On the Union's request, bargain with the Union concerning the effects on unit employees of its decision to transfer and consolidate unit work from Mahwah, New Jersey to other of its facilities in Connecticut.

(c) On the Union's request, bargain with the Union about the basis on which employees in the appropriate unit are to be given the opportunity or required to transfer to its facilities in Connecticut and on the identity of these employees.

(d) Pay the laid-off employees their normal wages in the manner set forth in the remedy section of this decision.

(e) Preserve and, on request, make available to the Board or its agents for examination and copying, all payroll records, social security payment records, timecards, personnel records and reports, and all other records necessary to analyze the amount of backpay due under the terms of this Order.

(f) Post at its Mahwah, New Jersey facility and those facilities in Connecticut wherein unit work from Mahwah has been transferred, copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix."[16] Copies of the notice, on

[14] Respondent's contention in its supplemental brief that the closing of the Chemical Laboratory and the status of technicians were not encompassed by the pleadings or litigated, and therefore are not elements in this case, is without merit. For example Newell's uncontroverted and credited testimony disclosed that at the 24 May effects-bargaining session, Foley advised the Union that the Company would probably close down the machine shop and "probably cause a layoff of a lab mechanic and also some technicians." Foley also advised that the Chemical Laboratory would close down with the layoff of chemists. (Tr. 30.) Further, the record disclosed that Foley, in downplaying the impact of Respondent's "decision," advised the Union at that 24 May session that "only some things like the Chem lab which did not do engineering support work in the first place will really be effected." (G.C. Exh. 2C, p. 6, emphasis added.) However, as noted by the Board in Otis I, the record is not clear whether the classification of "chemist" is included in the bargaining unit herein. I recommend that this, as well as the identities of all unit employees laid off as a result of Respondent's "decision," be deferred to the compliance stage of this proceeding. (Otis I, 255 NLRB at 238.)

[15] If no exceptions are filed as provided by Sec. 102.46 of the Board's Rules and Regulations, the findings, conclusions, and recommended Order shall, as provided in Sec. 102.48 of the Rules, be adopted by the Board and all objections to them shall be deemed waived for all purposes.

APPENDIX

NOTICE TO EMPLOYEES
POSTED BY ORDER OF THE
NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD
An Agency of the United States Government

The National Labor Relations Board has found that we violated the National Labor Relations Act and has ordered us to post and abide by this notice.

WE WILL NOT fail and refuse to bargain collectively in good faith with Local 989, International Union, United Automobile, Aerospace & Agricultural Implement Workers of America as the exclusive representative of our employees in the appropriate unit set forth below concerning the effects on unit employees of our decision to transfer and consolidate certain of our engineering operations, including unit work, from our Mahwah, New Jersey facility to other facilities, including our facilities in Connecticut. The appropriate unit is:

> All classifications of employees employed in our Engineering Division located in Mahwah and Harrison, New Jersey, and Yonkers, New York, in the classifications described in Appendix A of the collective-bargaining agreement effective April 1, 1977, to March 31, 1980, but excluding non-technical, secretarial, clerical employees not described in Appendix A, maintenance employees, guards and supervisors as defined in the Act.

WE WILL NOT fail and refuse, on request, to permit the Union an opportunity to bargain about the basis on which employees are to be given the opportunity to transfer from its Mahwah, New Jersey facility to other of its facilities in Connecticut and on the identity of the employees selected for transfer interviews.

WE WILL NOT bypass the Union as the exclusive bargaining representative of the employees in the unit described above, and deal directly with employees concerning their transfer and the transfer of unit work from our Mahwah, New Jersey facility to our unrepresented facilities in Connecticut.

WE WILL NOT in any like or related manner interfere with, restrain, or coerce you in the exercise of the rights guaranteed you by Section 7 of the Act.

WE WILL, on the Union's request, bargain collectively with the Union as the exclusive bargaining representative of our employees in the appropriate unit with respect to wages, hours, and other terms and conditions of employment.

WE WILL, on the Union's request, bargain with the Union concerning the effects on unit employees of our decision to transfer and consolidate unit work from Mahwah, New Jersey, to other of our facilities in Connecticut.

WE WILL on the Union's request, bargain with the Union about the basis on which employees in the appropriate unit are to be given the opportunity or required to transfer to our facilities in Connecticut and on the identity of these employees.

WE WILL pay the laid-off employees their normal wages, as set forth in the Decision and Order.

DECISION AND ORDER

BY CHAIRMAN DOTSON AND MEMBERS JOHANSEN AND STEPHENS

On 6 May 1986 Administrative Law Judge David L. Evans issued the attached decision. The Respondents, Continental Radiator Corporation (CRC) and Great Lake, Inc. (GLI), filed exceptions and a supporting brief. The Charging Parties filed a brief in response.

The National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the decision and the record in light of the exceptions and briefs and has decided to affirm the judge's rulings, findings,[1] and conclusions as modified and to adopt the recommended Order as modified.[2]

The consolidated complaint alleges that Respondents CRC and GLI are alter egos and/or a single employer and that they engaged in various acts violating Section 8(a)(1) and (3) of the Act. The judge found that CRC and GLI engaged in the alleged unlawful conduct as a "joint or single employer." The Respondents have excepted to the judge's finding of joint liability. We have carefully considered the Respondents' arguments and agree with the judge that CRC and GLI violated the Act as alleged[3] and that the facts support the judge's finding that CRC and GLI are a single employer under the Board's standards.[4] However, as explained below, we conclude that regarding joint liability for the remedy, Respondent GLI is also, as alleged in the complaint, the alter ego of Respondent CRC.[5]

In Advance Electric, 268 NLRB 1001, 1002 (1984), the Board stated that it will find alter ego status where two employers have "'substantially identical' management, business purpose, operation, equipment, customers, and supervision, as well as ownership." In addition, the Board considers whether there has been any hiatus in operations, whether the companies use the same building, and "whether the purpose behind the creation of the alleged alter ego was legitimate or whether, instead, its purpose was to evade responsibilities under the Act."[6] No one factor is determinative of alter ego status.

[1] The Respondents have excepted to some of the judge's credibility findings. The Board's established policy is not to overrule an administrative law judge's credibility resolutions unless the clear preponderance of all the relevant evidence convinces us that they are incorrect. Standard Dry Wall Products, 91 NLRB 544 (1950), enfd. 188 F.2d 362 (3d Cir. 1951). We have carefully examined the record and find no basis for reversing the findings.

While not affecting our decision, we correct the following factual errors contained in the judge's decision: (1) In the introductory paragraph the judge found that the charge in Case 7-CA-24712 was filed on 17 June 1984 when it was in fact filed on 17 June 1985. (2) In the first paragraph of sec. III,A,2 of his decision, the judge states that the Union filed a petition to represent CRC's production and maintenance employees on 7 July 1984. We find instead that the petition (in Case 7-RC-17352) was filed on 17 July 1984. (3) Regarding the contents of sec. III,A,4,e,1, we find that the conversation between CRC President Karl Geiger and employee Kenneth Heidel occurred on 20 June 1985, not 20 June 1984. Likewise, regarding sec. III,A,4,e,2, we find that the events involving employee Jeffrey Toomer occurred in May and early June 1985, not 1984. (4) In the first paragraph of sec. III,B,3, of his decision, the judge attributed to CRC Plant Supervisor Donald Mooney the reference to discriminatee Kenneth Dailey as "loud mouth Ken." However, the record and the judge's discussion of the facts reveal that the statement was made by CRC Vice President Harold Nichols.

[2] The judge granted the General Counsel's request that the order include a visitatorial clause authorizing the Board, for compliance purposes, to obtain discovery from the Respondents under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure under the supervision of the United States court of appeals enforcing the order. We have concluded that under the circumstances of this case such a clause is not warranted. We shall modify the recommended Order to delete the visitatorial clause and also to conform to the violations found by the judge. Further, we shall include injunctive language prohibiting any "like or related" misconduct. It is unnecessary to modify the notice.

[3] Contrary to the Respondents' contentions, we find that the judge's recommended remedy and Order are consistent with the terms of the parties' settlement agreement. Allegations of unlawful 8(a)(1) conduct predating discriminatee Kenneth Dailey's discharge on 27 August 1984 and the status of the Respondents as alter egos and/or a single employer were not disposed of by the settlement agreement to the extent they "have any bearing on the Dailey discharge or remedy therefore." As found by the judge, the predischarge violations of Sec. 8(a)(1) establish animus and unlawful motivation, essential elements of the General Counsel's prima facie case. Further, a finding of joint liability protects Dailey's reinstatement and backpay remedies. In concluding that the judge acted within the bounds of the settlement agreement, we note also that the agreement prohibits the General Counsel from seeking any remedial provisions for conduct "expressly disposed of by settlement herein." A careful review of the agreement and its corresponding notice demonstrates that although postermination allegations of violative 8(a)(1) conduct were settled, no pretermination allegations of 8(a)(1) misconduct were "expressly disposed of" or in any way remedied by the settlement. Accordingly, we conclude that the General Counsel's request that the unlawful pretermination conduct be remedied and the judge's agreement with that request are within the scope of the settlement agreement's terms.

[4] Nominally separate business entities may be regarded as a single employer under the Act where there is functional integration of operations, centralized control of labor relations, common management, and common ownership or financial control. Radio Union v. Broadcast Service, 380 U.S. 255, 256 (1965); NLRB v. Browning-Ferris Industries, 691 F.2d 1117, 1121-1124 (3d Cir. 1982); Weldment Corp., 275 NLRB 1432 (1985).

[5] In light of our conclusion that Respondents CRC and GLI are alter egos, we find it unnecessary to rely on the judge's finding that the two entities constitute a "joint employer," a theory of employer liability not alleged in the consolidated complaint. In doing so, we note that the concept of joint employer should not be confused with the theories of single employer or alter ego. See, e.g., NLRB v. Browning-Ferris Industries, supra at 1121-1124; Apex Decorating Co., 275 NLRB 1459, 1462-1463 (1985). We also find it unnecessary to consider the judge's discussion and application to the facts of this case of O. Voorhees Painting Co., 275 NLRB 779 (1985).

[6] 268 NLRB at 1002, quoting Fugazy Continental Corp., 265 NLRB 1301, 1302 (1982), enfd. 725 F.2d 1416 (D.C. Cir. 1984).

As set forth in the judge's decision, the record establishes that CRC was created in 1976 to manufacture and distribute automotive radiator cores and related parts. At all material times, Karl Geiger was president of CRC and owned 65.625 percent of its stock. CRC's vice president, Harold Nichols, and secretary-treasurer, Martin Ewald, each owned 6.25 percent of the stock. The remaining stock was owned by Assistant Secretary-Treasurer Ron Weigand (3.125 percent) and Richard DeSiro (18.75 percent). From 1976 until January 1984,[7] CRC occupied a building it owned on 17th Street in Detroit, Michigan. In January, due to allegedly deteriorating conditions at the 17th Street facility, CRC moved 2 miles to a facility on 2000 Beard Street which it leased until 1 February 1985 from its owner, Karl Geiger.

In July 1984, the Union began an organizational campaign among CRC's production and maintenance employees that culminated in a majority of employees voting for the Union in a representation election on 24 August.[8] On 27 August, the first workday following the election, active union supporter Kenneth Dailey was terminated. In addition to finding this discharge an 8(a)(3) violation, the judge concluded that CRC violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act on numerous occasions both before and after the representation election.

In November, Geiger received a petition, signed about 28 August by 16 CRC employees, requesting that the Union's election victory be set aside on various grounds.[9] About 30 November, while CRC's election objections were pending before the Board, Geiger incorporated GLI, with himself as sole officer and owner, to engage in the manufacture, assembly, and distribution of automotive radiator cores and related products. Between November and 31 January 1985, GLI employed only three to five employees. Although it is unclear precisely what work the employees performed, other than possibly producing a few radiator or car tube "pilot" models, it appears the employees received training (for such tasks as soldering) at the 17th Street facility vacated by CRC[10] and that some of them also worked at the Beard Street facility.

On 31 January 1985, CRC posted a notice informing its employees that "due to circumstances beyond our control," the Company was "forced to move our operation to 17th Street." Twenty-three of its twenty-six employees were immediately laid off. On 1 February 1985, GLI commenced operations at the Beard Street facility pursuant to a 1-year lease executed 25 January 1985 by Geiger on behalf of GLI. Of the 23 employees laid off by CRC, 14 were hired immediately (or within days) by GLI. In addition, those GLI employees working at 17th Street were transferred to the Beard Street facility. Of the three employees retained by CRC to complete remaining orders at Beard Street, two soon became GLI employees. By about 6 February 1985, GLI had a complement of 26 employees, CRC's exact complement at the time of the mass layoff. All CRC employees who signed the postelection petition to overturn the Union's victory were, by 6 February 1985, again actively employed. Conversely, and most importantly, the only CRC employees not hired by GLI or retained by CRC were active union supporters.[11] These employees, seven in number, were not recalled by CRC until about May 1985.

The record establishes that most former CRC employees hired by GLI performed the same duties on the same type of equipment (if not the exact machines) during the same working hours previously in effect at CRC. The close relationship between CRC and GLI is evidenced by employee Laura Policht's testimony regarding her conversation on 4 February 1985 with CRC's former vice president, Nichols. Policht reported to GLI that day as requested earlier by Geiger. Upon arriving, Policht encountered Nichols, who informed her that CRC had "diversified" and was now GLI. He presented her with the choice of being laid off or working for GLI doing the "same job" she had done for CRC. Policht learned, upon inquiring, that she would receive the same wages and benefits at GLI that she previously received at CRC and that her CRC seniority would transfer to GLI. Policht decided to work for GLI. Nichols then asked Policht, who did not sign a union card or engage in any other union activity, if she was a friend of former CRC employee Sharon Osborne, who had been an active union supporter and with whom Policht shared a machine at CRC. When Policht replied "no," Nichols said "good." Further, while Policht and other selected employees (who were outwardly antiunion or whose union preferences were unknown) were approached to work for

[8] The Union, which won the election by one vote, was certified by the Board on 10 December 1985.

[9] There is no evidence the petition was at any time presented to the Board's Regional Office.

[10] We reject the Respondents' contention that GLI is a corporate successor to Great Lakes Industries, a sole proprietorship owned by Geiger's brother, Heinz Geiger. As found by the judge, Heinz operated his business under an assumed name from August 1983 until 21 March when he filed a certificate "discontinuing business" under that name. Karl Geiger's attempts to continue business under the sole proprietorship's assumed name failed. In any event, we find particularly illustrative of the lack of merit in the Respondents' argument Geiger's admission that GLI had no employees prior to the fall of 1984.

[11] This number excludes two CRC employees not hired by GLI or retained by CRC for reasons unrelated to the matters at issue here.

GLI, Osborne's attempts merely to enter the Beard Street shop on 7 February 1985 were thwarted.[12] Policht continued to work for GLI until 29 May 1985, when she reported, as instructed, to the 17th Street facility and became a radiator assembler for CRC, with the same benefits, wages, and seniority received at GLI.

Addressing the elements of an alter ego determination, we find, based on Geiger's proprietary interests in CRC and GLI, substantially identical ownership between the two enterprises. Leases between Geiger and the two entities were signed by Geiger on behalf of himself and as president of the two corporations. Geiger clearly was the dominant force in establishing the business purpose of both companies.

Concerning the element of common management, the facts reveal that as of 1 February 1985, CRC's former officers became GLI's managers. Moreover, with the exception of Mooney, every CRC supervisor became a supervisor for GLI. Mooney returned to the 17th Street facility to supervise CRC's severely diminished work force. In light of the above, we find that CRC and GLI had substantially identical management and supervision.

Regarding equipment, the record shows that both CRC and GLI lease equipment from Kar Tool, a company owned by Geiger. While CRC occupied the Beard Street facility it used two baking ovens, the newer of which remained at Beard Street for use by GLI. Likewise, two of the four fin machines used by CRC on Beard Street were left behind for GLI's use. In fact, there is no evidence that GLI had any equipment of its own when it took over the Beard Street facility. Concerning stock and supplies, employee testimony establishes that GLI used CRC's purchase order and other forms (with a superimposed sticker), commingled GLI's and CRC's stock and finished products for single shipments to customers, and used GLI employees to deliver CRC supplies. In addition, radiator cores manufactured by CRC at the 17th Street facility were sometimes packed and stored in boxes marked "GLI." While GLI purchased large numbers of CRC radiator cores, it also produced its own cores for subsequent assembly into complete radiators. These facts reveal an overlapping and integration of operations between the two entities and clearly support a finding of alter ego status.

The record also establishes that GLI and CRC share a substantially identical customer base. In fact, two-thirds of GLI's customers in February 1985 were CRC's customers in January 1985. Moreover, GLI and CRC used substantially the same suppliers in 1984 and 1985 for numerous items, including solder, tubing, acids, and "leaders."

The final factor to be considered in an alter ego analysis is employer motivation. In addressing this factor, we begin by noting the similarity of business purpose and operations between the two entities. As found above, both companies engaged in the business of manufacturing, nonretail sale, and distribution of automotive radiator cores and related products. Although GLI manufactured additional products and engaged in distribution on a larger scale than did CRC, these facts do not preclude a finding of alter ego status. On the contrary, GLI's increased distribution and manufacturing function provides some insight into employer motivation in that the increase is due in large part to GLI's expansion into more lucrative, but related, areas. Thus, while CRC continued for a time to produce old-style, less marketable radiator cores, GLI manufactured more modern, technologically competitive radiators and components. The Respondents failed to explain why GLI was created to occupy CRC's former Beard Street premises, largely with CRC's former employees and equipment, to engage in newly assigned work on an expanded scale while CRC returned with a skeleton crew to the formerly abandoned, smaller, dilapidated 17th Street facility. Geiger testified that CRC moved back to 17th Street as part of an overall plan to increase "efficiency" and "reduce overhead." However, the Respondents failed to proffer evidence as to what financial benefits resulted from the move and whether any of the physical problems at the 17th Street facility which necessitated CRC's move to Beard Street in the first place were ever remedied. The evidence leads to the conclusion that GLI was formed to continue CRC's operations in a disguised form while causing the demise of CRC, all in an attempt to avoid any union obligations or responsibilities under the Act.[13]

We find further evidence of unlawful employer motivation in the Respondents' hostility towards the Union. GLI was incorporated 3 months after the Union prevailed in the representation election and only weeks after Geiger received an employee petition seeking to overturn the Union's election victory. The formation of GLI allowed CRC to follow through on its preelection threats not to bargain with the Union and effectively to close shop if the employees selected the Union as their collective-bargaining representative. Animus is apparent in additional unlawful campaign conduct, such as threats of reduced wages, unlawful interrogation, and solicitation of grievances. When CRC lost the election, the unlawful conduct continued. Thus, union supporter Dailey was unlawfully terminated and, as found by the judge, 1984 Christmas bonuses were withheld from organizing committee members, employees were interrogated and threatened, efforts were made to induce employees to withdraw charges pending before the Board, and seven union supporters were laid off for about 3 months (and then recalled to the dilapidated 17th Street facility) while those employees who signed the petition to overturn the election immediately returned to work.[14] Such extensive misconduct underscores the depth of the Respondents' commitment to avoid unionization.

[12] In addition, rather than hire Osborne to work together with Policht on the same fin machine used by them at CRC, GLI hired a new employee.

[13] Following GLI's formation, CRC's production was apparently at a virtual standstill until early May 1985, allegedly due in large part to litigation over, and the need for subsequent repairs to, an indispensable baking oven. As stated above, a newer, operative baking oven was left behind at Beard Street for GLI's use. While CRC had a work force of about seven or eight employees in October 1985, it ceased doing business the following month. Although it appears CRC is in receivership, we agree with the judge that CRC's continued existence can be presumed in the absence of any evidence of corporate dissolution.

Based on our consideration of all the factors outlined above, we find and conclude that GLI is the alter ego of CRC. In so concluding, we rely particularly on the timing of GLI's emergence to coincide with the demise of CRC and on the employment by GLI of a majority of former CRC employees to perform the same tasks on the same or similar equipment and machines, at the same premises, for substantially the same customers, with no hiatus in operations. We rely also on the fact that Respondents CRC and GLI have substantially identical ownership, management, and supervision and share a substantially identical business purpose. Finally, we note the strong pattern of discrimination against CRC's prounion employees and the evidence of unlawful employer motivation. In short, we find that GLI was formed to accomplish a shift of work from CRC in an attempt to rid the Company of its prounion work force and avoid any responsibilities arising under the Act.

Having found that GLI is the alter ego of CRC, we conclude that GLI violated the Act as alleged and, accordingly, is obligated, jointly with CRC, to remedy the violations found in this decision.

ORDER

The National Labor Relations Board adopts the recommended Order of the administrative law judge as modified below and orders that the Respondents, Continental Radiator Corporation and Great Lake, Inc., Detroit, Michigan, their officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall take the action set forth in the Order as modified.

1. Add the following as paragraphs 1(f) and (g).

"(f) Discharging or otherwise discriminating against employees with respect to their hire or tenure of employment or any term or condition of employment because of their union activities or other exercise of their rights under the National Labor Relations Act.

"(g) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them by Section 7 of the Act."

2. Substitute the following for paragraph 2(e).

"(h) Notify the Regional Director in writing within 20 days from the date of this Order what steps the Respondents has taken to comply."

K. C. Hortop, Esq., for the General Counsel.
Robert L. Hindelang, Esq., of East Detroit, Michigan, for the Respondents.
Nancy Schiffer, Esq., of Detroit, Michigan, for the Charging Parties.

DECISION

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

DAVID L. EVANS, Administrative Law Judge. This matter was originally tried before me on 7 through 11 October 1985 in Detroit, Michigan. The hearing was reopened, and reclosed, on 1 April 1986. The pertinent docket entries are as follows: The original charge in Case 7–CA–23796 was filed by Kenneth Dailey against Respondent Continental Radiator Corporation (Continental) on 29 August 1984[1]; the original charge in Case 7–CA–24140 was filed by John Kuzdzal against Continental on 24 December; the original charge in Case 7–CA–24260 was filed by Kuzdzal against Continental and Respondent Great Lake, Inc. (Great Lake) on 5 February; and the original charge in Case 7–CA–24712 was filed by Laura Policht against both Respondents on 17 June. The original complaint and notice of hearing issued on 1 October; an order consolidating cases and amended complaint and notice of hearing issued on 11 February; an order consolidating cases and second amended complaint and notice of hearing issued on 25 March; and an order consolidating cases and third amended consolidated complaint and notice of hearing issued on 7 August 1985. These complaints allege that Continental and Great Lake constitute a "single integrated business enterprise and/or single employer" or that they are "alter egos" of one another, and these complaints further allege that the Respondents have committed various violations of Section 8(a)(1) and (3) of the National Labor Relations Act. One such allegation involves the discharge of Dailey on 27 August. Other allegations include threats, interrogations, and an unlawful solicitation of grievances before Dailey's

[14] As noted in the judge's decision, and above in fn. 3, the allegations of misconduct occurring after Dailey's discharge on 27 August were disposed of by settlement agreement.

[1] All dates herein are between 1 June 1984 and 31 May 1985 unless otherwise specified.

discharge. Still other allegations concern conduct occurring after Dailey's discharge, including threats and an interrogation regarding charges filed and testimony given under the Act, an unlawful withholding of a 1984 Christmas bonus, and an unlawful mass layoff of Continental employees on 31 January. Respondents timely filed answers that deny that they constitute a single employer, or alter egos, under the Act, and they further deny all alleged violations of the Act. These matters were tried before me at the original hearing.

After the original hearing, the General Counsel, the Charging Parties, and the Respondents submitted briefs that have been carefully considered.[2]

On 12 December International Union, United Automobile, Aerospace and Agricultural Implement Workers of America (UAW) (the Union) filed the charge in Case 7–CA–25305. The complaint on that charge issued on 24 January 1986. On 31 January 1986, the Union filed the charge in Case 7–CA–25450, and the complaint on that charge issued on 6 March 1986. The latter complaints allege the facts that on 24 August 1984 the Union won a Board-conducted representational election and that 10 December 1985 the Board certified the Union as the collective-bargaining representative of the production and maintenance employees of Continental. These latter complaints further allege that, by virtue of the certification, the Union is the exclusive collective-bargaining representative of the production and maintenance employees of Great Lake, as well as those of Continental, because those two corporate entities are, as had been alleged in the first set of complaints, alter egos or they constitute a single employer. These latter complaints further allege, inter alia, that on 15 November 1985 the two corporations laid off Continental's employees in violation of Section 8(a)(3) of the Act, that on the same date Continental ceased operations, and that after the 10 December 1985 certification Great Lake refused to bargain with the Union in violation of Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act. Great Lake duly filed answers to these latter complaints, but Continental did not. After motions to further consolidate cases and reopen the record were filed by the General Counsel, the hearing was reopened on 1 April 1986, as previously mentioned. At the beginning of the reopened hearing, Counsel for the General Counsel represented that the Union had submitted a request to withdraw all 8(a)(5) charges; he further moved to dismiss all such allegations, and he announced that the General Counsel, the Charging Parties, and Great Lake had entered into a written settlement agreement.[3] The settlement agreement provides for a Notice to Employees, backpay for certain individuals, and further provides:

> The parties agree that this Settlement Agreement disposes of all allegations of these cases except for [sic] the discharge of Kenneth Dailey, the alleged violations of Section 8(a)(1) which predate Mr. Dailey's discharge and the allegation that Continental Radiator and Great Lake, Inc., are alter egos and/or a single employer as they have any bearing on the Dailey discharge or remedy therefore. The parties agree that in deciding these issues the administrative law judge may base his decision on the entire record in this proceeding; however, the Regional Director and General Counsel will not seek any remedial provisions [for] the conduct expressly disposed of by settlement herein provided compliance is maintained.

I approved the settlement agreement at the reopened hearing; therefore, the only violations for which remedy shall be ordered are those specified in the above-quoted paragraph of the settlement agreement, to wit Dailey's discharge and those violations that occurred before it. However, it is necessary to consider the violations that occurred after Dailey's discharge because they demonstrate the animus possessed by Continental's chief executive, Karl Geiger. As I find, Continental withheld the 1984 Christmas bonuses from the most active prounion employees, and it conducted a mass layoff of prounion employees in February 1985. Furthermore, it is factually undenied that Geiger threatened and interrogated employees, in the clearest of terms, with reprisals because they had filed charges under the Act. These outrageous unfair labor practices bespeak of deep-seated antiunion hostility and willingness to violate the law. Respondents did not develop this animus overnight, and it would be fatuous to ignore these violations that occurred subsequent to Dailey's discharge in attempting to determine the real reason for that discharge.

Therefore, although an order covering them will not issue because of the settlement agreement, the proven[4] postdischarge violations will be considered to shed light on the issue of Continental's motivation in its discharge of Dailey.

On the record as a whole, including my observation of the witnesses and on consideration of the briefs submitted, I make the following

FINDINGS OF FACT

I. JURISDICTION

Although Continental is no longer operating and, according to documents submitted by Great Lake,[5] is in receivership, it has not been dissolved according to any evidence presented herein. Therefore, Continental's continued existence is presumed.

---

[2] The General Counsel has moved to strike certain extra record factual representations in Respondents' brief. Respondents did not oppose, and the motion is granted.

[3] No one appeared on behalf of Continental at the reopened hearing and Continental is not a signatory to the settlement agreement.

[4] At the reopened hearing, no evidence was offered regarding the 15 November 1985 layoff or any other issue.

[5] Continental was created in 1976; Great Lake was incorporated in November 1984. Both entities are Michigan corporations that have operated from facilities in Detroit. Respondents manufacture (or have manufactured) and distribute (or have distributed) automobile radiators and related parts from these facilities. During 1985 each Respondent received gross revenues in excess of $1 million and purchased directly from suppliers located outside the State of Michigan goods and materials valued in excess of $50,000. Therefore, both Respondents are now, and have been at all times material herein, employers engaged in commerce within the meaning of Sec. 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

II. THE LABOR ORGANIZATION INVOLVED

The Union, is, and has been at all times material herein, a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

III. ALLEGED UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES

A. Facts

1. Background and supervisors involved

Karl Geiger owns 65.625 percent of the stock of Continental Radiator. The remainder of the stock is held thusly: Harold Nichols holds 6.25 percent; Ron Weigand[6] holds 3.125 percent; Martin E. Wall holds 6.25 percent; and Richard DeSiro holds 18.75 percent. When Continental began operations in 1976, it utilized a building that it owned on 17th Street in Detroit. In January 1984, when the 17th Street facility was in a state of advanced decay, according to the testimony of Geiger, Continental moved into a building on Beard Street, Detroit, which is 2 miles from the 17th Street location. Continental did not buy the Beard Street building; it leased it from its sole owner Karl Geiger. By its terms, the lease was to terminate on 1 February 1985.

Continental employed about 25 employees at Beard Street until 31 January at which time it laid off 23 of its 26 employees. Continental returned to the 17th Street location, leaving the Beard Street building to Great Lake. Supervisors of Continental while it was located at Beard Street were Geiger, the president; Harold Nichols, vice president; and Donald Mooney, plant supervisor and sales representative. The complaint alleges, and Respondents deny, that Franklyn Reed, marketing director and administrative assistant to Geiger, was a supervisor of Continental within Section 2(11) of the Act. Employee Luis Luciano testified that in November 1984 Reed gave him a written warning notice, but the notice was not placed into evidence, and there is no evidence of who authorized the notice. Two other employees, Adolph (Blackie) Seledon and Policht testified that they considered Reed to be a supervisor, but the bases for their conclusions were not elicited, except that Policht testified that she once asked Reed to implement a raise for her; however, the raise had previously been promised by Geiger. During the campaign preceding to the 24 August election Reed did hand out Respondent's antiunion propaganda, but there is no evidence that he was performing anything other than a delivery function. Therefore, it appears from this record that Reed performed no more than ministerial administrative functions for Continental; that is, there is no evidence that he was vested with any of the supervisory indicia enumerated by Section 2(11) of the Act, and I find and conclude that the General Counsel has failed to prove that Reed was a supervisor or agent within Section 2(11) or (13) of the Act.[7]

2. Alleged predischarge violations of the Act

Employees of Continental began distributing authorization cards on behalf of the Union in early July. An organizing committee was formed, and employee-members wore buttons identifying them as such. Employees who were members of the organizing committee were Sharon Osborne, Seledon, John Kuzdzal, Luciano, Ronald Sheridan,[8] and dischargee Kenneth Dailey. On 7 July the Union filed a petition to represent Continental's production and maintenance employees. Pursuant to this petition an election was scheduled for 24 August.

Seledon testified that about 3 weeks before the election he and employee Alfredo (Freddie) Aponte were working together on a radiator. Nichols approached Aponte and stated that if the Union were voted in "some of the people making $5.50 an hour they will be having their wages cut and the people [who] are [making] less they won't lose anything if the Union got in." Seledon testified that at the time he was making $5.50 an hour. Nichols did not testify.[9]

Seledon further testified that a week later he and Nichols were talking on the shop floor when he remarked to Nichols that Continental would have to negotiate with "the people" if the Union were selected. Nichols replied, that Geiger would negotiate, but, "Mr. Geiger would never come to an agreement with you people."

Osborne testified that a week or two before the election she was at her machine when she was engaged with Nichols in a conversation. She testified that Nichols was speaking against the Union and stated:

> . . . that if the people went out on strike, they would not have a job. The ones that would come to work would be continually working. And the ones out on the street would not be having a job, because there is no UAW in the shop at that time. . . . He also told me that if they wanted to, him and, I guess, Mr. Geiger, wanted to take the shop and move it down South. That they could do that for cheaper wages for people to work . . . if the UAW got in that they could do that very easily.

Kuzdzal, who is of Polish descent, testified that a week before the election Reed called him to the lunchroom at a time when no one else was present. According to Kuzdzal, Reed asked why "I am starting this Union stuff"? Kuzdzal replied that he had not started it but he was supporting the Union even though he was no longer on the organizing committee. Kuzdzal replied that it made no difference because "unofficially I was still supporting the Union." Reed further asked Kudzal if he knew what happened to union supporters in Poland; Kuzdzal replied, "No," and Reed replied, "they locked

[7] Walter Garson, Jr. & Associates, 276 NLRB 1226 (1985), relied on by the General Counsel is distinguishable. In that case the disputed agents also served as a conduit for dissemination of the employer's propaganda, but in doing so they conducted systematic group meetings with employees, the first of which was attended by an owner of the employer. In such circumstances the Board held that the individuals in question were "clothed by Respondent with the apparent authority of its agents and agent with respect to personnel matters and particularly with respect to the Union organizing efforts." Such is simply not the case here.

[9] Aponte did not testify either; Seledon testified, without objection or contradiction, that Aponte is now in the armed services.

them up." (Before this incident Kuzdzal had worn T-shirts that bore the legend "Solidarity" in Polish.) Reed did not testify, so Kuzdzal's testimony is unrebutted. Although I found Kuzdzal credible it is to be noted that, as I have held above, the General Counsel failed to prove that Reed was a supervisor of Continental.

Kuzdzal further testified that about 2 days after the preceding conversation with Reed, he was called to the office by Nichols. At that time according to Kuzdzal, "he asked me why I am doing this? Why didn't I come speak to him first?" Kuzdzal did not reply. Nichols then asked if Kuzdzal knew that his wife, a worker in the office, had received certain benefits from Continental. Kuzdzal replied that he did. Nichols did not testify, and I find Kuzdzal's testimony of Nichols' questioning to be credible.

On the day before the election Geiger gave a speech to an assembly of all employees in the lunchroom. According to Dailey, Kuzdzal, and employee Kenneth Heidel, Geiger told the employees that they did not need a union and that they could come to management with their problems and it would take care of them. Although Geiger testified, he did not deny the statements attributed to him by these three employees whom I found credible.

3. Discharge of Dailey

The complaint alleges that Continental discharged employee Kenneth Dailey in violation of Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act. Continental answers that none of its supervisors or agents knew of Dailey's union activities and that Dailey was discharged for cause.

Dailey was hired by Respondent on 11 June and discharged on Monday, 27 August, the first workday after the Friday, 24 August, election. Dailey was an unskilled worker, 26 years of age. He was assigned to learn to solder radiator corners under the tutelage of Seledon. Seledon held no title but did train one or two new employees a year for Continental. In addition to soldering, Dailey, on two occasions, was assigned the job of cutting brass tubes to length for employees who placed them into the radiator cores. Before his last day of his employment Dailey was not warned or otherwise disciplined for any offense.

On 11 July Dailey signed an authorization card for the Union. Thereafter he began distributing literature for the Union and solicited support for it among the other employees. He wore two union buttons. At first he wore a button that was 1-1/4 inch in diameter that bore the legend "JOIN—VOTE UAW." Later, after he joined the organizing committee, Dailey wore a button that was 2-1/2 inches in diameter that said "Organizing Committee" at upper and lower arcs in addtion to the legent "UAW" in the middle.[10] Respondent called two supervisors to testify about the Dailey discharge; these were Geiger and Plant Floor Supervisor Don Mooney, both of whom denied seeing the buttons and further denied any knowledge of Dailey's union activities or sympathies.

The General Counsel presented the following evidence to support his contention that Respondent did know about Dailey's union activities: Employees Luis Luciano and Seledon testified that they saw Dailey wearing the buttons from time to time. Dailey further, credibly, testified that during the campaign, on an occasion when Mooney was handing out Respondent's campaign literature, he told Mooney that he was for the Union. Finally, Sharon Osborne, who was employed by Continental at the time of the hearing, testified that about 2 weeks before the election she and Continental's vice president, Nichols, had a conversation about the amount of a raise Osborne had recently received. The conversation drifted over to the topic of the Union. According to Osborne:

> . . . he also said to me that he wanted to know if I wanted Ken—loudmouth Ken and punk Ron [Sheridan] and John Kuzdzal, or however you say his last name, to be my representatives for the UAW. And I said, I happened to be on the committee also. . . . I said, "Who is Kenny?" and he says, "The boy that works in the back with Blackie [Seledon] with the red hair."

Nichols did not testify; therefore, this testimony stands unrebutted, and I find it credible. Dailey, who has red hair,[11] was working with Seledon at the time.

Dailey was discharged at the end of the workday on 27 August. Dailey's timecards reflect that he was late on the following days immediately preceding his discharge: Monday, 20 August, 3 minutes; Tuesday, 21 August, 1 minute; Wednesday, 22 August, 3 minutes; Thursday, 23 August, 7 minutes; Friday, 24 August, 14 minutes; and Monday, 27 August, 20 minutes. Mooney testified that when Dailey arrived at work on 27 August he asked the employee why he was late, but Dailey did not answer. Mooney told him, "Look, this is the third time in a row. Consider this a warning." Mooney further testified:

> At the end of the day, I called him in the office and I told him, I said, "Kenny, you are just not working out. You are not the man I am looking for. If you need to use us for a reference, feel free." And that was that. He turned and left.

In addition to this, Dailey credibly testified that he asked Mooney if there were not another reason, but Mooney just repeated his statement that he was not the man he (or Continental) was "looking for."

The General Counsel contends that Dailey was discharged because of his union activities and that Respondent selected Dailey to inflict retribution on the employees for having selected the Union as their collective-bargaining representative in the election conducted on the [10] Apparently Dailey did not wear a union button every day; Continental produced a photograph of Dailey and other employees as they listened to Geiger's speech mentioned above, and Dailey did not have a union button on at that time. However, this fact does not require the conclusion, advanced by Continental, that Dailey never wore a union button.

[11] In fact, when Respondent's witness employee Leona Gieraga testified, she once referred to Dailey and stated, "[W]e called him 'Red.'"

Friday before the Monday on which Dailey was discharged. Respondent defends the allegation on the dual bases that it did not know of Dailey's union activities and that Dailey was discharged for several causes. The causes enumerated by Respondent are: (1) tardiness and absences; (2) walking around and talking when he should have been working; (3) being "goofy" as one employee witness described him; (4) hitting a female fellow worker; and (5) unsatisfactory work performance.

Of the 55 workdays between 11 June and 27 August (inclusive) that Dailey was on the payroll he was late for 12 of them, or 22 percent of the time. His timecards reflect that he had only one tardy arrival between 11 June and 5 July; thereafter, he was late for periods of 5 minutes or less on 27 July and 1, 4, 8, 14, 20, 21, and 22 August. Then, as previously noted, he was 7 minutes late on 23 August, 14 minutes late on 24 August, and 20 minutes late on 27 August. Respondent submitted into evidence Dailey's "Daily Attendance Record" that is a calendar for the year 1984 on which tardiness and absences are recorded. The only tardy arrivals recorded on this document are the last three. This record and the timecards further reflect that Dailey was absent for reported illness on 2 and 9 August. Mooney testified that on 2 August Dailey appeared "in bad shape" and alcohol could be smelled on his person. Dailey denied that he had been drinking or that alcohol caused his illness that day; Dailey credited his temporary illness that morning to having inhaled acid fumes at the plant as he was working. Mooney excused Dailey for the day. No other employee was affected by fumes that date, and I find Dailey's story about the fumes absolutely incredible on this point.

In support of its defense that Dailey was discharged, in part, because he chronically walked around the shop, talking to other employees, Respondent called Mooney and employees Herminio Murrias, Laurie Rajnish, and Leona Gieraga. Mooney testified that he regularly had trouble with Dailey's being away from his work station and either talking to other employees or just sitting and loafing. Mooney testified that he had wanted to fire Dailey much earlier, but an "advisor" (apparently a nonlawyer) told him not to do so because it would "look bad" during an election campaign. The consultant advised Mooney to keep notes on Dailey and other employees, which Mooney did. Nine notes on Dailey were received in evidence. The first one is undated but according to Mooney would be for mid-July; it states that he assigned Dailey to help Alfredo Aponte to do a job, but Aponte had to do it while Dailey watched. The second, dated 16 July, states: "not doing anything—at 4:00—was sitting on his ass." The third, dated 24 July, states that "Mino" [Murrias] complained that "all Ken does is walk around." The fourth, dated 2 August, states tha Dailey "said he is sick. Had to go home, worked 1 hour (hungover)." The fifth, dated 8 August, states that Mooney told Dailey "to go cut tubes for CT [large radiators] . . . goofing aroung all the time." The sixth one is undated, but would apparently have been in August; it states: "Had to tell him again about not working. Had him cut tubes again. Told Blackie [Seledon] and Freddie [Aponte] why." The last three notes refer to his last three cases of tardiness, including the one on the day of discharge, 27 August. Mooney testified that employees Murrias and Santos Luciano had, on occasion, complained to him that Dailey was not working while they and other employees were. Mooney further testified that in order to put Dailey in a position where he would have to work, and could be seen by anyone in the shop, he assigned Dailey to the work of cutting brass tubes for the employees who were placing them in the radiators. Mooney did not warn Dailey that anything would happen to him if he did not stop wandering around.[12]

Murrias did testify that he had seen Daley walking around, but he also testified that Dailey walked around, "about the same" as the other employees. Murrias flatly denied that he ever approached Mooney about Dailey's not working, and I credit Murrias on this point. As far as "complaining" to Mooney, the most Murrias testified to was that "Yes, he [Mooney] asked me if he [Dailey] was working or walking around. I would say sometimes he walk[s] around." Santos Luciano did not testify. Contrary to the sixth note in Mooney's file on Dailey, Seledon flatly, and credibly, denied that Mooney once told him "why" Dailey had been assigned to cut tubes.

Employee Laurie Rajnish testified that she worked 15 feet from Dailey's work station and that "he goofed off most of the time . . . most of the day he really didn't work. He went talking with other people." When asked what Dailey's job was, Rajnish testified "he really never hardly did the same thing . . . he was always at a different job." When asked what Dailey's job was, Rajnish testified "he really never hardly did the same thing . . . he was always at a different job." When asked specifically if she had ever seen him soldering with a torch, Rajnish replied, "No." It is undisputed that Dailey's regularly assigned job was soldering with a torch, and only on two occasions was he assigned to something else, tube-cutting.

Gieraga, who worked in assembly with Rajnish, was asked what she saw Dailey doing the most. She replied:

> Well, he was back by the soldering and then—okay, if they didn't have no work down there, Harold [Nichols] sent him over to cut tubes for us or whatever, and like I says, he had the mouth. He would be talking and goofing off all of the time.

Gieraga further testified that although Dailey was usually assigned to soldering:

> [I]f there wasn't no job for him, he was assigned to cut tubes for our department or whatever, and he would be cutting and then he would stop then and talking or whatever, and going to other people talking with them and that stuff.

Seledon, with whom Dailey regularly worked, flatly denied that Dailey walked around the plant and talked to other employees when he should have been working. Seledon testified that when there was not enough soldering work to keep Dailey busy, he would go to Nichols and ask that supervisor to find something for Dailey to do. Dailey was not asked if he did, in fact, walk around and talk to other employees when he should have been working. Dailey did deny being ever spoken to by any member of management about his work performance or walking around; he specifically denied that he was ever told that he was being assigned to cut tubes because he had been walking around.

In support of its contention that Dailey was "goofy," a term employed by witness Gieraga, Respondent relies on Gieraga's explanation of her use of that term which was: "I stayed away from him. I didn't like to associate too much because he was often in trouble. He was someone you can't get along with."

Rajnish testified that she was twice struck by Dailey. The first time was in the early weeks of Dailey's employment when Dailey struck her on the arm. The second time, according to Rajnish, was when she was standing in line waiting to vote in the 24 August Board election. According to Rajnish, Dailey asked her if she was for the Union or not; when she replied that she was not, Dailey cuffed her on the back of the head. Gieraga testified that she witnessed the latter incident. Dailey denied both incidents; however, I credit Rajnish and Gieraga. There is no evidence that any of Continental's management knew of either incident before Dailey was discharged.

In support of its contention that Dailey was discharged for unsatisfactory work performance, Respondent relies on Mooney's testimony that:

> I don't think he ever learned it. I have been doing this for 18 years. I think you get a pretty good idea if somebody is going to catch on or not. He still could never run a torch. It took him two hands. I mean he would have to set it down and turn it on and hold it instead of using it like a pistol. He never caught on to it.

When asked to compare Dailey with other employees who have trained for 78 days to learn soldering, Mooney replied:

> Terrible. I mean, I have seen guys that altered the torches so they could get it to work with one hand . . . . This guy never caught on.

Seledon, in his direct testimony, stated that Dailey was a "good" worker and by that he meant that Dailey "wasn't slow picking up—picking up doing the work." Seledon testified that by this he meant that Dailey was not slow learning how to do the work. However, while he was on direct examination, Seledon vacillated. For example, Seledon was first asked on direct examination what kind of worker Dailey was, and Seledon replied, "A good worker." When asked to be more specific, Seledon replied:

> He wasn't that good, but he knew what to do. He couldn't control the torch like I do. He couldn't adjust the flame. . . . He would set the flame, but he could do the job.

On cross-examination, Seledon was asked what he meant; he responded:

> Sometimes I had to—I had to go over some of the job because it was lumpy; and to smooth it out or I had—he left a hole in the bottom; we had to fill it in. Or I told him to fill that in. Too much solder or not enough solder on the corners. And when he first started out, it didn't sweat all the way through; and I showed him, now just one or two, three times; I would say maybe a dozen times I showed him how to sweat it in to get into the plate.
> It was good and it wasn't—it wasn't 100 percent. I would say it was 75 percent okay. It was good enough to send out to the customer. . . . What I mean by 100 percent, the job being good, all even, no runs or no gobs of solder in between the fins or the tubes.

Seledon denied that he told Mooney or any other supervisor that he was having to correct approximately 25 percent of Dailey's work. Dailey denied that he was ever spoken to by Mooney or any other supervisor about producing poor quality work, and there is no testimony to contradict this statement. In fact, Mooney did not testify that he ever inspected any of Dailey's work.[13]

4. Alleged postdischarge violations of the Act

a. Background

(1) Election and petition for new election

At the 24 August 1984 election the vote was 16 for the Union, 15 against, and no votes were challenged. Continental filed objections to conduct affecting the results of the election. A hearing on the objections was conducted on 18 and 19 October. A hearing officer's report issued on 6 December; it recommended that the Board overrule Continental's objections. Continental filed exceptions to the report on 27 December. In an unpublished decision that was issued by the Board 10 December 1985, the Union was certified as the collective-bargaining representative of Continental's production and maintenance employees.

Within the week after the 24 August election 16 employees signed a petition addressed to the National Labor Relations Board asking that the election be set aside because of threats to employees and the inability to read English or Spanish of two employees (and who therefore could not have understood the ballot question). The employees of Continental who signed the petition were Eric Klump, Santos Luciano, Reinaldo Santana, John Castiglione, Herminio Murrias, Juan Santana, Laurie Rajnish, Deborah McLeod, Marie Yerger, Nick Perelekos, Jeffrey Washelewski, Carlos Santana, Bryan Lang, Wilfredo Aponte, Leona Gieraga, and Robert Dziuban. This petition was presented to Geiger, but there is no evidence that it was presented to the Board's Regional Office. Employees who did not sign the petition were Seledon, Sheridan, Luis Luciano, Charley Aponte, Kenneth Heidel, William Heidel, Kuzdzal, Anthony Lucaj, Osborne, Larua Polícht, Jeffrey Toomer, and Judy Vargas.

[13] Dailey received a 25-cent-per-hour wage increase after his first 30 days of employment with Continental. Mooney testified that he was not responsible for giving this raise, but he would have gone along with it because Dailey had performed satisfactorily for the first few weeks of his employment.

(2) Creation of Great Lake and its relationship to Continental

In November 1984, while Continental's objections to the 24 August election were pending, Geiger incorporated Great Lake, Inc. with himself as the president and sole owner. The business of Great Lake was to assemble complete radiators and distribute them to retail outlets, whereas Continental Radiator Corporation had primarily built radiator cores for other companies to assemble into complete radiators, although Continental had done some distributing. Great Lake employed about six employees between its creation in November 1984 and 31 January 1985.

As previously noted, Continental Radiator Corporation was created in 1976, and Karl Geiger owns 62.625 percent of the stock. Great Lake, Inc. was incorporated on 30 November 1984.[14] The first three to five employees of Great Lake were trained at the 17th Street location that Continental had abandoned in January 1984. All the jobs they learned to do there is unclear, but some employees were trained to do the soldering of radiator cores. Between November and 1 February, some of the Great Lake employees also worked at the Beard Street address. On the day after the 31 January mass layoff of the Continental employees, Great Lake began operating out of the Beard Street facility. The Great Lake employees who had been training at 17th Street were then transferred to the Beard Street. Additionally, by 6 February all employees who had signed the petition to set aside the 24 August union election victory (and four who had not: Seledon, Polícht, Charley Aponte, and Lucaj) were transferred to Great Lake's payroll and continued working at Beard Street. Also Great Lake hired 3 new employees so that by 6 February, Great Lake had a complement of 26 employees, exactly what Continental's employee complement had been at Beard Street before the 31 January layoff.

Great Lake purchases radiator cores from Continental Radiator (who, after May was producing cores at the 17th Street address), and also makes some cores itself. Great Lake also purchases other radiator parts such as upper and lower tanks and channels[15] and assembles them into complete radiators. It also produces radiator kits that are boxes which include the core and other parts necessary to assemble a complete radiator; these are purchased (for less cost than an assembled radiator) by radiator and automobile repair shops for assembly by the purchasers' employees. Sixty-five percent of Continental's 1984 customers were customers of Great Lake, Inc. in 1985. Great Lake also has become a distributor for General Motors radiators. In 1984 Continental distributed a few items that are purchased rather than manufactured, but on a small scale compared with what Great Lake began doing after the layoff of the Continental employees.

Continental had two ovens for the finishing of radiators. One was old and in need of repair; that is the one Karl Geiger sent over to the 17th Street facility when he laid off the Continental employees at Beard Street. After the oven was repaired in May, as described below, Continental began recalling employees (who were not already working at Great Lake) to the 17th Street facility. The core-production business of Continental at 17th Street has steadily atrophied, so that at the time of the original hearing Continental's employee complement was down to six employees.

Geiger testified that the reason for the removal of Continental from the Beard Street location to the 17th Street location was "efficiency." Why it was more efficient to set up a new corporation, Great Lake, for the purposes of handling part of the core production and all the new distribution function, at the same premises, was not explained. The only expense Continental reduced by the move was rent. Continental's lease at Beard Street expired on 1 February. Geiger, who owned the building, chose not to renew Continental's lease (or, at least, chose not to renew it at the same rate). Therefore, Continental Radiator was compelled to return to the 17th Street building that it owned. However, the building, as previously mentioned, had been abandoned in early 1984 because it was dilapidated. What repairs to the 17th Street building were required to make it useable and the cost of those repairs are not disclosed in the record.

In addition to Karl Geiger, president, the officers of Continental Radiator at all times herein have been Harold Nichols, vice president, Martin E. Wall, secretary-treasurer, and Ronald Weigand, assistant secretary-treasurer. When Continental was moved out of the Beard Street location, Nichols and Weigand remained with Great Lake as supervisors. Mooney went ot the 17th Street facility to continue supervising Continental Radiator employees there.

There is no evidence that the employees newly hired by Geiger at Great Lake had any skills not possessed by those who were laid off by Continental; that is, the work at both places was unskilled soldering, assembly, and shipping and receiving work.

b. Monetary payments at Christmas 1984

Of the 26 employees who were employed by Continental during the week before Christmas 1984, 22[16] received monetary payments from $40 to $200. The four employees who did not receive any payments were John Kuzdzal, Luis Luciano, Adolph Seledon, and Sharon Os-

[14] Heinz Geiger, brother of Karl, operated a proprietorship called Great Lakes Industries from 27 August 1983 until 21 March 1984 when he filed with the State of Michigan a "Certificate of Discontinuance of Business Under An Assumed Name." When Karl Geiger desired to incorporate another business, he attempted to use the name that Heinz had abandoned; however, because there was then another Michigan corporation with a similar name, he could not. Therefore, he chose the name "Great Lake [singular], Inc.," instead.

[15] These are conduits on the sides of a radiator.

[16] See G.C. Exh. 17, and note that listed employees Calles and Ortiz were not employed by Continental at Christmas 1984.

borne, none of whom signed the petition for a new election, and all of whom were the remaining[17] members of the organizational committee. The General Counsel contends that the four employees who did not receive any cash payment[18] at Christmas 1984 were discriminated against in violation of Section 8(a)(1) and (3) because they were members of the organizing committee and because they did not sign the petition to overturn the 24 August election. Continental contends that the monetary awards were personal gifts from Karl Geiger and not benefits of the employment relationship.[19]

In 1983 Continental employed 20 employees at Christmastime; each of these 20 received monetary awards from $25 to $175.[20] Geiger testified that he took $2030 of his own money and gave it to the company treasurer to cover checks that were issued by Continental for the 1984 Christmas payments. Geiger testified that he did this because the employees would have had a easier time cashing a check from Continental than they would have had cashing his personal checks. Geiger testified that no tax deduction was made on Continental's 1984 taxes for these payments. When Geiger was asked if any deductions were made for the 1983 Christmas payments, he stated that he could not remember. When asked why not all of Continental's employees received the gifts Geiger replied:

> I usually give a gift to people who reciprocate, who I expect another gift [from] or who I expect at least a Christmas card from.

When asked specifically why Kuzdzal did not receive a cash Christmas gift, Geiger replied that he did not expect to receive a Christmas card or gift from Kuzdzal; Geiger acknowledged that Kuzdzal did receive a cash gift ($85) in 1983. When asked why Osborne did not receive a Christmas cash gift, Geiger replied, "I can't tell you the reason, no." When asked why Luis Luciano did not get a 1984 Christmas cash payment, Geiger replied he did not know Luciano; Luciano received $20 at Christmas 1983.

Osborne testified that she got a $25 cash payment in 1983. At the time Nichols told her that she would have received more money if she had been employed longer but she then had only been employed for 3 months. In 1984, when she had not received any cash payment for the year, she approached the office secretary to ask the reason. Apparently the secretary relayed this question to Nichols, because later in the day Nichols approached Osborne at her machine. According to Osborne:

> Mr. Nichols told me that, "this piece of paper would explain everything on what you people are going to be getting. From now on, you will have to associate with the Union people, your Union representatives." And that, "We are not going to be dishing out any more money."

Osborne testified that she did not read the paper which Nichols gave her at that time. Kuzdzal testified that when he did not receive a Christmas payment he asked Nichols the reason. According to Kuzdzal, Nichols replied "company discretion." Nichols did not testify and this testimony by Osborne and Kuzdzal was credible.

c. Layoff of 31 January

On 31 January the following notice to all Continental employees was posted:

CONTINENTAL RADIATOR CORPORATION

To: All Employees

Due to circumstances beyond our control, we are forced to move our operation to 17th Str., Detroit We are sorry to announce that during this transaction the following employees, effective January 31, 1985, will be laid off:

Name	Hire Date
Marie Yerger	4–23–79
Nicholas Perelekos	7–19–82
Jeffrey Toomer	6–18–79
Luis Luciano	9–1–82
Deborah McLeod	9–3–79
Charley Aponte	10–1–82
Reinaldo Santana	1–8–80
Juan Santana	6–20–83
John Castiglione	2–5–80
Laurie Rajnish	6–21–83
Carlos Santana	5–27–80
Sharon Osborne	8–3–83
John Kuzdzal	9–2–80
Kenneth Heidel	1–19–84
Hermino Murrias	6–30–81
Judy Vargas	2–1–84
Jeffrey Washelewski	7–13–81
Laura Policht	2–1–84
Santos Luciano	11–9–81
Wilfredo Aponte	1–25–84
Adolph Seledon	5–11–82
William Heidel	6–19–84
Anthony Lucaj	6–22–84

Hopefully we can conclude this project within a few weeks. Management will do their best to make your layoff as short as possible. Recall will be by seniority and Qualification. If you have any questions during your layoff feel free to call 963–0855. Don Mooney will gladly answer your questions.

Rather than "a few weeks," there was no recall by Continental until May. Three employees of Continental were not laid off on 31 January. They are Leona Gieraga, [17] By Christmas 1984, Dailey had been discharged, and Sheridan had quit.

[18] They and all other employees of Continental received $25 gift certificates redeemable at a local department store. Continental also gave out these certificates to all employees at Christmas 1983.

[19] Although this issue is encompassed in the 1 April 1986 settlement quoted above, it is necessary to consider this allegation as it bears on the issues of animus that may have affected the decision to discharge Dailey and the remedy for that discharge; that is would Dailey have received a cash award at Christmastime 1984, but for his unlawful discharge, as found herein?

[20] Compare G.C. Exh. 7, which lists seniority dates with G.C. Exh. 17, which lists the payments made in 1983 and 1984; note that Wilfredo Aponte, Calles, Kenneth, and William Heidel, Lucaj, and Policht were not employed by Continental at Christmas 1983.

Robert Dziuban, and Eric Klump, each of whom was senior to the employees listed above. Within the week following the layoff the following Continental employees were transferred to the payroll of Great Lake: Gieraga, Dziuban, Klump, Yerger, McLeod, Reinaldo Santana, Castiglione, Carlos Santana, Murrias, Santos Luciano, Perelekos, Charley Aponte, Juan Santana, Rajnish, Lucaj, Policht, and Seledon. Additionally, Washelewski was first transferred to Kar Tool, another company owned by Karl Geiger, then later to Great Lake. All of these employees, except Seledon, Charley Aponte, Policht, and Lucaj had signed the petition for a new election that was given to Geiger, as mentioned previously. The remaining employees were not employed by either Respondent for 5 months when Continental reopened, on 17th Street, in May; these were: Osborne, Vargas, Kenneth and William Heidel, Luis Luciano, and Kuzdzal, none of whom signed the petition and all of whom are alleged to have been laid off in violation of Section 8(a)(3) and (1).

Policht, who did not sign a union card and did not engage in any other union activity, testified about her transfer. Policht testified that about quitting time on 31 January, the day the above-quoted layoff notice was posted, Geiger approached her at the fin machine that was her regular workplace. According to Policht, Geiger stated: "I am always looking for good workers. Don't go to the unemployment office. Maybe I have a job for you at Kar Tool." Geiger told her to come to work on Monday morning, 4 February, and talk to Nichols. Charley Aponte was standing near Policht and Geiger at the time. Aponte asked Geiger if he could come to work on Monday also; Geiger told him to report the next day. On 4 February Policht reported to the Beard Street facility (which still had an outdoor sign stating "Continental Radiator"), and walked through the employee entrance. As she walked through the employee entrance toward the office she noticed that all employees were working at their same jobs except "a few." When she reached the office she spoke to Nichols. Policht testified that Nichols told her:

> He said that Continental had not rented the building or owned the building, and that they were diversified, I think was the word he used. And that it was Great Lake now. And I had a choice of either staying on the layoff or working for Great Lake. And I asked him if I would be doing the same job. And he said yes. . . .
> And I asked him if I went to the other building later, because on the notice it said "a few weeks layoff," I said, "Would I be running doing—doing the same thing?" And he said, "Yes." and I said, "Would you have a fin machine there too"? And he said, "Yes." And he said, "Yes." And I said, "And one here"? He said, "Yes." And I said, "Well, we would be doing the same thing there as here"? And he said, "Yes." And he asked me if I wanted to start working. I told him, "Yeah, I would work for Great Lakes." and he said, "Well, what about later"? And I said, well it depended what the rest of the—I seen that almost all the employees were at the same place. And I couldn't decide what to do—to go to—I [start] work here and then I will see where most of the friends and employees go and I will go with them.
> I asked him if the amount of pay was the same. He said, "Yes." And if the benefits were the same; he said, "Yes." And the seniority; he said, "Yes." And I said, "if I work for Great Lakes, I would still have my seniority from Continental"? And he said, "Yes."

Nichols asked Policht when she could go to work, and Policht replied that she could go to work right then. Nichols asked if she was a friend of Osborne and Policht replied, "No. We had talked together so much at the machine, we really never talk [to] each other after work." Nichols replied: "Good." Policht then went to work at the same fin machine job that she had worked for Continental. The only difference in the operation was that she was required to operate all four fin machines, in series apparently, whereas before she and Osborne had operated them together. At some point during the week Nichols approached her and stated that another employee would be hired to assist her. Within the week employee Diane Hernandez was hired to work on the fin machines also. Policht continued in this job until 29 May when she received a telegram to report to work for Continental at the 17th Street facility. She was given a job as radiator assembler with the same benefits, rate of pay, and seniority. She reported to Mooney who had been her supervisor at Continental. Nichols did not testify; Geiger testified, but contradicted none of this testimony of Policht.

Employee organizing committee member Luis Luciano testified that on the afternoon of the layoff, 31 January, he asked Nichols if he could come back the following day to pick up a few of his personal things; Nichols replied that Luciano should get the items now so that "I wouldn't have to be coming back again."

Geiger testified that Washelewski begin working for Kar Tool shortly after the layoff of the Continental Radiator employees, but "he applied for a job." Whether Washelewski was asked to apply for a job, as was Policht, is not disclosed in the record. There is no evidence that any other employee was invited to apply for jobs with either Kar Tool or Great Lake.

When Policht was transferred from Great Lake to Continental in May, Continental also recalled Kenneth and Bill Heidel, Kuzdzal, Luis Luciano, Osborne, Toomer, and Bargas. Gieger testified that the delay was caused by the fact that the oven that was transferred to 17th Street was not working; it was owned by another party with whom Continental was in litigation; it would cost $6000 to repair; Continental was not willing to spend that much money on the oven until the litigation was resolved; it was not until March that the owner of the oven stated, in state court, that he did not wish the oven returned to him; on hearing this the repairs were authorized; and the employees were recalled to 17th Street when the repairs were completed in May.

d. Geiger's interrogation of Policht about her testimony

In February, while Policht was working for Great Lake at the Beard Street facility, she met with a Board agent to give testimony regarding charges that had been filed by that point. Jeffrey Washelewski, who had been employed by Continental Radiator until the layoff and was given a job with Kar Tool, then Great Lake, by Geiger when the layoff came on 31 January, was also present. On the day following her giving an affidavit, Nichols approached Policht as she was working and told her to go to the office to fill out a job application for Great Lake. When Policht and Nichols got to the office Geiger was there. As Policht was filling out an application, Geiger stated to Nichols that Policht had been a good worker and asked Nichols when she had last received a wage increase. Policht interjected that the last time she had gotten a wage increase was during the summer of 1984. Geiger instructed Nichols to give Policht a raise and told Nichols to leave the room so that he could visit with Policht. When Nichols left the room, Geiger walked over to Policht, sat down beside her, and stated, "I talked to everyone here at Continental [sic] and everyone that knows you and works with you and they all say the same thing. You are a snitch." Policht replied that she did not believe Geiger. Geiger then stated that the Board agent "shouldn't push his way into your house." Policht replied that she invited the Board agent to her house. Geiger asked what she and the Board agent had discussed, and Policht replied that the Board agent had questioned her about why she was working while other Continental employees were not. Policht told Geiger (falsely, because she feared for her job) that she had told the Board agent that she knew nothing about the matter. Geiger did not deny this testimony by Policht.[21]

e. Geiger's solicitations and threats to employees about their charges

(1) Kenneth Heidel

On 20 June, while Kenneth Heidel was working at Continental, he approached Geiger and began a conversation that included a range of topics. The conversation at some point turned to the topic of the pending charges. According to Heidel, Geiger handed him a piece of paper with Heidel's name and address on it; below that was:

> Dear Mr. Gottfried, [Regional Director]
> I am a charging party on the above identified complaint. I am requesting that my name be withdrawn as a charging party and that I not be included in any settlement or hearing as a charging party.
> Please send a notice to me as at the above address indicating that my name has been withdrawn from the charge.

According to Heidel:

> He said that he wanted us to sign a piece of paper saying we wanted to drop our charges and that if we did he would keep the plant open and we could keep working and we would get a raise. . . . [He] wanted me to sign a piece of paper and he wanted me to talk to my brother and the other employees about signing this piece of paper too.

Heidel told Geiger he would talk to the other employees about Geiger's proposal.

In early June the employees of Continental Radiator who had been laid off from 1 February to May were told that they would only receive 60 percent of their vacation pay in 1985. According to Kenneth Heidel, at some point during the above conversation with Geiger, Geiger said that he would pay Bill Heidel, Kenneth's brother, and Jeffrey Toomer their full vacation pay instead of the 60 percent. Kenneth Heidel told Geiger that he would think about what Geiger had told him.

This meeting between Kenneth Heidel and Geiger concluded when Mooney walked into the office and told Geiger that it was time to go to a "lunch date." According to Heidel, Geiger told Mooney to make sure that he, Jeff Toomer, and Bill Heidel all got raises on their next checks.

The testimony by Heidel concerning the withdrawal of charges, the pay of vacation pay to Bill Heidel and Toomer, and the raises to himself, Bill Heidel and Toomer was not denied by Geiger, and I find it credible. Heidel further testified that on his next paycheck he received a 25-cent-per-hour wage increase.

(2) Jeffrey Toomer

Jeffrey Toomer was laid off with the other Continental Radiator employees. As noted above he was recalled in May, and in early June he approached Geiger in the Continental office to ask for a raise. According to Toomer:

> Well, I asked him for a raise and he told me that he didn't have to give me one and he told me that, you know, that if I am going to be fighting him on the charges and if I didn't want to sign off on the charges and go, you know, go with the company that I wasn't going to get a raise and I wasn't going to get my full vacation pay. Because I was laid off, so he said he was going to deduct that from my vacation pay . . . whatever percentage was of months that I was laid off. Like if I was laid off three months I was only going to get 75 percent of it. . . . And he wanted to know if I wanted, you know, to drop my charges, and I told him that I would have to think about it.

Toomer further testified that 2 weeks later he was told to go to the office by Mooney. There he met with Geiger who asked him if he had decided to drop charges and showed him a paper identical to the one previously shown to Kenneth Heidel with Toomer's name and address on it. Toomer replied by stating that he was afraid of losing his protection from discharge if he dropped the charges. Geiger replied that "he could take care of it, but he couldn't make no promises," according to Toomer. None of this testimony by Toomer is denied by Geiger.

[21] Policht further testified that later in the month she approached Reed and asked about the raise that Geiger had ordered. Reed told her that the Union had put a "freeze" on raises and promotions so that she would not get the raise. While Policht was credible in this testimony, it has been previously noted that the General Counsel failed to prove that Reed was a supervisor or agent of Continental within the meaning of the Act.

B. Analysis and Conclusions

1. Violations preceding Dailey's discharge

Because the General Counsel has failed to prove that Franklyn Reed was a supervisor or agent of either Continental or Great Lake within Section 2(11) or (13) of the Act, I shall recommend dismissal of the allegations based on his conduct.

The mid-August statements by Nichols to Osborne that if the UAW "got in," Geiger could move the plant to the South for cheaper labor, was clearly a threat within Section 8(a)(1) of the Act. Sertafilm, Inc., 267 NLRB 682 (1983); National Micronetics, 277 NLRB 993 (1985). Nichols' mid-August calling of Kuzdzal to the office, and questioning him about why he was advocating the Union's selection and why he had not come to Nichols first, likewise violated Section 8(a)(1). Although Kuzdzal had been openly displaying his union allegiance by wearing union buttons, the inquiry necessarily assumed a coercive character by Nichols' using the office, the locus of managerial authority, to extract information and express his displeasure at Kuzdzal's activities. See, for example, Dektronics, Inc., 179 NLRB 87, 94 (1969), and National Can Corp., 159 NLRB 647 (1966).

Respondent further violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act when in August Nichols told Aponte, who was standing within 3 feet of Seledon, that if the employees selected the Union, there would be a wage cut for employees who were making $5.50 an hour as was Seledon. The threat to cut wages if a union was selected clearly would have had a coercive impact on any employee who heard it, or any employee to whom such a threat was subsequently disseminated, even if they were making less than $5.50 per hour.

Nichols' statement that Geiger would never reach an agreement with "you people" (as was credibly testified to by Seledon) is further a violation of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act in that it was a clear threat that Respondent would not bargain with the Union even if it were selected by the employees as their statutory representative.

On the day before the 24 August election, Geiger gave a speech to all Continental employees in which he told them that they did not need a union and that if they did have problems they should bring to them to him. Precisely such statements were held to be a solicitation of grievances with an implied promise of remedy in violation of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act in K & K Gourmet Meats, 245 NLRB 1331 (1979), and I reach the same conclusion here.

2. Violations following Dailey's discharge

a. Withholding the 1984 Christmas bonuses

Of the four organizing committee members left after Dailey was discharged in August and Sheridan quit in October none received a monetary payment at Christmastime 1984. All the employees who were not on the organizing committee received a bonus at Christmas 1984. All employees who were working in 1983 received a bonus in 1983, and they received a larger bonus in 1984, except Toomer who received $85 in 1983 and $50 in 1984. These statistical coincidences, alone, constitute compelling evidence that the distribution of Christmas payments was motivated by animus against the organizing committee membership of those who were denied a payment at Christmastime 1984. Further evidence is contained in Nichols' statement to Osborne when she inquired as to why she got no bonus in 1984. In 1983 Nichols promised Osborne a larger 1984 bonus for longer service. However, when bonuses were handed out to other employees in 1984, Nichols told Osborne: "You will have to associate with the Union people, your representatives . . . we are not going to be dishing out any more money." Thus, the denial of a bonus to Osborne was bluntly attributed to the successful efforts of the organizing committee of which Osborne had previously told Nichols she was a part (when they were discussing the organizational campaign and Dailey's possibly becoming her "representative").

Geiger testified that the distributions in 1984 were personal "gifts" to those whom he expected something in return, at least a Christmas card, and Respondent makes much of the fact that Continental did not deduct the 1984 payments from its 1984 income tax. Of course, Geiger's argument that the payments were made to those from whom he expected something in return immediately takes the payments out of the realm of "gifts" and places them in the realm of quid pro quo or compensation. Geiger himself abandoned this patently implausible[22] defense as he testified that he could give no reasons for giving nothing to Osborne in 1984 and he could even remember Luciano (although he had liked Luciano, or his work, well enough to have given him a "gift"/bonus in 1983). Nor may Respondent take refuge in Continental's passing up the 1984 tax deduction involved in the distribution. By the time the 1984 corporate income tax return had been filed, the charges had been filed with the Board. Deducting the payments in such circumstances would have been a obvious admission against interest, as Geiger had assuredly realized.[23] Therefore, the failure of [22] According to this record, the employees were neither personal friends nor relatives of Geiger; they would not have gotten the gifts but for the employment relationship. Moreover, if Geiger's expectation of Christmas cards was the sole criterion for the distributions, there could be no explanation for wide variations in the amounts of the "gifts" that were from $40 to $200.

[23] Geiger took great pains to point out that the 1984 payments were not deducted form the 1984 corporate returns, but he claimed inability to remember whether the 1983 bonuses had been deducted. Having thoroughly considered the "tax angle" of his largess, Geiger's claimed loss of memory was necessarily false.

Continental to deduct the payments on its 1984 income tax returns (which can still be amended) is meaningless.

Finally, the "personal gifts" theory is believed by Respondent's communications to the employees. The first communication was in the form of the checks distributed, themselves. They were company, not personal, checks. Geiger testified that he gave the money to the company treasurer who, in turn, wrote company checks because the employees would have an easier time cashing company checks. Aside from the fact that there is no basis for concluding that the employees' banks would have refused to accept Geiger's personal checks as collection items, no employees (according to this record) were told that even though they were being paid with Continental checks, the payments were personal gifts from Geiger. That is, by the checks themselves, the employees were left with the impression that the "gifts"/bonuses were from the company, not Geiger personally. Also, Kuzdzal asked Nichols why he had received no bonus, and asked specifically if it was because of his union activity; Nichols told Kuzdzal, twice, that the matter was determined by "company discretion." Nichols did not say that Geiger had not expected a Christmas card from Kuzdzal (or Osborne or Seledon or Luciano) and he did not say it was because Geiger considered the Christmastime distributions to be personal gifts. Finally, Nichols did not tell Osborne that she was receiving nothing in 1984 because Geiger thought less of her then than he did in 1983; Nichols told her she should look to the Union, and nothing was said about the payments being "personal."

In summary, I find and conclude that Continental issued Christmas bonuses to all employees except the four remaining employee-members of the organizing committee because of the activities of that committee and the results that committee produced, the 24 August election victory for the Union, and that by such conduct by Respondent violated Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act. Pinter Bros., Inc., 233 NLRB 575 (1977).

b. Layoff of 31 January 1985

The General Counsel contends that the employees transferred to Great Lake, rather than being laid off for 3 months, and received their favored treatment because they had signed the petition to overturn the 24 August union election victory. It is a fact that none of the employees who signed that petition were required to endure 3 months of unemployment; those who did not (except for Seledon, Lucaj, Charley Aponte, and Polichi)[24] were. Since only those who exercised their right to refrain from signing the antiunion petition were laid off,[25] a prima facie case of discrimination is presented by the statistical evidence alone.[26]

Independent evidence of unlawful motivation for the layoff is also contained in the record. That Geiger had a predisposition to manipulate the work force to defeat organizational efforts was forecast by Nichols who, it is undenied, told Osborne that Geiger would move his operations to the South to get cheaper labor if the employees selected the Union as their collective-bargaining representative. Additionally, the solicitation of grievances by Geiger and the threats and interrogations of Seledon and Kuzdzal by Nichols, and the unlawful withholding of the 1984 Christmas bonuses from organizing committee members, as found infra, further demonstrate Respondent's animus and fortify the conclusion that the General Counsel has presented a prima facie case of unlawful discrimination in the selection of employees for actual layoff on 31 January.

Therefore, Respondent has the burden of demonstrating that the layoff of the nonpetition signers would have occurred in absence of their protected activity of refusing to sign the petition to set aside the 24 August election.[27]

No reason was given for creating the new corporation, Great Lake, rather than assigning the new work of expanded distribution to the existing business entity, Continental. Nor was any reason given for hiring three new employees, and transferring to Great Lake's payroll all the petition-signers (plus Seledon, Lucaj, Charley Aponte, and Osborne) to do essentially the same work for Great Lake as has been done for Continental. All the jobs were unskilled; indeed, except for one "driver," each of Great Lake's employees employed during the first week of February was classified as a "laborer," according to General Counsel's Exhibit 11, which was produced by Respondents. That is, no plausible reason has been advanced for laying off only these who failed to sign the petition to set aside the Union's victory in the 24 August election.

Therefore, Respondents have not overcome the General Counsel's prima facie case and it must be concluded that its layoff of employees William and Kenneth Heidel, Osborne, Toomer, Vargas, Kuzdzal, and Luis Luciano violated Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act.[28]

c. Other postdischarge violations

Finally, Geiger's undenied interrogation of Polichi about her cooperation with the Board agent investigating the charges herein, his calling her a "snitch," and his undenied threats and inducements to Kenneth Heidel and Toomer in an attempt to get them to withdraw their Board charges are further violations of Section 8(a)(1) and further evidence of the animus assuredly possessed by Respondent Continental when Dailey was discharged some months before.

[24] The fact that four nonpetition signers were transferred to Great Lake's payroll, rather than really being laid off, does not dilute the significance of the fact that all petition-signers were protected from actual layoff; the General Counsel is not required to prove the negative—why those four were not discriminated against.

[25] Wilfredo Aponte had signed the petition to set aside the 24 August election, and was listed on the 31 January notice as being laid off. However, Aponte had been suspended, pending discharge on 28 January and he was not, in fact laid off; he was discharged after an investigation of misconduct.

3. The discharge of Dailey

I have credited Dailey's testimony that, at least once, he told Mooney that he favored the Union and that in the several days before the 24 August election he wore the "UAW" and "UAW Organizing Committee" buttons to work. The uncontradicted testimony of Osborne further makes it clear that Respondent not only knew of Dailey's union sympathies, but it also shows that Respondent knew that Dailey was at the forefront of the organizing effort. It is quite common for leading in-plant organizers to become union stewards or to take other local union offices if an organizational attempt is successful. Mooney assuredly knew this; therefore, the uncontradicted testimony of Osborne that Mooney referred to "loud mouth Ken" as a potential "representative for the UAW" is compelling evidence that Respondent not only knew of Dailey's sympathies but also that he was one of the most active employee organizers and a potential agent of the Union that Continental so intensely opposed.

Evidence of animus, or unlawful motivation, is contained in the discharge itself and how it was handled. On the first working day after the Union won the 24 August election by a one-vote margin, the least senior[29] member of the organizing committee members, and therefore the most colorably vulnerable,[30] was discharged. Discharges following immediately upon heels of union activity, specifically the activity of an election won by a union, has been held to be evidence of unlawful motivation.[31]

Of course, such threats as Nichols' threat to Osborne that Geiger could move to the South for cheaper labor if the Union won is evidence of a particularly virulent variety of animus. This threat, the other threats and the interrogation by Nichols, and solicitation of grievances and offer to remedy them by Geiger himself constitute further evidence of Respondent's animus toward the organizational activities of its employees in general. In addition, Mooney cautioned Osborne that "loud mouth Ken" could become her representative if the Union was selected; the invocation of the pejorative by Mooney clearly demonstrates specific animus toward Dailey's activities on behalf of the Union. Finally, Respondent's postdischarge conduct further demonstrates an overall antiunion motivation with which the decision to discharge Dailey was assuredly approached. This conduct includes: (1) the withholding of the 1984 Christmas bonuses from the organizing committee members; (2) the layoff of seven of the employees who failed to sign the antiunion petition that would have set aside the 24 August union victory at the Board election; (3) Geiger's undenied interrogation of Policht about her cooperation with the Board agent investigating the charges herein; and (4) Geiger's undenied threats and inducements to Kenneth Heidel and Toomer employed in an attempt to get them to withdraw their Board charges.

As the General Counsel has established a prima facie case of unlawful motivation, the burden shifts to the Respondent to demonstrate that it would have discharged Dailey even in the absence of his protected conduct.

Continental produced a veritable litany of reasons for Dailey's discharge: he walked around and talked; he was absent and tardy; he was "goofy"; he twice struck another employee; and he could not do the work.

Although Dailey had been tardy several times in the 2 months preceding his discharge, Respondent's permanent "Dailey Attendance Record" makes note only of his last three tardy arrivals at work. Presumably, if the other tardies had been of significance to Respondent, they would have been recorded in more convenient form than the timecards themselves. It appears that Respondent paid little attention to tardiness until Dailey was late 3 days in a row.[32] Indeed, Respondent stipulated that no employee received a written warning for tardiness or attendance between 1 January 1982 and Dailey's discharge after 2-1/2 years later. As for the last three times Dailey was late, it is noteworthy that Mooney said no more to Dailey then that he should "consider this a warning." Then Dailey was allowed to work a full day, placing the discharge inside the next pay period for no apparent reason.[33] Presumably, if a decision to discharge Dailey had already been made, or if the three tardy arrivals had been a legitimate cause for the discharge, Mooney would not have bothered to give Dailey a "warning" about anything and he would not have let him start, and finish, the day at work.[34]

Seledon denied that Dailey walked around the shop just to talk to other employees. Against this testimony Respondent produced employee witness Rajnish and Gieraga who testified that Dailey "goofed off" for "most of the day" or "all of the time." It is inconceivable that even the most patronistic of employers would allow any employee to waste "all" or "most" of his working time, and it is clear to me that Rajnish and Gieraga were en-

[29] Compare Dailey's hire date of 21 June 1984 with those listed on the layoff notice quoted above.

[30] Indeed, at the hearing Respondent raised the contention that Dailey was subject to a 90-day probationary period. The effect of the probationary period in a shop that had no grievance procedure was not explained, but Respondent raised the contention to make an argument that somehow Dailey was subject to more scrutiny, or had fewer rights or protections, than other employees. However, Dailey and William Heidel (who was also hired in June 1984) testified without contradiction that they were not told on being hired that they were subject to any sort of probation.

By making only the most oblique of references to the "probationary period" argument in the brief, Respondent appears to have abandoned the contention that Dailey was subject to some sort of review that other employees were not. Therefore, plenary discussion of the issue of the existence of a probationary period is not required. However, I feel constrained to state that I found credible the testimony of Policht and Dailey (and found incredible the contrary testimony of Mooney) that Continental first posted a notice that there was a probationary period during the campaign preceding the 24 August Board election. There is no credible evidence that any probationary period existed before the organizational drive herein.

[31] See, for example, Rogers Furniture Sales, 207 NLRB 68 (1973), and Paoli Chair Co., 213 NLRB 909 (1974).

[32] Apparently tardiness of 3 minutes or less was excused; when Mooney finally warned Dailey on 27 August, he mentioned only the last "three in a row," even though Dailey had been late 3, 1, and 3 minutes on the 3 days before 23 August.

[33] Discharging an employee during a pay period for accumulated transgressions has been held to be evidence of pretext. See, for example, McGraw-Edison Co., 172 NLRB 1604 (1968), enfd. 419 F.2d 67 (8th Cir. 1969); James Ray Co., 176 NLRB 31 (1969); and Brake Parts Co., 178 NLRB 247 (1969).

[34] For this reason I discredit Mooney's testimony to the extent he sought to convey the impression that a decision to discharge Dailey had been made before the 24 August election.

gaging in extreme exaggeration in an effort to please their employer who had spared them from the effects of the layoff of 1 February, as discussed above.

Mooney testified that he frequently saw Dailey walking around or loafing and that he recorded such instances on the advice of a labor relations consultant. Mooney further testified that employees Murrias and Santos Luciano had complained to him about Dailey's not working. Murrias, when called by Respondent, flatly, and credibly, denied that he had ever complained to Mooney about Dailey; in fact, Murrias testified that Dailey walked around the ship "about the same" as other employees. Luciano was not called by Respondent and no explanation for not doing so was advanced. As for the records that Mooney kept on the advice of the consultant, the most that can be said is that Mooney started the case building on Dailey as early as July when the union movement started. It should be further noted that although Mooney took the time and trouble to build a record on Dailey, he did not bother to warn the employee that he was doing anything wrong, or that he could be punished for what he was doing (or not doing). If Continental had wanted production as bad as it wanted a case against Dailey, Mooney assuredly would have at least told Dailey to stop wandering around. This Mooney did only once, according to his own testimony.[35]

As far as Dailey's not doing his soldering work efficiently, it should be noted that Seledon testified that although Dailey was not perfect, there were worse employees who trained under him; he complained to management about them, but the employees were retained and nothing was done except, apparently, to give them more time to improve, something that Dailey was not given. It is further noted that Mooney did not testify that he ever inspected any of Dailey's work product; certainly, he never warned Dailey about inefficiency or that he should learn how to handle the soldering torch better.

Although I have credited the testimony that Dailey struck Rajnish, there is no evidence that any management representative learned of the incidents at any time before the 27 August discharge.

Finally, in support of contention that Dailey was "goofy,"[36] Respondents rely solely on a conclusionary interjection in her testimony by Gieraga. This was not evidence, and the contention need not be addressed further.

In summary, I find that Respondent has not met its burden of showing that Dailey would not have been discharged even absent his known protected union activities, aand I reach this conclusion because of: (1) the timing of the discharge, coming as it did immediately after the election that the Union won by one vote;[37] (2) the total lack of warnings to Dailey that his job was in jeopardy because of anything he had been doing wrong;[38] (3) the discharge was effected during the middle of a pay period for no apparent reason; (4) no reason was given at the time of the discharge;[39] and (5) the insubstantial nature of the tardiness/absence, wandering around, and poor work performance defenses, and the totally frivolous nature of the fighting and "goofy" defenses. Finally, (6) Mooney acknowledged that he told Dailey: "If you need to use us for a reference, feel free." A positive recommendation was clearly implied, and its offer belies any contention that Dailey was discharged for cause.

Accordingly, because the General Counsel has established a prima facie case of unlawful motivation that Respondents have failed to rebut, I conclude that Respondent discharged Kenneth Dailey in violation of Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act.[40]

4. Single-employer and alter ego allegations and liability of Great Lake

The complaint alleges that Continental and Great Lake are alter egos or constitute a single employer. The General Counsel advances these allegations only because she seeks to have Great Lake remedy the unfair labor practices of Continental, not because she seeks a bargaining order against Great Lake. Because the General Counsel is not attempting to secure an order requiring Great Lake to assume a bargaining obligation originally incurred by Continental, it is not necessary to decide if the two business entities are in the status of alter egos; the obligation of Great Lake may be decided under the joint, or single, employer theory of liability. O. Voorhees Painting Co., 275 NLRB 779 (1985). As stated by the Board in that case:

> The standard applied by the Board in determining joint employers status is "whether two or more employers share or co-determine those matters governing the essential terms and conditions of employment." [Quoting Pacemaker Driver Service, 269 NLRB 971 fn. 2 (1984).]

[35] "Prolonged observation" rather than telling an employee to "get to work" was held to be evidence of pretext in Champion Parts Rebuilders, Inc., 260 NLRB 731 fn. 1 (1982), enfd. 717 F.2d 845 (3d Cir. 1983).

[36] R. Br. 2 and 5.

[37] Had Continental's objections to the 24 August election been sustained by the Board, the removal of any of the union supporters such as Dailey would have had the obvious effect of causing a tie at the rerun, a fact assuredly not lost on Continental's management.

[38] Specifically, until the 27 August discharge, Dailey was not warned about tardiness even though on 23 and 24 August, Mooney made two tardiness memoranda to the file he was keeping on Dailey, and even though Mooney conceded that he had "on occasions" warned other employees about being late.

[39] Mooney's statement that Dailey just was not the man Continental (or he) was looking for is tantamount to refusing to give any reason at all; this is a factor frequently recognized by the Board as an indication that there was no legitimate reason for an employer's action.

[40] As I have also found herein that Respondent unlawfully withheld bonus payments to the prounion employees at Christmas 1984, and because Dailey would have continued to be employed absent the discriminatory action taken against him, it is appropriate to order, as part of the remedy herein, that Dailey receive a bonus for Christmas 1984. The smallest bonus Respondent gave any employee in 1984 was $40. That amount was given to four of the five employees who were employed at Christmas 1984, but not Christmas 1983. The fifth such employee received $50. (See G.C. Exh. 17.) It would be speculation that, absent the discriminatory motive of Respondent, Dailey would have received the larger amount. Therefore, it is appropriate to order that Dailey receive $40, plus interest, as the amount he would have received at Christmas 1984, absent the discrimination against him.

Here, Geiger did no more than add a few product lines for distribution; he continued to manufacture some radiator cores and import others. Rather than assign the additional work to the employees who had selected the Union (which he had opposed so vehemently), he assigned the new work to newly hired employees and those who had signed a petition to overturn the 24 August election. In a crude attempt to disguise his obvious unlawful objective of avoiding his bargaining obligation, Geiger created the new corporation, Great Lake, assigned the favored (and antiunion or nonunion) employees to it, and banished to the dilapidated 17th Street location those (except Seledon) who had participated in the organizational attempt.

The managerial manipulations in which Geiger engaged are similar to those performed by one Kneisley in K & S Circuits, Inc., 255 NLRB 1270 (1981). There, Kneisley held all the stock of one company, the employees of which selected a union. In an attempt to dilute the effectiveness of an organizational drive, Kneisley created two other corporations of which he was president as well as owner. Although there was scant evidence of Kneisley's actual control of the newly created corporations, the Board held that "it strains credulity too much" to believe that Kneisley exercised only "potential" control of the newly created corporations. There, as here, there was at least some degree of functional operation and, until the organizational attempt, all such operations were conducted "under one roof." 255 NLRB at 1272.

As the testimony of Policht discloses, employees who were transferred to the Great Lake payroll were credited with their seniority earned at Continental; they were paid the same rate, and they continued to do the same work, using much of the same equipment. The identical nature of the employment benefits demonstrates a single source of determination of "those matters governing the essential terms and conditions of employment." See O. Voorhees Painting Co., supra. That is, the terms and conditions of employment at the two corporations were necessarily determined by the same source, Karl Geiger, who was the majority shareholder of Continental, and the sole owner of Great Lake, and who also was the source of the corporate schemes employed to evade his bargaining responsibility.

Accordingly, I find and conclude that Great Lake, Inc. is a joint, or single, employer with Continental, and Great Lake, Inc. is liable for the remedy of Continental's unfair labor practices that were not included in the 1 April 1986 settlement agreement, the discharge of Dailey and the violations that preceded that discharge.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. Continental Radiator Corporation and Great Lake, Inc. constitute a single employer within the meaning of Section 2(2) of the Act, and they are engaged in commerce or in an industry affecting commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

2. International Union, United Automobile, Aerospace and Agricultural Implement Workers of America (UAW) is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

3. By the following acts and conduct Respondents violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act:

(a) In mid-August Nichols threatened employee Osborne that Respondent could move the plant to get cheaper labor if the employees selected the Union as their collective-bargaining representative.

(b) In mid-August, Nichols interrogated employee Kuzdzal regarding his union membership, activities, and desires.

(c) In August, Nichols threatened employees Aponte and Seledon that certain employees would have their wages reduced if the Union were selected as the collective-bargaining representative.

(d) In August, Nichols threatened employee Seledon that Geiger would never bargain with the Union if it were selected as the collective-bargaining representative by the employees.

(e) On 23 August, Geiger informed the employees that they did not need a union and solicited their grievances in an effort to dissuade them from voting for the Union.

4. By the discharge of employee Kenneth Dailey on 27 August, Respondents violated Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act.

IV. EFFECT OF THE UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES ON COMMERCE

The activities of Respondents Continental Radiator Corporation and Great Lake, Inc. set forth above, occurring in connection with their operations described in section I, above, have a close, intimate, and substantial relationship to trade, traffic, and commerce among the several States and tend to lead to labor disputes burdening and obstructing commerce and the free flow of commerce.

THE REMEDY

Having found that Respondent Continental Radiator Corporation has engaged in unfair labor practices within the meaning of Section 8(a)(1) and (3) of the Act, I shall recommend that it be ordered to cease and desist from engaging in these unfair labor practices. Having further found that Respondent Great Lake, Inc. is a joint employer of Continental Radiator Corporation, I shall recommend that each of them be ordered to take certain affirmative action to remedy these violations, NLRB v. Gibraltar Industries, 307 F.2d 428, 431 (4th Cir. 1962). I shall further recommend that Respondents be ordered to offer reinstatement to Kenneth Dailey and pay to him backpay, with interest. Backpay is to be computed on a quarterly basis in the manner prescribed in F. W. Woolworth Co., 90 NLRB 289 (1950), with interest thereupon as established in by the Board in Florida Steel Corp., 231 NLRB 651 (1977). See generally Isis Plumbing Co., 138 NLRB 716 (1962).

Because of the proven proclivity of the sole owner of Great Lake, Karl Geiger, to utilize corporate formalisms as a method for defeating the purposes and policies of the Act, it is altogether appropriate that I grant the General Counsel's request for a visitatorial clause that will permit free examination and inspection of all corporate records necessary to assure that compliance with the Order herein is achieved.

On these findings of fact and conclusions of law and on the entire record, I issue the following recommended[41]

ORDER

The Respondents, Continental Radiator Corporation and Great Lake, Inc., Detroit, Michigan, their officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall

1. Cease and desist from

(a) Threatening employees with plant removal if they select International Union, United Automobile, Aerospace and Agricultural Implement Workers of America (UAW) as a collective-bargaining representative.

(b) Interrogating employees about their union membership, activities, and desires.

(c) Threatening employees with wage reductions if they select the Union as their collective-bargaining representative.

(d) Threatening that Respondents would not bargain with the Union if it is selected as their collective-bargaining representative.

(e) Soliciting grievances and promising remedy thereof in an effort to dissuade employees from voting for the Union.

2. Take the following affirmative action necessary to effectuate the policies of the Act.

(a) Offer to Kenneth Dailey full reinstatement to his former job or, if such job no longer exists, to a substantially equivalent job without prejudice to his seniority or other rights and privileges, and make Dailey whole, with interest, for any loss of earnings and other benefits, including his 1984 Christmas bonus, suffered by reason of his unlawful termination.

(b) Remove from its files of both Respondents any reference to the unlawful discharge and notify the employee in writing that this has been done and that the discharge will not be used against him in any way.

(c) Preserve and, on request, make available to the Board or its agents for examination and copying, all payroll records, social security payment records, timecards, personnel records and reports, and all other records necessary to analyze the amount of backpay due under the terms of this Order.

(d) Post at their Detroit facilities copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix."[42] Copies of the notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 7, after being signed by the Respondent's authorized representative, shall be posted by the Respondent immediately upon receipt and maintained for 60 consecutive days in conspicuous places including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by the Respondent to ensure that the notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(e) Notify the Regional Director in writing within 20 days from the date of this Order what steps the Respondent has taken to comply.

APPENDIX

NOTICE TO EMPLOYEES -
POSTED BY ORDER OF THE
NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD
An Agency of the United States Government

The National Labor Relations Board has found that we violated the National Labor Relations Act and has ordered us to post and abide by this notice.

Section 7 of the Act gives employees these rights.

> To organize
>
> To form, join, or assist any union
>
> To bargain collectively through representatives of their own choice
> To act together for other mutual aid or protection
> To choose not to engage in any of these protected concerted activities.

WE WILL NOT threaten employees with plant removal because of their known or suspected activities on behalf of International Union, United Automobile, Aerospace and Agricultural Implement Workers of America (UAW) or any other labor organization.

WE WILL NOT interrogate employees about their activities on behalf of the Union.

WE WILL NOT threaten employees with wage reduction if they select the Union as their collective-bargaining representative.

WE WILL NOT threaten employees with statements that we will not bargain with the Union even if it is selected as their collective-bargaining representative.

WE WILL NOT solicit grievances of employees and promise to remedy such grievances in order to dissuade employees from voting for the Union.

WE WILL NOT discourage activities in International Union, United Automobile, Aerospace and Agricultural Implement Workers of America (UAW) by discharging employees or by otherwise discriminating against employees in any manner with respect to their hire or tenure of employment or any term or condition of employment.

WE WILL NOT in any like or related manner interfere with, restrain, or coerce our employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them by the National Labor Relations Act.

WE WILL offer to Kenneth Dailey full reinstatement to the job he held before he was unlawfully discharged or, if that job no longer exists, to a substantially equivalent position of employment without prejudice to his seniority or other rights and privileges.

[41] If no exceptions are filed as provided by Sec. 102.46 of the Board's Rules and Regulations, the findings, conclusions, and recommended Order shall, as provided in Sec. 102.48 of the Rules, be adopted by the Board and all objections to them shall be deemed waived for all purposes.

[42] If this Order is enforced by a judgment of a United States court of appeals, the words in the notice reading "Posted by Order of the National Labor Relations Board" shall read "Posted Pursuant to a Judgment of the United States Court of Appeals Enforcing an Order of the National Labor Relations Board."

WE WILL make Kenneth Dailey whole, with interest, for any loss of pay he may have suffered as a result of our discrimination against him.

WE WILL expunge from our files any reference to the discharge of Kenneth Dailey and notify him, in writing, that this has been done and that evidence of his unlawful discharge will not be used as a basis for future personnel action against him.

CONTINENTAL RADIATOR CORPORATION

GREAT LAKE, INC.

Bethlehem Steel Corporation and Industrial Union of Marine and Shipbuilding Workers of America, AFL–CIO. Case 5–CA–16582

16 March 1987

DECISION AND ORDER

BY MEMBERS BABSON, STEPHENS, AND CRACRAFT

Upon a charge filed by Industrial Union of Marine and Shipbuilding Workers of America, AFL–CIO on 31 July 1984 and amended on 9 May 1986, the General Counsel of the National Labor Relations Board issued a complaint on 12 May 1986 against Bethlehem Steel Corporation (the Respondent) alleging that it has violated Section 8(a)(5) and (1) and Section 8(d) of the National Labor Relations Act by negotiating and implementing agreements with the National Union's affiliated Local 33, thereby changing terms and conditions of existing collective-bargaining agreements without bargaining with the National Union. On 23 May 1986 the Respondent filed an answer admitting in part and denying in part the allegations of the complaint, and raising certain affirmative defenses.

On 12 August 1986 the General Counsel filed a Motion for Summary Judgment. On 14 August 1986 the Board issued an order transferring the proceeding to the Board and a Notice to Show Cause why the motion should not be granted. The Respondent filed a response.

The National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

Ruling on Motion for Summary Judgment

The General Counsel submits that the Board's prior Decision and Order in Shipbuilders (Bethlehem Steel), 277 NLRB 1548 (1986), involving the same parties, contains specific factual findings which collaterally estop the Respondent from asserting any contrary facts here and provides a complete basis for the Board to resolve the 8(a)(5) and (1) and 8(d) issues presented, so that there are no genuine issues of material fact requiring an evidentiary hearing before an administrative law judge.

The Respondent's answer and response deny any unlawful conduct. The Respondent's denial is premised on the contention that the National Union had notice of and consented to negotiation of the bargaining agreements at issue. The Respondent also asserts the affirmative defenses that: the General Counsel is estopped from issuing the instant complaint because the Respondent reasonably relied on the General Counsel's actions against the National Union in the prior litigation; the prayer for prospective remedial relief is moot by virtue of negotiation of a new collective-bargaining agreement which became effective 17 March 1986; equitable considerations require the tolling of backpay; and implementation of changes from the extant agreements with the National Union concerning traditionally local issues were privileged. We find no merit in the Respondent's arguments for the reasons set forth below.

The prior case involved alleged 8(b)(1)(A) and (3) violations by the National Union in interfering with implementation of "Settlement Agreements" negotiated between the Respondent and Local 33. The Board adopted the administrative law judge's dismissal of the complaint as well as the following determinative findings: In 1981 the Respondent, the National Union, and Local 33 entered collective-bargaining agreements expiring 19 August 1984, which covered, inter alia, separate production and maintenance and salaried plant clerical units of employees at the Respondent's Sparrows Point, Maryland shipyard facility; Bethlehem obtained agreement from Local 33 for early negotiations to open and modify the 1981 agreements and attempted to negotiate a complete agreement with Local 33 despite a past practice of negotiating wage and benefit issues with a bargaining committee dominated by the National Union; Bethlehem and Local 33 concealed from the National Union the fact that plenary negotiations involving substantive terms were being conducted; in March 1984 the Respondent and Local 33 signed two "Settlement Agreements" which purported to set aside the existing contracts between the Respondent, the National Union, and the Local; the Respondent implemented the settlement agreements on 1 April 1984, thereby freezing the wages of current employees, reducing the cost-of-living adjustment, reducing the wages and benefits of new hires, and instituting a profit-sharing program; the National Union did not clearly and unmistakably waive its rights under Section 8(d) of the Act to object to implementation of midterm changes in its agreements with the Respondent;[1] the settlement agreements were not negotiated or approved by the National Union or by any of its actual or apparent agents; the settlement agreements purporting to modify or terminate the National Union's agreements with the Respondent were null and void; and the actions of the National Union challenged in the consolidated complaint were lawful.

[1] The Respondent mistakenly relies on the administrative law judge's finding in an EAJA suit involving the same parties that the National Union did not stop the members' ratification vote after learning of negotiations between the local union and the Respondent, as support for its contention that the administrative law judge's factual analysis in the underlying 8(b)(3) case was flawed. Initially we note that this finding is not a departure from the judge's findings in the underlying case which the Board affirmed, in which the judge concluded from the overall circumstances of the case that the National Union had made it clear to the local and the Company that it "did not intend to meekly step aside and allow its contractual existence with Bethlehem to be negotiated away." Shipbuilders (Bethlehem Steel), supra, 277 NLRB at 1565. Secondly, the administrative law judge's review of these facts in light of an EAJA suit in which the determination is whether the General Counsel had sufficient grounds upon which to issue complaint requires a different analysis which is simply not relevant to the case at hand.

With respect to the instant Motion for Summary Judgment, a review of the complaint's allegations, the Respondent's answer, and the Board's prior decision reveals that the Board's prior decision contains specific factual findings which are directly contrary to each of the points the Respondent's answer places in issue. Specifically, contrary to the Respondent's position that it negotiated the settlement agreements with the knowledge and consent of the National Union, the Board has found that the National Union was not aware of and did not consent to the negotiations of the settlement agreements, nor did the National Union or any authorized agent approve the agreements. Also contrary to the Respondent's position, Respondent's implementation of the settlement agreements was found by the Board to be an abrogation and midterm modification of the existing 1981–1984 collective-bargaining agreements, in violation of the representative status of the National Union and its rights under Section 8(d) of the Act. Finally, contrary to the Respondent's contention here, determinative findings in the earlier case establish that the Respondent failed to give the requisite notice and opportunity to bargain to the National Union prior to the Respondent's implementation of the settlement agreements.

These factual findings unequivocally establish the Respondent's violation of Section 8(a)(5) and (1) and Section 8(d) in the instant case. Because these findings of fact were fully and fairly litigated and necessarily decided in the Board's prior decision, the Respondent is collaterally estopped from relitigating the facts supporting the allegations of the complaint in the instant proceeding.[2]

The Respondent's affirmative defenses likewise raise no genuine issue of material fact warranting an evidentiary hearing. With respect to the Respondent's equitable estoppel contention, we note that the Respondent actually engaged in the alleged unlawful conduct prior to any action by the General Counsel. Thus, it cannot now allege detrimental reliance on the General Counsel's decision to hold the instant charge in abeyance pending resolution of the prior case when the Respondent's violative conduct clearly preceded the General Counsel's decision in this regard. The Respondent's remaining contention that the complaint should be dismissed because a remedial order is inappropriate does not raise any material factual issue on the question of whether the Respondent violated the Act. The Respondent's representation that a new contract with the National Union and Local 33 was negotiated effective 17 March 1986 raises no issue of fact regarding the Respondent's premature termination of the 1981–1984 collective-bargaining agreements and concomitant obligation to make employees whole for its failure to bargain with the National Union. The date to which negotiations of any successor agreements has satisfied the Respondent's affirmative remedial obligation to bargain with the National Union and to make whole unit employees is an issue properly left to compliance proceedings. Furthermore, we perceive no special factors or equitable considerations in this case sufficient to toll backpay. We therefore find that the Respondent has not raised any issue that is properly litigable in this unfair labor practice proceeding. Accordingly, we grant the Motion for Summary Judgment.

On the entire record, the Board makes the following

FINDINGS OF FACT

I. JURISDICTION

The Respondent, Bethlehem Steel, is a Delaware corporation with an office and place of business in Sparrows Point, Maryland, where it is engaged in the business of shipbuilding. The Respondent annually purchases and receives at its facility goods and materials valued in excess of $50,000 directly from points outside the State of Maryland. We find that the Respondent is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act and that both Industrial Union of Marine and Shipbuilding Workers of America, AFL–CIO and its affiliate, Local 33, are labor organizations within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

II. ALLEGED UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES

Since at least 1972, the Respondent, the National Union, and Local 33 have executed a series of national collective-bargaining agreements covering, inter alia, the Respondent's Sparrows Point, Maryland shipyard facility. The most recent agreements were effective from 14 August 1981 through 19 August 1984 and covered, inter alia, separate units appropriate for the purpose of collective bargaining within the meaning of Section 9(b) of the Act, consisting of certain salaried and hourly paid employees employed at the Respondent's Sparrows Point, Maryland shipyard facility. At all times material herein, the National Union and Local 33 have been the designated exclusive collective-bargaining representative of the employees in such units and have been recognized as such by the Respondent. During the months of February and March 1984, the Respondent and Local 33 negotiated concessionary "Settlement Agreements" covering the employees in the foregoing units at the Respondent's Sparrows Point, Maryland shipyard facility. About 2 April 1984, the Respondent abrogated and failed to continue in full force and effect all the terms and conditions of the existing collective-bargaining agreements by placing into effect "Settlement Agreements" negotiated with Local 33, without affording prior notice to the National Union or an opportunity to negotiate and bargain as the exclusive representative of the Respondent's employees.

We find that by negotiating agreements with Local 33 covering the employees in the appropriate bargaining units at the Respondent's Sparrow's Point, Maryland shipyard facility, and by implementing those agreements about 2 April 1984 without affording prior notice to or an opportunity to bargain with the National Union, the Respondent abrogated and failed to continue in full force and effect all of the terms and conditions of the extant 1981–1984 collective-bargaining agreements, thereby violating Section 8(a)(5) and (1) and Section 8(d) of the Act.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

By engaging in the conduct described in section II, above, the Respondent has engaged in unfair labor practices affecting commerce within the meaning of Section 8(a)(5) and (1), Section 8(d), and Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

REMEDY

Having found that the Respondent has engaged in certain unfair labor practices within the meaning of the Act, we shall order it to cease and desist and, if it has not already done so, to bargain on request with the National Union and embody any understanding reached in a signed agreement, and to take affirmative action designed to effectuate the policies of the Act.

The Respondent shall make unit employees whole for losses suffered as a result of its unlawful midterm modification of contractual wages and benefits from about 2 April 1984 until such time as a new agreement is negotiated with the National Union or until the parties have bargained in good faith to impasse. Such sums shall be computed in the manner set forth in Ogle Protection Service, 183 NLRB 682, 683 (1970), with interest as prescribed in Florida Steel Corp., 231 NLRB 651 (1977).

ORDER

The National Labor Relations Board orders that the Respondent, Bethlehem Steel Corporation, Baltimore, Maryland, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall

1. Cease and desist from

(a) Unlawfully bypassing Industrial Union of Marine and Shipbuilding Workers of America, AFL–CIO (the National Union) as an exclusive collective-bargaining representative of its unit employees.

(b) Unilaterally, and without the consent of the National Union, modifying the wages and benefits of employees covered by the collective-bargaining agreements between the Respondent and the National Union; provided that nothing in the Order shall be construed to require the Respondent to rescind any increase in wages or benefits of unit employees.

(c) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them by Section 7 of the Act.

2. Take the following affirmative action necessary to effectuate the policies of the Act.

(a) On request, bargain with the National Union as an exclusive representative of separate production and maintenance and salaried plant clerical units of employees at the Respondent's Sparrow's Point, Maryland shipyard facility with respect to rates of pay, wages, hours, and other terms and conditions of employment and, if it has not already done so, embody any understanding reached in a signed agreement.

(b) Make whole all employees in the foregoing appropriate units for any loss of earnings and other benefits suffered as a result of the unlawful midterm modification of the existing 1981–1984 collective-bargaining agreements, in the manner set forth in the remedy section of this decision.

(c) Preserve and, on request, make available to the Board or its agents for examination and copying, all payroll records, social security payment records, timecards, personnel records and reports, and all other records necessary or useful in checking compliance with this Order.

(d) Post at its Sparrows Point, Maryland shipyard facility copies of the attached notice marked

"Appendix."[3] Copies of the notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 5, after being signed by the Respondent's authorized representative, shall be posted by the Respondent immediately upon receipt and maintained for 60 consecutive days in conspicuous places including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by the Respondent to ensure that the notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(e) Notify the Regional Director in writing within 20 days from the date of this Order what steps the Respondent has taken to comply.[4]

[3] If this Order is enforced by a judgment of a United States court of appeals, the words in the notice reading "Posted by Order of the National Labor Relations Board" shall read "Posted Pursuant to a Judgment of the United States Court of Appeals Enforcing an Order of the National Labor Relations Board."

[4] The General Counsel has requested that the Order include a visitatorial clause authorizing the Board, for compliance purposes, to obtain discovery from the Respondent under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure under the supervision of the United States court of appeals enforcing this Order. Under the circumstances of this case, we find it unnecessary to include such a clause. Accordingly, we deny the General Counsel's request.

APPENDIX

NOTICE TO EMPLOYEES
POSTED BY ORDER OF THE
NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD
An Agency of the United States Government

The National Labor Relations Board has found that we violated the National Labor Relations Act and has ordered us to post and abide by this notice.

WE WILL NOT bypass Industrial Union of Marine and Shipbuilding Workers of America, AFL–CIO as an exclusive collective-bargaining representative of our unit employees by directly dealing with Local 33.

WE WILL NOT unilaterally, and without the consent of the National Union, modify the terms of our collective-bargaining agreements with the National Union, provided, however, that nothing herein shall be construed as authorizing or requiring the Employer to withdraw or eliminate any compensatory benefits presently enjoyed by the Employer's employees.

WE WILL NOT in any like or related manner interfere with, restrain, or coerce you in the exercise of the rights guaranteed you by Section 7 of the Act.

WE WILL, on request, bargain with the National Union as an exclusive representative of unit employees with respect to rates of pay, wages, hours, and other terms and conditions of employment and put in writing and sign any agreement reached on terms and conditions of employment for our employees in the bargaining units.

WE WILL restore the unit employees' terms and conditions of employment to those existing prior to our unilateral modification of our collective-bargaining agreements with the National Union.

WE WILL make whole all unit employees for losses suffered as a result of our unilateral modification of our collective-bargaining agreements with the National Union, with interest.

Martin of Mississippi, Inc. and United Furniture Workers of America, Local 282, AFL–CIO. Case 26–CA–10324

17 March 1987

DECISION AND ORDER

BY CHAIRMAN DOTSON AND MEMBERS STEPHENS AND CRACRAFT

On 30 March 1984 Administrative Law Judge Howard I. Grossman issued the attached decision. The Respondent filed exceptions.

The National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the decision and the record in light of the exceptions and has decided to affirm the judge's rulings, findings,[1] and conclusions and to adopt the recommended Order.

ORDER

The National Labor Relations Board adopts the recommended Order of the administrative law judge and orders that the Respondent, Martin of Mississippi, Inc., Coldwater, Mississippi, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall take the action set forth in the Order.

[1] Chairman Dotson notes that there are no exceptions to the successorship finding.

William D. Levy, Esq., for the General Counsel.
Phillip Martin, Respondent's president, for the Respondent.
Ida Leachman, Charging Party's vice president, for the Charging Party.

DECISION

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

HOWARD I. GROSSMAN, Administrative Law Judge. The original charge was filed on July 28, 1983, and an amended charge on August 16, 1983, by United Furniture Workers of America, Local 282, AFL–CIO (the Charging Party or the Union).[1] A complaint, amended complaints, and orders consolidating them issued at various dates in 1983, alleging that Martin of Mississippi, Inc. (Respondent or the Company) and other individuals had committed unfair labor practices within the meaning of the National Labor Relations Act (Act). By order dated December 6, 1983, the Regional Director for Region 26 severed the cases of the other individuals from the one involving Respondent and, on December 13, 1983, issued a fourth amended complaint, alleging that Respondent has refused to recognize or bargain with the Union as the collective-bargaining representative of Respondent's employees in an appropriate unit, and has refused to supply information to the Union which is relevant to its function as such representative, in violation of Section 8(a)(1) and (5) of the Act.

A hearing was conducted before me on this matter on February 1, 1984, in Memphis, Tennessee. On the entire record, including a memorandum brief filed by the General Counsel, I make the following

FINDINGS OF FACT

I. JURISDICTION

Respondent is a Mississippi corporation with an office and facility at Coldwater, Mississippi where it is engaged in the manufacture of cabinets. Respondent annually sells and ships, from locations within the State of Mississippi, goods valued in excess of $50,000 directly to points outside the State of Mississippi, and annually purchases and receives, within the State of Mississippi, goods valued in excess of the same amount directly from points outside the State of Mississippi. The pleadings as amended at the hearing establish, and I find, that Respondent is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

II. THE LABOR ORGANIZATION INVOLVED

The pleadings as amended at the hearing establish, and I find, that the Union is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

III. THE ALLEGED UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES

A. Factual Summary

1. Hill & Son Manufacturing Co.

There is no dispute about the relevant facts in this case. In May 1979, the Union was certified as the exclusive collective-bargaining representative of the production and maintenance employees of C & R Cabinet Corporation, then manufacturing cabinets in Memphis, Tennessee. In December 1980, C & R entered into a 2-year collective-bargaining agreement with the Union as the representative of its production and maintenance employees. The principals in C & R were Calvin and Ruby Hill. The Hills were thereafter divorced, and the Memphis operation was closed down in December 1981, during the term of the collective-bargaining agreement.

The business reopened in February 1982 in Coldwater, Mississippi, by Calvin Hill, under the name of Hill & Son Manufacturing Co. For legal and financial reasons not material, Ruby Hill joined her former husband in the business, and operated it in Coldwater under the name of Calvin Hill and Ruby Hill d/b/a Hill & Son Manufacturing Co. Except for a brief hiatus, there was no change in the principles of the business. In essence, the business moved to a different location and changed its name.

The Union received and processed grievances from employees of Hill & Son under the contract which it held with C & R, and otherwise applied the terms of that contract to Hill & Son. The contract expired in December 1982.

[1] The Charging Party's name appears as indicated by it in the charges which it filed, G.C. Exhs. 1(a) and (c).

On August 23, 1983, the Regional Director for Region 26 issued a third amended complaint in Cases 26–CA–10124, 26–CA–10258, 26–CA–10207, and in the instant case, in which he alleged that Hill & Son had committed a variety of unfair labor practices beginning in late 1982, including violations of Section 8(a)(1), (3), and (5) of the Act. The complaint alleges, inter alia, that Hill & Son engaged in unlawful refusals to bargain in 1982, and that Respondent Martin did so in July 1983. Thereafter, Hill & Son entered into a formal settlement agreement. The stipulation provides that the Union remained the collective-bargaining representative of Hill & Son employees until July 1, 1983, when Hill & Son ceased operation (G.C. Exh. 2, p. 4). As indicated above, the Regional Director severed the Hill & Son cases, and issued a fourth amended complaint, involving only Respondent.

Hill & Son continued operating in Coldwater until June 24, 1983, the beginning of the normal vacation period. Ruby Bryant, formerly Ruby Hill, testified that she and Calvin Hill could not work together and, accordingly, decided to go out of business.

2. Respondent's purchase of Hill's assets

Philip Martin was a partner in a Florida firm which was one of the largest customers of Hill & Son. He visited Hill & Son in the first half of 1983, and Respondent was incorporated in June of that year. On July 1, 1983, Respondent purchased the machinery and other equipment of Hill & Son. Martin knew that the employees of Hill & Son were represented by a union prior to the purchass.

3. Respondent's operation of the business

A few days after the transaction, Martin placed an ad in a local newspaper stating that Respondent had purchased the assets of Hill & Son, and would be taking applications for employment. He received about 200 applications. Martin hired Thurman Morgan,[2] Hill & Son's former plant manager, and utilized his advice in the hiring of employees. Morgan's recommendations in some instances were based on his knowledge of the applicant's work for Hill & Son. Martin also hired two other former supervisors of Hill & Son[3] and gave them similar status in his company.

Respondent began operations on July 12, 1983. On that date it had 19 employees, all but one of whom had been employees of Hill & Son. Most of them were hired on July 8.[4] A tabulation of employees from July 1983 until the date of the hearing, including employee turnover, shows a total of 38 employees, 25 of whom had previously been employees of Hill & Son.[5]

Respondent began and continues to do business exclusively at the same location in the same two buildings as those used by Hill & Son. Martin is a lessee of Ruby Bryant, formerly Ruby Hill. The Company uses the Hill & Son post office box and telephone numbers. It utilizes most of the machinery purchased from Hill & Son, and has not purchased any significant new equipment. The bill of sale with Hill & Son gave Respondent the right to utilize the trade name "Hill and Son Manufacturing" for 180 days, and Respondent retained this lettering on its trucks and trailers for several months after the purchase, in deliveries to customers.

Martin testified about the process of manufacturing cabinets, and stated that there has been no essential difference between the process utilized by Hill & Son and that utilized by Respondent. There is some similarity between the Hill & Son job classifications and those of Respondent.[6] Martin asserted that similarities exist throughout the cabinet manufacturing industry. Variations in "styles" of cabinets were described by Martin, such as differences in wood, finish, appearance, etc. Respondent has introduced a few new styles, but continues to produce many styles previously manufactured by Hill & Son.

When Respondent started production on July 12, it sold to all or almost all of Hill & Son's customers. Although there is evidence of new "prospects," the record is unclear about the number, if any, of Respondent's new customers.

4. The Union's demands and the Company's responses

The pleadings as amended at the hearing establish that, on July 11, 1983, the Union requested that Respondent bargain with it as the representative of the Company's production and maintenance employees. The pleadings further establish that Respondent denied these requests and refused to bargain with the Union.

The pleadings as amended also establish that, on July 15, 1983, the Union by letter requested 20 items of information[7] from Respondent, and that the Company refused to comply.

B. Legal Analysis and Conclusions

In final argument Martin questioned whether the Union represented a majority of his employees. However, under current applicable law, there is a presumption of majority status flowing from the expired collective-bargaining agreement in this case, and the General Counsel is not required to prove actual majority support, Towne Plaza Hotel, 258 NLRB 69, 77 (1981), and authority cited therein. In language relevant to the facts in this case, the Board has stated as follows:

> The presumption applies not only to a situation where the employer charged with a refusal to bargain is itself a party to the preexisting contract, but also to a successorship situation such as we have here. The burden of rebutting this presumption rests, of course, on the party who would do so. It is true that a labor organization's continuing majority may not be questioned during the term of a contract. On the other hand, upon expiration thereof, the presumption of majority arising from a history of collective bargaining may be overcome by "clear and convincing proof" that the union did not in fact enjoy majority support at the time of the refusal to bargain. At such time, it is also a valid defense for the employer to "demonstrate by objective considerations that it has some reasonable grounds for believing that the union has lost its majority status."

Barrington Plaza, 185 NLRB 962, 963 (1970), enf. denied in part on other grounds 470 F.2d 669 (9th Cir. 1972).[8]

The presumption is particularly applicable to the facts in this case. Although the Hill & Son contract expired in December 1982, this was not due to any fault of the Union. Indeed, it attempted to bargain with Hill & Son for a new contract, but this attempt led to the filling of charges, several complaints, and a formal settlement agreement. As noted above, the agreement provides that the Union remained the collective-bargaining representative of Hill & Son employees until July 1, 1983, i.e., for a period of about 6 months after expiration of the contract.

Respondent in this case has not submitted any evidence, much less "clear and convincing proof," that the Union did not enjoy majority status. Nor did Martin submit any "objective considerations" to support his asserted belief that the Union in fact did not have the majority support of his employees. Accordingly, I find that the Union did have the support of a majority of the Hill & Son employees at the time Respondent purchased Hill & Son's assets, and that this support continued thereafter.

It is also clear that Respondent is a successor to Hill & Son under current Board law. The Board has recently restated the law on this subject, as follows:

> In determining whether a purchaser is obligated to bargain with the exclusive representative of its predecessor's employees, the traditional test is whether there is substantial continuity in the employing enterprise. Where there is such a continuity, the presumption of majority status by the Union under the predecessor, such as established by a collective-bargaining agreement as here, is not affected by a change in ownership. The traditional criteria for this test include whether there has been substantial continuity in the following: (1) business operations; (2) plant; (3) work force; (4) jobs and working conditions; (5) supervisors; (6) machinery, equipment, and methods of production; and (7) product or service.

Aircraft Magnesium, 265 NLRB 1344, 1345 (1982).

The facts in this case show that all of these test were met. Respondent's plant, machinery, and all of its significant equipment were identical with those of Hill & Son. The business operations remained the same, as did the product being manufactured, and most of the customers. Although Respondent did create a few new "styles" of cabinets, this did not change the product, which continued to be cabinets. See Jeffries Lithograph Co., 265 NLRB 1499 (1983). Nor was there any essential change from Hill & Son's former method of production. Finally, when Respondent commenced operations with 19 employees, all but one were former employees of Hill & Son, in addition to which Respondent hired three of the Hill & Son supervisors.

Martin's only answer to these facts was the general argument that such factors are much the same in the entire cabinet manufacturing industry. No evidence was advanced to support this factual assertion. However, if true, it would not follow that the Board's criteria for successorship have not been met in this proceeding. Rather, the only logical conclusion would be that, in any case involving the cabinet manufacturing industry, it is likely that such criteria will be satisfied.

Respondent argues that the hiatus between the time Hill & Son ceased operations, June 24, and the time that Respondent began operations, on July 12, should negate a finding of successorship. This was the normal vacation period, and it is questionable whether the description "hiatus" may appropriately be applied to it. In any event, there were no changes in operations, and Respondent conducted the hiring of its complement of employees, all but one of them former Hill & Son employees, within 1 week of the time that it purchased the latter's assets. Under almost identical circumstances, the Board concluded that the hiatus did not overcome the otherwise established substantial continuity of the employing industry. Aircraft Magnesium, supra at 1346.

The fact that the bill of sale between Respondent and Hill & Son recited only the former's purchase of assets does not negate a finding of successorship. In similar circumstances, the Board has concluded that a successorship relationship was created, despite the fact that the successor only purchased the equipment of the predecessor. C.J.B. Industries, 250 NLRB 1433, 1435 (1980). It is settled law that "the controlling factor in successorship cases is not the form of the transfer but whether the employing enterprise remains essentially the same." East Belden Corp., 239 NLRB 776, 791 (1978), enfd. 634 F.2d 635 (9th Cir. 1980).[9]

I therefore conclude that Respondent is a successor of Hill & Son Manufacturing Co. It, therefore, had an obligation to recognize and bargain with the Union on and since July 11, 1983, the date of the Union's demand. Because Respondent admittedly refused to do so, it thereby violated Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act.

[8] In its conclusion that the Trial Examiner's findings rebut the Board's reliance on a presumption of majority status, the court noted factors in that case which are not present herein.

[9] See also Band-Age, Inc., 217 NLRB 449 (1975), enfd. 534 F.2d 1 (1st Cir. 1976).

Under applicable Board law, Respondent also had an obligation, beginning July 15, 1983, to supply the Union with information required by the latter to fulfill its function as the collective-bargaining representative of Respondent's employees. The information requested by the Union related to the rates of pay, wages, hours of work, and other terms and conditions of employment of Respondent's employees, and was therefore required by the Union to fulfill this function. Inasmuch as the Company admittedly refused to supply this information, it again violated the same sections of the Act.

In accordance with my findings above and the entire record, I make the following

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. Martin of Mississippi, Inc. is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

2. United Furniture Workers of America, Local 282, AFL–CIO is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

3. All production and maintenance employees employed by Respondent, including city truck drivers, excluding all office clerical employees, over-the-road truck drivers, guards and supervisors as defined in the Act, constitute an appropriate unit for collective bargaining within the meaning of Section 9(b) of the Act.

4. United Furniture Workers of America, Local 282, AFL–CIO has been and is the exclusive representative of all the employees in the aforesaid appropriate unit for the purposes of collective bargaining within the meaning of Section 9(a) of the Act.

5. By refusing, on or about July 11, 1983, and at all times thereafter, to recognize and bargain collectively with the above-named labor organization as the exclusive representative of all its employees in the appropriate unit, and by refusing, on or about July 15, 1983, and at all times thereafter, to supply the aforesaid labor organization with information necessary for it to fulfill its function as the aforesaid exclusive representative, Respondent has engaged in and is engaging in unfair labor practices within the meaning of Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act.

6. The aforesaid unfair labor practices are unfair labor practices affecting commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

THE REMEDY

Having found that Respondent has engaged in and is engaging in certain unfair labor practices within the meaning of Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act, I shall recommend that it be ordered to cease and desist therefrom and, on request, bargain collectively with the Union as the exclusive representative of all employees in the appropriate unit, and supply the Union with information necessary for it to fulfill its function as such representative.[10]

In final argument for the General Counsel stated that, in another case not consolidated with the instant proceeding, the issue had been raised as to whether Respondent had any obligation to bargain with the Union over the hiring of its initial work force. Conceding that there is no complaint allegation concerning this issue, the General Counsel requests that the remedy include such an obligation.

The General Counsel's request raises issues which were not litigated in this proceeding, including the question of whether it was "perfectly clear" that Respondent intended to retain all of Hill & Son's employees.[11] The evidence in this proceeding is insufficient to establish that this was Respondent's intention. Accordingly, I shall reject the General Counsel's request.

On the foregoing findings of fact, conclusions of law, and the entire record, I issue the following recommended[12]

ORDER

The Respondent, Martin of Mississippi, Inc., Coldwater, Missisippi, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall

1. Cease and desist from

(a) Refusing to bargain collectively with United Furniture Workers of America, Local 282, AFL–CIO as the exclusive collective-bargaining representative of employees in the following unit:

> All production and maintenance employees employed by it, including city truck drivers, excluding all office clerical employees, over-the-road truck drivers, guards and supervisors as defined in the Act.

(b) Refusing to supply to the aforesaid Union all information necessary for it to fulfill its function as the aforesaid bargaining representative, as described in the remedy section of this decision.

(c) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing its employees in the exercise of their rights under Section 7 of the Act.

2. Take the following affirmative action necessary to effectuate the policies of the Act.

(a) On request, bargain with the above-named Union as the exclusive representative of employees in the above-described unit with respect to rates of pay, wages, hours, and other terms and conditions of employment and, if an agreement is reached, embody it in a signed contract.

(b) On request, supply the above-named Union with all information necessary for it to fulfill its function as the aforesaid bargaining representative, as described in the remedy section of this decision.

[12] If no exceptions are filed as provided by Sec. 102.46 of the Board's Rules and Regulations, the findings, conclusions, and recommended Order shall, as provided in Sec. 102.48 of the Rules, be adopted by the Board and all objections to them shall be deemed waived for all purposes.

(c) Post at its Coldwater, Mississippi plant copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix."[13] Copies of the notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 26, after being signed by the Respondent's authorized representative, shall be posted by the Respondent immediately upon receipt and maintained for 60 consecutive days in conspicuous places including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by the Respondent to ensure that the notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(d) Notify the Regional Director in writing within 20 days from the date of this Order what steps Respondent has taken to comply.

18 March 1987

DECISION AND ORDER

BY CHAIRMAN DOTSON AND MEMBERS BABSON AND STEPHENS

Upon a charge filed by the Union 10 July 1986, the General Counsel of the National Labor Relations Board issued a complaint 13 August 1986 against the Company, the Respondent, alleging that it has violated Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the National Labor Relations Act.

The complaint alleges that on 5 June 1986, following a Board election in Case 5–RC–12568, the Union was certified as the exclusive collective-bargaining representative of the Company's employees in the unit found appropriate. (Official notice is taken of the "record" in the representation proceeding as defined in the Board's Rules and Regulations, Secs. 102.68 and 102.69(g), amended Sept. 9, 1981, 46 Fed.Reg. 45922 (1981); Frontier Hotel, 265 NLRB 343 (1982).) The complaint further alleges that since on or about 23 June 1986 the Company has refused to bargain with the Union. On 20 August 1986 the Company filed its answer admitting in part and denying in part the allegations in the complaint.

On 24 November 1986 the General Counsel filed a Motion for Summary Judgment. On 4 December 1986 the Board issued an order transferring the proceeding to the Board and a Notice to Show Cause why the motion should not be granted. The Company filed a response.

The National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

Ruling on Motion for Summary Judgment

The Company's answer admits its refusal to bargain with the Union, but denies the validity of the certification based on its objections to the election in the representation proceeding. The General Counsel argues that all material issues have been previously decided. We agree with the General Counsel.

The record, including the record in Case 5–RC–12568, reveals that an election was held 28 March 1986, pursuant to the Regional Director's Decision and Direction of Election issued on 29 January 1986.[1] The tally of ballots reflects that of approximately 196 eligible voters, 89 cast valid ballots for and 77 against the Union; 3 ballots were challenged, but constituted an insufficient number to affect election results. After considering the Company's objections, the Regional Director issued a Supplemental Decision and Certification of Representative, overruling all objections raised.

By letter dated 10 June 1986, the Union requested that the Company bargain with it regarding all matters relating to rates of pay, wages, hours, and other terms and conditions of employment for the employees in the appropriate bargaining unit.

On 18 June 1986 the Company filed a request for review of the Regional Director's Supplemental Decision and Certification of Representative. By letter dated 23 June 1986, counsel for the Company acknowledged receipt of the Union's bargaining demand and indicated that the Company did not intend to bargain during the pendency of its request for review.[2]

It is well settled that in the absence of newly discovered and previously unavailable evidence or special circumstances, a respondent in a proceeding alleging a violation of Section 8(a)(5) is not entitled to relitigate issues that were or could have been litigated in a prior representation proceeding. See Pittsburgh Glass Co. v. NLRB, 313 U.S. 146, 162 (1941); Secs. 102.67(f) and 102.69(c) of the Board's Rules and Regulations.

All issues raised by the Company were or could have been litigated in the prior representation proceeding. The Company has failed to establish the existence of newly discovered and previously unavailable evidence or special circumstances sufficient to require the Board's reexamination of its decision in the representation proceeding.[3] We therefore find that the Company has not raised any issue that is properly litigable in this unfair labor practice proceeding. Accordingly we grant the Motion for Summary Judgment.

On the entire record, the Board makes the following

[1] On 26 February 1986 the Board denied the Company's request for review of the Regional Director's Decision and Direction of Election.

[2] On 14 October 1986 the Board denied the Company's request for review of the Regional Director's Supplemental Decision and Certification of Representative. Thereafter, on 2 December 1986, the Board denied the Company's motion for reconsideration of the 14 October denial of its request for review. It is undisputed that the Company continues to refuse to bargain with the Union.

[3] In the underlying representation proceeding, the Company alleged, inter alia, that its predecessor was in collusion with the Union. The Company raised various issues pertaining to that allegation which, in essence, it now raises again in its memorandum in opposition to the Motion for Summary Judgment. In this regard, the Company asserts that it has newly discovered and previously unavailable evidence to the effect that other Federal agencies have initiated investigations concerning the alleged collusion, and that therefore circumstances exist here which warrant reexamination of the representation proceeding. In our view, however, the Company's assertions do not constitute sufficient evidence to warrant a hearing in this proceeding.

FINDINGS OF FACT

I. JURISDICTION

The Company, a New Jersey corporation, provides technical and warehousing services to the United States Department of the Navy under the contractual Intra-Fleet Supply Support Operations Program at naval facilities in Portsmouth, Norfolk, and Newport News, Virginia, where it annually purchases products, goods, and materials valued in excess of $50,000 directly from points located outside the State of Virginia. We find that the Company is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act and that the Union is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

II. ALLEGED UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES

A. The Certification

Following the election held 28 March 1986, the Union was certified as the collective-bargaining representative of the employees in the following appropriate unit:

> All full-time and regular part-time employees employed by the Employer at all of the locations at which it performs work for the United States Department of the Navy in the vicinity of Portsmouth, Norfolk and Newport News, Virginia, including employees sent from this area on temporary assignment to other areas, material handlers or coordinators, forklift operators, validators, researchers, work leaders, and plant clerical employees, but excluding office clerical employees, CRT operators, guards and supervisors within the meaning of the Act.

The Union continues to be the exclusive representative under Section 9(a) of the Act.

B. Refusal to Bargain

Since 10 June 1986 the Union has requested the Company to bargain, and since 23 June 1986 the Company has refused. We find that this refusal constitutes an unlawful refusal to bargain in violation of Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

By refusing on and after 23 June 1986 to bargain with the Union as the exclusive collective-bargaining representative of employees in the appropriate unit, the Company has engaged in unfair labor practices affecting commerce within the meaning of Section 8(a)(5) and (1) and Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

REMEDY

Having found that the Respondent has violated Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act, we shall order it to cease and desist, to bargain on request with the Union, and, if an understanding is reached, to embody the understanding in a signed agreement.

To ensure that the employees are accorded the services of their selected bargaining agent for the period provided by law, we shall construe the initial period of the certification as beginning the date the Respondent begins to bargain in good faith with the Union. Mar-Jac Poultry Co., 136 NLRB 785 (1962); Lamar Hotel, 140 NLRB 226, 229 (1962), enfd. 328 F.2d 600 (5th Cir. 1964), cert. denied 379 U.S. 817 (1964); Burnett Construction Co., 149 NLRB 1419, 1421 (1964), enfd. 350 F.2d 57 (10th Cir. 1965).

ORDER

The National Labor Relations Board orders that the Respondent, Systems Engineering Associates Corp., Portsmouth, Norfolk, and Newport News, Virginia, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall

1. Cease and desist from

(a) Refusing to bargain with Local 387, International Union of Operating Engineers, AFL–CIO as the exclusive bargaining representative of the employees in the bargaining unit.

(b) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them by Section 7 of the Act.

2. Take the following affirmative action necessary to effectuate the policies of the Act.

(a) On request, bargain with the Union as the exclusive representative of the employees in the following appropriate unit on terms and conditions of employment and, if an understanding is reached, embody the understanding in a signed agreement:

> All full-time and regular part-time employees employed by the Employer at all of the locations at which it performs work for the United States Department of the Navy in the vicinity of Portsmouth, Norfolk and Newport News, Virginia, including employees sent from this area on temporary assignment to other areas, material handlers or coordinators, forklift operators, validators, researchers, work leaders, and plant clerical employees, but excluding office clerical employees, CRT operators, guards and supervisors within the meaning of the Act.

(b) Post at its facilities in Portsmouth, Norfolk, and Newport News, Virginia, copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix."[4] Copies of the notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 5, after being signed by the Respondent's authorized representative, shall be posted by the Respondent immediately upon receipt and maintained for 60 consecutive days in conspicuous places including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by the Respondent to ensure that the notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(c) Notify the Regional Director in writing within 20 days from the date of this Order what steps the Respondent has taken to comply.

CHAIRMAN DOTSON, dissenting.

I would deny the General Counsel's Motion for Summary Judgment and have a hearing on the Employer's Objections 5 and 7.

[4] If this Order is enforced by a judgment of a United States court of appeals, the words in the notice reading "Posted by Order of the National Labor Relations Board" shall read "Posted Pursuant to a Judgment of the United States Court of Appeals Enforcing an Order of the National Labor Relations Board."

APPENDIX

NOTICE TO EMPLOYEES
POSTED BY ORDER OF THE
NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD
An Agency of the United States Government

The National Labor Relations Board has found that we violated the National Labor Relations Act and has ordered us to post and abide by this notice.

WE WILL NOT refuse to bargain with Local 387, International Union of Operating Engineers, AFL–CIO as the exclusive representative of the employees in the bargaining unit.

WE WILL NOT in any like or related manner interfere with, restrain, or coerce you in the exercise of the rights guaranteed you by Section 7 of the Act.

WE WILL, on request, bargain with the Union and put in writing and sign any agreement reached on terms and conditions of employment for our employees in the bargaining unit:

> All full-time and regular part-time employees employed by the Employer at all of the locations at which it performs work for the United States Department of the Navy in the vicinity of Portsmouth, Norfolk and Newport News, Virginia, including employees sent from this area on temporary assignment to other areas, material handlers or coordinators, forklift operators, validators, researchers, work leaders, and plant clerical employees, but excluding office clerical employees, CRT operators, guards and supervisors within the meaning of the Act.

DECISION AND ORDER

BY CHAIRMAN DOTSON AND MEMBERS JOHANSEN AND BABSON

On 31 January 1985 Administrative Law Judge Howard Edelman issued the attached decision. The Charging Party filed limited exceptions and the Respondent filed exceptions and a supporting brief. The General Counsel filed a response.

The National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the decision and the record in light of the exceptions and briefs and has decided to affirm the judge's rulings, findings,[1] and conclusions only to the extent consistent with this Decision and Order.

The judge found, inter alia, that the Respondent, by suspending employee Scaria and also by suspending and subsequently terminating him and employee Viswam, violated Section 8(a)(1), (3), and (4) of the Act. The Respondent excepts, contending, inter alia, that even if the General Counsel had established a prima facie case, it was rebutted because the Respondent proved that its disciplinary actions would have occurred even in the absence of Viswam's and Scaria's protected activity. We find merit in this contention and dismiss the complaint in its entirety.

The Respondent hired Scaria in March 1975 as a mail clerk and Viswam in April 1977 as a bank messenger. As fully set forth in the attached decision, the judge found, and the Respondent admits, that both Scaria and Viswam were active union adherents of long standing.

The initial incident in issue occurred on 27 September 1982 when Scaria was suspended for 3 days by the Respondent's personnel director, Griffin, for cursing and frightening his supervisor, Ghate, on 24 September. Griffin investigated the incident by interviewing Ghate, directing Ghate to describe the incident in writing, and attending separate meetings with Viswam and Scaria. In Ghate's oral statement to Griffin she asserted that on 23 September she had warned Viswam about "referring out" incoming calls. At 5:40 p.m. on Friday, the next day, Ghate left work and saw Viswam and Scaria at the corner of Park Avenue and 54th Street. As Ghate approached, Scaria spoke loudly and cursed Ghate in Hindi after asking her, "You want telephone calls, is it your father's phone?" Ghate explained to Griffin that the translation of Scaria's Hindi obscenities was "bastard" and "one who fucks his mother."[2] Ghate also asserted that Scaria repeated his words, approached in a threatening manner, and left with Viswam after Ghate threatened to call the police. Ghate's written statement of these events did not vary from that of her interview with Griffin, except that Ghate did not translate the "bad words."

On 27 September Ghate confronted Scaria during a meeting which also included Scaria's immediate supervisor, Gururajan, and Griffin. Ghate accused Scaria of confronting and cursing her, but did not specify the nature of Scaria's curses. When Gururajan asked Ghate to translate the curses from Scaria's Hindi, Ghate replied, "I am a lady" several times and offered to repeat the language if Gururajan specifically asked, which he did not. Scaria was questioned primarily by Gururajan. Scaria repeatedly denied any knowledge of the incident. Scaria also asserted that he, Viswam, and other employees had left the bank at 5 p.m., walked to the subway entrance at Lexington Avenue and East 59th Street, and went home.

In a subsequent interview on the same day, attended by Griffin and Viswam's supervisor, Rao, Viswam corroborated Scaria's statement. Viswam also mentioned another bank employee, Simon, who had accompanied them to the subway. Griffin then interviewed Simon. Simon asserted that he saw Viswam and Scaria at the subway entrance after leaving the bank with them at 5 p.m. Simon, however, did not see them board the train or pass through the turnstile.[3]

[1] The Respondent has excepted to some of the judge's credibility findings. The Board's established policy is not to overrule an administrative law judge's credibility resolutions unless the clear preponderance of all the relevant evidence convinces us that they are incorrect. Standard Dry Wall Products, 91 NLRB 544 (1950), enfd. 188 F.2d 362 (3d Cir. 1951). We have carefully examined the record and find no basis for reversing the findings.

The Respondent also excepted to our assertion of jurisdiction. This exception is without merit. State Bank of India, 273 NLRB 264 (1984), enfd. 808 F.2d 526 (7th Cir. 1986).

We also find totally without merit the allegations of bias and prejudice on the part of the judge made by William Perry, president of Local 6. On our full consideration of the record we find no evidence that the judge prejudged the case, made prejudicial rulings, or demonstrated a bias against Perry, or Local 6, in his analysis or discussion of the evidence. Additionally, we find that Perry's conduct, set forth in the remedy section in the attached judge's decision, is disgraceful and inexcusable. Any similar conduct will result in a more severe penalty than censure.

[2] The judge did not mention this testimony or discredit Ghate as a witness.

[3] Contrary to the judge's findings, Griffin did not testify "that after speaking to Simon she had no doubt that Scaria and Viswam were at the subway with Simon and boarded their train." Instead, Griffin testified

Continued

After conducting the investigation, Gururajan and Griffin suspended Scaria for 3 days. Viswam, who allegedly was present but remained silent during the incident, was not disciplined. Gururajan testified that, compared to Scaria's muteness and unresponsiveness during the interview, he was persuaded by Ghate's responsiveness to questioning and obvious agitation. Griffin testified that during the investigation she found no reason to doubt Ghate. Although Simon placed Scaria on Lexington Avenue and East 59th Street after 5 p.m., the incident occurred approximately 30 minutes later at Park Avenue and East 54th Street. Griffin asserted that even if Scaria's alibi was true, it was reasonable to assume that Viswam and Scaria could have walked six city blocks in approximately 30 minutes.

Two months later, on 17 and 18 November, the Respondent notified Viswam and Scaria by letter that they had been terminated for hiring Johnson, a former union organizer, to assault Ghate. On 29 October Johnson entered the bank and passed a note to Ghate. The note contained his name, telephone number, and an allegation that Viswam "has tried to hire me to beat you up." Ghate brought Johnson to Griffin. Johnson told Griffin that after he beat up Ghate, he was to contact Scaria for a cash bonus. Johnson handed Griffin a slip of paper with Scaria's name and telephone number on it. Griffin took the paper to Bhattacharjee, the Respondent's deputy chief manager, and conveyed Johnson's story. Bhattacharjee, after identifying the handwriting in the note as Viswam's, called the Respondent's labor attorneys. Griffin accompanied Johnson to their law offices where Attorney Conneely took Johnson's affidavit.

According to the affidavit, Johnson knew Viswam from their organizing activities for the Union. In early October, Viswam asked Johnson to arrange having "someone beat up." Thereafter, Viswam gave Johnson $100 to assault a person whom he would identify later. On 29 October Johnson telephoned Viswam, and they agreed to meet that day at the bank. Johnson arrived at the bank and met Viswam in the reception area. Viswam then accompanied Johnson to his desk. Viswam identified Ghate, who was working nearby, described Ghate's customary subway line and departure time, and gave Johnson Scaria's name and telephone number on a slip of paper. Viswam, who was leaving the country later that day, directed Johnson to assault Ghate early the following week. He also told Johnson to contact Scaria for a bonus once Ghate had been assaulted. Viswam and Johnson left the bank together and separated. Johnson then returned to the bank and told his story to Ghate.

After Johnson described these events to Conneely, Johnson and Griffin left the law offices. Griffin returned to the bank and asked the receptionist, DiFulvio, if anyone had visited Viswam that day. DiFulvio confirmed that a man who resembled Johnson entered the reception area twice and on the first occasion to visit and speak with Viswam. DiFulvio's account was confirmed by her affidavit and that of Kotak, the bank's deputy manager. Conneely subsequently contacted the Board's Regional Office and confirmed that Johnson had worked as an organizer for the Union. On the basis of Johnson's previous affiliation with the Union, DiFulvio's statement and affidavit, Kotak's affidavit, and Johnson's statement, affidavit, and detailed knowledge of Viswam's overseas trip and departure time, Scaria's name and phone number, and Ghate's customary departure time from work and subway line, the Respondent terminated Viswam and Scaria on 17 and 18 November.

Assuming that the General Counsel presented a prima facie showing, we agree with the Respondent that its disciplinary actions would have occurred even in the absence of Viswam's and Scaria's union activities. Regarding Scaria's 3-day suspension for allegedly cursing Ghate, the judge found that "Ghate did not, during the course of Respondent's investigation, disclose what the 'bad words' were." The record contradicts this finding. Ghate testified that, during her first meeting with Griffin on 27 September, she translated Scaria's Hindi words as meaning "'bastard' and the other word . . . 'one who fucks his mother.'"

Based on the foregoing, we find that the case cited by the judge, Art Steel of California, 256 NLRB 816 (1981), is inapplicable. In Art Steel, the Board found that an employer acted pretextually when, without confronting an employee with either his accuser or an accusation, it disciplined that employee by relying exclusively on a conclusory allegation that he had used "bad words." In the instant case, however, Ghate translated Scaria's Hindi curses during her first meeting with Griffin. During the 27 September meeting which Scaria, Ghate, Griffin, and Gururajan attended, the Respondent also confronted Scaria with both his accuser and the accusation.

The judge also found that because a witness left work with Viswam and Scaria at 5 p.m. and walked three blocks with them to a subway station approximately six blocks away from their alleged encounter with Ghate at 5:40 p.m., it would have that she did not doubt that Scaria "was at the train station at 5 o'clock" and that Scaria "had forty minutes to get back to the place" where Scaria reportedly cursed at Ghate. Griffin did not state her belief whether Scaria had passed through the turnstile or boarded the train.

been unlikely "for them to have taken the train to the next stop and to double back and intercept Ghate at a corner of 54th Street and Lexington Avenue." We note, however, that no witness saw Viswam or Scaria board the train or pass through the turnstile and that Griffin testified that even if Scaria's witness spoke truthfully, it was reasonable to assume that Viswam and Scaria could have walked six city blocks in approximately 30 minutes.

The judge also found that neither Viswam nor Scaria was sufficiently motivated to have cursed Ghate because "there is no evidence that Viswam was particularly angry about [Ghate's] memo or displayed such conduct which would trigger such an elaborate and planned response." Regarding his telephone message practices, however, Viswam testified that Ghate had previously warned him orally and in writing and that Ghate's warnings were common knowledge at the bank. Viswam also testified that Ghate continually complained about his work and that she "was always trying to harass me." Accordingly, we do not agree with the judge's conclusion that the Respondent's suspension of Scaria was unreasonable and we find that the Respondent has demonstrated that it would have disciplined Scaria even absent his union and protected concerted activities.

Regarding the Respondent's termination of Viswam and Scaria for having hired Johnson to assault Ghate, the judge found that the Respondent's investigation was "perfunctory and one sided." The judge found that, given the "bizarre" nature of Johnson's confession and demeanor, the Respondent should have contacted not only Viswam and Scaria for an explanation, but also other witnesses "who could have shed light on Johnson's credibility or explained troubling aspects of the affidavit." Applying Lancer Corp., 271 NLRB 1426 (1984), the judge concluded that the Respondent's termination of Viswam and Scaria was unreasonable because their discharge was not predicated on a "full and fair investigation."

In concluding that the Respondent's investigation was deficient, the judge noted that had it contacted Viswam or Scaria, "they might have been able to explain Johnson's motivation, or to shed light on his credibility or to explain how Johnson became aware of some of the details set forth in his affidavit." The judge also posited that had the Respondent contacted the Union's president, Perry, he might have explained Johnson's knowledge of Ghate's name and subway route because "Perry . . . had filed a charge alleging the discriminatory suspension of Scaria, which investigation was pending at the time Johnson gave his affidavit and these details might well have been within the knowledge of Local 6 representatives and available to Johnson." The judge's speculation may or may not be correct. However, the issue is not whether the Respondent's investigation would have been more thorough had it elicited possible explanations from Viswam, Scaria, and Perry, but whether the Respondent's disciplinary investigation would have been the same had Viswam and Scaria not been associated with the Union.[4]

The judge cited several cases, including Lancer Corp., supra, to infer that the Respondent's investigation was perfunctory because it did not contact Viswam, Scaria, or Perry. None of these cases, however, necessarily requires an employer to establish conclusively either the veracity or related motivation of a witness against an alleged discriminatee. They also do not require an employer, in all circumstances before an employee's termination, to allow the employee to have his say. Although the judge found that the Respondent, by not allowing Viswam and Scaria to explain Johnson's accusation, did not follow its customary practices, the only evidence of its disciplinary procedures is Griffin's assertion that the Respondent "usually, it depends on the situation," gave employees a chance to explain reported misconduct. But the allegation of a man, known to have been a union employee, that employees, who also were associated with the Union and who had only 2 months earlier been implicated in and/or disciplined for related conduct in cursing at a supervisor, had hired him to assault the same supervisor obviously constitutes unusual, not ordinary, circumstances. There is no evidence that the Respondent had been previously confronted with a situation similar to that here. That, however, does not warrant a finding that it departed from its "customary" disciplinary practices. Thus, as noted above, it is not clear that the Respondent had a uniform practice with respect to disciplinary procedures. In any event, given the nature of the misconduct of Viswam and Scaria reported by Johnson, the situation which confronted the Respondent obviously was unusual and serious and not one for which "customary" disciplinary procedures would apply.

We also find that even assuming Viswam and Scaria had explained their second reported offense against Ghate, the clear weight of the evidence suggests that, even absent their protected activities, the Respondent's disciplinary actions would not have varied. The judge speculated that if Viswam, Scaria, and Perry had been consulted by the Respondent, they might have explained that Johnson could have obtained his detailed knowledge about [4] See Wright Line, 251 NLRB 1083 (1980).

Ghate from the Union's previously filed unfair labor practice charge against the Respondent. But the judge's retrospective version of the incident is only speculation and ignores the Respondent's obligation to Ghate, its supervisor and agent, to hold her safe from harm in the face of a plausible, work-related physical danger. Because it was reasonable for the Respondent to have believed Johnson rather than any possible denials by Viswam or Scaria, who had been implicated previously in similar misconduct and had an obvious reason to bear a grudge against Ghate, the judge's analysis of the incident is neither reasonable nor probable. Because we find that the Respondent acted reasonably under the unusual circumstances of this case, we shall dismiss the entire complaint.[5]

ORDER

The complaint is dismissed.

[5] In dismissing the complaint, we note that the judge's analysis of the Respondent's alleged violation of Sec. 8(a)(4) of the Act is the same as that of the Respondent's alleged 8(a)(3) and (1) violations. The record does not establish a specific causal relationship between Viswam and Scaria's use of Board processes and the Respondent's disciplinary actions.

DECISION

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

HOWARD EDELMAN, Administrative Law Judge. This case was tried before me on May 21, 22, 23, and 25, June 8, and August 2, 1984.

On December 29, 1982, Local 6, International Federation of Health Professionals, International Longshoremen's Association, AFL-CIO (Local 6), filed a charge against the State Bank of India (Respondent), alleging that Respondent had discharged its employees K. M. Viswambharan and Johannes Scaria (Viswam and Scaria), in violation of Section 8(a)(1), (3), and (4) of the Act. On January 31, 1983, Local 6 filed an amended charge alleging, inter alia, that Respondent had suspended Scaria, prior to his discharge, in violation of Section 8(a)(1), (3), and (4) of the Act. On March 22, 1984, a complaint issued alleging that Respondent had suspended Scaria and thereafter discharged Scaria and Viswam in violation of Section 8(a)(1), (3), and (4) of the Act.

Briefs were filed by the General Counsel and Respondent. On my consideration of the entire record,[1] the briefs, and my observation of the demeanor of the witnesses, I make the following

FINDINGS OF FACT AND CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

I. JURISDICTION

Respondent is a banking or financial institution organized under the laws of India. It is licensed to do business in the State of New York where it has a facility located at 460 Park Avenue, New York, New York. During the normal course of its business operations, Respondent annually derives gross revenues in excess of $1 million and engages in interstate financial transactions in excess of $100,000 from its New York facility.

Respondent denies that it is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act. Respondent contends that it is a direct instrumentality of the government of India and, therefore, is not an employer within the meaning of the Act.[2] This same contention was made by Respondent concerning its Chicago, Illinois facility and rejected by the Board. State Bank of India, 229 NLRB 838 (1977). The Board concluded that Respondent was not excluded within the meaning of Section 2(2) of the Act which provides that the term "employer" shall not include "the United States or any wholly owned Government corporation, or any Federal Reserve Bank, or any State or political subdivision thereof" and that "there is no public policy or policy of the Act which, on the ground that the employer is disclosed to be an 'agency' or 'instrumentality' of a foreign state, justifies us to continue to decline jurisdiction in cases affecting employees in our own country whose employer meets the Board's jurisdictional standards for such enterprises." The Board therefore concluded it would effectuate the purposes of the Act to assert jurisdiction. This contention was raised again by Respondent in connection with its New York facility in State Bank of India, 273 NLRB 264 (1984), and again rejected by the Board. Accordingly, I conclude that Respondent is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act. (262 NLRB 1108 (1982).)

I conclude Local 6 is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act. Port Chester Nursing Home, 269 NLRB 150 (1984); State Bank of India, 262 NLRB 1108.

II. THE UNION ACTIVITIES OF SCARIA AND VISWAM—RESPONDENT UNION ANIMUS

Scaria was hired by Respondent in March 1975 as a mailclerk. He worked continually for Respondent until his discharge on November 1982. During this period Scaria was a satisfactory employee and was offered a supervisory position by Respondent in January 1981 and March 1982, which he turned down.

[1] Following the close of the hearing counsel for Respondent filed a motion to correct the official transcript. The General Counsel, counsel for Local 6, and counsel for the discriminatees did not oppose this motion. On due consideration, I issue an Order correcting the transcript to reflect the changes set forth in Respondent's motion. The above motion shall become part of the record herein and is designated as J. Exh. 1.

[2] The facts on which this contention is based are contained in R. Exhs. 19 through 26 and are summarized concisely in the administrative law judge's decision in State Bank of India, 262 NLRB 1108 (1982), involving Respondent's New York facility.

Viswam was hired in April 1977 as a bank messenger and worked for Respondent continually thereafter until his discharge on November 1982. During this period Viswam was a satisfactory employee. At the time of his discharge he had been promoted to the position of letter of credit negotiator. Viswam was offered a supervisory position in November 1980 but turned it down.

In 1977 Viswam and Scaria were among a small group of employees who began organizing Respondent's employees. They formed an independent labor organization called Local 777. On January 12, 1978, following a petition filed with Region 2, Local 777 was certified by the Board. Shortly thereafter Respondent and Local 777 entered in a collective-bargaining agreement. Viswam thereafter served the local as the shop steward.

By 1980, Viswam and Scaria were dissatisfied with the lack of success achieved by Local 777 in obtaining benefits and improved working conditions for the unit employees. Viswam wanted to affiliate with a stronger union. Local 777's attorney advised him to call William Perry, president of Local 6. Viswam contacted Perry and he and Scaria met with Perry. It was decided that Local 777 would attempt to merge with Local 6. In furtherance of this merger, Viswam and Scaria circulated and posted Local 6 literature and arranged a meeting of employees where they obtained about 65 employee signatures in support of the merger. Thereafter, Local 6, through its president, Perry, requested Respondent to bargain with it. Respondent refused. On December 8, 1980, Local 6 filed unfair labor practice charges against Respondent alleging violations of Section 8(a)(1) and (5) of the Act.[3] On January 22, 1981, a complaint issued alleging an unlawful refusal to recognize and bargain with Local 6. The case was tried in September 1981. During the trial, Viswam and Scaria were the principal witnesses in support of the charge.[4]

Sometime in January 1981 after the complaint in the above case (2–CA–17711) issued, P. K. Bhattacharjee, Respondent's deputy chief manager and the second ranking officer in the New York office, called Scaria to his office. He offered Scaria a promotion to a supervisory position. During this meeting he discussed the pending unfair labor practice case and told Scaria that Respondent did not want Local 6 and that if he took this promotion it would "bust the Union." Scaria refused to accept this offer of promotion and later confirmed such refusal in writing, setting forth his reason as fear on his part that Respondent was trying to promote him out of the unit to fire him. Bhattacharjee, who was called as a witness by Respondent, did not deny this conversation. I fully credit Scaria's testimony regarding this conversation.[5]

About July 1981, shortly before the trial of the above-described unfair labor practice complaint was scheduled to take place, Viswam was attending a send-off party for Chandurka, Respondent's deputy chief of contract and admittedly an agent and supervisor of Respondent. Chandurka was going to work at the bank's main office in India. During this party, Viswam testified he spoke to Chandurka and Chandurka expressed his feeling that he had not discriminated against him for his union activities. However, Chandurka told him he had better "watch out" for Respondent. Viswam responded that he was aware Respondent could fire him. Chandurka was not called as a witness by Respondent. Viswam's testimony is therefore undenied. I fully credit Viswam's testimony concerning this conversation.[6] As a result of Chandurka's threat, an unfair labor practice charge was filed by Local 6 against Respondent.[7] The charge was withdrawn by Local 6 only after the Regional Director assured Local 6 that Respondent had given Viswam "written assurances to the effect that it will not discriminate against him because of his union activities."

Sometime in September 1981, during the hearing in connection with the refusal-to-bargain charge described above, Viswam met Bhatacharjee in the lobby of the Federal Building, Federal Plaza, New York. Viswam testified that Bhatacharjee came over to him during a recess in the trial and told him that he needed Viswam's support and that Respondent did not need a union. Bhattacharjee told Viswam he needed his help to see that there was no union in the bank. He then told Viswam that Respondent would accede to the employees' demands if there was no union. Although Bhattacharjee was called as a witness, he did not deny this conversation. As set forth above, I found Viswam to be a credible witness. Accordingly, I fully credit his testimony concerning this conversation.

In October 1981, shortly after the trial of the unfair labor practice complaint described above. Viswam and Scaria planned to picket Respondent at the Waldorf Astoria Hotel which was the site of a scheduled reception to celebrate the arrival from India of Padmanabhan, the chairman of the bank. In furtherance of this planned picketing, which was to protest working conditions, Viswam and Scaria posted picketing notices throughout the bank and distributed such notices to employees. The picketing was to take place on October 5, 1981, at 5:30 p.m.

On October 4, Bhattacharjee called Scaria and Viswam into his office. Both Scaria and Viswam testified that Bhattacharjee pleaded with them to cancel the picketing planned for October 5 at the Waldorf. He told them if the picketing took place, his name and career would be spoiled. Viswam and Scaria listened, but gave no commitment. On October 5, Bhattacharjee called Viswam into his office. Viswam testified that he again pleaded with him to cancel the planned picketing, explaining if the picketing took place as scheduled, his career would be spoiled. As an inducement, Bhattacharjee told Viswam he would arrange a meeting with Bank Chairman Padmanabhan so that Viswam could presumably present the employees' demands. Viswam agreed and the scheduled picketing was canceled. Bhattacharjee, although called as a witness by Respondent, did not deny these conversations. As set forth above, I have found Scaria and Viswam to be credible witnesses. Accordingly, I fully credit their testimony concerning the above meetings.

[4] On February 12, 1982, the administrative law judge issued his decision in the above case in which he dismissed the complaint in its entirety. On July 21, 1982, the Board affirmed the judge. (262 NLRB 1108.)

On July 21, 1982, the Board, as set forth in footnote 3, affirmed the judge's decision dismissing the complaint which had alleged that Respondent had refused to recognize and bargain with Local 6. Shortly thereafter, Local 6 filed with Region 2 a petition for election. Viswam and Scaria solicited and obtained from Respondent's employees a sufficient number of signed authorization cards which were used to support this petition for an election. Pursuant to the petition, an election was scheduled for September 2, 1982.

On September 2, the election was held. Viswam was the observer for Local 6. Following the vote, the ballots were counted and Local 6 won by a count of 44 for Local 6 to 33 for no union. Present for Respondent during the count, which took place in the conference room at Respondent's facility, was Bhattacharjee and Respondent's attorney, John Gibbons. Present for Local 6 was William Perry, Local 6 president, and Scaria and Viswam. Perry testified that following the count he attempted to shake hands with Gibbons but he refused and walked away from him. Perry, Viswam, and Scaria were left and began laughing. Gibbons then walked by, heard them laughing, and stated to the group, "I'm going to fuck you." Viswam and Scaria corroborate Perry's testimony. Gibbons testified that he signed the tally of ballots and left the room without saying a word. He concedes he saw a big smile on Viswam's face. He denies that Perry tried to shake his hand or that he told Perry, Viswam, or Scaria, either individually or collectively, that he would "fuck" them or words to that effect. Bhattacharjee could not remember that Gibbons made the statement attributed to him by Scaria, Viswam, and Perry. I credit the testimony of Perry, Scaria, and Viswam. As set forth above, I have concluded that Scaria and Viswam are credible witnesses. I was not impressed with Bhattacharjee's demeanor. His responses during cross-examination were often vague. His memory of the above incident was particularly vague. Moreover, his testimony on cross-examination concerning Respondent's decision to terminate Scaria and Viswam was often evasive. Additionally, during the trial of this case, as set forth in the record, Perry and Gibbons demonstrated an intense hostility toward each other. During the short period of time Perry appeared,[8] his manner toward Gibbons was to goad and antagonize him, and Gibbons' response was to become angry and lose his temper. Perry's testimony is consistent with their conduct at this trial. Counsel for Respondent, in an attempt to discredit the testimony of Perry, Viswam, and Scaria, established that in several prior investigatory affidavits taken by Board agents after the election, neither Scaria nor Viswam included Gibbons' statement in their affidavit, nor did Perry in sworn testimony in an unemployment insurance proceeding involving the subsequent discharges of Scaria and Viswam. I have considered this evidence and, notwithstanding, conclude for the reasons described above that the mutually corroborative testimony of Perry, Scaria, and Viswam is credible.

In September 1982, Scaria and Viswam again organized and scheduled picketing to take place at the Waldorf Astoria Hotel at a time when Respondent's chairman, Padmanabhan, was coming over from India for a reception. The picketing was again to protest the employees working conditions. Scaria and Viswam testified that Bhattacharjee again called them into his office and pleaded with them not to picket. During this conversation, Scaria testified that Bhattacharjee told them their "union activities were interfering with the bank." At the conclusion of this meeting Scaria and Viswam did not agree to cancel the scheduled picketing. The following day Bhattacherjee called Scaria into his office. He pleaded with him to cancel the picketing and told him "it [the picketing] was bad for the bank." Pursuant to Bhattacharjee's promise that he would arrange a meeting with Padmanabhan, Scaria and Viswam agreed to cancel the scheduled picketing. Bhattacharjee, although called as a witness by Respondent, did not deny these conversations. Accordingly, I fully credit the testimony of Scaria and Viswam.

On September 27, 1982, Scaria was suspended for 3 days for allegedly verbally assaulting Respondent's supervisor, Sheela Ghate. Scaria denied that he had spoken to Ghate that day. On November 17 and 18, 1982, Respondent discharged Scaria and Viswam for allegedly conspiring with an individual named Joseph Johnson Jr. to physically assault Ghate.[9]

The General Counsel has the burden of proving union animus was a substantial or motivating factor in the suspension of Scaria and in the discharges of Scaria and Viswam. NLRB v. Transportation Management Corp., 462 U.S. 393 (1983); Wright Line, 251 NLRB 1083 (1980), enfd. 662 F.2d 899 (1st Cir. 1981), cert. denied 455 U.S. 989 (1982).

Respondent admits, and indeed the evidence established, Respondent's knowledge of Scaria's and Viswam's activities on behalf of Local 6. Such activities included testifying in the September 1981 trial and the filing of unfair labor practice charges alleging unlawful threats. Respondent further admits, and the evidence fully established, that Scaria and Viswam were the most active employees on behalf of Local 6. In fact, the evidence established that Scaria and Viswam were the heart and soul of Local 6 as far as its existence in Respondent's facility was concerned and Respondent acknowledged this by its conduct. For example, it was Scaria and Viswam who planned and scheduled the above-described picketing in 1981 and 1982; it was Scaria and Viswam with whom Bhattacharjee pleaded to cancel such scheduled picketing, and it was Scaria and Viswam who ultimately agreed to cancel the scheduled picketing.

[8] Perry was ejected from the hearing because of improper conduct directed to me during the course of this hearing discussed in detail below.

[9] The facts surrounding the above suspension and discharges will be set forth in the section of this decision relating to Respondent's defense.

The evidence also conclusively established Respondent's intense union animus directed to Local 6 generally and to Scaria's and Viswam's activities on behalf of Local 6 in particular. The following facts conclusively establish Respondent's animus.

(a) Bhattacharjee's January 1981 conversation with Scaria in which he stated that Respondent did not want Local 6 and it would "bust the union."

(b) Chandurka's threat to Viswam that he had better "watch out" for Respondent, in connection with his activities on behalf of Local 6, and the subsequent unfair labor practice charge filed which resulted in written assurances by Respondent that it would not discriminate against Viswam.

(c) Bhattacharjee's September 1981 statements to Viswam to the effect that Respondent did not want Local 6 as the bargaining representative of its employees and would accede to the employees' demands if Viswam dissuaded the employees from supporting Local 6. Such conduct could arguably constitute a violation of Section 8(a)(1). St. Francis Federation of Nurses v. NLRB, 729 F.2d 844 (D.C. Cir. 1984).

(d) Bhattacharjee's pleas to Scaria and Viswam to cancel scheduled picketing, a protected activity, in October 1981 and in September 1982, shortly before the suspension of Scaria and discharge of Scaria and Viswam, because such picketing would embarrass Respondent and ruin Bhattacharjee's career. These picketing incidents standing alone would, in my opinion, supply sufficient motivation for Respondent to want to rid itself of Scaria and Viswam. It is clear that by threatening to picket, these employees had Respondent by the throat, and Respondent did not like it.

(e) Gibbons' statement following Local 6's election victory that he would "fuck" the Union.

Even a casual examination of Respondent's conduct directed at Scaria and Viswam, as described above, establishes conclusively, in my opinion, intense union animus directed at Scaria and Viswam and a substantial motivating factor in the suspension and discharges. It is obvious that if Respondent were able to rid itself of Scaria and Viswam it would effectively rid itself of Local 6.

Additionally, the timing of the suspension and discharges, within a month of the Local 6 election victory and a second threat to picket Respondent, further support a discriminatory motivation for the suspension and discharge. In short, the General Counsel has established not only a motivating factor, but a solid prima facie case. Once such motivating factor is established, the burden of proof shifts to Respondent to establish that the same action would have taken place even in the absence of the employees' protected activities. NLRB v. Transportation Management, supra; Wright Line, supra.

III. RESPONDENT'S DEFENSE

On September 27, 1982, Respondent's supervisor, Sheela Ghate, went to Respondent's personnel director, Selena Griffin, a supervisor and agent of Respondent, and reported the following incident to Respondent in writing:

> On September 24, 1982 I left the office at 5:40 PM and was walking to the 5th Avenue subway station. Mr. Scaria and Mr. Viswambharan were standing at the corner of 54th Street and Park Avenue. As I approached that corner Mr. Scaria spoke to me loudly in Hindi. The meaning was 'You want telephone calls, is it you father's phone?; and then he said bad words. He repeated the same thing again and came towards me in a threatening gesture. . . . I said to Mr. Scaria, "If you do not stop, I will call police." Then both of them walked away.

Ghate did not, during the course of Respondent's investigation, disclose what the "bad words" were or describe the "threatening gesture." On September 23, Ghate had given Viswam a warning memo for referring out calls he allegedly should have taken. Ghate told Griffin she assumed the reference to "telephone calls" by Scaria was in connection with this memo.

Griffin then reported the incident to Respondent's supervisor, Gururajan, who was Scaria's direct supervisor. Gururajan, Griffin, and Ghate then met with Scaria in Gururajan's office. Gururajan then said to Scaria, "I believe you confronted Mrs. Ghate on Friday [September 24]." Scaria said he did not know anything. In this connection Scaria testified that he had left the office at 5 p.m. on September 24 with Viswam and other bank employees and taken the Lexington Avenue subway home. Respondent's facility is on 57th Street and Park Avenue and the Lexington Avenue subway is on 59th Street and Lexington Avenue. Park Avenue and Lexington are a city block apart.

After meeting with Scaria, Griffin and Rao, Viswam's supervisor, met with Viswam. Rao told Viswam he understood something had taken place between Scaria and Ghate after work on September 24. Viswam, as did Scaria, denied knowing or seeing anything. He did, however, tell Griffin and Rao that he, Scaria, Simon, a bank employee, and other employees had left the office at 5 p.m. and walked to the Lexington Avenue subway to go home.

Griffin then spoke with Simon who confirmed that both Viswam and Scaria left work at 5 p.m. and went with him to the Lexington Avenue subway station. According to Griffin, Simon told her that he did not exactly see them board the train because he went to buy tokens. However, Griffin testified that after speaking to Simon she had no doubt that Scaria and Viswam were at the subway with Simon and boarded their train, but concluded that it was possible for Scaria and Viswam to have gotten off the train at the next stop and doubled back in time to intercept Ghate. Ghate usually left work at 5:30 p.m.

On the basis of the above investigation, Griffin testified she made the decision to suspend Scaria for 3 days. No disciplinary action was imposed on Viswam.

An analysis of the above facts establishes that:

(a) The suspension was predicated on alleged statements by Scaria to Ghate which are in part incoherent and in part subjective and conclusory. Scaria was alleged to have said "You want telephone calls, is it your father's phone." I simply do not understand what this sentence means, even assuming it was allegedly related to Ghate's warning memo to Viswam the previous day. I certainly do not see how it could be insulting or threatening. The reference to Scaria saying "bad words" and making a "threatening gesture" is totally subjective and conclusary. Art Steel of California, 256 NLRB 816, 821 (1981). It is undisputed that at the time of the suspension, Respondent had no knowledge of what such "bad words" or the "threatening gesture" were. Ghate testified she did not disclose these bad words or describe the gesture to Respondent supervisors during the investigation. Nor is there any evidence to establish that Griffin or other Respondent supervisors pushed Ghate to reveal what "bad words" were allegedly used or the nature of the "threatening gesture."

(b) The alleged incident took place after working hours and outside of Respondent's facility.

(c) The alleged incident did not involve Scaria's supervisor.

(d) It is simply not probable that the incident could have taken place as described. Griffin admitted that the investigation established that Scaria and Viswam left work at 5 p.m. and went to the Lexington Avenue subway at Lexington and 59th Street. This is 2 blocks north and 1 long city block east of Respondent's facility. She then testified she concluded it was possible for them to have taken the train to the next stop and to double back and intercept Ghate at a corner of the 54th Street and Lexington Avenue. Ghate generally left about 5:30 p.m. It would be virtually impossible for Scaria and Viswam to double back from the subway given the unpredictability of New York subways and pick the one corner, out of four, that Ghate would traverse, wait there for her, and then pick her out of the thousands of people crowding this area during the height of New York's rush hour by 5:40 p.m., the alleged time of the incident. Indeed, there is no evidence that they were aware of what subway Ghate took, or the route she customarily took to reach the Fifth Avenue subway. She could have taken any number of routes to her subway that would have bypassed 54th Street and Park Avenue entirely.

(e) It is unlikely that Scaria and Viswam would have undertaken such a complex and devious action with such little likelihood of success merely to say a few "bad words" concerning a memo to Viswam. In this connection there is no evidence that Viswam was particularly angry about the memo or displayed such conduct which would trigger such an elaborate and planned response.

(f) There is no evidence that Respondent suspended other employees or in any way disciplined other employees based on similar incidents.

In view of this analysis, I conclude that Respondent has failed to meet its burden and establish the suspension would have occurred in any event. Transportation Management, supra. Accordingly, I conclude that Respondent suspended Scaria because he engaged in activities in support of Local 6. Since such activities involved testifying during Board proceedings, filing of unfair labor practice charges, and participating in a Board-conducted election, I conclude that by engaging in such conduct, Respondent violated Section 8(a)(1), (3), and (4) of the Act.

On October 29, 1982, shortly after noontime, Joseph Johnson Jr., a recent organizer for Local 6, but then unemployed, and a stranger to Respondent, walked into Respondent's facility and handed Sheela Ghate a note which said:

> Mr. Viswam has tried to hire me to beat you up. My name is Joseph Johnson, Jr. I can be reached at 452-3812.
> It [presumably a reference to the alleged assault] is supposed to take place after he leaves the country. Let him stay out!
> Keep this confidential between you, I, and the authorities.

Ghate read the note and asked Johnson to come with her. He went with Ghate who took him to Griffin's office. Ghate showed Griffin the note and Johnson then related an alleged plot whereby he was hired by Viswam to beat up Ghate. He told Griffin after he beat up Ghate he was to call Scaria and he would receive a cash bonus. He gave a slip of paper to Griffin with Scaria's telephone number on it. Griffin took the note and slip of paper to Bhattacharjee, showed them to him, and related Johnson's story. Bhattacharjee recognized Viswam's handwriting. Bhattacharjee called his attorneys and on their advice it was decided to turn the investigation of this matter over to them. It was then recommended by Respondent's attorneys that Johnson be brought to their office so an affidavit could be taken. Johnson agreed to this and went with Griffin by cab to the attorney's office.

Griffin testified that Johnson was dressed in an "ostentatious" manner and observed that he "stood out in a crowd." Bhattacharjee testified that Griffin later told him, in connection with reporting her impressions of Johnson, that during the ride to the attorney's office he recited poetry, evidently written by him, to her and that she thought Johnson "was not that bad" (a reference to his character and credibility rather than his poetry).

When they reached Respondent attorney's office, Johnson was interviewed by Brian Conneely, an associate in the firm's labor department. Conneely took an affidavit from Johnson which set forth the details of the alleged conspiracy.[10]

Johnson stated that in early October he was at the offices of Local 6 when he happened to meet Viswam. He knew Viswam in connection with his Local 6 activities on behalf of Respondent's employees. Viswam came to him and said, "I need to have someone beat up." He said he would give Johnson the name of the intended victim and the day of the assault later. Johnson agreed to perform this alleged act for Viswam.

The following day Johnson stated he called the NLRB (Region 2) and spoke to one of the Board investigators. (The Board investigator's name was not set forth in the affidavit, however, Johnson testified he told Conneely that he knew David Leach, at the time a field attorney employed by the NLRB and working out of Region 2.) He related to this Board investigator his conversation with Viswam the day before and was advised to come to Region 2 to give an affidavit. He never did this. The following day he called Viswam at his office telephone number and the made an appointment for lunch. During this lunch appointment Viswam asked how much the job would cost and they agreed to a $100 price. According to Johnson, Viswam gave him the $100 during lunch and said he would call him later to let him know who he wanted beat up and when.

[10] In recounting this alleged conspiracy, I am using the affidavit of Johnson taken by Conneely rather than Johnson's testimony at trial because it was the contents of the affidavit that was used by Respondent in reaching its decision to discharge Scaria and Viswam. (See R. Exh. 15.)

On October 29, Johnson stated he called Local 6's office and the secretary told him Viswam was trying to contact him. Johnson states he called Viswam at his office and he told him to meet him at Respondent's facility that same day about noontime. Johnson met Viswam in Respondent's reception area. He accompanied Viswam to his desk where Viswam pointed out Ghate. At this time he told him what time she left for work and the subway station she entered. Viswam then told Johnson to do the job early the following week when he had left the country. Viswam then gave Johnson a slip of paper with Scaria's name and phone number on it (described above), and told him to contact Scaria when the job was done. According to Johnson, he and Viswam then left Respondent's facility and headed in opposite directions. When Viswam was out of sight Johnson doubled back to Respondent's facility and gave the note described above to Ghate.

After Johnson left the attorney's office, Griffin returned to Respondent's facility. She asked their receptionist whether anyone had come to see Viswam that day and the receptionist described a man answering Johnson's description who she said later returned to the bank.

Respondent Attorney Conneely thereafter called Carol Sobin, a field attorney working out of Region 2 and assigned to investigate the unfair labor practice charge filed by Local 6 concerning Scaria's suspension. Sobin confirmed that Johnson was an organizer for Local 6. The following week, John Gibbons, Respondent's primary attorney, returned to his office and took over the investigation. Gibbons had been out of town on October 29. On his return Conneely briefed him about the events of October 29 and Gibbons reviewed Johnson's affidavit, the note to Ghate, and slip of paper with Scaria's name and phone number on it. Conneely told Gibbons that Johnson had said he knew Leach, a field attorney working out of Region 2. Later that day Gibbons called Leach who confirmed that he knew Johnson to be an organizer for Local 6 and that he had been involved in an 8(a)(3) proceeding which Region 2 had prosecuted.

The following week, Conneely contacted Region 29 and spoke with a Board agent and asked if he knew Johnson. The agent referred him to Seaport Manor, Inc., 248 NLRB 886 (1980), in which the Board had found Johnson to have been discriminatorily discharged.

Johnson was frequently used by Local 6 as a "Plant." He would obtain a job at a plant Local 6 intended to organize and organize it from within. On occasion he would be discriminatorily discharged in connection with these activities.

On November 4, Gibbons spoke with Board Agent Sobin who was investigating Scaria's unfair labor practice charge described above. He had asked her several days before to ask Viswam whether Johnson had been in to see him at the bank on October 29. During this conversation Sobin told him she had asked Viswam this question and he replied that he had not.

On the basis of this investigation, which was conducted under Gibbons' supervision, Gibbons contacted Respondent by a letter dated November 15, 1982, recommending that Respondent discharge both Scaria and Viswam. Respondent, by letters dated November 17 and 18, notified Scaria and Viswam respectively that they had been terminated.

At no time during this investigation did Respondent's personnel or its attorneys contact Johnson's employer, William Perry, president of Local 6, or Scaria or Viswam. When Griffin was asked during her testimony why Respondent had not spoken to Scaria or Viswam, she replied that Respondent just assumed they would deny the accusation. No reason was offered by Respondent for not contacting Perry. Respondent did report this alleged conspiracy to the police. However, according to the testimony of Johnson, Scaria, and Viswam, the police did not contact them and there have been no criminal proceedings.

Griffin admitted during her testimony that when Respondent contemplated disciplinary action against its employees, they were invariably interviewed so that they could present their position, offer an explanation, or rebut accusations before any disciplinary action was taken.

The central issue concerning Respondent's defense is whether it acted reasonably and conducted a full and fair investigation as a basis for the discharge of Scaria and Viswam, or whether the investigation was prefunctory and the results of such investigation used as an excuse for Respondent to rid itself of union adherents. Lancer Corp., 271 NLRB 1426 (1984); Tama Meat Packing Corp., 230 NLRB 116 (1977); J. W. Mortell Co., 168 NLRB 435 (1967); Norfolk Tallow Co., 154 NLRB 1052 (1965).

The first thing that seems obvious to me is that Johnson's story is rather bizarre. It is certainly bizarre that two white collar employees with relatively long terms of employment with Respondent, who are reliable workers, with good work records, and family men, would engage in a criminal conspiracy which could not only end their careers with Respondent, but send them to jail and destroy their families. And what would be their motivation? Merely to retaliate against Ghate because she issued the memo to Viswam described above. Johnson's allegation is a very serious allegation and, under these circumstances, a full and fair investigation was required.

Not only is the allegation bizarre, but the person making the allegation is a total stranger to Respondent. Moreover, Respondent had serious doubts concerning his credibility. In this connection, Griffin described Johnson as dressed in a very "ostentatious" manner and observed that "he stood out in a crowd." She later reported to Bhattacharjee that during their cab ride to the attorney's office Johnson had recited poetry he had written to her and "was not that bad." During the trial, Johnson was questioned about his literary talents as follows:

> Q. Well, do you write books?
> JOHNSON: Yes, I do.
> Q. And do you write autobiographies?
> JOHNSON: I write fiction and nonfiction, plays, short stories. I'm a professional writer. I'm an accomplished writer, on a scale that I'm sure that you're not even aware of.
> JUDGE EDELMAN: What kind of stories do you write?
> JOHNSON: I write fiction, nonfiction. I got a book on—I got a manuscript of the 70's; I got a baseball story about a federal agent.
> JUDGE EDELMAN: You've got a baseball story about a federal agent?
> JOHNSON: Well, yes.
> JUDGE EDELMAN: What was the story about?
> JOHNSON: It's a fellow that goes into military, get's programmed by the military to be in a special program that the president is initiating. Then he goes through life and he becomes a part of organized crime and he joins sides in this managing control of America. He grows up to be a leader of a family and he goes to jail and he comes out to be a G-man.
> JUDGE EDELMAN: When does he become a ball player?
> JOHNSON: He's a ball player from a child. He joins the nastalgia league when he's 12 years old and he goes throughout life playing baseball, playing ball.
> JUDGE EDELMAN: He goes through his life playing baseball except when he's in the army or—
> JOHNSON: In the army or conducting business with this organized crime people that are trying to get him to work for him for ten years so they could control the economy of America for ten years.

I feel certain that Johnson's poetry was consistent with his prose and that Griffin had serious doubts about Johnson's credibility as her observations to Bhattacharjee indicate. Moreover, during the trial of this case I was unimpressed with the demeanor of both Griffin and Bhattacharjee. Both impressed me as being vague and evasive especially in connection with their testimony as to the character of Johnson. I feel certain that Griffin had serious doubts about Johnson's credibility and conveyed this to Bhattacharjee.

I am also convinced beyond any doubt that when Respondent and its attorneys reviewed Johnson's affidavit they saw it as a vehicle by which they could rid themselves effectively of Local 6. As set forth above, Viswam and Scaria were effectively Local 6 as far as the employees were concerned. I am further convinced that Respondent's attorneys who have an extensive practice before the NLRB and are well versed as to Board law, carefully orchestrated an investigation which would give the appearance of a full investigation, but intentionally failed to contact available witnesses who might show that Johnson was not a credible witness, or who might explain incriminating details set forth in his affidavit. Respondent's attorneys were aware that Johnson was a stranger as far as Respondent was concerned and Conneely, the attorney who took the affidavit, could observe as well as Griffin that Johnson was "ostentatious" and "stood out in a crowd." On hearing Johnson's story, it must have struck Conneely and Gibbons, who later reviewed the affidavit, as bizarre. Moreover, as Johnson's testimony clearly indicates, even casual questioning establishes that he has some problems distinguishing between fact and fiction. Even if Griffin did not recount her observations and impressions about Johnson to Conneely and Gibbons, which she probably did as a skilled attorney, Conneely should have been able to observe it himself during his questioning. However, it is obvious that neither Conneely nor Gibbons wanted to become aware of anything negative about Johnson's credibility, or to have any incriminating aspects set forth in Johnson's affidavit explained. This is evidenced by the questions they did not ask, the curious facts contained in Johnson's affidavit that did not trouble them, and the witness who they failed to contact, including Viswam and Scaria, that could have shed light on Johnson's credibility, his motivation for telling this strange tale, or explained certain statements set forth in Johnson's affidavit that tended to implicate Scaria and Viswam.

For example, Johnson was never asked if he was convicted of a crime, or if he had undergone psychiatric treatment, if he would be willing to take a lie detector test, or whether he had any animosity toward Scaria or Viswam.

Additionally, Gibbons was not at all troubled by the fact that some 3 weeks prior to October 29, Viswam allegedly paid Johnson $100 in advance to beat up a bank employee, and Johnson kept the money and never reported this felony to the police. When he was asked about this, his response was that he was not at all upset by Johnson keeping the money or his failure to report a conspiracy to commit a felony to the police. Evidently, this did not trigger any suspicions about Johnson's credibility either.

However, the most revealing aspect about the investigation was the people that were not contacted who could have shed light on Johnson's credibility or explained troubling aspects of the affidavit. David Leach, then a field attorney with Region 2, was called by Gibbons, but was not asked if Johnson had called him or anyone in Region 2 to report the proposed assault as set forth in Johnson's affidavit. Perry, president of Local 6 and Johnson's employer, was not called and questioned about Johnson's character, credibility, or motivation. Perry testified that during Johnson's employment he had told Perry he heard voices from outerspace and that he bought a Rolls Royce automobile. Perry on one occasion observed Johnson sitting on the curb on Madison Avenue wearing nothing but his undershorts and a motorcycle helmet. Perry further testified that Johnson was reported to him by a motel owner as having stripped a motel room while on an organizing assignment for Local 6. On another occasion Johnson was ordered out of one of the nursing homes represented by Local 6, on which occasion the nursing home administrator referred to him as a "crazy man." Had Gibbons taken the trouble to call Perry, Perry would have undoubtedly related these incidents. Perry might also have been able to explain how Johnson was aware of Ghate's name and the subway route she took home. After all, Perry, on behalf of Local 6, had filed a charge alleging the discriminatory suspension of Scaria, which investigation was pending at the time Johnson gave his affidavit and these details might well have been within the knowledge of Local 6 representatives and available to Johnson. Perry might also have been able to explain possible motivation for Johnson's affidavit. Perry should have been called, but was not.

However, the most striking example of Respondent's attorneys' failure to conduct a complete investigation of Johnson's allegations is their failure to contact Scaria and Viswam. Griffin testified they were not contacted because it was assumed they would not admit the allegations and Respondent would not believe their denial. In view of the seriousness of the allegation and the effect it could have on their careers and their lives, elemental fair play cries out that they be contacted and confronted with the allegations so that they might have the opportunity to explain them. Had they been contacted they might have been able to explain Johnson's motivation, or to shed light on his credibility or to explain how Johnson became aware of some of the details set forth in his affidavit. For example, Viswam testified that the slip of paper with Scaria's name and telephone number on it, which Respondent regarded as highly incriminating, was written by Viswam and given to Perry, so Perry could contact Scaria if necessary while Viswam was out of the country. Johnson, who had access to Local 6's office, could have obtained the slip from Local 6's office. That Gibbons was aware that Viswam and Scaria should have been contacted is evidenced by his request to Board Agent Sobin that she ask Viswam if Johnson visited Viswam at the bank on October 29. This was a question, among others, that Gibbons should have asked Viswam directly if he were truly interested in conducting a full investigation. He did not do this because he then would have had to confront Viswam with Johnson's allegations and Viswam might have been able to explain them, and tell Gibbons that Johnson was not a reliable witness and apparently neither Respondent nor its attorney wanted to be confronted with such explanation. Although Board Agent Sobin allegedly told Gibbons that Viswam denied Johnson was at the bank on October 29, there is no evidence regarding the actual questions Sobin asked Viswam or the circumstances of such inquiry. Such questions were certainly not relevant to the investigation she was at the time conducting. Gibbons should have confronted Viswam and Scaria and asked the questions himself.

Respondent's principal reasons for crediting Johnson's affidavit were the handwritten note in Viswam's handwriting with Scaria's telephone number on it and the fact that Johnson knew where Ghate lived and the subway route she took home. As set forth above, both of these factors could have been explained had Respondent contacted Perry, Viswam, or Scaria as should have been done for a full, open, and fair investigation. Even if it turned out that the above-named individuals were unable to explain such factors, this is no excuse for failing to make such contacts because Gibbons could not have known one way or the other what, if any, explanation he would have received without first contacting such individuals and asking the appropriate questions. The Board has repeatedly held in appropriate circumstances that an impartial inquiry requires that an employee accused of conduct requiring some disciplinary measure be provided an adequate chance to defend himself. Lancer Corp; Tama Meat Packing Corp., supra; J. W. Mortell Co.; Norfolk Tallow Co., supra.

An analysis of Gibbons' investigation establishes that it consisted entirely of Johnson's affidavit, which was fully credited, by Respondent, the statement of Respondent's receptionist who stated that she observed Johnson meet with Viswam in his office on October 29, and a few telephone calls to Board agents at Regions 2 and 29, who were asked whether Johnson was a Local 6 organizer. The investigation conducted by Gibbons is analogous to the Board conducting an unfair labor practice investigation on a charge filed against an employer by interviewing only the charging parties' witnesses and thereafter issuing a complaint without giving the employer a chance to rebut or explain the allegations charged. I am convinced, had similar accusations been made by Johnson concerning other employees rather than Scaria and Viswam, the Local 6 adherents, Respondent would have conducted an extensive investigation which would have included calling in the employees and giving them the opportunity to defend themselves and to explain and rebut the allegations against them. In this connection, Respondent admitted that in cases where it contemplates disciplinary action against its employees, the employee in question is invariably given the opportunity to explain or rebut the accusations against him before any disciplinary action is taken.

Therefore, in view of Respondent's prefunctory and one-sided investigation of Johnson's allegations, and in view of Respondent's departure from it usual practice of giving employees subject to potential discipline an opportunity to explain or rebut accusations against them, coupled with the activity by Viswam and Scaria on behalf of Local 6, and Respondent's intense animosity, I conclude that Respondent has failed to meet its burden to establish that the discharges would have taken place in any event. Rather, it is apparent to me that the discharges were purely discriminatorily motivated because of Scaria's and Viswam's activities on behalf of Local 6, which activities included their participation in the Board proceedings described above. Accordingly, I conclude that by discharging Viswam and Scaria, Respondent violated Section 8(a)(1), (3), and (4) of the Act.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. Respondent is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

2. Local 6 is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

3. Respondent, by suspending its employee, Scaria, violated Section 8(a)(3) and (4) of the Act.

4. Respondent by discharging and thereafter refusing to reinstate its employees Scaria and Viswambharan violated Section 8(a)(1), (3), and (4) of the Act.

5. The aforesaid unfair labor practices affect commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

THE REMEDY

Having found that Respondent has engaged in unfair labor practices within the meaning of Section 8(a)(1), (3), and (4) of the Act, I shall recommend that it cease and desist from engaging in such unfair labor practices and take certain affirmative action set forth below. Respondent shall offer K. M. Viswambharan and Johannes Scaria immediate and full reinstatement to their former positions or, if such positions no longer exist, to substantially equivalent positions without prejudice to their seniority or other rights or privileges. In addition, Respondent shall make Viswambharan and Scaria whole for any loss of earnings or other benefits they may have suffered by reason of the discrimination practiced against them. All backpay shall be computed in the manner set forth in F. W. Woolworth Co., 90 NLRB 289 (1950), with interest computed in the manner set forth in Florida Steel Co., 231 NLRB 651 (1977). See, generally, Isis Plumbing Co., 138 NLRB 716 (1962). Additionally, I shall require that Respondent remove from its records any reference to the unlawful discharges of Viswambharan and Scaria. Respondent shall also be required to provide written notice of such expunctions and to inform them that Respondent's unlawful conduct will not be used as a basis for future personnel actions concerning them. Sterling Sugars, 261 NLRB 472 (1982).

On May 22, 1984, during the second day of this hearing, William Perry, who appeared on behalf of Local 6, was ordered to leave the hearing because he engaged in gross disrespectful conduct demeaning to the court and the judicial process. During the cross-examination of Scaria, Respondent Attorney Gibbons, in connection with the issue of the so-called bad words allegedly used by Scaria, asked Scaria, "Is it offensive in Hindu to refer to somebody as a person who fucks his mother?" Both the General Counsel and counsel for the discriminatees objected. Gibbons replied: "That is the comment that Ms. Gajte [sic] will testify was made to her by Mr. Scaria on September 24th, 1982." I then replied that it was my clear recollection based on the testimony of Gururahan that the nature of the "bad words" was never disclosed by Ghate prior to Respondent's suspension of Scaria and was about to sustain the objection when Perry interrupted and the following exchange ensued:

> MR. PERRY: That's\kind of confusing. I don't know. I don't understand. Ms. Gajte [sic] was supposed to say that she's going to fuck her mother. I thought she's a female—
> MR. GIBBONS: I object to this.
> MR. PERRY: He's objecting to it? He raised the damn thing.
> JUDGE EDELMAN: Mr. Perry—
> MR. PERRY: I mean where—
> JUDGE EDELMAN: One second, please. Allegedly this is what Mr. Scaria said. There is an objection and I am attempting to sustain the objection because—
> MR. PERRY: The question was not posed, your Honor, "Did you say this?" Is it offensive? It's offensive in any language.
>
> JUDGE EDELMAN: Well, the issue is—
> MR. GIBBONS: I'll take that as a stipulation.
> MR. PERRY: Well, I will take that as a stipulation—
> JUDGE EDELMAN: Excuse me.
> MR. PERRY: If that's what Mr. Gibbons always does, screws his mother, I will take that as a stipulation.
>
> MR. GIBBONS: I am not going to put [up] with this.
> JUDGE EDELMAN: I'm not going to put up with it either, Mr. Perry and if we have it again you're going to be leaving.[11]

A few minutes later Perry objected to the turning over to Gibbons of an affidavit submitted by Scaria in a prior related case. Gibbons was cross-examining Scaria at the time. After considerable discussion during which time Perry was permitted to state his position, I ruled Gibbons was entitled to the affidavit for purposes of cross-examination. The following exchange ensued:

> JUDGE EDELMAN: My ruling is that he's entitled to any statement given in whatever case relating to his direct testimony. I overrule your objection.
> MR. PERRY: Your Honor, you didn't even hear his direct testimony. Your Honor said yesterday that he can get any statements. That's what your Honor said! You didn't even hear his testimony yet. And you already made a ruling!
>
> JUDGE EDELMAN: Mr. Perry, I've made my ruling. Please sit down.
> MR. PERRY: Don't order me! I'm not finished yet!
> JUDGE EDELMAN: I said please. You are finished.[12]

A few minutes later Gibbons asked Scaria a question and Perry objected. I overruled the objection and the following exchange ensued:

> JUDGE EDELMAN: Overruled. Go ahead.
> MR. PERRY: (To the witness) If you don't remember, you don't have to answer.
>
> MR. GIBBONS: I object to Mr. Perry coaching the witness while he's testifying.
> JUDGE EDELMAN: Mr. Perry, it's not your province to do that. If you want to request that I instruct him, you may do so.
> MR. PERRY: When I request of your Honor, I am falling on deaf ears, with all due respect.

JUDGE EDELMAN: Mr. Perry, one more remark like that and you will not be falling on deaf ears—you will be out of this room.

MR. PERRY: You personally going to throw me out?

JUDGE EDELMAN: No. I'm going to order you out. As a matter of fact, Mr. Perry, leave this room.

MR. PERRY: Good. Good day. And let the record reflect that I am being asked to leave and I am being denied due process of the law.

JUDGE EDELMAN: You are not being asked. You are being ordered.

MR. PERRY: Fuck you!

JUDGE EDELMAN: Let the record indicate that.

MR. PERRY: I think you must be taking money too.

JUDGE EDELMAN: The record has indicated that. Good day.[13]

While Perry is not an attorney, he invariably represents Local 6 which has been involved in extensive Board litigation over the years. Seaport Manor, supra; State Bank of India, 229 NLRB 838; American Geri-Care, 258 NLRB 1116 (1981); Port Chester Nursing Home, 269 NLRB 150 (1984). An examination of the record herein, and of other records in cases involving Local 6, indicates that Perry is very knowledgeable about the Board's Rules and the Federal Rules of Evidence. He certainly knows how a representative appearing before the Board is supposed to conduct oneself. I consider his conduct, described above, to be outrageous and demeaning to the Board's process. Accordingly, I recommend that the Board in its decision strongly censure Perry and/or take other appropriate action.

DECISION AND ORDER

BY MEMBERS JOHANSEN, BABSON, AND STEPHENS

On 18 March 1986 Administrative Law Judge Joel A. Harmatz issued the attached decision. The Respondent filed exceptions and a supporting brief, and the General Counsel filed cross-exceptions and a supporting brief.

The National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the decision and the record in light of the exceptions and briefs and has decided to affirm the judge's rulings, findings,[1] and conclusions as modified, and to adopt the recommended Order[2] as modified.

We agree with the judge that the Respondent violated the Act by prohibiting employees Lemoine and Csekovsky from soliciting employee signatures on a union-prepared petition dealing with toxic substances during their breaktime. The General Counsel excepts to the judge's failure to find that the Respondent also violated the Act by discriminatorily enforcing its no-solicitation rule. We find merit in this exception.

The record shows that the Respondent tolerated a wide variety of solicitation activities without imposing discipline on any employee involved in those activities. Gerald Fouche, the Respondent's production manager, testified that the employees operate a weekly numbers pool, with employees buying a $1 ticket entitling them to a chance to win the money collected if their number is drawn. No discipline has been imposed on employees participating in the pool and Fouche himself has purchased tickets.

Linda Csekovsky testified without contradiction that it seemed to her as if there was always some type of solicitation going on. She specifically mentioned, in addition to the weekly numbers pool, that employees solicited signatures for birthday and condolence cards, and circulated mail-order catalogues for various items. Contributions to charitable causes were also solicited and the employees held a raffle at Christmas. Csekovsky testified that many of these activities were conducted during the employees' working time and that at least one supervisor, Nicole Twiss, not only knew of the solicitation activities but also participated in them. We conclude, by allowing the above-described types of solicitation to take place while prohibiting employees Lemoine and Csekovsky from soliciting signatures on a union-prepared petition, the Respondent has discriminatorily applied its no-solicitation rule in violation of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act.

ORDER

The National Labor Relations Board adopts the recommended Order of the administrative law judge as modified below and orders that the Respondent, K & M Electronics, Inc., Springfield, Massachusetts, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall take the action set forth in the Order as modified.

1. Insert the following as paragraph 1(c) and reletter the subsequent paragraphs accordingly.

"(c) Discriminatorily enforcing its no-solicitation rule."

2. Substitute the following for paragraph 2(a).

"(a) Offer Linda Csekovsky and Dorothy Lemoine immediate and full reinstatement to their former jobs or, if those jobs no longer exist, to substantially equivalent positions, without prejudice to their seniority or any other rights and privileges previously enjoyed, and make them whole for any loss of earnings and other benefits they may have suffered as a result of the discrimination against them, in the manner set forth in the remedy section of this decision."

[1] The Respondent has excepted to some of the judge's credibility findings. The Board's established policy is not to overrule an administrative law judge's credibility resolutions unless the clear preponderance of all the relevant evidence convinces us that they are incorrect. Standard Dry Wall Products, 91 NLRB 544 (1950), enfd. 188 F.2d 362 (3d Cir. 1951). We have carefully examined the record and find no basis for reversing the findings.

We find that on the particular facts of this case, the conduct for which Dorothy Lemoine was disciplined, using threatening and profane language to her supervisors, was not protected even assuming arguendo that she was engaged in concerted activity.

The General Counsel excepted to the judge's failure to find that Twiss' statement that "you girls would have to pay the consequences for trying to get the Union in here" violated Sec. 8(a)(1) of the Act. We find this statement to be violative of Sec. 8(a)(1) as a threat of unspecified reprisals. No additional remedy is necessary.

The General Counsel moves to correct two inadvertent errors of the judge. The motion is granted. Thus, at fn. 28 of his decision, the judge referred to G.C. Exh. "71." The correct exhibit number is "7." Also, in the sixth paragraph of sec. 4,b,3 of his decision the judge referred to "Cousineau's" recent warnings. The correct reference is to "Lemoine's."

[2] The General Counsel seeks a visitatorial clause authorizing the Board, for compliance purposes, to obtain discovery from the Respondent under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure subject to the supervision of the United States court of appeals enforcing this Order. Under the circumstances of the case, we find it unnecessary to include such a clause. Accordingly, we deny the General Counsel's request.

We shall modify par. 2(a) of the judge's recommended Order to conform his reinstatement language to that customarily used by the Board.

3. Substitute the attached notice for that of the administrative law judge.

APPENDIX

NOTICE TO EMPLOYEES
POSTED BY ORDER OF THE
NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD
An Agency of the United States Government

The National Labor Relations Board has found that we violated the National Labor Relations Act and has ordered us to post and abide by this notice.

Section 7 of the Act gives employees these rights.

To organize
To form, join, or assist any union
To bargain collectively through representatives of their own choice
To act together for other mutual aid or protection
To choose not to engage in any of these protected concerted activities.

WE WILL NOT interfere with, coerce, or restrain you in the exercise of your right to form, join, or assist General Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen & Helpers, Building Materials, Heavy and Highway Construction Employees, Local Union #404, a/w International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen and Helpers of America, or any other labor organization, by threatening reprisals, including plant closure, in retaliation for union activities.

WE WILL NOT preclude you from engaging in solicitation protected by Section 7 of the Act on nonworking time.

WE WILL NOT apply our no-solicitation rule in a discriminatory manner.

WE WILL NOT discourage you from joining or assisting the above-named, or any other, labor organization by discharging you or otherwise discriminating against you with respect to your wages, hours, or terms, conditions, or tenure of employment.

WE WILL NOT discourage you from engaging in concerted protected activity under Section 7 of the Act by issuing formal warnings, or in any other manner discriminating with respect to your wages, hours, or any other terms or conditions or tenure of employment.

WE WILL NOT in any like or related manner interfere with, restrain, or coerce you in the exercise of the rights guaranteed you by Section 7 of the Act.

WE WILL offer Linda Csekovsky and Dorothy Lemoine immediate and full reinstatement to their former positions or, if those positions no longer exist, to substantially equivalent positions, without prejudice to their seniority or any other rights or privileges previously enjoyed, and WE WILL make them whole for any loss of earnings and other benefits they may have suffered by reason of our discrimination against them, less any net interim earnings, plus interest.

WE WILL notify Linda Csekovsky and Dorothy Lemoine that we have removed from our files all reference to both an oral warning issued to them concerning their circulation of a hazardous materials petition and their discharges, notifying them specifically that this has been done and that these unlawful disciplinary actions will in no way be used against them in the future.

DECISION

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

JOEL A. HARMATZ, Administrative Law Judge. This proceeding was heard in Springfield, Massachusetts, on 18, 19, and 20 November 1985, on an original unfair labor practice charge filed 28 February 1985, and a consolidated complaint issued 4 September 1985, alleging that K & M Electronics, Inc. (Respondent) independently violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act by imposition of unlawful restrictions on union activity and threats of unspecified reprisals, as well as plant closure. The complaint further alleged that Respondent violated Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act by issuing disciplinary warnings to employees Linda Csekovsky and Dorothy Lemoine, by suspending and then discharging them, and by imposing more onerous conditions of work in retaliation for activity on behalf of the Union.[1] In its duly filed answer Respondent denied that any unfair practices were committed. At the close of the hearing, briefs were filed on behalf of the General Counsel and Respondent.

On the entire record in this proceeding, including consideration of the posthearing briefs, and my opportunity directly to observe the witnesses while testifying and their demeanor,[2] it is found as follows

[1] At the hearing allegations of discrimination pertaining to Stephen Miller were deleted from the complaint pursuant to an amicable adjustment.

[2] Credibility rulings are based on demeanor, context, and probability. As shall be seen, from time to time objective rationale is offered in support thereof. This should not be construed, however, as discounting the firsthand impressions gained from my presence in the courtroom and my opportunity to observe the witnesses directly. Moreover, it is not my intention to lather, in this decision, each and every testimonial item and, accordingly, testimony, whether or not contradicted, is to be taken as rejected to the extent that it is irreconcilable with expressly credited findings and ultimate conclusions made herein.

FINDINGS OF FACT

I. JURISDICTION

Respondent is a corporation with a place of business in West Springfield, Massachusetts, from which it is engaged in the manufacture of high voltage miniature electronic components and cable interconnect systems. During the calendar year ending April 1985, a representative period, Respondent in the course of its operations sold and shipped from its facility products, goods, and materials valued in excess of $50,000 directly to points outside the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, and purchased and received at that facility products, goods, and materials valued in excess of $50,000 directly from points outside the Commonwealth of Massachusetts. The complaint alleges, the answer admits, and it is found that Respondent is now, and has been at all times material, an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

II. THE LABOR ORGANIZATION INVOLVED

The complaint alleges, the answer admits, and it is found that the Charging Party is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

III. THE ALLEGED UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES

A. Preliminary Statement

The issues in this case are essentially factual. Respondent's production and maintenance employees have no history of collective bargaining. An initial organization campaign was waged among them beginning in late winter 1985. Pursuant to a petition filed in Case 1-RC-18384, an election was held on 28 March 1985.[3] The Union was rejected by a narrow margin; 168 voted for representation, 170 against, and 2 cast nondeterminative challenged ballots. No objections were filed.

The allegations of coercion and discrimination draw their essence from treatment of employees Linda Csekovsky and Dorothy Lemoine, both prior to and after the election, during the period February through June 1985. Both were good workers, having enjoyed an employment record that demonstrated quality output at high levels of productivity. They also were key supporters of the Union. Their discharges, some 3 months after the election, give rise to the issue of greatest remedial concern in this proceeding.

B. Concluding Findings

1. The right-to-know petition

Apparently in early 1985 Respondent's employees received training, as required by state law, with respect to toxic or hazardous substances. The quality of this training was subsequently questioned by employees. With support of the Union a petition was prepared through which employees were to express their objections.[4] Signatures were to be obtained by teams of two employees in each department, who would solicit coworkers.

The alleged discriminatees, Csekovsky and Lemoine, worked in the prep department. Their supervisor was Nicole Twiss. Csekovsky and Lemoine were the team responsible for circulation of the petition in Twiss' department. Twiss had been among management representatives who provided the training required by the hazardous substance program. Accordingly, her role therein was subject to attack by the petition.

In late February Lemoine and Csekovsky, during the morning break, showed that document to a coworker. As the coworker read the petition, Twiss intervened stating, "[T]hat cannot be allowed." Lemoine argued that 3 minutes remained on the break, whereupon Twiss admonished, "[T]his cannot be done in the prep department."

Approximately 10 minutes after returning to their work stations, Csekovsky and Lemoine were summond to the office of Twiss, where they were told that the petition in question could not be distributed on company time. Twiss produced a copy of the employee handbook, referring the employees to the following rule that she had highlighted in yellow:

> 2. No employee may distribute, post, or circulate any leaflets, circulars, pamphlets, objects or any other material during his or her working time or during the working time of any other employee to whom the material is directed. Employees may not distribute literature at any time in any working area of the Company.[5]

When the employees again observed that they had not solicited signatures on company time, but did so on break, Twiss told them that such activity was barred on company property, unless pursued in the cafeteria.

The General Counsel does not argue that the rule set forth in Respondent's handbook is presumptively unlawful. Rather, it is the General Counsel's premise that Twiss implemented an overly broad application by subjecting what clearly appears to have been employee "solicitation," to the more restrictive rules governing "distribution."

The factual issues are limited. The account of Twiss does not contradict the testimony of Csekovsky and Lemoine that the solicitation occurred during a break.[6] Moreover, Respondent does not seriously contest the fact that circulation of the petition, challenging safety and health conditions on the job, was protected by Section 7 of the Act. Accordingly, undisputed facts show that Twiss informed the employees that such conduct was prohibited in working areas, an expression that conveyed clearly that the prohibition remained in force even when the conduct was pursued on breaktime. This amounted to an unlawful intrusion on statutory rights. As recently stated by the Board in National Semiconductor Corp., 272 NLRB 973, 974 fn. 6 (1984):

[3] Unless otherwise indicated all dates refer to 1985.

[4] See G.C. Exh. 15.

[5] See R. Exh. 3, p. 17.

[6] To the extent that Respondent contends otherwise, its position is not confirmed by my reading of the record.

> [A] rule prohibiting solicitation on employees' own time is presumptively invalid.
> [C]irculation of the petition constitutes solicitation, not distribution. We see no difference between seeking signatures on a petition rather than an authorization card, which the Board has long held to constitute solicitation.

Accordingly, by the extension of the no-distribution rule to limit solicitation during break periods, without evidence that such a broadened limitation was justified by special circumstances, Respondent violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act.[7] See Republic Aviation Corp. v. NLRB, 324 U.S. 793 (1945); Stoddard-Quirk Mfg. Co., 138 NLRB 615 (1962).

In consequence of this same transaction, the complaint also alleged that Respondent violated Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act through issuance of disciplinary warnings to Csekovsky and Lemoine. This allegation is subject to a conflict in testimony. Both Lemoine and Csekovsky testified that Twiss closed the aforementioned meeting by informing the employees that she was giving them a verbal warning, and that the next time they would get a written warning. Twiss denied issuing any form of disciplinary warning on the occasion in question. She admits, however, to preparing a written account of the events of 26 February that recited as follows:

> Dottie Lemoine . . . and Linda Chekovsky [sic] . . . were over by Joyce Robins asking her to sign a petition at end of break 9:30 in prep area. I told them both at that time that break was over, to go to work. I called them in my office a few minutes later and told them [Linda & Dottie] that they could not solicit, ask people to sign things pass out anything on Co. time, or in any company work area. That this could only be done on their time, in cafeteria, and a written warning could follow. Told them to read the K&M employee hand-book. Dottie got quite verbal and said she could do that meaning she could have people sign . . . in work-area as long as she was on her time. I then went & made a copy of the page [17] in K&M hand book [sic], highlited [sic] it, and gave them each a copy.
> N. Twiss[8]

According to Twiss, she retained this written record of the incident in her desk, considered it a personal memorandum, and not part of the disciplinary record or file of either Lemoine or Csekovsky.[9] In any event, that document on its face confirms the testimony that the employees were told "a written warning would follow." Considering the fact that under Respondent's progressive system of discipline, a written warning would necessarily follow a verbal one, at the very least, Csekovsky and Lemoine could rightfully assume that an oral warning was intended. Beyond that, however, when their testimony is weighed in context of Respondent's progressive disciplinary system, they are entitled to the benefit of any doubt. Based on their credited testimony, it is found that Respondent violated Section 8(a)(3) and (1) by issuing an oral warning because Csekovsky and Lemoine, during a break, had solicited a signature to a safety petition, conduct that is protected by Section 7 of the Act.

2. Threats of reprisal

Supervisor Twiss and Csekovsky often drove to work together. Prior to the advent of the Union, they were on friendly terms, having shared trips to the laundromat and shopped together. According to Csekovsky, after circulation of the hazardous materials petition, Twiss changed her attitude toward Csekovsky. A week or so later, noticing that Twiss had acted coldly toward her, Csekovsky asked Twiss if it would be better if she got a ride with someone else. Twiss expressed that it would be, adding that she never thought that Csekovsky would turn out to be a "back stabber." When Csekovsky asked what Twiss meant, the latter explained, ". . . you passed out that chemical petition knowing damn well that I was in charge of it, and you made me look like a jack-ass and I won't forgive you for that." When Csekovsky attempted to explain that her belief about the lack of adequate training was not something that she held individually, but one commonly shared among employees, Twiss stated, ". . . that is all right . . . I don't forget people that stab me in the back." Twiss' attention next turned to the Union. She told Csekovsky that a union had put her prior employer, TRW, out of business and that if a union came in at Respondent, the employees "would have to pay the consequence just like the employees at TRW," adding that "Mr. Mitchell would shut the plant down before he would allow a union in there."

The above was undenied. Based on Csekovsky's credited account, it is concluded that Respondent, through Twiss, violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act by the threat implicit in her unwillingness to forget "back stabbers" or, in other words, those who engage in activity protected by the Act, and by her references to undefined retaliation and plant closure in the event of unionization.

[7] The General Counsel alternatively contends that even if Twiss had engaged in a legitimate application of the rule, the rule itself would have been discriminatorily enforced in view of Respondent's permissive stance with respect to other forms of solicitation. This view is premised on testimony by Csekovsky that in the presence of Supervisor Twiss, and with her knowledge, employees during working time, with impunity, had from time to time contacted coworkers for the purpose of conducting raffles, sending condolence or sympathy cards, selling candy for charitable causes, circulating mail-order catalogues, and soliciting participation in a gambling pool. The testimony of Csekovsky in this regard fails to convince me that the aberrations described, even if condoned by a low-level supervisor, were sufficiently widespread and pervasive to require a statutory application that would require management to permit union activity during working hours in working areas on pain of violating the Act should it make any attempt to regulate or curtail such conduct. See, e.g., Famous-Barr Co., 174 NLRB 770 (1969); Emerson Electric Co., 187 NLRB 294 fn. 2 (1970); Serv-Air, Inc., 175 NLRB 801 (1969); and Atkins Pickle Co., 181 NLRB 935 (1970).

[9] Respondent maintains a progressive system of discipline. As described by Gerald Fouche, Respondent's production manager, dual systems for culpable or nonculpable offenses exist, with each triggered by a verbal warning, then a written warning, followed by suspension and discharge.

3. The imposition of more onerous conditions of work

The General Counsel contends that about 4 April Respondent, through Supervisor Twiss, imposed more onerous conditions of work as a reprisal for union activity among employees in her department, and that Respondent thereby violated Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act. This claim of discrimination stands essentially on the testimony of Csekovsky and Lemoine. Of major import to the issue is a segment of Respondent's published handbook, which states as follows:

> 4. No employee may leave his or her assigned work area during working time without the specific approval of the Supervisor.[10]

Twiss admitted that on 4 April she discussed the above rule with employees in her department. This was only a week after the Union had failed, albeit narrowly, to achieve majority designation. Employees at the time were reminded, according to Twiss, that they were to inform her before leaving their work area.

The General Counsel's contention rests on evidence that this was a "turn-about" from preelection conditions. Thus, Csekovsky testified that prior to the election, the above rule was not enforced with respect to trips to the restroom and to the cafeteria to obtain coffee. Most critical, however, to the assessment of discrimination is Csekovsky's further testimony that on 4 April, when Twiss came out of her office to discuss the rules, she called the women in the prep department together, stating, "OK, you girls didn't like the way things were done before . . . now we are going to go by the book."[11] Twiss assertedly added, "nobody was to leave the department without asking permission, and [employees] could not go up for coffee any more . . . ."

Lemoine testified she never had to ask permission to go to the bathroom previously,[12] adding that prior to the election she would take orders for coffee and snacks from other girls in the department and, with another girl, would repair to the cafeteria, taking 10 to 15 minutes, each day. Twiss, herself, according to Lemoine, had participated in this practice. Lemoine summed up the atmosphere created by Twiss on 4 April in the following terms ". . . in other words, you couldn't leave the department without asking permission."

Twiss testified that on 4 April she went to the separate work areas of the employees in her department, and talked to them in groups of three and four. She claims to have reminded them of the abuse of rules governing their failure to notify her when going to the bathroom or using the phones, and their eating at their work stations. She denied telling the employees that they had to ask permission to leave the department and, on the other hand, claims to have simply informed them that they had to let her know where they were going when they left. Twiss admittedly told employees that the practice described by Lemoine, whereby employees would take orders from coworkers and leave their work area to get coffee and snacks from the cafeteria, would no longer be permitted.[13] Instead, employees were told that if they wished to obtain a cup of coffee themselves, on the way back from the ladies' room, or after letting Twiss know where they were going, they could do so.

At the same time, Production Manager Gerald Fouche credibly testified that employee absences from work areas had been a recurrent problem in the plant. He asserted further that difficulties in policing and enforcing the preestablished rule intensified in March 1985 when a layoff eliminated group leaders, leaving supervisors, such as Twiss, to assume full responsibility for monitoring employees who leave their work area for one reason or another. Consistent therewith, Twiss testified that her action on 4 April was provoked by abuses that had come to her attention. Her testimony in this respect was perfectly plausible and is credited.[14]

On balance, the credible evidence merely establishes an attempt by Twiss on 4 April basically to admonish employees of their obligation to inform her when leaving the department. Although Csekovsky and Lemoine suggest that, during the period preceding the election, management was lax in this respect, it is difficult to imagine that a work rule of this type was ignored to the point of falling into abandon. Respondent's written restriction in this respect had been promulgated by the Company in advance of any union activity. Neither that rule, nor the reminders were atypical of demands routinely made on employees in an industrial setting. As a general proposition, restrictions on movement by production employees from their respective work stations are inherently necessary to the maintenance of plant discipline and efficiency. The effort by Twiss to this extent was perfectly legitimate and inoffensive to Section 7 rights. Twiss did, however, go beyond the published rules in curtailing the practice of "order taking," leaving employees to the task of obtaining coffee and snacks individually. Nonetheless,

[10] See R. Exh. 3, p. 17.

[11] Although undenied, the testimony imputing this remark to Twiss was uncorroborated. Lemoine's version of the meetings of 4 April was a little different from that of Csekovsky. The former averred that Twiss came out of her office with Terry Fouche, and called the girls together, stating: "No more going upstairs for coffees. No more going to the bathroom, and definitely no more using the phone." Csekovsky was not an impeccable witness. At times she seemed prone toward argumentation and a desire to present facts beyond her knowledge in a most prejudicial fashion. In this instance I did not believe her uncorroborated testimony. I think it more likely that the absence of contradiction in this respect was attributable to oversight, rather than indicative of any implied attestation to Csekovsky's veracity.

[12] As shall be seen, the next day Lemoine confronted Production Manager Gerald Fouche and Twiss, complaining bitterly about "any" requirement that she ask permission to go to the bathroom. In the process, Lemoine admittedly was corrected by Fouche who stated, "calm down, Dottie . . . you don't have to ask to go to the bathroom . . . just come out, and ask, could you please leave the department, when you need to go." With this clarification, Lemoine acknowledged that she felt that this was "no big deal" and left.

[13] Twiss admitted that this admonition was not supported by anything in Respondent's established rules.

[14] Moreover, I am convinced that employees merely were told that they would have to inform Twiss about their whereabouts when leaving the work area. Insofar as Csekovsky and Lemoine testified that employees were told that they would have to obtain permission before going to the bathroom, and no longer could obtain coffee from the cafeteria, these references were considered unreliable, as based on exaggerated interpretation of what was said, rather than the words actually used by Twiss. In this instance, the testimony of Twiss was preferred.

I am unpersuaded by the General Counsel's claim that this latter innovation, isolated as it was, amounted to a reprisal for union activity. From the fact that Lemoine and Csekovsky were known union sympathizers, it does not follow, logically, that Twiss would incur the wrath of an entire department after defeat of the Union in a close election, by taking a step offending all 26 employees in her department, irrespective of their sentiment on the issue of representation. In the circumstances, it is concluded that Twiss' course of action on 4 April was a legitimate exercise of the supervisory function and not based on considerations other than a desire to maintain discipline in her department as dictated by published rules and her own judgment. The 8(a)(3) and (1) allegations in this respect will be dismissed.

4. The warnings, suspensions, and discharges

a. The discharge of Csekovsky

Csekovsky was terminated on 21 June 1985. Prior thereto, she recently had survived deep layoffs, as an employee of more than 2 years in a department that had experienced a high degree of turnover. She was regarded by management as an excellent employee, with a good record in the areas of productivity and quality.[15] She was a known union supporter. Her involvement in the organization campaign was manifested by attendance at union meetings, brandishment of union buttons, and distribution of union authorization cards. It will be recalled that she, together with Lemoine, distributed a petition that originated with the Union and was critical of the Company's approach to educating employees concerning hazardous materials, an activity that provoked Twiss, her supervisor, to refer to her as a "back stabber," an accusation that Twiss proclaimed would not soon be forgotten.

In late May, Csekovsky sustained an on-the-job injury, losing 3 weeks' work. She returned on 17 June. Following her return, she spent most of her time performing prep-work on "shot gun" cables. On the third day, 19 June, Csekovsky spent the entire day in this fashion. Events that day, according to Respondent's proffer, gave rise to the cause of her discharge.

Central to the assigned reason for the discharge is the so-called timesheet prepared by Csekovsky at the end of that day. Routinely, such a document is completed by employees at termination of their shift. Each worker is expected to enter the daily units produced. The final count was often amended by the employee who would strike the original entry and substitute a new figure.[16] Csekovsky, in accounting for her production on 19 June, twice corrected her entries, thus, recording three different counts of her output. These adjustments on her timesheet triggered her suspension and discharge on the ground that they were pursuant to a deliberate attempt on the part of Csekovsky to falsify the output finally reflected on the document.

According to Twiss, the events leading to the termination of Csekovsky unfolded early in the morning on 20 June. Twiss claims to have reported for work at approximately 6 a.m. that morning, 1 hour before the scheduled appearance of employees in her department. In the process of an apparently routine review of the 19 June timesheets, she noticed that Csekovsky "scratched off a couple of times on her count," and hence assumed that Csekovsky had a problem. For this reason, according to Twiss, she elected to seek out and physically count the units produced by Csekovsky the previous day.[17]

Accordingly to Twiss, she and Robin Gagne, between 6 and 6:20 a.m., made the count. Twiss claims to have examined the previous day's output that could be located in the prep department and the crimping department, the next step in the production process. She claims to have checked production tickets attached to finished bundles of shotgun cables, finding cards bearing Csekovsky's production number on only 38 pieces. According to Twiss, rework was also checked, with none bearing evidence that it had been worked by Csekovsky.

Twiss, who professed to have had other problems with Csekovsky's performance on 19 June, after the check on 20 June, at approximately 7:15 a.m., met with Csekovsky. According to Csekovsky in the course of this conversation she was lectured by Twiss about her behavior the previous day. When Twiss mentioned that her count was off, Csekovsky claims to have responded with a denial, indicating that she was conscientious in making the count, that she had done so three times and was certain that the figure 45 was accurate. When Twiss indicated that she had come up with 38, Csekovsky denied that that was possible. Csekovsky claims to have requested that she and Twiss go out and again count the cables. Twiss responded, "No, it is not necessary."[18] According

[15] In his brief, counsel for the Respondent asserts that Csekovsky was not an "admirable worker," in that "she had to be disciplined for attendance problems . . . ." It is true that some time back Csekovsky had been called down in this respect. However, this was the only negative mark on an otherwise highly positive employment record. According to Fouche, who allegedly made the decision to discharge Csekovsky, the latter had made "good progress" in correcting the attendance problem prior to her discharge. Indeed, Fouche related that he considered Csekovsky to be "an excellent employee."

[16] There was nothing sinister in the practice of changing output tallys in this fashion. Blank worksheets are available, affording employees the option of discarding a timesheet with any errors, while replacing it with a clean, new sheet. The practice of correcting miscounts on the sheet itself or obtaining a new copy would seem to be a matter of employee preference and convenience.

[17] Twiss testified that in her experience she would find corrections are made by an employee on at least one timesheet per day. She conceded that such revisions would not always trigger an actual count of pieces produced. She explains that Csekovsky's case was unique in that there were two crossouts and three entries indicating that Csekovsky was not sure what she had produced. Significantly, Twiss maintained that Csekovsky's first entry looked like 70, the second 50, compared with the final entry of 45. This reading of the timesheet by Twiss, later shared by Production Manager Fouche, struck as so unfair as to stand among numerous questions concerning the genuine nature of the defense. For, having examined the original document, the figure originally entered by Csekovsky was obliterated beyond recognition; it could have been a seven, a five, or a four. No one could be sure and the suggestion otherwise reflected an argumentative posture, lacking in objectivity.

[18] Respondent's brief states with respect to the above that "Ms. Twiss denies that such a request was made." (See Respondent's posthearing brief, p. 17, item 5.) On my reading of the testimony, no such denial appears. I believed Csekovsky in this respect. The refusal to permit such a recount is another factor affecting the bona fide nature of management's action in her case. Obviously, throughout a given workday, product is in a fluid state and an attempt, the next day, to locate the entirety of an employee's output, particularly when unassisted by the producer, would to uncontroverted testimony by Csekovsky, she then reminded Twiss that problems between them had not developed until her involvement with the Union. Twiss next reiterated her prior warning, stating: "You girls would have to pay the consequences for trying to get the Union in here."[19]

Twiss next prepared a reprimand concerning Csekovsky's alleged behavior on 19 June that stated:

> Shotgun cables—wrote 45 pcs. on time sheet—actual 38 according to tickets—talks too much, excessive, slows other people down. Made her move to another table.—
> Also Shotguns when I checked on . . . 1 [inch] strip was way off—had to re-measure & glue them.
> Signature Twiss[s]
> Written warning 6/20/84[20]

Twiss next attempted to clear the reprimand with Fouche, who, in turn, submitted it for review by the personnel department. Both Twiss and Fouche concede that prior to the submission of the proposed warning to personnel,[21] neither had considered the possibility that Csekovsky might have deliberately falsified her timesheet, and hence "discharge" was not considered by them. Indeed, the reason they gave for the request for reprimand was grounded solely on "poor workmanship."

Gail Pike, Respondent's personnel manager, reviewed the request and recommended, inter alia, that a possible falsification of company documents be pursued.[22] After Fouche conferred with personnel, he elected to suspend Csekovsky "pending investigation of falsification of records." Twiss testified that she learned of his intent "sometime before 9 o'clock" when Fouche called her from the personnel office. He at that time made his initial request to see a copy of the timesheet and informed Twiss that "we were going to suspend Linda for falsification, pending further investigaton."

Fouche apparently made the decision to discharge the next day. This discharge was based on an investigation assertedly consisting of examination of Csekovsky's previous records, her timesheet of 19 June, and Fouche's further conferring with Twiss and Robin Gagne.[23] Fouche failed to direct a double check of the count allegedly made by Gagne and Twiss, nor was there any other effort to verify the accuracy of that count. Csekovsky's coworkers were not interviewed and it does not appear that a single item of additional evidence was developed. The conclusion that Csekovsky had deliberately falsified rested on no more than what appeared in Twiss' original memo. Yet, interestingly enough, neither Twiss nor Fouche viewed those facts as suggesting deliberate falsification at the time the request for reprimand was forwarded to personnel.

In the case of Csekovsky, the General Counsel has successfully carried the initial burden under Wright Line.[24] Csekovsky was one of the more active proponents of the Union. Her support was openly manifested and known to both Twiss and Fouche. Her discharge came 3 months after a close election in which the Union narrowly missed designation, and followed unlawful warnings issued by Supervisor Twiss in response to Csekovsky's attempt to engage in activity protected by the Act as well as a reminder as late as 20 June that those responsible for union organization would have to face the consequences. In these circumstances, the evidence convincingly establishes that protected conduct was at least "a" motivating factor in the Employer's decision to eliminate this union protagonist.

Under established precedent the inference arising from the General Counsel's prima facie case is subject to rebuttal only by evidence that persuades "by a preponderance . . . that the same action would have taken place even in the absence of union activity." See Roure Bertrand Dupont, Inc., 271 NLRB 443 (1984); Centre Property Management, 274 NLRB 190 (1985). Respondent has failed to meet this burden. Instead, the defense from corner to corner convincingly demonstrates that "the asserted justification is a sham in that the . . . circumstance advance by the employer did not exist." 251 NLRB at 1084; NLRB v. Charles Batchelder Co., 646 F.2d 33, 39 (2d Cir. 1981); Pearcy Co. v. NLRB, 648 F.2d 460, 462 (7th Cir. 1981).

Falsification is a serious allegation that not only is a dischargable offense, but one that carries a career-damaging connotation of criminal behavior. Even the above-average employee's future employment opportunities would be narrowed by such a blemish. Fouche himself would decline to hire such an individual. Yet, Csekovsky, who was not reputed to be untrustworthy or dishonest, was terminated on this ground even though evidence of any intent on her part to mislead or to falsify was totally seem a risky chore. On the other hand, a recount with the aid of the individual actually responsible for the production would enable explanation for any missing units, verification by the affected employee, and a far more reliable basis for sorting out any discrepancy. Twiss' posture in this respect was remarkably similar to the disinterest shown by other high level management officials in taking any steps that might lessen the justification for discharge of both Csekovsky and Lemoine.

[19] Despite disbelief of Csekovsky in other areas, in this respect, I believed her and accept her unrefuted testimony.

[20] See G.C. Exh. 9. Twiss' proposed warning itself included an important inaccuracy, which carelessly overstated the facts underlying her accusations against Csekovsky. Thus, contrary to the memo, Twiss conceded that she did not move Csekovsky to another table, but merely threatened to do so. The move was avoided because Csekovsky "kept her mouth shut." The inaccurate reference would naturally inflame, falsely, any problems attributable to Csekovsky, and raises questions about the dependability of Twiss' reports that day.

[21] Under Respondent's practice, to assure consistency requests for discipline are first cleared by the personnel department.

[22] Pike admitted at the time that she had no knowledge regarding whether any falsification within the meaning of Respondent's work rules had occurred. Insofar as appears, her suggestion was founded solely on the content of the proposed reprimand. Listed in the employees' handbook as a prohibited action is the following: "Falsifying any reports or records, including personnel, absence, sickness and production records." (R. Exh. 3, p. 46.)

[23] Insofar as can be ascertained, Fouche spoke with Gagne to confirm Twiss' report that the shotgun cables had been counted three times and that another department had been examined for tickets bearing Csekovsky's clock number. Gagne, herself, did not testify. There is no explanation of her presence at the plant between 6 and 6:20 a.m. on 19 June, well in advance of the start of the shift. On Twiss' own account it does not appear that the attempt to inventory Csekovsky's output of the previous day took an excessive amount of time.

absent. At best, from all that Respondent knew an innocent error in tabulation had occurred. Moreover, Csekovsky's acknowledged record for high productivity, the absence of an incentive system, and the fact that the job she performed on 19 June was unrated were known to Fouche at the time of discharge, obscuring any assumption that she had something to gain.[25] Fouche, whose testimony in this area seemed defensive and of a shifting nature, himself related that there would be no need for a productive employee to conceal faulty production because faulty production occurs throughout the plant, is subject to certain tolerances, and hence only notorious offenders risk discipline on this basis.

The motive underlying the baseless accusation against Csekovsky was complemented by Fouche's so-called investigation. For, it represented too conspicuous an attempt to avoid delving into exculpatory areas that might detract from the serious charge leveled at Csekovsky. Gagne was the only employee he claimed to have interviewed. Although Csekovsky, by Respondent's own estimate, was an excellent worker, she was neither questioned nor offerred an opportunity to explain her actions or entries on the timesheet. In this regard Fouche departed from his own formula for conducting investigations. For by admission, he would talk to the employee involved "if there is something I don't understand or is not clear." As he put it:

> If it was not clear to me, based on the facts that were presented, whether an employee had done something or not, I would probably question the employee myself.

The accuracy of the severe cause under consideration in the case of Csekovsky could not have been clear to Fouche. For he admitted that there was no direct evidence of deliberate falsification. His own explication for his deduction that this, nevertheless, was the case, as set forth in the following colloquy with the General Counsel, firmly portrays the dubious foundation for his charges against Csekovsky:

> GENERAL COUNSEL: When you got General Counsel's Exhibit 11 [Csekovsky's 19 June timesheet] did you make a determination that there had been a falsification of records?
> MR. FOUCHE: I was of the opinion that there certainly was a strong possibility of it when I saw that. Yes.
> Q. And it was something on the sheet that made you believe that there was a falsification of records? right?
>
> A. It was a combination of that timesheet and my knowledge of Linda as a worker.
> Q. What was your knowledge of Linda as a worker?
> A. I had found Linda to be a very capable person. In fact, on some of her employee evaluations you can see where I praised her very highly. If you understand the cable that we're talking about, its uniqueness and it's totally different method of bundling, as opposed to other cables that we produce. It's very unlikely, in my opinion, that Linda could make a mistake unknowingly like this. There's nothing else it could be than deliberate.

On this specious reasoning, a prounion employee with a good work record was terminated. At the time, Fouche must have known that the discrepancies on the timesheet might have been attributable to a miscount on the part of Csekovsky, or Twiss, a number of factors that could have defeated the accuracy in Twiss' day-late, after-the-fact inventory.[26] Moreover, it is difficult to imagine how Fouche, in good faith, could have reasoned that the crossouts, the nature of the product, or the ability of the employee supported anything other than a possible innocent error.

On the basis of the totality of the credible evidence, the conclusion is inescapable that Fouche's assignment of an unfounded, yet gravely serious, cause for discharge might be explained only in terms of a crude, but transparent, attempt to overreach and contrive a passable ground for eliminating a known union supporter, and to give meaning to the Twiss warning of 20 June that union supporters "would have to face the consequences." Accordingly, in terminating Linda Csekovsky on 21 June 1985, Respondent has failed to show that this would have occurred absent Csekovsky's involvement in protected activity, and it is concluded that Respondent thereby violated Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act.

b. The alleged discrimination against Dorothy Lemoine

(1) Preliminary statement

Dorothy Lemoine was terminated on 27 June, a week after the discharge of Csekovsky. Like Csekovsky, she [25] A "nonrated" job, under plant policy, would not have been factored into the efficiency data kept by Respondent and would in no sense influence Csekovsky's record. Production on such a job would not influence earnings. Finally, conjecture that she had something to gain is obscured further by the fact that Csekovsky's overall production record was so good that Twiss herself would have been surprised if Csekovsky had been concerned as to a short fall in output on 1 day.

[26] In furtherance of the defense, Fouche claims to have recalled that he had discharged another employee, Carlena Nicolas, on this very ground. Her case was plainly distinct from that of Csekovsky. Although Fouche insisted that he "equated the two cases," he later conceded that in the case of Csekovsky there was no direct evidence of intent to falsify, while in the case of Nicolas there was an eyewitness. Thus, Nicolas was observed by a coworker falsifying a production ticket by replacing the identifying number of the employee who actually produced the product with her own, thereby enhancing her own productivity profile at the expense of the actual producer. Unlike the timesheet, under no circumstances would an employee have a right to make an entry on someone else's production ticket and, indeed, it is difficult to conceive of circumstances whereby an employee would have any business even possessing a production ticket attached to another worker's output. In contrast with Csekovsky who was reputed to be an excellent employee with a high level of productivity, Nicolas had been under suspicion for some time by her supervisor because of a disparity between her recorded output and her work habits. She clearly had something to gain by overstating her production. On my evaluation, the incident involving Nicolas is more beneficial to the case-in-chief than the defense. For it evidences that Fouche should have been mindful of a form of chicanery by a coworker that could have caused a short fall in the actual count allegedly made by Twiss and Gagne on 20 June, namely, the substitution of a different clock number on the production tickets of Csekovsky.

was an excellent worker, and a key protagonist of the Union, having distributed union literature, passed out authorization cards, and worn T-shirts and other insignia demonstrating her desire for union representation. At the election held on 28 March, she officiated as an election observer on behalf of the Union. Lemoine, who served in the same department as Csekovsky, in late February was confronted by Supervisor Twiss and with Csekovsky, was unlawfully warned in consequence of her role in the employee protestation critical of the Company's hazardous material educational program. Prior to the events in issue here, management, admittedly, was fully mindful of Lemoine's prounion leanings.

Until the election, Lemoine's work record appeared to have been unblemished for a period of 18 months. Furthermore, the difficulties that prompted her discharge had nothing to do with her value as a productive and efficient worker who produced at levels of high quality.[27] Thus, the discipline under interdict of the instant complaint, including warnings and the discharge, all dealt with abusive behavior affecting her relations with others, a contradiction of Twiss' comment in Lemoine's most recent evaluation to the effect that: "she gets along well with everyone."[28]

(2) The warnings

As will be recalled, Supervisor Twiss spoke to employees on 4 April concerning restrictions on their right to leave their work area. Lemoine understood, albeit mistakenly, that these restrictions required the employees to obtain permission before going to the restroom. Lemoine, who impressed me as a rambunctious and energetic sort, was disturbed. That same day, when she observed Fouche in the office of Twiss, she elected to confront them concerning what she perceived as a ridiculous change in policy. According to Fouche, Lemoine angrily entered the office, pointed her finger at Twiss, stating to the effect, "You son-of-a-bitch, now we have to get permission to go to the bathroom."[29]

Twiss was not examined regarding the specifics of what transpired. Though previously having heard Lemoine utter profanities, never before had she heard Lemoine swear at someone. Twiss did testify, however, that the warning issued to Lemoine in consequence of the incident was "because she was directing abusive language, at me, in anger."

In contrast, Lemoine denied directing the profanity toward Twiss. She claims that on entering the office, she stated, "Nicole, you know this is a son-of-a-bitch. I have to ask to go to the bathroom. I am not a child. I am not a kidnergarden [sic] kid. I am not going to ask to go to the god-dam [sic] bathroom."[30]

On 5 April, Lemoine was called to the office of Twiss. She was at that time given a written memorial of an oral reprimand based on her outburst of 4 April, which recited:[31]

> I am giving you this Verbal Reprimand as a result of your improper personal conduct on April 4, 1985 wherein, in the presence of the cable division manager, you directed profane and abusive language toward me, your supervisor, in direct violation of company rules regarding personal conduct.

Lemoine admits that she reacted, getting a little "uptight" and "very upset." First she accused Twiss of issuing the warning in consequence of Lemoine's union activity. Referring to the warning, she proclaimed to Twiss "this is a fucking big deal," and went on to inform Twiss that, "you people are trying to get rid of me one way or the other, and . . . the only way you can do it—[is] through my swearing." Lemoine admitted that as she was leaving the office she slammed the door, stating to Twiss, "you will get yours baby."

Prior to the end of the shift, Twiss told Lemoine that Fouche wanted to see her in his office. A counseling session ensued in which Fouche eventually asked Lemoine whether she knew why she was there. The latter responded as follows:

> It is something to do with . . . swearing in front of . . . Nicole Twiss. . . . I didn't swear at her. I swore at her, but always—when I swear, I always—I just swear. I don't swear directly at a person. It is in my conversation.

According to Lemoine she then indicated to Twiss that if she was upset, she would apologize.

On 9 April Twiss summoned Lemoine to her office, where she handed Lemoine a written warning, which in material part provided as follows:

> On Friday, April 5, 1985, you were issued a Verbal Reprimand for your "abusive language" and improper conduct on Thursday, April 4, 1985.
> When I, your Supervisor, Nicole Twiss, presented you with your verbal reprimand you stated to me:
> 1. That you didn't direct the abusive language at me.
> 2. That I was "playing fucking games."
> 3. That "you'll get yours baby."
> 4. You then left my office and slammed the door behind you.

After reading the warning, Lemoine reacted by stating "O[h], hey, that is great. . . . Thank you very much Nicky." She then left.[32]

[29] A segment of the daily calendar maintained by Fouche is in evidence. It shows an entry on the date in question to the effect that Lemoine did use the terms "You son-of-a-bitch." The notation also imputes to Lemoine a statement threatening to bring the Union back in a year if Fouche continued to apply the rules, regulations, and policies contained in K & M's employee handbook. (See G.C. Exh. 5.)

[30] Although basically Lemoine was regarded as the more truthful, in this instance I am willing to give Fouche and Twiss the benefit of the doubt. I believe that Lemoine during the incident was "out of control," and likely would have difficulty recalling her actions accurately.

[31] See G.C. Exh. 6.

[32] See R. Exh. 1. Lemoine claims that on entering the office of Twiss, she was susnicious, because she observed Fouche as well as an antiunion employee, Nellie Paine, standing nearby. Even if they were present and

The citations issued Lemoine on 5 and 9 April each carried the admonition that failure to correct the conduct in question and to meet all duties and responsibilities in the future would subject Lemoine "to further disciplinary action up to and including discharge."

The General Counsel's claim of discrimination with respect to the warnings centers on the argument that Respondent issued warnings to punish a strong union adherent "for conduct which Respondent had tolerated since Lemoine's employment began." Consistent therewith, the issuance of warnings to a staunchly prounion employee, who had acted as a union observer in a hotly contested election conducted only a few days earlier, desires close scrutiny. In this instance, however, the credible evidence substantiates actionable misconduct on the part of the employee and discipline tailored appropriately to the offense. Contrary to the General Counsel's insinuation, the warnings were not addressed merely to Lemoine's offbeat vocabulary, nor was their thrust to prevent her from cursing or to rid the plant of curse words. It is one thing for employees to curse playfully and in good humor with a coworker and, indeed, even a supervisor. Lemoine, however, a habitual exponent of the use of foul language, went too far when such language was employed in an attack on a management representative. There is no evidence that any supervisor had ever before condoned such an act. Nor does it appear that Lemoine in the past had been guilty of such disrespect. In short, the evidence does not disclose that Lemoine, or any other employee, had ever escaped discipline after a hostile assault on a supervisor, with or without the use of profanity. Respondent has demonstrated persuasively that the oral warning of 4 April and the written warning of 9 April would have been issued even if Lemoine had not engaged in activity protected by the Act. Accordingly, the allegation that Respondent violated Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act in these particulars shall be dismissed.[33]

(3) The discharge

Lemoine, during the period preceding her termination, does not appear to have digressed from a work record that prompted Fouche's exhortation, prior to the advent of the Union, "Good job!! Keep it up."[34] Moreover, the discharge occurred shortly after Supervisor Twiss threatened that union supporters would have to bear "the consequences," and only a week after Lemoine's collaborator in the assertion of organizational rights, Csekovsky, was unlawfully discharged on pretextual grounds. In light of the predilections disclosed through that discharge, a powerful prima facia case of proscribed discrimination has been substantiated. In these circumstances, Respondent's explanation warrants close examination.

Respondent claims that Lemoine was discharged on the basis of alleged misconduct on her day off, while she was away from company premises on an excursion to the Bronx Zoo in New York City. The trip took place on 22 June. It was organized by employee Jeanne Briere, a cochairman of the Employer's social committee. Briere made the arrangements and collected the money for the trip, which was paid for fully by those attending. Company support for the trip was not forthcoming at the outset, and Briere could not even obtain permission to post a notice on plant premises. Hence, all publicity was handled by word of mouth. About 2 weeks before the scheduled trip, the Company informed employees that access to the K&M parking lot would be provided, enabling participants to meet the bus at the location, rather than at a local mall.[35]

Glenda Comeau of the quality control department was the only supervisor on the trip. On Monday, 24 June, Comeau informed Fouche that during the bus trip "Lemoine . . . was very loud and vulgar, and she was swearing in front of a bunch of little children and a couple of parents had voiced their opinion about it." Similar to his reaction in Csekovsky's case, Fouche initially was inert. His account of what transpired and his reaction is evident from the following colloquy with the General Counsel:

> MR. HERBSTER: How did you find out that . . . [Lemoine] . . . was allegedly involved in some conduct on that trip?
> MR. FOUCHE: In a routine walk through the plant, which I do very regularly. A QC superintendent stopped me and asked me if I had heard about the show that Dorothy had put on on the bus trip to the Bronx Zoo on Saturday.
>
> . . . .
> Q. And who was the QC supervisor you spoke to?
>
> A. Glenda Comeau.
> . . . .
> Q. What did you say?
>
> A. I said I had not.
> Q. What did she say?

even if Twiss departed from her usual practice of closing the door, the scenario depicted by Lemoine is not viewed as having any relevant bearing on the issue of motivation.

[33] There is no merit in the General Counsel's alternate contention that Lemoine's protestations concerning the change in work practices involved protected concerted activity, and therefore the Thor Power doctrine, 148 NLRB 1379 (1969), would insulate her from discipline for this outburst of "animal exuberance." Twiss' 4 April reminder to the employees concerning their responsibility on leaving their work area was supported by Respondent's published rules, and involved a legitimate exercise of supervisory discretion. Lemoine's protestations thereof were not shown to have been pursuant to authority conferred by coworkers, or part and parcel of any attempt to induce group action. She was neither a designated spokesperson, nor representative of any other employee. See NLRB v. City Disposal System Co., 462 U.S. 822 (1984); Schreiber Materials & Cartage Co., 268 NLRB 1457 (1984). Thus, under present Board standards, Lemoine's reaction to the change was individually pursued and lacked the essential element of "concertedness." See Meyers Industries, 268 NLRB 493 (1984).

[34] See G.C. Exh. 7.

[35] The Company claims that it "sponsored" the trip, a characterization that is somewhat debatable. Whatever the nature of its involvement, it is clear that access to its premises was provided, a gesture that would seemingly afford liability protection under the Company's insurance policies.

Q. Had you heard about anything like this before, that Dorothy Lemoine had engaged in this behavior?

A. No.

. . . .

Q. And what did you reply to Miss Comeau?

A. Only that I had not heard anything about it. She then asked me if there was anything I could do about it, because they were upset. I said at that time that I didn't think there was anything I could do about it, but if there was activity that went on that was that upsetting to them that I thought it prudent for her to at least report it to the personnel department, register a complaint. And then on second thought: "The social committee is really the party that was involved. And perhaps the complaint would better register with them."

Q. At this time did Comeau tell you what language was used and what behavior?

A. She mentioned—she quoted one statement that was made.

Q. She said it was the language that was used? That's what was objectionable? Correct?

A. She stated that her language and behavior was objectionable.

Q. What about her behavior did Miss Comeau say was objectionable?

A. She gave me one example of Dorothy giving an obscene gesture to another employee.

Q. And you said you didn't think there was anything you could do about it? Correct?

A. At that time that's correct.

Q. This is the incident that ultimately got Dorothy Lemoine discharged? Correct?

A. That's correct.

According to Comeau, on 24 June, she also conversed with two others who were on the trip, Carole Cousineau and Grace Desnoyers, both of whom worked as clerks in the personnel department. In consequence, Comeau and Desnoyers prepared a letter dated 25 June for submission to the social committee. It set forth as follows:[36]

> Employee Dorothy Lemoine #963 fellow passenger on the K & M bus trip to the Bronx Zoo, N.Y. on June 22, 1985 used foul and abusive language to a point where children on the bus were offended. Children on the bus ranged from 2 1/2 to over 16 years of age.
> Complaints were made to several of the parents by the older children causing the parents to be very uncomfortable. This complaint is enlarged because we, the undersigned as concerned parents feel our children should not be subjected to this kind of atmosphere.
> We feel the social committee is not responsible for any persons action during K & M social activities. But should make people aware that rules should be followed on bus trips and other K & M functions, whether at K & M or any other location. Please note attached copy of page 46 of the Employee's Handbook.
> [s] Carolyn Cousineau
> [s] Grace Desnoyers
> [s] Richard Pike (Guest)
> [s] Glenda Comeau

Attached to the above memorandum was an excerpt from Respondent's employee handbook, page 46, which in material part listed as among "prohibited action," the following:

> Unlawful or improper conduct off the premises or during non-working hours which affects the employee's relationship to his job, to his fellow employees, to his Supervisors, or to the Employer's services, property, reputation or goodwill in the community.

Before taking the letter to the social committee, Comeau delivered a copy to Personnel Director Gail Pike. Fouche also was updated by Comeau concerning the action that had been taken.[37] The former claimed that previously he was unaware that the above accusations fell within company rules and regulations.

After his conversation with Lemoine, Fouche on 26 June sought out Briere, the cochairman of the social committee, and the individual Fouche knew to be responsible for organizing the bus trip. He inquired about whether she had seen the above letter. She had not. Under questioning by Fouche, she failed to corroborate the accusations, advising Fouche that she "knew nothing about her [Lemoine] swearing." Fouche acknowledged that after speaking with Briere a "conflict" existed and that the facts "at that point" were not clear.

Fouche then went to see Vice President Darrell Mitchell, who at that juncture had heard nothing of the incident. After providing him the letter of complaint, Fouche reminded Mitchell of Cousineau's recent warnings for similar offenses, as well as her role as a union observer, a factor which, according to Fouche, had to be taken into consideration. Finally, Fouche suggested that Lemoine be suspended pending an investigation. With this information, Mitchell claims to have contacted the Company's counsel, whereupon he was instructed "to perform an investigation and get the employee's side of the story" while suspending Lemoine pending completion of the investigation.

At 9:30 a.m. on 27 June, Lemoine was called to the office of Twiss, where Fouche gave her an opportunity to read the letter of complaint. Lemoine denied using profanity or engaging in any wrongful behavior on the bus trip. In response, Fouche informed that she would be suspended until the Company "could determine the facts." Lemoine then argued that the Company wanted to get rid of her because of union activity. According to [36] Comeau's testimony varies from that of Fouche, in that according to her, although he suggested that they make a complaint, he did not suggest that it be addressed to the social committee.

[37] There is no primary evidence that this document was ever delivered to the social committee. Briere never saw it. Desnoyers did not testify. Comeau related that Desnoyers told her she was going to give the document to Briere's cochairman, Joann Cadieux. The latter did not testify.

the credited testimony of Lemoine, Fouche reacted by peering at Lemoine and stating, "Why don't you quit?"

Parenthetically, it is noted that Lemoine, having been alerted earlier by Briere that complaints had been registered, attempted to see Mitchell early in the morning on 27 July. She was told by his secretary that he was unavailable but that Lemoine would be contacted in the event of a change.

During the above conversation with Fouche, Lemoine informed her that she had attempted to make an appointment with Mitchell. According to the credited, uncontradicted testimony of Lemoine, Fouche assured that Mitchell would call her at home. On leaving the premises, Lemoine went to the front office where she again, without success, attempted to speak with Mitchell. The latter's secretary again told Lemoine that Mitchell was busy with meetings, was leaving town, and that she would call Lemoine if he could meet with her.

Thereafter, Lemoine received in the mail a letter dated 27 June, confirming her indefinite suspension pending investigation of charges that she had engaged in "improper personal conduct during a Company sponsored social committee event . . . ."[38] The indefinite suspension would have a term of but 1 day.

After suspending Lemoine, Fouche did not participate in the investigation. This assertedly was handled by Mitchell, who made the ultimate decision to effect the termination. Mitchell admitted that in his 11 years with the Company, he knew of no one else who had been discharged for conduct during nonduty hours and away from the plant. As in the case of Csekovsky, the investigation in Lemoine's case did not extend beyond the original complaint. Thus, at Mitchell's direction, Personnel Director Pike obtained written, unsworn statements from Comeau, Cousineau, and Desnoyers.[39] Insofar as Mitchell knew, they were the only employees who made the trip that had raised any question about Lemoine's conduct.

Although advised by his counsel to "get the employee's side of the story," Mitchell did not do so. He allegedly left this to Fouche, who in turn, reported Lemoine's denial of wrongdoing. Moreover, of those giving statements, Comeau, a supervisor mindful of Lemoine's role as a union activist, was the only witness directly interviewed by Mitchell who claims to have observed the conduct in question.[40]

Mitchell was told by Fouche that Briere denied having observed any of the conduct in question. Yet, he did not speak to or inquire further of her. He also was aware of Lemoine's denial, and knew that prior to the suspension Lemoine had been attempting to see him. He not only refused to see her,[41] but apparently felt it unnecessary to throw light on the conflicting reports, by interrogating or obtaining a single statement from among the numerous other employees who were on the bus trip.

At the hearing, several witnesses, employees as well as nonemployees, were presented by the General Counsel to support Lemoine's continuing denial of the accusations against her. Comeau, as the sole eyewitness offered by Respondent, stuck by her account. As I see it, this conflict need not be resolved. The issue is one of motive. Management must frequently invoke discipline on the basis of information derived from secondary sources. The fact that that information may be false, and thereby produce an injustice, would not alone prove this element of wrongful discrimination.[42] On the other hand, it would seem that when information is gleaned from secondary sources, the trier of fact must be assured reasonably that the remedial objectives of the Act are not undermined by cursory action, not aimed at developing fact, but in quest of a facially palatable excuse for elimination of a union adherent.

In Lemoine's case, like that of Csekovsky, the defense fails to persuade. The General Counsel's prima facie showing of discrimination is robust. In the face of Twiss' specific threat of retaliation, two known union sympathizers, who were relatively long-term, efficient employees from a department having a high turnover, were terminated on a halfhearted, pro forma investigation within a week of each other.

On Respondent's behalf there can be no debating that Comeau's accusations against Lemoine raised the spectre of serious misconduct.[43] Profanity is probably not uncommon at this plant. Nonetheless, its acceptability, as heretofore indicated, depends on context. Just as profanity, no matter how characteristic of plant discourse, may not be addressed with hostility to a representative of management, there is no excuse for use of such language in the presence of young children.

However, the question confronting management on and after 24 June was not only whether such allegations would support discharge, but also whether the conduct actually took place. Mitchell showed little regard for the latter. He conducted a cursory investigation not designed to develop the facts as they occurred on a balanced basis, but to confirm accusations that could be relied on

[39] See R. Exhs. 11(a), (b), and (c).

[40] Mitchell did not talk with Desnoyers. He did indicate that Carolyn Cousineau had "come in" to discuss her statement. However, as indicated on the face of her statement Carolyn Cousineau "did not hear the offensive language used by [Lemoine] . . . ." See R. Exh. 11(b). In the course of Mitchell's interview with Comeau, he did not inquire concerning whether Comeau requested Lemoine to stop, or complained to the busdriver, or whether Lemoine approached Briere to stop Lemoine. Comeau admits that, while on the trip, she made no attempt to curtail the alleged improprieties.

[41] The only explanation afforded was that Mitchell was about to leave on a 10-day trip. This raises the question about why the discharge could not be deferred until his return. Because Lemoine's suspension was of "indefinite" duration, the haste with which Mitchell acted is difficult to understand.

[42] Cf. NLRB v. Burnup & Sims, 379 U.S. 21 (1964), dealing with a good-faith, but mistaken, belief that an employee, in the course of Sec. 7 protected activity, engaged in a dischargeable offense.

[43] I reject the General Counsel's argument that Fouche's initial reaction to the complaint by Comeau demonstrates that "a serious breach of Respondent's rules" was not involved. Contrary to the General Counsel, this was not necessarily indicative of condonement. Representatives of management often differ about whether conduct may or may not be suitable for discipline. Fouche, who admittedly was responsible for enforcement of the rules, claims that his position initially was based on his being unaware of the rule pertaining to off-premises behavior. Moreover, he did respond the next day, on receipt of complaint in written form. There is no indication that his change of mind was triggered by intervening events of a protected nature.

as an acceptable ground for termination. All avenues that might complicate that objective were avoided. Thus, having sought guidance from outside counsel, Mitchell, by his own account, was told to get "[Lemoine's] side of the story," and "to investigate, get statements from the employees, get statements . . . from the employee involved." Mitchell was instructed that if the accusations turn out to be "true" a discharge would be in order.[44] Yet, this advice was not heeded. Other than those who supported the initial complaint, Mitchell made no effort to obtain a single statement from "employees" who were on the trip and who might well have either supported Lemoine, or failed to corroborate the accusation, as had Briere. Though aware of Lemoine's denial and her attempts to see him, Mitchell declined to afford her an airing, thus flouting the instruction that he get "the employee's side of the story." His effort did not even include a meeting with all the complainants, and it does not appear that there was any examination concerning the possible exaggeration or bias on the part of the accusers, nor did Mitchell attempt to explore the possibility of extenuating circumstances. In sum, his one-sided approach in the case of this highly productive, valuable employee reinforces, rather than dispels, the inference arising from the General Counsel's impressive case of discrimination.[45]

In the total circumstances, while the accusations themselves were sufficiently serious to warrant an investigation and perhaps even suspension, in light of the nature thereof, acceptable proof of a convincing nature has not been offered to demonstrate that Lemoine would have been victimized by a discharge in such circumstances if she had not engaged in activity protected by the Act. Accordingly, the convincing prima facie case has not been overridden, and Respondent is deemed to have violated Section 8(a)(3) and (1) by discharging Lemoine.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. The Employer is engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.
2. The Union is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.
3. Respondent independently violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act by threatening reprisals, including plant closure, because employees engaged in union activity, and by informing employees that they could not engage in protected forms of solicitation on company property.
4. Respondent violated Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act by issuing oral warnings to Linda Csekovsky and Dorothy Lemoine because they engaged in solicitation of a nature protected by Section 7 of the Act, during breaktime and further by terminating Csekovsky on 21 June 1985, and by terminating Lemoine on 28 June 1985, in reprisal for their union and/or protected activity.
5. The above unfair labor practices have an effect on commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

THE REMEDY

Having found that Respondent has engaged in certain unfair labor practices, it shall be recommended that it be ordered to cease and desist therefrom, and to take certain affirmative action deemed necessary to effectuate the policies of the Act.

Having found that Respondent unlawfully discharged Linda Csekovsky and Dorothy Lemoine, it shall be recommended that Respondent make them whole for any loss of earnings they may have suffered by reason of the discrimination against them by payment of a sum of money equal to that which they normally would have earned from the date of discharge to the date of a bona fide offer of reinstatement to their former positions or, if not available, to a substantially equivalent position. The backpay shall be reduced by net interim earnings and is to be computed in the manner prescribed in F. W. Woolworth Co., 90 NLRB 289 (1950), with interest as specified in Florida Steel Corp., 231 NLRB 651 (1977).[46]

The General Counsel requests that the remedial order include a visitatorial clause, "authorizing the Board to engage in discovery under the Federal rules of civil procedures . . . so it will be able to monitor compliance with the Board order." This request, first mentioned in the posthearing brief, does not appear to address any special issue generated by the instant procedure, but is founded on the notion that such provision be adopted as part of the Board's general remedial formula and be incorporated routinely in its orders. Hence, the issue is one of policy, to be resolved at the highest level on the basis of a fair airing by all interested parties, a condition that could not be achieved at this time on the instant record without substantial delay in achieving vindication of a remedy. Considering the advantages of visitatorial provisions against the delay, the issue is best left to ultimate resolution down the line through the administrative process. In passing, it is noted that the only reported case in which the Board has considered the issue resulted in denial. See O. L. Willis Co., 278 NLRB 29 (1986). Although the Board has yet to articulate standards for determining the appropriateness, if any, of such a remedy, the holding in that case makes it clear that the visitatorial clause will not be engrafted as a standard segment of remedial orders. Thus, the Board declined such relief, reasoning that "under the circumstances of this case, it is unnecessary to include such a clause."

On these findings of fact and conclusions of law and on the entire record, I issue the following recommended[47]

[44] Only after receiving these instructions did Mitchell, according to his testimony, convey that a union observer was involved. According to Mitchell he was told by counsel that this would make no difference.

[45] The failure to conduct a meaningful investigation or to give the employee an opportunity to explain has been regarded as an important indicia of discriminatory intent. See Florida Medical Center, 227 NLRB 1412, 1412 (1977); Greensboro News Co., 272 NLRB 135 and cases cited at fn. 23 (1984). Cf. Westinghouse Electric Corp., 277 NLRB 136 (1985), when the Board on materially distinct facts reversed my findings and dismissed an 8(a)(3) allegation, concluding that the investigation involved there was neither "biased, negligent or cursory."

[46] See generally Isis Plumbing Co., 138 NLRB 716 (1962).

[47] If no exceptions are filed as provided by Sec. 102.46 of the Board's Rules and Regulations, the findings, conclusions, and recommended Order shall, as provided in Sec. 102.48 of the Rules, be adopted by the Board and all objections to them shall be deemed waived for all purposes.

ORDER

The Respondent, K & M Electronics, Inc., Springfield, Massachusetts, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall

1. Cease and desist from

(a) Threatening employees with reprisals, including plant closure, to discourage them from engaging in union activity.

(b) Barring employees from engaging in solicitation of protected nature on company property.

(c) Discouraging employees from engaging in activity in behalf of a labor organization by discharging or in any other manner discriminating against them with respect to their wages, hours, or other conditions of employment.

(d) Discouraging employees from engaging in concerted activity protected by Section 7 of the Act, by issuing oral warnings, or in any other manner discriminating against them with respect to their wages, hours, or other conditions of employment.

(e) In any like or related manner interfering with, coercing, or restraining employees in the exercise of rights guaranteed them by Section 7 of the Act.

2. Take the following affirmative action necessary to effectuate the policies of the Act.

(a) Offer Linda Csekovsky and Dorothy Lemoine immediate reinstatement to their former positions or, if not available, to substantially equivalent positions without prejudice to their seniority and other rights and privileges, and make them whole for any loss of earnings by reason of the discrimination against them in the manner set forth in the remedy section of this decision.

(b) Remove from its files, delete and remove, any references to the unlawful discharge of Linda Csekovsky and Dorothy Lemoine as well as the oral warnings issued them on 4 April 1985, notifying them in writing that this has been done, and that neither the warnings, nor the discharges will be used against them in the future.

(c) Post at its place of business in Springfield, Massachusetts, copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix."[48] Copies of the notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 1, after being signed by the Respondent's authorized representative, shall be posted by the Respondent immediately upon receipt and maintained for 60 consecutive days in conspicuous places including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by the Respondent to ensure that the notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(d) Notify the Regional Director in writing within 20 days from the date of this Order what steps the Respondent has taken to comply.

[48] If this Order is enforced by a judgment of a United States court of appeals, the words in the notice reading "Posted by Order of the National Labor Relations Board" shall read "Posted Pursuant to a Judgment of the United States Court of Appeals Enforcing an Order of the National Labor Relations Board."

American Steel Warehousing, Inc., a subsidiary of Lexington Oil Corporation[1] and United Steelworkers of America, AFL–CIO–CLC. Case 14–CA–18332

19 March 1987

DECISION AND ORDER

BY CHAIRMAN DOTSON AND MEMBERS JOHANSEN AND BABSON

On 29 September 1986 Administrative Law Judge Burton S. Kolko issued the attached decision. The General Counsel filed exceptions and a supporting brief.

The National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the decision and the record in light of the exceptions and brief and has decided to affirm the judge's rulings, findings,[2] and conclusions and to adopt the recommended Order as modified.[3]

ORDER

The National Labor Relations Board adopts the recommended Order of the administrative law judge as modified below and orders that the Respondent, American Steel Warehousing, Inc., a subsidiary of Lexington Oil Corporation, Granite City, Illinois, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall take the action set forth in the Order as modified.

1. Substitute the following for paragraph 2(b).

"(b) Offer in writing immediate employment, without prejudice to any seniority or any other rights and privileges, to each of the former employees of Steel Warehousing of Illinois who had been laid off in November 1985 for whom the Respondent had vacancies after 27 January 1986 and whom it could have employed but declined to employ, if necessary replacing employees who had not been employed by Steel Warehousing of Illinois on 27 January 1986 but who were hired by the Respondent after that date, such employment to be offered for the classifications at the rates and under the conditions pertaining to the replaced employees; and place on a preferential hiring list all remaining former employees of Steel Warehousing of Illinois who would have been hired but for the lack of available jobs."

2. Substitute the attached notice for that of the administrative law judge.

APPENDIX

NOTICE TO EMPLOYEES
POSTED BY ORDER OF THE
NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD
An Agency of the United States Government

The National Labor Relations Board has found that we violated the National Labor Relations Act and has ordered us to post and abide by this notice.

WE WILL NOT refuse to bargain collectively with the United Steelworkers of America, AFL–CIO–CLC as exclusive representative of the following unit:

> All production, maintenance, shipping and receiving employees employed at our Granite City, Illinois facility, excluding office employees, plant clerical employees, guards, watchmen, professional employees, foremen, assistant foremen and all other supervisors as defined in the Act.

WE WILL NOT discourage membership in the Union or in any other labor organization by discriminating against any employee or job applicant regarding hire, tenure of employment, or condition of employment.

WE WILL NOT in any like or related manner interfere with, restrain, or coerce you in the exercise of the rights guaranteed you by Section 7 of the Act.

WE WILL, on request, bargain with the Union with respect to rates of pay, wages, hours, and other terms and conditions of employment and, if an agreement is reached, embody such agreement in a signed contract.

WE WILL offer employment to Steel Warehousing of Illinois employees who were laid off in November 1985 for whom we had vacancies after 27 January 1986 and whom we could have employed but declined to employ, if necessary replacing employees who had not been employed by Steel Warehousing on 27 January 1986, but who were hired by us after that date, such employment to be offered for the classifications at the rates and under the conditions pertaining to the replaced employees; and place on a preferential hiring list all remaining former employees of Steel Warehousing of Illinois who would have been hired but for the lack of available jobs.

[1] The Respondent's name appears as amended at the hearing.

[2] No exceptions have been filed to the judge's finding that American Steel Warehousing is a successor employer.

[3] The General Counsel excepted to the judge's recommended Order to the extent that it limits the remedy to require the Respondent to replace only those employees who had been hired by the Respondent "before 1 June 1986." We agree that the remedy should not be so limited and have modified the recommended Order and notice accordingly. The General Counsel also excepted to the lack of a "make-whole" paragraph in the notice. We agree, and have so modified the notice.

WE WILL make whole the employees of Steel Warehousing of Illinois to whom we will offer employment as set forth above for any losses they may have suffered from our discrimination against them, plus interest.

AMERICAN STEEL WAREHOUSING, INC.

Keltner W. Locke, Esq., for the General Counsel.
Rayford T. Blankership, Labor Consultant, of Greenwood, Illinois, for Respondent.

DECISION

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

BURTON S. KOLKO, Administrative Law Judge. The Lexington Oil Corporation purchased certain assets from Steel Warehousing of Illinois, Limited, an Iowa corporation (SWI), and it purchased the land and buildings used by SWI from the persons who owned SWI. Thereafter, the purchaser operated as American Steel Warehousing, Inc. (ASW), the nominal Respondent in this case.[1] From 1973 the Union that is the Charging Party in this case had a collective-bargaining agreement with SWI, and after American Steel Warehousing began operating the Union requested recognition by ASW. In effect that request was denied, and the Union's charge followed.[2] As a result of that charge the General Counsel complains that ASW as a successor to SWI violated Section 8(a)(5) of the Act, 29 U.S.C. § 158(a)(5), by failing to recognize and bargain with the Union. Also, the complaint alleges that ASW discriminated against former SWI employees by hiring others in their stead who did not belong to the Union, thus violating Section 8(a)(3). The Respondent denies the allegations.

FINDINGS OF FACT

The Lexington Oil Corporation negotiated with SWI to purchase SWI on 8 January 1986. Before the closing the sellers discovered that the transaction would cause them a tax liability that was unacceptable. The transaction was postponed and restructured. SWI's land and buildings were sold by Mr. and Mrs. Blumenthal, their owners. The remainder of the sale consisted of SWI's inventories of raw materials and supplies, work in progress, finished materials, machinery, equipment, furniture, cash, accounts receivable, customer lists, telephone listings, trade secrets, etc., which were conveyed on 27 January 1986.

The purchaser immediately began operating as ASW, like SWI distributing steel products. It immediately sent this letter to the customer list that was stored on the computer that SWI had used.

> American Steel Warehousing, Inc. has purchased the steel inventory of Steel Warehousing of Illinois, Ltd. located in Granite City, Illinois. It has also acquired the land and buildings on Route 11 where the operation is located.
> The new organization is headed by John P. Stahlman formerly of Dallas, Texas. Mr. Stahlman is the President and CEO while Pam DeShasier, a longtime employee of Steel Warehousing, will serve as corporate Secretary. Pam will also be in charge of inside sales.

On the day after the sale the Union's subdistrict director, Morgan, heard of it and called ASW. The next morning Morgan met with Carman and Stahlman, ASW coowners. Morgan told them about the collective-bargaining agreement between the Union and SWI, that in his view the contract remained in effect because neither party to the contract had sent the required advance termination notice, and that he was interested in continuing to represent the employees at the facility.[3]

Carman and Stahlman replied that they did not know about the continued viability of the collective-bargaining agreement, that they would have to consult counsel, and that they would get back to Morgan. They never did. After unsuccessful attempts to make contact Morgan finally reached Stahlman, who told him that "my General Counsel told me not to talk to you anymore." So that was the end of it.

Subsequently ASW hired two additional employees, Daniel Van Scoyk on 24 March 1986 and Mark Knight on 6 May 1986. Neither of these employees was among the 17 bargaining unit employees that had been laid off by SWI the previous fall. One of the unit employees, indeed the Union's shop steward, was Thomas Cottrell. He had regularly been talking with Plant Manager Ogle

[1] The buyer chose to effect the purchase through a wholly owned subsidiary, Steel Warehousing of Illinois, Inc., an Illinois corporation, which bore no relationship to the seller, SWI, Steel Warehousing of Illinois, Limited, an Iowa corporation. Having mentioned the name of the actual purchasing entity, we shall forget about it as that entity has no further use in this discussion.

[2] The charge was filed on 26 February 1986, was amended on 8 April 1986, and was followed by the complaint on 16 April 1986. The hearing was held on 19 May 1986 in St. Louis. Briefs were received on 23 June 1986.

[3] Coincidently, the date of the sale also was the last day of the collective-bargaining agreement that had been made between SWI and the Union on 28 January 1983. By its terms it remained in effect for one more year, until 28 January 1987, since the required 60-day notice for termination or change had not been given by either party to the other.

even while laid off, as part of his steward responsibilities. On the day after the sale Cottrell went to the plant and talked with Ogle. Cottrell asked if the place had been sold, and Ogle said yes. Then Ogle was asked by Cottrell

> . . . if he was going to call any of us back now that it had been sold . . . thinking that they would have more business. And he said no. He said that they were going to be non-union plant from then on. For me to start looking for a job. They wasn't going to bring any of us back.

As Supervisor Ogle was not called to testify, Cottrell's credible testimony stands without contradiction.

Discussion

The "successor employer" issue has been summarized by the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit in Premium Foods v. NLRB, 709 F.2d 623, 627 (1983):

> A new employer who conducts essentially the same business as the former employer, and who hires former employees of his predecessor as a majority of his work force is considered a successor employer. . . . Where a union has been recognized . . . as the representative of the employees of the predecessor, and his successor hires a majority of his workers from those employees, a presumption arises that the successor's employees also support the union. . . . The basic rationale is that a mere change in ownership, without an essential change in working conditions, would not be likely to change employee attitudes toward representation. See NLRB v. Burns International Security Services, Inc., 406 U.S. 272, 278–279, 92 S.Ct. 1571, 1577, 32 L.Ed. 2d 61 (1972).

A similar approach has been taken by the Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit, see Zim's Foodliner v. NLRB, 495 F.2d 1131 (7th Cir. 1974); by the Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit, see Service Employees Local 47 v. Cleveland Tower, 606 F.2d 684 (1979); by the Court of Appeals for the First Circuit, see NLRB v. Fall River Dyeing, 775 F.2d 425 (1985); and by the Board, see Bay Breeze Industries, 280 NLRB 1216 (1986).[4] What we must do to deal with the issue of successorship raised by ASW's denial is to ascertain whether (1) ASW is a new employer, (2) it conducts essentially the same business as SWI at Granite City, Illinois, (3) it has hired former SWI employees as a majority of its work force, and (4) the Union had been recognized as the representative of SWI's employees. Questions (1) and (4) having already answered, we turn to the heart of the successorship issue. The record is thin but sufficient to make the following findings.

SWI had been in the business of distributing steel and steel products. That is the business that ASW was purchasing and undertaking. Evidence of this is its initial letter to SWI's customers, dated 27 January 1986, in which it apprised SWI's customers of the purchase and its intention to expand "its bar stock and sheet inventory and it will still continue to provide shearing services."

The expansion envisioned by ASW was in contrast to the contraction of operations by SWI in its final months. In November 1985, SWI's reduced sales caused it to lay off most of its unit employees, leaving only the two, Gass and Miller, that ASW started up with.[5] As ASW expanded its sales it added employee Van Scoyk 2 months later, in March, and employee Knight 2 months after that.

But, while expanding its customer base, ASW was still relying on the former SWI customers as the mainstay of its sales. Its initial revenues were totally from SWI's customers, as it purchased SWI's accounts receivable for sales that transpired after 1 January 1986, 4 weeks before ASW began its own operation. Thereafter, ASW added new customers so that by the end of February 1986 the 49 customers inherited from SWI were expanded to 103. But as the General Counsel's brief shows, relying on the sales figures in General Counsel's Exhibits 9 and 12, out of ASW's revenues of $180,858 for its first month of operations, $101,801 came from SWI's former customers, 56 percent.

This is almost all the data that we have, but it is enough for our purposes, as the Union's demand for recognition was immediate. ASW does not argue that its first month of operations is unrepresentative, nor does it challenge the fact that in the first month, when the Union made its demand, the employees of ASW were working at the same plant and were using the same equipment as they had at the predecessor SWI.

ASW claims that it is a different operation from SWI. Its evidence to support this consists solely of the testimony of its president, Stahlman:

> Q. Can you tell the Court in what respect—since you were—you have testified that you were present at the facility for a couple of weeks before the change in ownership. Can you tell the Court please in what respects the services provided changed since the change in ownership?
> A. Well, in many respects. The inventory at the facility was way down because of the economic conditions that Mr. O'Brien spoke about and we have added—well we have doubled the inventory. So we have many more services just due to the fact that we have the inventory in stock. So we can supply the customers. I don't know if it is the right time to say the dollar figures, but my understanding is that the people that were there before the December of 1985, that their gross sales were approximately $60,000 and in April of this year our's were approximately $300,000. So the major difference is in the—is in the amount of inventory there and we now carry more products. We carry stainless prod-

> A. We do a great deal of slitting of coil and then we also do leveling, but I believe they did that before.

So the major differences are that ASW has a larger inventory of products from SWI and does slitting of coil. These do not change the employees' working conditions sufficiently to infer that their "attitudes toward representation" would be changed. Premium Foods, supra, 709 F.2d. at 627.

What would indicate such a change in employee attitudes toward representation would be a change in the structure of the bargaining unit, and this is the argument that ASW presses the hardest.

What ASW argues, in effect, is that having started out in January with a work force of two employees, both of whom were former SWI unit members, by May it had added three who were not former SWI unit members, thereby destroying the basis for presuming the majority status of the Union.[6]

The legal question thus posed is when did ASW have a representative complement of employees—when it started rebuilding from SWI's deteriorated base in January or when it had reached its full complement of employees in May.

The court in Fall River Dyeing, supra, 775 F.2d at 431, summarized this test in these words:

> In determining whether a representative complement existed at a given date, the Board first looks to see whether the job classifications for the operation were "filled or substantially filled" and whether the operation was in "normal or substantially normal production." The Board also considers the size of the complement on that date, the time expected to elapse before a substantially larger complement would be hired, and the relative certainty of the expected expansion.

I find that ASW's bargaining obligation arose on 29 January 1986, which is (1) the date that the Union through Morgan made its demand on ASW, (2) the day after ASW began its operations, and (3) 2 days after the transfer. See Fall River Dyeing, supra, and NLRB v. Hudson River Aggregates, 639 F.2d 865, 870 (2d Cir. 1981). On that date ASW employed three of the five production employees it would be using by the time of the hearing, and two of those three were from the SWI unit represented by the Union—a clear majority. While sales would continue to rise, presumably the reason for the two later hires, the two former SWI employees, Miller and Gass, represented the two classifications of employees in the bargaining unit (Miller was a shear operator/laborer, and Gass was a laborer or "shear helper"). The third employee, North, had been a truckdriver for SWI, and outside the unit. At ASW, North Miller, and Gass performed all duties, but I do not find that the change in job classifications materially bears on this case since the tasks performed did not change. The essential structure of ASW's operations was set with the initial hire of these three workers.

Finally, we come to Stahlman's testimony that 2 weeks after the sale Gass told him that he did not want the Union. I am not persuaded that this helps ASW's case. First, Gass' statement and any doubt it caused ASW that the Union no longer represented a majority of its former SWI employees came after ASW's bargaining obligation arose, too late for ASW to rely on. Fall River Dyeing, supra, 775 F.2d at 433–434. Secondly, as I have no reason to doubt Stahlman's credibility, that hearsay alone is not "substantial evidence sufficient to support a finding for the company." TRW-United Greenfield Division v. NLRB, 716 F.2d 1391 (11th Cir. 1983). I reject any claim of good-faith doubt about ASW's bargaining obligation.

In fact, not only was there no doubt, there was no good faith. Plant Manager Ogle told Union Steward Cottrell on the day after the sale that "they were going to be [a] non-union plant from then on." Clearly an antiunion modus operandi had been established long before Stahlman heard from Gass, and explains why when the two new employees were later hired they were not from the pool of laid-off SWI unit members. The lame excuse that Cottrell was not hired because he was a workers-compensation risk has no support, and does not explain why none of the other 17 laid-off bargaining unit members was hired. Ogle's admission does explain it, and establishes a violation of Section 8(a)(3). Peng Teng, 278 NLRB 350 (1986).

In sum, there is no good-faith doubt advanced by ASW why the Union no longer represents these employees, and there is insufficient difference between SWI and ASW[7] to overcome the presumption that "the employees' desires concerning unionization" are unchanged.[8] I conclude that the Union, which has represented employees at this facility since 1973, is to be recognized as the ongoing representative.

[6] There were two new hires, Van Scoyk and Knight, and the elimination of the truckdriving classification freed up former SWI employee North, who as a truckdriver for SWI was not in the bargaining unit, to do production work for ASW.

[7] In other words, the plant's "operations, as they impinge on union members, remain essentially the same after the transfer of ownership." Electrical Workers IUE v. NLRB, 604 F.2d 689, 694 (D.C. Cir. 1979). See NLRB v. Hudson River Aggregates, 639 F.2d 865, 869 (2d Cir. 1981).

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. The Respondent, American Steel Warehousing, Inc., is an employer within meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.[9]

2. The Union, United Steelworkers of America, AFL-CIO-CLC, constitutes a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

3. The following employees constitute a unit that is appropriate for collective bargaining within the meaning of Section 9(b) of the Act:

> All production, maintenance, shipping and receiving employees employed by Respondent at its Granite City, Illinois facility excluding office employees, plant clerical employees, guards, watchmen, professional employees, foremen, assistant foremen and all other supervisors as defined in the Act.

4. United Steelworkers of America, AFL-CIO-CLC has been and is the exclusive representative of all employees in the above-described appropriate unit for purposes of collective bargaining within the meaning of Section 9(a) of the Act.

5. By failing and refusing to recognize and bargain collectively with the Union as the exclusive representative of all of Respondent's employees in the appropriate unit, Respondent has engaged in and is engaging in unfair labor practices within the meaning of Sections 8(a)(5) and 8(a)(1) of the Act.

6. By discriminatorily refusing to hire laid-off members of the Union Respondent has engaged in unfair labor practices within the meaning of Sections 8(a)(3) and 8(a)(1) of the Act.

7. Respondent's unfair labor practices affect commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

On these findings of fact and conclusions of law and on the entire record, I issue the following recommended[10]

ORDER

The Respondent, American Steel Warehousing, Inc., Granite City, Illinois, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall

1. Cease and desist from

(a) Refusing to bargain collectively with the United Steelworkers of America, AFL-CIO-CLC as exclusive representative of the following unit:

> All production, maintenance, shipping and receiving employees employed by Respondent at its Granite City, Illinois facility excluding office employees, plant clerical employees, guards, watchmen, professional employees, foremen, assistant foremen and all other supervisors as defined in the Act.

(b) Refusing to hire employees because they had or were believed to have joined, supported, or assisted the Union.

(c) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing its employees in the exercise of their rights under Section 7 of the Act.

2. Take the following affirmative action necessary to effectuate the policies of the Act.

(a) On request, bargain with the Union with respect to rates of pay, wages, hours, and other terms and conditions of employment, and if an agreement is reached, embody it in a signed contract.

(b) Offer in writing immediate employment to each of the employees of SWI who had been laid off in November 1985 for whom Respondent had vacancies between 27 January through 31 May 1986 and whom it could have employed but declined to employ for discriminatory reasons, if necessary replacing employees who had not been employed by SWI on 27 January 1986 but who were hired by Respondent after that date and before 1 June 1986, such employment to be offered for the classifications, at the rates, and under the conditions pertaining to the replaced employees.

(c) Make whole the employees offered employment under subparagraph (b), above, for any loss they may have suffered from the discrimination against them by paying to each money that he would have been paid in Respondent's employ from the putative date of hire to the actual date of hire, less their respective net earnings elsewhere during this period, computed as in F. W. Woolworth Co., 90 NLRB 289 (1950), with interest as stated in Isis Plumbing Co., 138 NLRB 716 (1962).

(d) Mail to the SWI employees laid off in November 1985, and post at its Granite City, Illinois plant copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix."[11] Copies of the notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 14, after being signed by the Respondent's authorized representative, shall be posted by the Respondent immediately upon receipt and maintained for 60 consecutive days in conspicuous places including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by the Respondent to ensure that the notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(e) Notify the Regional Director in writing within 20 days from the date of this Order what steps the Respondent has taken to comply.

[9] During the calendar year ending December 31, 1985, Respondent sold and shipped products valued in excess of $50,000 from its Granite City, Illinois facility directly to places that are outside the State of Illinois.

[10] If no exceptions are filed as provided by Sec. 102.46 of the Board's Rules and Regulations, the findings, conclusions, and recommended Order shall, as provided in Sec. 102.48 of the Rules, be adopted by the Board and all objections to them shall be deemed waived for all purposes.

[11] If this Order is enforced by a judgment of a United States court of appeals, the words in the notice reading "Posted by Order of the National Labor Relations Board" shall read "Posted Pursuant to a Judgment of the United States Court of Appeals Enforcing an Order of the National Labor Relations Board."

DECISION AND ORDER

BY CHAIRMAN DOTSON AND MEMBERS STEPHENS AND CRACRAFT

On 30 September 1986 Administrative Law Judge Gerald A. Wacknov issued the attached decision. The Respondent filed exceptions and a supporting brief. The Respondent further filed a motion to reopen the record for the purpose of introducing additional evidence. The General Counsel filed an answering brief and a response to the motion to reopen the record.

The National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the decision and the record[1] in light of the exceptions and briefs and has decided to affirm the judge's ruling, findings,[2] and conclusions and to adopt the recommended Order.

ORDER

The National Labor Relations Board adopts the recommended Order of the administrative law judge and orders that the Respondent, UARCO Incorporated, Riverside, California, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall take the action set forth in the Order.

[1] The Respondent in its motion to reopen urges that the record be reopened to permit the introduction of certain records regarding the relative number of data mailer operators employed by it as of the date of the hearing. The Respondent does not state any reason why this evidence was not presented at the hearing nor does the Respondent state that this is newly discovered evidence or evidence which has become available only since the close of the hearing. The Respondent's motion is therefore denied.

[2] In adopting the judge's conclusion that the Respondent violated Sec. 8(a)(5), we rely on the total lack of notice to the Union regarding the wage freeze prior to its implementation.

The record reveals that the Respondent has consistently used its regular press operator wage rate than its data mailer press operator wage rate for purposes of comparison in its annual wage survey. We note that the data mailer machine is unique to the Respondent and its competitors do not have data mailer operators.

The judge, in the remedy section of his decision, ordered that backpay be computed in accordance with the formula set forth in F. W. Woolworth Co., 90 NLRB 289 (1950). That formula is only applicable in circumstances involving computations of interim earnings. The correct backpay formula for unilateral changes is set forth in Ogle Protection Service, 183 NLRB 682 (1970).

Frank M. Wagner, Jr., Esq., for the General Counsel.
William P. Treacy, Esq., of Lake Forest, Illinois, for the Respondent.

DECISION

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

GERALD A. WACKNOV, Administrative Law Judge. Pursuant to notice, a hearing with respect to this matter was held before me in Riverside, California, on 10 June 1986. The initial charge in Case 21–CA–24219 was filed on 16 October 1985 by Graphic Communications Union District Council No. 2, International Printing and Graphic Communications Union, AFL–CIO (the Union) and was amended on 28 February 1986. The charge in Case 21–CA–24425 was filed by the Union on 16 January 1986. Thereafter, on 31 March 1986, the Regional Director for Region 21 of the National Labor Relations Board (the Board) issued a consolidated complaint and notice of hearing alleging a violation by UARCO Incorporated (Respondent) of Section 8(a)(1), (3), and (5) of the National Labor Relations Act.

The parties were afforded a full opportunity to be heard, to call, examine and cross-examine witnesses, and to introduce relevant evidence. Since the close of the hearing, briefs have been received from the General Counsel and counsel for Respondent.

On the entire record,[1] and based on my observation of the witnesses and consideration of the briefs submitted, I make the following

FINDINGS OF FACT

I. JURISDICTION

The Respondent is a Delaware corporation engaged in the manufacture and sale of business forms with a facility located in Riverside, California. In the course and conduct of its business operations, the Respondent annually sells and ships goods and products valued in excess of $50,000 directly to customers located outside the State of California.

It is admitted, and I find, that the Respondent is, and has been at all times material, an employer engaged in commerce and in a business affecting commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

II. THE LABOR ORGANIZATION INVOLVED

It is admitted that the Union is, and has been at all times material, a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

III. THE ALLEGED UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICE

A. The Issues

The principal issues raised by the pleadings are whether the Respondent, in violation of Section 8(a)(3) of the [1] The General Counsel's motion to amend exhibit by attaching to G.C. Exh. 11 a 7-page document entitled "1984 Area Wage Summary" is granted. Further, the General Counsel's unopposed motion to correct transcript is granted.

Act, withheld a wage increase from its Riverside employees, and whether it violated Section 8(a)(5) of the Act by unilaterally changing employees' terms and conditions of employment.

B. The Facts

The Union was certified on 20 December 1984 as the collective-bargaining representative of the Respondent's employees in the following unit:

> All production and maintenance employees, warehouse employees, shipping and receiving employees and truck drivers employed by Respondent at its facility located at 990 Palmyrita Avenue, Riverside, California, excluding all office clerical employees, professional employees, guards and supervisors as defined in the Act.

The unit is comprised of approximately 85 employees. Bargaining commenced on 21 February 1985,[2] and continued until 11 December when negotiations broke off as a result of the Union's failure to accept the Respondent's last and final proposal which provided for a 12-month wage freeze. The parties had, at Respondent's request, deferred negotiations on wages and other economic items until noneconomic matters had been explored, and Respondent's first offer on wages, namely, to freeze them, came on 8 October, 2 days after the date on which the annual wage increase, infra, had always become effective.

William Gordon, who has been Respondent's Riverside plant manager for 17 years, testified that the unit employees herein have received a general pay increase the first Sunday in October in each of these 17 years except for 1985, when no pay increase was granted.[3] Gordon testified that during each prior year he announced and promised to the unit employees at company meetings that they could expect to receive a substantially similar pay increase that was granted to production employees at Moore Business Forms of Fullerton, California (Moore), a unionized plant which was Respondent's primary local competitor. Gordon testified that this had been Respondent's "principal promise" to the employees at least since he became plant manager, and that the pay scale of Moore "was the principal criteria we used in determining our wage package every year," which was based on an annual survey of local printing firms. Respondent's 1985 survey was completed in August.

Gordon testified that no 1985 wage increases were granted the production employees at the Roseburg, Oregon plant, a facility also under Gordon's supervision. Gordon's affidavit, referring to the Roseburg plant, states as follows:

> No wage increase was given for two reasons: first, it is located in the heart of the lumber industry which is suppressed and suffering large layoffs; secondly, we were able to obtain additional business if we could control our cost. We told the employees that, "In lieu of wage increases, that the wages would remain the same, but because of the increase of business they would be assured no layoffs would occur.
> Thus we effectively traded wage increases for assured work.

Moore's contract with Printing Specialties and Paper Products Union Local 522, a sister local of the Union herein, extended from 1 September 1983 to 31 August 1986. It provided for a wage increase during each year of the contract, including a 4-percent increase for production employees on 1 September 1985. This brought the rate of Moore's press operators from $12.45 per hour to $12.95 per hour. Respondent's 1984 rate was at $12.55 per hour for comparable positions[4] and has remained at that rate due to Respondent's failure to increase its wages in October 1985. From 1974 through 1984 the significant wage rates of Moore and Respondent, used by Respondent for comparison purposes, have been as specified in the following exhibit introduced into evidence by the Respondent:

The[5] Respondent advanced various reasons for its decision to deviate from its admitted past practice of maintaining close comparability with Moore. According to Edward Werhand, Respondent's vice president of engineering, the production standards, which are based on the time it should take to print or process a specified quantity of business forms, had declined at Respondent's Riverside plant, and compared unfavorably with the average companywide production standards of each of its 12 plants. In this connection, documentary evidence consisting of monthly published production standards data shows that since 1981 the Riverside plant has been among the top six plants in production standards. However, the most current data as of August 1985, when the Respondent determined that no wage increase was warranted, reflects that the Riverside press department was ranked number 9 out of 12 plants, with a 104.9[6] performance standard for the 13 weeks ending 30 June 1986, and was rated in finishing department standards (of the 8 plants with finishing departments), with a 96.1 performance standard for the same period of time. No evidence was presented by Respondent to show the cause for this decline. Nor was any evidence adduced to show that wage increases had ever been withheld at any of its plants because of a low performance standard ranking.

Respondent also maintains that for purposes of its 1985 area wage survey, it no longer considered Moore as the bellwether plant, apparently taking the position that the [2] All dates or time periods hereinafter are within 1985 unless otherwise specified.

[3] However, the Respondent's clerical employees did receive a 3-percent wage increase on this day, 6 October 1985.

[4] Respondent's rate for data mailer operators is $12.76 per hour. However it appears that this rate is paid to relatively few employees, and the record evidence shows that the Respondent has consistently used its regular press operators' rate, rather than its data mailer press operator's rate, for purposes of its annual wage survey comparisons.Chart goes here

[5] This heading denotes nondata mailer press rates. Moore does not have data mailer presses.

[6] The percentage figure is based on 100 percent, which is the amount of output that all the presses, collectively, are designed to produce in a specified period of time. Thus, the Riverside plant was operating above standard in the press department.

plant had closed or moved between 1984 and 1985, and ceased to be a significant basis for comparison. Thus, Plant Manager Gordon testified that for purposes of the 1985 wage survey he never compared the Riverside plant with Moore's new plant located in the City of Industry. The evidence shows that Moore's facility was moved from Fullerton to the City of Industry, some 10 miles distant, sometime after August 1984, and that the existing collective-bargaining agreement between Moore and Printing Specialties and Paper Products Union, Local 522 was continued without negotiation or interruption at the new location. While the Union's president, Bernard Sapiro, testified that he believed Moore's new plant employs fewer than 100 employees, Sapiro's testimony reveals that he is not entirely aware of the situation at that plant as its employees are represented by another Local Union. However, according to Sapiro, Moore's Fullerton plant had been gradually reduced in size since about 1975. Moreover, the Respondent's 1984 wage survey shows that Moore's Fullerton plant had 180 employees, and its 1985 wage survey, which specifically included Moore's City of Industry plant as one of the plants surveyed in Respondent's 1985 wage study, shows that it has 190 employees.[7]

C. Analysis and Conclusions

The reasons advanced by the Respondent for deviating from its promised annual wage increase to the production employees, consistently honored for at least the past 17 years, simply are not supported by the record evidence.

The 1985 area wage survey report was submitted to Plant Manager Gordon by R. D. Kozaki, supervisor, industrial relations, on 12 August 1985. Kozaki, who was not called as a witness in this proceeding, recommended no wage increase for 1985 despite the fact that the average increase for the Southern California firms surveyed was 4.60 percent. As noted above, assuming that the then most recent 1985 performance standard statistics, specified above, were known to Kozaki at the time he issued his report, the Respondent's press department ranked 9 (out of 12 plant) and was well above 100-percent efficiency. In the finishing department it was six (out of eight plants), with 96.1 efficiency. More importantly, the Respondent has adduced no evidence purporting to show that the employees of any of its plants, at any time during the past 17 years, have ever been punished by the withholding of a wage increase for having relatively low performance standards in any category. Further, it is significant that Respondent deemed it necessary to raise the wages of the nonunit clerical employees by 3 percent. Finally, it is clear that the Respondent's failure to grant a wage increase to the Roseburg, Oregon production employees was based on extraordinary circumstances not relevant or comparable to the issues in the instant case.

The Respondent's contention that it discontinued its policy of maintaining close comparability between its wage rate and those of its primary competitor in the area because, according to Plant Manager Gordon, Moore "closed sometime between, '84 and, '85," is patently frivolous. The clear and credible record evidence shows that Moore did not close. Rather it moved to another location just 10 miles away from its original facility. There is no evidence that its general manufacturing operations changed in any material respect. Nor does Gordon specify with any clarity what caused him to cease giving any consideration to Moore's existence for purpose of the wage survey, or why, given Respondent's position, Moore was even included in the 1985 wage survey. Indeed, the Respondent's wage survey specifically included the applicable information regarding Moore's City of Industry plant and, perhaps most importantly, the 1985 wage survey compiled by Respondent[8] shows that the number of Moore's employees increased between 1984 and 1985, and its employee complement is apparently more than double the size of Respondent's work force of some 85 unit employees. In summary, the facts prove the converse of Respondent's contention that Moore ceased to be a viable business or that Moore's work force or business operations changed in any significant respect.

The Respondent asserts that its current press wage rate, the standard used as a basis for its wage survey, is substantially similar to the $12.77-per-hour average press rate of competitors in the area, and that this is also a reason for not increasing wages in 1985. However, the evidence shows that the Respondent's area wage surveys have always been premised on the nondata mailer press rate which, for the Respondent, has remained at $12.55 since October 1984. Thus, the Respondent's nondata mailer press rate, the standard used for purpose of comparison, is some 25 cents per hour below the average press rate of its acknowledged competitors, and 40 cents per hour below the comparable press rate of Moore.

As discussed above, Respondent has presented no valid reasons for deviating from its 17-year history of granting on the first Sunday in October of each year wage increases comparable to the annual wage increases granted by Moore. There is only one additional element that may reasonably account for Respondent's deviant conduct, namely, the advent of the Union. On the basis of the foregoing it is clear, and I find, that the 1985 wage increase was denied because the employees selected the Union as their collective-bargaining representative, and that Respondent's conduct is therefore violative of Section 8(a)(1) and (3) of the Act.

The Respondent's promise to grant and the granting of an annual wage increase at the same time each year makes this wage increase a condition of employment. Its decision to withhold any wage increase, which was always instituted in October of each year, was made in mid-August at a time when the parties were engaged in negotiations. However, the Respondent admittedly did not so advise the Union of this change in past practice until about 8 October. By failing to timely notify the Union of this change in a condition of employment, the Respondent has violated Section 8(a)(5) of the Act, as alleged. Liberty Telephone & Communications, 204 NLRB 317, 318 (1973).

[7] In 1983, according to Respondent's survey, Moore's Fullerton plant had 197 employees.

[8] I regard this as more reliable evidence as to the number of employees at Moore's City of Industry plant than Union President Sapiro's testimony. Sapiro was admittedly not conversant with the details of Moore's plant, having no direct relationship with it, whereas Respondent's survey is apparently based on specific information furnished by Moore subsequent to its move from Fullerton to the City of Industry.

The Respondent's unfair labor practices herein, tending to cause employee disaffection, clearly have a substantial adverse effect on the Union's status as representative of the Respondent's employees. Such, it appears, was Respondent's contrived intent. It may fairly be presumed that this conduct on the part of Respondent resulted in the filing of the decertification petition by the employees, on which the Respondent now relies as a basis for establishing doubt about the Union's majority status and permitting it to withdraw recognition. Under the circumstances, the Respondent is not privileged to withdraw recognition or to refrain from bargaining with the Union. Moreover, such conduct is violative of Section 8(a)(5) of the Act. Sacramento Clinical Laboratory, 242 NLRB 944 (1979); Guerdon Industries, 218 NLRB 658 (1975); Abbey Medical/Abbey Rents, 264 NLRB 969 (1982).

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. Respondent is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

2. The Union is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

3. The Respondent has violated Section 8(a)(1), (3), and (5) of the Act as alleged.

THE REMEDY

Having found that the Respondent violated and is violating Section 8(a)(1), (3), and (5) of the Act, I recommend that it be required to cease and desist therefrom and from in any other manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing its employees in the exercise of their rights under Section 7 of the Act. Moreover, Respondent shall be required to post an appropriate notice attached as an Appendix.

Further, the Respondent shall be required to grant the wage increase to the bargaining unit employees it would have granted, retroactive to 6 October 1985, and make the bargaining unit employees whole by paying them backpay in the amount of the wage increase that they would have received from that date in the manner prescribed in F. W. Woolworth Co., 90 NLRB 289 (1950), plus interest, as set forth in Florida Steel Corp., 231 NLRB 651 (1977).[9] The Respondent shall also be required to bargain, on request, with the Union.

On these findings of fact and conclusions of law and on the entire record, I issue the following recommended[10]

ORDER

The Respondent, UARCO Incorporated, Riverside, California, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall

1. Cease and desist from

(a) Unlawfully withholding the 6 October 1985 annual wage increase from the unit employees because the employees selected the Union as their collective- bargaining representative.

(b) Refusing to negotiate in good faith with the Union by failing to timely advise the Union of the decision to withhold the annual wage increase.

(c) Withdrawing recognition from the Union and thereafter refusing to bargain with the Union.

(d) In any other manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed in Section 7 of the Act.

2. Take the following affirmative action necessary to effectuate the purpose of the Act.

(a) Place in effect the hourly wage increases which would have been granted the unit employees on 6 October 1985.

(b) Make the unit employees whole for the discrimination against them by paying them backpay in the amount of the wage increase they would have received, retroactive to 6 October 1985, with appropriate interest.

(c) Bargain, on request, with the Union as the representative of employees in the following unit:

> All production and maintenance employees, warehouse employees, shipping and receiving employees and truck drivers employed by Respondent at its facility located at 990 Palmyrita Avenue, Riverside, California, excluding all office clerical employees, professional employees, guards and supervisors as defined in the Act.

(d) Preserve and, on request, make available to the Board or its agents, for examination and copying, all payroll records, social security payment records, timecards, personnel records and reports, and all other records necessary to analyze the amount of backpay due under the terms of this recommended Order.

(e) Post at Respondent's facilty at Riverside, California, copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix."[11] Copies of the notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 21, after being signed by the Respondent's authorized representative, shall be posted by the Respondent immediately upon receipt and maintained for 60 consecutive days in conspicuous places including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by the Respondent to ensure that the notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

[9] See generally Isis Plumbing Co., 138 NLRB 716 (1962).

[10] If no exceptions are filed as provided by Sec. 102.46 of the Board's Rules and Regulations, the findings, conclusions, and recommended Order shall, as provided in Sec. 102.48 of the Rules, be adopted by the Board and all objections to them shall be deemed waived for all purposes.

[11] If this Order is enforced by a judgment of a United States court of appeals, the words in the notice reading "Posted by Order of the National Labor Relations Board" shall read "Posted Pursuant to a Judgment of the United States Court of Appeals Enforcing an Order of the National Labor Relations Board."

(f) Notify the Regional Director in writing within 20 days from the date of this Order what steps the Respondent has taken to comply.

APPENDIX

NOTICE TO EMPLOYEES
POSTED BY ORDER OF THE
NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD
An Agency of the United States Government

The National Labor Relations Board has found that we violated the National Labor Relations Act and has ordered us to post and abide by this notice.

The Act gives employees the following rights:

To engage in self-organization
To form, join, or assist any union
To bargain collectively through representatives of their own choice
To engage in activities together for the purpose of collective bargaining or other mutual aid or protection
To refrain from the exercise of any or all such activities.

WE WILL NOT unlawfully withhold the 6 October 1985 annual wage increase from you because you selected Graphic Communications Union District Council No. 2, and its Local 388M, International Printing and Graphic Communications Union, AFL–CIO as your collective-bargaining representative.

WE WILL NOT refuse to negotiate in good faith by failing to timely advise the Union of our decision to withhold the annual wage increase.

WE WILL NOT unlawfully withdraw recognition from the Union and thereafter refuse to bargain with it as the certified collective-bargaining representative of employees in the following unit:

> All production and maintenance employees, warehouse employees, shipping and receiving employees and truck drivers employed by Respondent at its facility located at 990 Palmyrita Avenue, Riverside, California, excluding all office clerical employees, professional employees, guards and supervisors as defined in the Act.

WE WILL place into effect the wage increase which the unit employees were entitled to receive on 6 October 1985 and WE WILL pay the unit employees backpay, with appropriate interest, for the wages they would have received since that date.

WE WILL bargain collectively and in good faith with the Union as the exclusive collective-bargaining representative of our employees in the unit described above.

WE WILL NOT in any other manner interfere with, restrain, or coerce our employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them by the National Labor Relations Act.

DECISION AND ORDER

BY MEMBERS JOHANSEN, BABSON, AND STEPHENS

On 21 March 1986 Administrative Law Judge Stephen J. Gross issued the attached decision. The Respondent filed exceptions and a supporting brief.

The National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the decision and the record in light of the exceptions and brief and has decided to affirm the judge's rulings, findings, and conclusions as modified and to adopt the recommended Order as modified.

The judge concluded that the Respondent violated Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act by failing to respond to requests by the Union for information. We agree with the judge's conclusion, but only for the reasons set forth below.

The essential facts are as follows. Historically, the Respondent's management kept track of employee status by means of seniority lists, which were updated and reissued several times a year and provided to the Union on request. The record reflects that on 15 June 1984[1] the International Union's Grand Lodge representative, William Layman, requested that the Respondent furnish a seniority list of all permanent and temporary employees with their classifications and home addresses. The Respondent sent Layman a seniority list dated 21 June which designated employee name, social security number, shift, hire date, department, occupation, and phone number. The 21 June seniority list also contained a blank "Comments" column. In the autumn of 1984 Layman concluded that the Union needed additional information from the Respondent. Layman's conclusion was based on his belief that the Respondent's seniority list did not indicate the status of all employees, including employees laid off, and on the fact that a mistake by the Union about the status of an employee had led to an unfair practice charge against the Union.

By letter dated 25 November Layman wrote the Respondent requesting "a new listing of all employees who were terminated, hired, layed [sic] off, discharged, rehired, or quit since June 1, 1984." In that summary paragraph of the 25 November letter Layman requested a "new listing of all new hires, [t]erminations, rehires or quits." The Respondent's general manager, Christopher French, responded by letter dated 4 December that "[t]he company has kept the Union up-to-date on terminations and will supply you a new seniority list as of this date." Enclosed was a copy of a 30 November seniority list indicating employees' hire dates. That copy also contained a "Comments" column in which handwritten notations such as "probationary," "sick," "w/c," "restricted," and "service under Dr [sic] care," appeared beside certain employees' names.

Layman responded by letter dated 7 December, stating:

> [T]he company has not been notifying the Union whenever possible in advance in all cases of discharge. In the future, please forward all copies of terminations of all kinds to Charlotte Nelson, Financial Secretary. All new hires are [sic] reinstatements of employees should also be sent to Mrs. Nelson so she can have a record of who should be paying their financial obligation.

The final sentence of Layman's 7 December letter read, "I have had no response to my letter dated November 25, 1984, so I am making the requests again."

By letter dated 26 December 1984 French advised Layman, "We will discuss the information the Union is requesting" at a grievance meeting set for 8 January 1985. At the meeting, Layman and French briefly discussed the Union's information concerns while, as French testified, "going out the door." Layman complained that the Union was not getting the information it needed and questioned French about employees hired after a Christmas holiday layoff. French promised to "get back to" Layman about Layman's complaints.

The parties stipulated that on 11 February 1985 Layman wrote a letter to the Respondent's labor counsel, Peter Kraft, that stated:

> We have consistently requested the company to give the union secretary the names of new hires, quits, leave of absence [sic], employees out sick or on workmen's compensation and terminations. To date, the company is complying only with the termination notices.[2]

By letter dated 5 March 1985 Kraft wrote Layman advising that Layman's reference to requests for information had been forwarded to French for response and that, to Kraft's knowledge, the Company had always complied with Layman's requests for information in a timely fashion.

[1] All dates refer to 1984 unless otherwise indicated.

[2] French testified that he never saw Layman's 11 February 1985 letter nor heard about it from Kraft.

On 1 March 1985 the Union filed the instant charge. Complaint issued on 17 April 1985 alleging, inter alia, that since 25 November the Respondent had failed and refused to furnish the Union with names of employees who were laid off or rehired since 1 June and that, since 7 December, it had failed to furnish the Union with the names of all employees reinstated.

By letter dated 13 May 1985 Layman requested that French supply "a new and up todate [sic] seniority list" and substantial additional information.[3] On 20 May 1985 French wrote Layman, "Enclosed is the information you requested from your May 13 1985 letter, concerning employee status. . . . feel free to ask any questions in regard to this information." Enclosed was an employee seniority list dated 20 May 1985 plus a 28-page listing of "Information Requested by Union."[4]

Based on the foregoing, the judge found that the requested information about layoff, rehires, and reinstatements was needed by the Union "for the proper performance of its duties as the employees' bargaining representative." Detroit Edison Co. v. NLRB, 440 U.S. 301, 303 (1979). The judge found, however, that "until Layman's letter of 13 May, the manner in which the Union asked for the information made it a virtual certainty that the Union would not get the information it wanted." First, the judge noted that until May 1985 the Union had never specified that it considered seniority lists to be inadequate for its needs. He also found Layman's letters of 25 November and 7 December ambiguous in important respects.[5] Third, the judge found that most of what Layman's November and December letters requested was in fact readily available from information the Respondent had been providing to the Union.[6] Fourth, he found that Layman's 11 February 1985 letter to Kraft "did nothing to reduce the confusion" because it failed to mention the kinds of information specified in the unfair labor practice complaint. Finally, Layman impressed the judge as having "such a combative and suspicious personality that virtually any employer is likely to consider any communication with him, especially oral communication, to be difficult, irritating, and confusing."

On the other hand, the judge found it reasonable for the Union to seek a better source for information than "awkward" seniority lists. Moreover, he found that Layman's 7 December letter and 8 January oral complaint made it clear that the Union wanted information that it thought it was not getting.[7]

The judge concluded that the Respondent "violated Section 8(a)(5), notwithstanding the ambiguity of the Union's requests." He noted that imprecision in the wording of an information request does not entitle an employer to ignore the request. E.g., Postal Service, 276 NLRB 1282, 1287 (1985). More basically, the judge found that the Respondent would have advised the Union of its confusion regarding Layman's December and January requests had the Respondent's attitude been one of good faith. Next addressing "the obstacle to communication presented by Layman's personality," the judge found that the Respondent failed to show it would have been futile to ask the Union for clarification. See Postal Service, 276 NLRB at 1287. Finally, the judge found that the failure of Layman's 11 February letter to refer to the kinds of information specified in the complaint did not excuse the Respondent's obligation to respond to the Union's requests of 7 December and 8 January in a timely fashion.[8] Thus, the judge found that by 11 February the Respondent had already violated the Act. Aeolian Corp., 247 NLRB 1231, 1243–1244 (1980).

While we agree with the judge's ultimate conclusion that the Respondent unlawfully failed to respond to the Union's information requests,[9] we disagree with the judge's finding that "the manner in which the Union asked for the information made it

[3] Layman requested the names, addresses, hiring dates, recall dates, leave of absence and workmen compensation dates, and bargaining unit and layoff status data for all employees who were new hires, on workmen's compensation, on layoff status, or on leave of absence of any kind.

[4] By that time the Respondent had installed a new computer records system from which the requested information was more readily available.

[5] The judge found two problems with Layman's 25 November letter. First, the letter did not specify that Layman wanted something other than a seniority list and could, he believed, be interpreted as a request for an updated seniority list. Second, in one place the letter asked for one set of information while in another place—purportedly a summary of the first—it asked for different information. Although the judge noted that French arguably would have had a duty to clear up the confusion had Layman clearly specified the inadequacy of seniority lists, he concluded that under all the circumstances, including the Union's long-time use of seniority lists, French reasonably could have assumed that Layman's letter was merely a request for an updated seniority list.

Similarly, the judge found that French could be excused for not realizing that Layman was asking for a new kind of information (reinstatements) in his 7 December letter since "the principal purpose of the letter" was to advise the Respondent that information should from then on be sent to the Union's secretary. More importantly, the judge found the last sentence of such letter, i.e., "I have had no response to my letter dated November 25, 1984, so I am making the requests again," factually inaccurate and ambiguous.

[6] This finding was not supported by examples or evidence.

[7] The judge found, however, that it was unclear what "general category of information" the Union was seeking.

[8] The judge also found that Layman's 11 February letter provided no justification for French's failure to respond to the Union's requests inasmuch as French had no knowledge of that letter until the hearing.

[9] The judge's finding of an 8(a)(5) violation was limited to the Respondent's failure to respond to the Union's requests of 7 December and 8 January.

a virtual certainty that the Union would not get the information it wanted."

We find, contrary to the judge, that the Union's 25 November and 7 December requests were sufficiently clear to place the Respondent on notice that the Union was requesting information different from that requested in the past and to place the burden on the Respondent to ask for clarification if it was, in fact, confused by the Union's requests. Compare Postal Service, 276 NLRB at 1287. The 25 November request for a "new listing" was reasonably specific and precise in enumerating what categories of information the Union desired. Although the summary paragraph arguably was inconsistent in enumerating fewer categories of information concerning employee status, we note that French testified that he was not aware of any ambiguity in the letter until the hearing. He testified that when he received Layman's 25 November letter he circled "the summation paragraph, sent it to the personnel gal, and said take care of it." Therefore, any ambiguity in the 25 November letter appears irrelevant to the Respondent's state of mind at the time of receipt and to the sufficiency of the Respondent's response based upon French's understanding of the request. In any event, French never asked Layman for clarification.

Even assuming, as found by the judge, that French reasonably could have construed Layman's 25 November letter as merely a request for an updated seniority list,[10] French's 4 December response, which stated that the Company had kept the Union up-to-date on terminations and enclosed the 30 November seniority list, was inadequate to meet the Union's demands in its 25 November letter. Aside from handwritten notations next to a few names, the list included only hire dates. Thus, notwithstanding the Respondent's contention that it kept the Union current on terminations, the list failed to denote employees laid off, discharged, rehired, or quit since 1 June 1984. Moreover, the list also failed to denote the information requested in the summary paragraph of the 25 November letter. Accordingly, we find French's 4 December letter nonresponsive and insufficient to satisfy the Union's 25 November request.

Regarding Layman's 7 December request, while we agree with the judge that the last sentence of such letter was factually inaccurate and ambiguous to the extent that French did in fact respond to Layman's 25 November request, that sentence, as found elsewhere by the judge, did make it clear that Layman wanted information that he thought he was not getting.[11] Again, French never asked Layman for clarification. Instead, he ignored Layman's 7 December letter until 26 December, when he informed Layman he would discuss the information requests at an 8 January 1985 grievance meeting. As the judge found, Layman briefly complained at the conclusion of the grievance meeting that the Union was not getting the information it needed. Although French promised to "get back to" Layman, he did not do so until mid-May 1985, i.e., after complaint had issued in the instant case and after the Union had made another information request. Again, we find such treatment of Layman's request to be nonresponsive and insufficient to satisfy the Union's 7 December and 8 January 1985 request.

Most significantly, we disagree with the judge's unsupported finding that most of what the Union's November and December letters requested was readily available from information the Respondent had been providing to the Union. Although the Respondent claims that the Union had access to changes in employee status through updated seniority lists available to the shop stewards on request, the evidence establishes that such seniority lists failed to indicate requested changes in employee status, that the Respondent was itself unsure how the requested information could be gleaned from the seniority lists, and that the requested information could not in fact be gleaned accurately from such lists.[12] Moreover, in response to the judge's inquiry as to how the Union would find out about new hires, French responded, "Through the shop stewards," who would either see someone show up or check the seniority listing in the Respondent's offices. The fact, however, that shop stewards may have had access to updated seniority lists on request did not satisfy the Respondent's statutory obligation to furnish Layman the requested information. New York Times Co., 265 NLRB 353 (1982); Kroger Co., 226 NLRB 512 (1976).

Regarding Layman's 11 February 1985 letter to Kraft, we find it unnecessary to pass on the judge's

[10] We note that Layman's prior request on 15 June specifically referred to a seniority list whereas his 25 November letter requested the Respondent to furnish a "new listing" of enumerated information. Therefore, contrary to our dissenting colleague's assertion that the Union's request suggested that it wanted a mere update of prior listings, the Respondent arguably had reason to know that the Union's 25 November request was different from its usual requests and required something more than the provision of another seniority list.

[11] Thus, contrary to our dissenting colleague, whatever may have been the "main thrust" of the 7 December letter, the letter did reiterate the prior request, and there is no basis for an assertion that it was an "untelated afterthought."

[12] In this regard, the record demonstrates that on cross-examination French initially testified that Layman could determine that nobody was laid off at the time he sent the 30 November seniority list because the list showed new hires in mid-November and employees on layoff status would have been recalled prior to the hiring of new employees. Thereafter, the General Counsel demonstrated, and French conceded, that employee Ruth Adams was in fact laid off in November 1984.

finding that such letter "did nothing to reduce the confusion" since we agree with his later finding that by 11 February 1985 the Respondent had already violated the Act. We, however, disavow any implication that Kraft's knowledge of the contents of the letter cannot be imputed to French.

We also note that, in concluding that it was a "virtual certainty" that the Union's requests would not elicit the information it sought, the judge mistakenly relied on the "impression" he formed concerning Layman's "personality," apparently on the basis of Layman's demeanor at the hearing. Whatever the accuracy or inaccuracy of this "impression," it is immaterial to the essential questions presented here: the sufficiency of the Union's written requests for information and the adequacy of the Respondent's response.

In agreeing with the judge's finding of an 8(a)(5) violation, we note that it is well settled that when a request for relevant information adequately informs the employer of the data needed, the employer must supply the information or adequately explain why it is unable to comply. Kroger Co., 226 NLRB at 513. We have already found that the Union's requests for information were adequate to inform the Respondent of the data needed. The Respondent, however, gave no explanation for not complying with the Union's initial requests. Although the Respondent eventually complied with the Union's requests in May 1985, it never informed the Union that it was unable to provide the requested information earlier. Moreover, this belated compliance, which occurred after issuance of the unfair labor practice complaint, cannot now retroactively cure the unlawful refusal to supply the information. U.S. Gypsum Co., 200 NLRB 305, 308 (1972); see also Postal Service, 276 NLRB at 1288. The Respondent's continued inattention to Layman's requests therefore was unjustified. Accordingly, we conclude, as alleged in the complaint, that since 25 November and 7 December the Respondent has refused to provide the Union with information in violation of Section 8(a)(5) and (1).

In light of the above, we therefore disagree with the judge's statement in the remedy section of his decision that the "Respondent's only wrongdoing was its failure to communicate with the Union about Respondent's lack of understanding of the Union's information requests." Furthermore, and in view of the Respondent's compliance on 20 May after the Union's 13 May request, we disagree with the judge's recommendation to remedy the Respondent's violation of the Act by requiring it to "respond in timely fashion to future Union requests for information." A cease-and-desist order will fully remedy the violation found herein.

ORDER

The National Labor Relations Board adopts the recommended Order of the administrative law judge as modified below and orders that the Respondent, Interstate Food Processing Corp., Fort Fairfield, Maine, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall take the action set forth in the Order as modified.

1. Delete paragraph 2(a).

2. Substitute the attached notice for that of the administrative law judge.

MEMBER JOHANSEN, dissenting.

I am not persuaded that a violation has been established. For years prior to the Union's 25 November 1984 request for information, the Respondent had complied with similar requests by providing an updated seniority list, as it did here on 4 December. The Respondent itself relied solely on these lists for information on employee status. The Union's 25 November 1984 request asked for a "new listing," suggesting that it wanted an update of the prior listings. The main thrust of the Union's next communication, a 7 December 1984 letter, was to direct the Respondent to keep the Union's financial secretary abreast in the future of terminations, hirings, and reinstatements so that she could keep a record of employees owing union dues. The reference in that letter to Union Representative Layman's 25 November 1984 request for information appears to be an unrelated afterthought, and reasonably could be interpreted as indicating Layman's mistaken belief that there had been no response to his request.

The Union did not take advantage of the Respondent's 26 December offer to discuss the Union's request for information at a scheduled 8 January 1985 meeting and specify what information the Union needed. It appears that the Union's 11 February 1985 letter to the Respondent's attorney refers to its desire that the union secretary be informed of personnel action to assess dues liability, and not to Layman's 24 November 1984 request for a listing of the status of all employees. Moreover, the letter does not refer to the information that the complaint alleges the Respondent failed to provide.

In my view, the evidence indicates that the Respondent complied in good faith with the Union's request by providing an updated seniority list and proves nothing beyond confusion. I am unable to conclude that the burden rested with the Respondent, and not the Union, to clarify the Union's request, when the Union was departing from the sole manner in which the parties had traditionally shared the kind of information sought. Once the complaint issued clearly setting forth the information sought, the Respondent furnished it, evidencing its good faith. That the Respondent eventually sent the Union a detailed breakdown of the requested information does not change my view. The breakdown was expressly in response to the Union's more specific 13 May 1985 information request. In addition, it was made possible by a newly installed computer system designed to allow the Respondent itself access to more complete employee data than previously had been the case. Accordingly, I dissent from my colleagues' conclusion that the Respondent violated Section 8(a)(5) of the Act.

An Agency of the United States Government

The National Labor Relations Board has found that we violated the National Labor Relations Act and has ordered us to post and abide by this notice.

WE WILL NOT refuse to bargain collectively with your Union, Local Lodge No. 1198, District Lodge No. 99, International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers, AFL–CIO, by failing to respond to requests by the Union for information.

WE WILL NOT in any like or related manner interfere with, restrain, or coerce you in the exercise of the rights guaranteed you by Section 7 of the Act.

INTERSTATE FOOD PROCESSING CORP.

Robert Pulcini, Esq., for the General Counsel.
Peter R. Kraft, Esq., of Portland Maine, for the Respondent.
William H. Layman, Grand Lodge Representative, of York, Maine, for the Charging Party.

DECISION

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

STEPHEN J. GROSS, Administrative Law Judge. Respondent Interstate Food Processing Corporation (Respondent or IFP) processes vegetables at a plant in Fort Fairfield, Maine. Its employees are represented by Local Lodge No. 1198, District Lodge No. 99, International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers, AFL–CIO (the Union).[1]

The General Counsel alleges that Respondent: (1) made coercive statements to employees in violation of Section 8(a)(1) of the National Labor Relations Act (the Act); and (2) failed to provide information to the Union that the Union had requested, in violation of Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act.[2] Respondent denies that it has violated the Act in any respect.

I heard the case in Presque Isle, Maine, on 12 and 13 June 1985. The General Counsel subsequently moved to reopen the hearing; but I denied that motion by Order dated 26 September 1985. The General Counsel and Respondent have filed briefs.

I. FRENCH'S CONVERSATION WITH GALLOP

A group of Respondent's employees filed a deauthorization petition with the Board in July 1984. That led to an election on 1 November 1984. The weeks prior to the election were tumultuous at the IFP plant. Feelings ran deep among both the prounion and antiunion employee groups, and electioneering led to spats between employees.

A. The Poirier Incident

Theresa Poirier is an IFP employee and is a prounion member of the bargaining unit. Hope Doughty, another IFP employee, opposed the Union. About 7 October 1984 Doughty called Respondent's general manager, Christopher French, to say that Poirier "was bothering her and it was making her very uncomfortable during work and it was difficult for her to do her job." Doughty sounded very upset. About the same time another employee called French, referred to Poirier, and said that Doughty "was extremely upset about what was going on.[3]

Lawrence Gallop is president of the Union and is an IFP employee. According to undisputed testimony, Gallop frequently plays a "peacemaker" role in the plant. And when French gets reports of union adherents bothering other employees about union-related matters he routinely asks Gallop to investigate. (French calls on the leader of the antiunion group to investigate reports of problems being caused by antiunion employees.) Accordingly, on 10 October French spoke to Gallop about Poirier.

French repeated what Doughty had said about Poirier and expressed his concern about a possible decline in production stemming from the turmoil over the deauthorization election. French went on to tell Gallop to investigate Doughty's complaint. If it turned out that Poirier was "harassing" Doughty, said French, Gallop should tell Poirier that if she continued that conduct she would be disciplined. French claims that he told Gallop that his only concern was employee conduct during working time, but I do not credit that testimony.[4]

[1] The bargaining unit consists of: All employees employed by Respondent at its Fort Fairfield processing plant, but excluding executives, clerical and office employees, maintenance employees, guards and supervisors as defined by the National Labor Relations Act. Respondent admits that it is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of the Act, that the Union is a labor organization for purposes of Sec. 2(5) of the Act, and that the foregoing unit constitutes a unit appropriate for the purposes of collective bargaining within the meaning of Sec. 9(b) of the Act.

[2] The Union filed its unfair labor practice charge on 1 March 1985. The complaint issued on 17 April 1985.

[3] The telephone call quotations are from French's testimony.

[4] Gallop testified that French referred to Doughty as a "loyal employee." I do not credit Gallop in that respect. "Loyal employee" allegations, and the meaning to be attributed to the term "loyal employee," are discussed further, below.

French never raised the matter again. Months after his conversation with French about the Poirier incident, Gallop reported to French that Poirier had not been at fault, a report that French did not question. Poirier was never disciplined in any way about the incident.

B. Cyr and Dorr

On 25 October French spoke to Gallop about the activities of Clyde Cyr and Beverly Dorr. In many respects French's statements about Cyr and Dorr were similar to his statements to Gallop about Poirier.

French told Gallop that employees were complaining about the extent to which Cyr and Dorr were talking to other employees in a working area of the plant about union and deauthorization matters. French told Gallop to check out those complaints. If the complaints were accurate, said French, Gallop was to "go out and tell them to keep their mouths shut." In the course of the conversation French threatened to "file charges if the union members continued to talk to people in the plant about union business." (French did not, however, say what "charges" he was talking about.) As in the Poirier case, French did not tell Gallop that his concern was limited to Cyr's and Dorr's behavior during working time.

Gallop subsequently did tell Cyr and Dorr "to calm down, keep their remarks to themselves." Neither Cyr nor Dorr was ever disciplined for the activities to which French referred.[5]

C. Conclusion—French's Conversations with Gallop

French's threats of discipline. Once again the Board is faced with the need to work out "an adjustment" between, on the one hand, the protected right of employees to seek to persuade their fellow employees to support (or oppose) their union and, on the other, the "right of employers to maintain discipline in their establishments" and the right of an individual employee to be free from the improper behavior of other employees with whom he or she disagrees.[6] Here there is no doubt that Gallop could have interpreted French's remarks as a threat that any employee who talked to another employee about the upcoming deauthorization election would be disciplined if the employee on the receiving end of the discussion considered the talk to be harassment, however mild the discussion may in fact have been, and even if the discussion took place on nonworking time.[7]

On the other hand, while French's remarks could have been interpreted that way, they did not have to be. French's remarks were reasonably susceptible to the interpretation that his concern was preventing aggravated kinds of harassment of employees that occurred while the employees were at work. (In that latter respect French referred to Doughty's belief that her work was suffering and to the reports that Cyr's and Dorr's activities took place in working areas of the plant.) And Gallop had some responsibility for clarifying the ambiguity. Gallop, after all, was president of the Union, was a senior employee, and had often been called on to resolve disputes between employees. Moreover, French did not tell Gallop that he (French) knew what the facts were. Rather, French told Gallop to find out what they were. That put Gallop in the position of being able to report back to French that the complaining employees had no basis for their gripes (which, in the case of the Poirier-Doughty incident, is what he did). Finally, the General Counsel does not contend that French's remarks to Gallop were the product of union animus, and the record would not support any such contention. Rather, it appears to me that French talked to Gallop about the complaints directed at Poirier, Cyr, and Dorr solely to remedy matters French thought might hurt plant efficiency and because employees on the receiving end of Poirier's, Cry's, and Dorr's remarks had asked French for help.

Under all these circumstances, my conclusion is that those remarks did not violate the Act.[8]

French's threat to "file charges." As the General Counsel contends, an employer's threat to "file charges" against an employee can violate the Act. Consolidation Coal Co., 266 NLRB 670, 675–676 (1983). But such threats do not necessarily constitute violations; they must be evaluated in light of the circumstances in which they were made. Here the considerations applicable to French's threats of discipline seem equally applicable to his threat to file charges. Accordingly my recommendation is that the Board dismiss this allegation too.

It is worth noting, moreover, that French's threat to file charges would not necessarily be a violation of the Act even if his threats to discipline employees were. One consideration is that French's statement about filing charges could readily be understood to mean filing unfair labor practice charges with the Board. (The General Counsel, in fact, does interpret French's statement that way: see G.C. Br. at 5.) In contrast, in all of the cases of which I am aware in which an employer was held to have violated the Act by threatening litigation, the employer threatened criminal or civil action.[9] Another consideration is that French made the threat to the Union's president (whom French did not accuse of personally engaging in any of the alleged harassment). Thus it is as [5] Gallop and French were the only witnesses to the two conversations discussed above. The foregoing description of those conversations is based on Gallop's and French's testimony and on my determination about which of the two witnesses seemed more credible where there were conflicts in that testimony.

As stated above, in all these cases the employer threatened civil or criminal litigation, not litigation before the Board.

reasonable to interpret French's statement as a threat to file charges against the Union as it is to interpret it as a threat to bring action against individual employees. Yet the cases on the subject refer to employer threats against employees, not unions.[10]

In sum, French's statement can reasonably be interpreted as a threat to file unfair labor practice charges against the Union. And it is far from clear that that kind of threat, made to a union official, ought to be deemed a violation of the Act except, perhaps, under egregious circumstances.

II. THE CYR-LEVESQUE INCIDENT AND ITS AFTERMATH

Phyllis Cyr is an IFP employee and an officer of the Union. On the day of the deauthorization election Cyr challenged the ballot of another employee who, at the time of the election, was not working due to a work-related injury. Dawn Levesque, also in IFP employee, is the leader of the antiunion faction and had petitioned for deauthorization of the Union. The day after the election, in the plant, Levesque loudly insulted Cyr for the ballot challenge. Cyr immediately reported the incident to Respondent's management.

Cyr had been involved in a similar incident about a year earlier, except on that occasion she was the one hurling the insults. As a result of that behavior Cyr received a written warning. Cyr accordingly expected that Respondent would discipline Levesque in a similar manner. But that did not happen. Instead Levesque received only a "verbal warning," which at IFP is a lesser form of punishment.

Cyr thereupon filed a grievance, claiming disparate threatment. Her grievance demanded removal of the written warning from her record. As it turns out, Respondent's actions were not disparate. (At IFP a first incidence of misbehavior results in a verbal warning. A second occurrence results in a written warning. Cyr's misbehavior was her second; Levesque's was her first.) The General Counsel does not argue otherwise. The General Counsel's contention is, instead, that French used language that implied that Respondent was not taking disciplinary action against Levesque because Levesque was opposed to the Union.

The basis of the General Counsel's claim is testimony by Gallop and by the Union's Grand Lodge representative, William Layman, that, during a meeting with French held to consider Cyr's grievance, French on the one hand did not advise Gallop or Layman that Levesque had already received a verbal warning and, on the other hand, referred to Levesque as a "loyal employee." (That claimed reference to "loyal employee" is significant because, as all parties agree, everyone in Respondent's plant understands that the term refers to any employee who crossed the picket line to work during a strike called by the Union in 1983.) Gallop's recollection was that at the conclusion of the discussion of the grievance, French said that he would "talk to" Levesque about the 2 November incident and, somewhere in the course of that conversation, referred to Levesque as a loyal employee. As Layman remembered the circumstances, after he told French that the Union wanted the same treatment for all employees, French responded, "Dawn [Levesque] is one of [Respondent's] loyal employees."

French denied that anything of the sort occurred. He testified that he did tell Gallop and Layman that Levesque had received a verbal warning and that he did not use the term "loyal employee." In that latter regard, French claimed that it was union officials who used the term frequently—as an ironic reference to employees who refused to support the strike against Respondent.

The Cyr-Levesque Incident—Conclusion

The General Counsel's contention that Respondent implied that it was favoring antiunion employees comes down to the question of whether French did in fact use the term "loyal employee." Layman and Gallop testified that French did use the term, and their testimony was reasonably consistent with each other's. Gallop, moreover, was a credible witness. (My impression of Layman, on the other hand, is that he has trouble keeping his facts straight.) But French's testimony was no less credible than Gallop's. From what I saw of French, it would be entirely out of character for him to use any expression like "loyal employee," especially when dealing with union representatives. Under the circumstances, therefore, I cannot conclude that the General Counsel has carried her burden of proof.

III. THE GUIMOND INCIDENT

Shortly before the deauthorization election the Union sent letters to Respondent's employees suggesting that only the Union's presence kept Respondent from reducing wages to minimum wage levels and from eliminating various employees benefits. Respondent, in reply, called groups of 20 to 30 employees into the plant's conference room where French and Respondent's labor counsel, Peter Kraft, spoke to them. Respondent deemed the Union's allegations to be false, and French and Kraft made that clear in the course of their comments.

Employee Gerard Guimond attended one of those meetings. The meeting proceeded without incident until Kraft had completed his remarks and French asked for questions from the employees. Management's remarks had infuriated Guimond, and that the juncture Guimond pointed at French and shouted "you're a goddamn liar." French's response to Guimond was "I understand your opinion, we'll discuss this later."

When the meeting ended French and Kraft decided to have that discussion with Guimond forthwith. Accordingly, French and Kraft stepped out of the conference room in the direction of Guimond's work station, and French told Guimond's foreman, Fred Jalbert, to have Guimond return to the conference room. Jalbert did as he was ordered, telling Guimond that French and Kraft wanted to speak to him. Guimond refused to go.

When Jalbert advised French of Guimond's refusal, French told Jalbert to repeat the order. Jalbert did, and on this second go-round Guimond did leave his work station (which was about 30 feet from the conference room) and move toward French and Kraft. But Guimond refused the order to enter the conference room.

That much of the Guimond incident is reasonably clear (notwithstanding some conflicts in testimony). At this point, however, the facts become murky. But as best I can determine, both Kraft and French spoke to Guimond, referring to his "liar" accusation, and French personally ordered Guimond to go into the conference room. Guimond responded by noisily claiming that French had no right to give such an order and by denying that he had called French a liar. (Guimond claimed that he called IFP—not French—a liar.) A loud altercation ensued. French repeatedly and at high volume ordered Guimond into the conference room and threatened Guimond with discharge if Guimond continued to disobey French's order. Guimond nonetheless refused to step into the conference room.

Gallop arrived on the scene (having been summond by another employee) and convinced Guimond to go into the conference room. (Gallop accompanied Guimond into the conference room.) Kraft thereupon told Guimond that Guimond should not have called French a liar in front of a group of employees. French reiterated that message in stronger terms, telling Guimond that French "could not tolerate a person [calling] him a liar because there [were] other employees that heard that . . . conversation and it didn't look right for an employee to be calling a supervisor, a general manager, a liar."[11]

After French permitted Guimond to return to his work station, French made a record of the incident, indicating that Guimond had received a verbal warning for "failure to obey a direct command." Guimond was not otherwise disciplined.

The Guimond Incident—Conclusion

Guimond's "you're a goddam liar" accusation was protected by the Act. It was neither "flagrant" nor "violent," there was nothing improper about Guimond's motives, and it plainly was a "spontaneous protest" uttered in "the heat of the moment."[12] French found the remark particularly offensive because it was made directly to him in the presence of numerous other employees and thus could affect his status in the employees' eyes. But that aspect of Guimond's utterance is by no means sufficient to deny it the Act's protection.[13]

The question is whether any of management's responses to Guimond's protected utterance violated the Act. My conclusion is that while the question is a close one, none of those responses was unlawful.

The most serious of management's responses was French's statement that he "could not tolerate" Guimond calling him a liar in front of other employees. If that did not violate the Act, none of management's other responses did either. (Those other responses: French's statement, made immediately after Guimond's accusation, that "we'll discuss this later"; the orders that Guimond return to the conference room; and Kraft's statement that Guimond should not have called French a liar in front of other employees.)There is no doubt that French's loud declaration that he "could not tolerate" behavior that the Act protects could readily be deemed to be coercive. It suggests that Respondent would fire Guimond were Guimond to repeat such action. (Indeed that is how Guimond interpreted French's remarks.) French made the statement while in the company of respondent's lawyer. And neither French nor Kraft advised Guimond that Respondent recognized that Guimond had the right to have said what he did.

But I think French's statement nonetheless falls within the range of permissible management responses. First, Respondent did not in fact discipline Guimond for his accusation or even explicitly warn Guimond that a repetition of his behavior would result in discipline.[14] (I will discuss below the verbal warning French gave Guimond.) Second, while Guimond was entitled to be free from being disciplined for his comment, for several reasons he was not entitled to avoid an angry retort from management: (1) virtually anyone on the receiving end of an angrily shouted "you're a goddam liar" would react strongly; (2) Guimond's accusation was inappropriate to the circumstances in that there is no indication that either Kraft or French used comparable language or tone of voice in the discussion that led up to Guimond's accusation; and (3) Guimond's repeated refusals to obey the orders of Jalbert and French had the inevitable result of further upsetting an already angry French. It would be altogether unrealistic to interpret the Act as requiring a manager to choose his phrases carefully under these emotionally charged circumstances—especially where, as here, the employees involved have a major hand in creating that emotional charge. Thus while French's language was stronger than one might wish, my recommendation is that the Board conclude that it did not violate the Act.[15]

As a last matter, I think that French's "verbal warning" of Guimond for failing to obey a direct command was lawful. I have considered the fact that Jalbert's and French's orders to return to the conference room could themselves be deemed coercive. Guimond certainly was freightened by them. (Guimond desperately wanted to avoid facing French because he knew that French was angry about the "liar" accusation). But French was entitled to talk to Guimond about Guimond's accusation and to order Guimond to go to a location where they could have the talk. I have also considered whether that discipline might have been at least partially a function of French's anger about Guimond's accusation. But Guimond did repeatedly disobey both Jalbert and French, and the nature of the discipline certainly was not so harsh as to suggest that French was responding to something more than Guimond's insubordination.

[15] This discussion had proceeded on the assumption that Respondent would have violated the Act had management explicitly threatened to discipline Guimond if he made a similar accusation in the future. It is not altogether clear, however, that that assumption is a valid one. The fact that the Act protects, on one occasion, an employee's public accusation that the employer's general manager is a "goddam liar" does not necessarily mean that a second instance of such behavior would also be protected. It may be that, as in the case of some other kinds of behavior, an employee is entitled to only one such bite at the apple. See, e.g., Mashkin Freight Lines, 261 NLRB 1473, 1477 fn. 14 (1982).

IV. GENERAL COUNSEL'S CONTENTION THAT RESPONDENT VIOLATED SECTION 8(A)(5) BY FAILING TO PROVIDE INFORMATION TO THE UNION

For many years the only document that Respondent's management used to keep track of the status of its employees (in respect to such matters as seniority, position in the plant, out sick or on workers' compensation, in the military, and the like) was a seniority list that IFP reissued several times a year. Respondent provided copies of the seniority lists to the Union on request and, until the autumn of 1984, the Union found the seniority lists to be adequate for its purposes.

A. The Union's Letter of 25 November

In the autumn of 1984 the Union's Grand Lodge representative, William Layman, concluded that the Union needed additional information from Respondent. (One reason for that conclusion: a mistake by the Union about the status of an IFP employee had led to a charge that the Union committed an unfair labor practice against the employee. Another reason: Layman was not aware that Respondent's seniority lists showed the status of all employees, including employees on layoff.) Accordingly, on 25 November 1984 Layman wrote to French, requesting additional information.

According to the General Counsel, in that letter the Union requested the names of employees who had been laid off or rehired, and Respondent unlawfully failed to provide the information. Unfortunately the facts associated with that allegation are extraordinarily ambiguous.

Layman's 25 November letter did in fact request the information that the General Counsel claims it asked for. But there were two problems with the letter. First, it did not specify that Layman wanted something other than a seniority list. In fact, the letter could be read as indicating that what Layman wanted was an updated seniority list. And second, in one place the letter asks for one set of information while in another place—purportedly a summary of the first—the letter asks for another set of information.

In that latter respect, the first request for information in the 25 November letter was as follows: "We further request a new listing of all employees who were terminated, hired, laid off, discharged, rehired or quit since June 1, 1984." But the last paragraph of the letter reads: "To sum up this correspondence, we have . . . [made a] [r]equest for new listing of all new hires, [t]erminations, rehires or quits."

The table below compares the two parts of the letter.

Information Requested in First Reference	Information Requested in Summary Line terminated	terminations
hired	new hires discharged laid off
rehired	rehires
quit	quits

Most conspicuously, of course, in one place Layman's letter requests layoff information; in the other it does not.

If Layman's letter had been clear that Layman considered seniority lists inadequate for his needs, French arguably would have come under a duty to clear up the confusion. But in light of all the circumstances, including the Union's longtime use of seniority list, my conclusion is that French could resonably have assumed that Layman's letter was merely a request for an updated seniority list. And, in fact, on 4 December French did send a new seniority list to Layman. (The relevant part of French's covering letter reads: "The Company has kept the Union up-to-date on terminations and will supply you a new seniority list as of this date.")

B. The Union's Letter of 7 December

Layman responded to French's 4 December letter with a letter dated 7 December 1984. The General Counsel alleges that in that letter the Union asked for the names of all "reinstated" employees and that Respondent failed to provide the information.

The 7 December letter did refer to information about reinstatements. But French can be excused for not realizing that Layman was asking for a new kind of information. The problem was that the principal purpose of the letter seemed to be to advise Respondent that the information that IFP had been sending to Layman should henceforth be sent to another union official, Charlotte Nelson. Thus the only reference to reinstatements was as follows:

> In the future, please forward all copies of terminations to Charlotte Nelson, Financial Secretary. All new hires are [sic] reinstatements of employees should also be sent to Mrs. Nelson . . . .

The last sentence in the letter seems to me to have greater significance to this proceeding. The sentence reads: "I have had no response to my letter dated November 25, 1984, so I am making the requests again."

As Respondent contends, that last sentence "was factually inaccurate as well as ambiguous."[16] But French did not say that to Layman or to anyone else associated with the Union. What French did do was advise Layman, by letter dated 26 December, that French would "discuss the information the Union is requesting" at a grievance meeting set for 8 January. (The grievance matter was unrelated to the Union's information requests.) While that response was better than none at all, it not only failed to provide Layman with the information he wanted, it failed to inform Layman why Respondent was not providing that information.

[16] IFP Br. at 5.

C. The Union's 8 January 1985 Oral Request for Information

Layman and French met on 8 January, as planned, to consider the grievance matter. They did not discuss the Union's information concerns until the conclusion of the meeting—"going out the door," as French put it. The discussion was brief. Layman complained that, among other things, the Union was not getting the information it needed. French said that he would "get back to" Layman about Layman's complaints, but he never did.

D. The Union's letter of 11 February 1985

On 11 February Layman wrote to Respondent's labor counsel, Peter Kraft, to complain that Respondent was not providing the Union with information that the Union needed. But Layman's letter did not refer to the kinds of information that are the subject of the complaint (layoffs, rehires, and reinstatements). Rather, it read:

> We have consistently requested the company to give the union secretary the names of new hires, quits, leave of absence, employees out sick or on workmen's compensation and terminations. To date, the company is complying only with the termination notices.

Kraft, in response, wrote to Layman 3 weeks later in a letter that concluded: "To my knowledge the Company has always complied with your requests for information in a good timely fashion in spite of your insulting, unprofessional style.

E. The Union's letter of 13 May 1985

By letter dated 13 May Layman asked French for an up-to-date seniority list and, in addition, for substantial additional information.

Not long before Layman sent that letter to Respondent, Respondent had installed a new information retrieval system that gave Respondent ready access to much more complete employee data than had previously been the case. Because of the relative clarity of the Union's 13 May letter and because of Respondent's new information system, Respondent was in a position to provide the Union with the information the Union sought. Accordingly, on 20 May French sent Layman a new seniority list and, additionally, a 28-page listing of "Information Requested by Union." While the Union claims that some of that information is inaccurate, it is clear that the data reasonably met the Union's needs.

V. CONCLUSION—THE ALLEGED FAILURE TO BARGAIN

There is no doubt that information about layoffs, rehires, and reinstatements was needed by the Union "for the proper performances of its duties as the employees' bargaining representative." Detroit Edison Co. v. NLRB, 440 U.S. 301, 303 (1979). But until Layman's letter of 13 May, the manner in which the Union asked for the information made it a virtual certainty that the Union would not get the information it wanted. For one thing, until that May letter the Union never did specify that it considered seniority lists to be inadequate for its needs. For another, even apart from that first difficulty, Layman's letters of 25 November and 7 December were ambiguous in important respects. Third, most of what Layman's November and December letters said that the Union needed was in fact readily available from information that IFP had been providing to the Union. Fourth, Layman's letter to Kraft (in February) did nothing to reduce the confusion since it made no mention of the kinds of information the General Counsel claims that Respondent was failing to provide. Finally, the impression I got at the hearing is that Layman has such a combative and suspicious personality that virtually any employer is likely to consider any communication with him, especially oral communication, to be difficult, irritating, and confusing.

On the other hand, seniority lists were an awkward way for the Union to obtain information about rehirings and reinstatements, and it was reasonable for the Union to seek a better source for that information. Moreover Layman did make it clear that he wanted information that he thought he was not getting—in his letter of 7 December and his oral complaint of 8 January.

The parties have not cited any case similar to this one, and my research has found none. The problem is the ambiguity of Layman's requests for information. In every request-for-information case that I have read, the union at least made clear what general category of information it was seeking. Here that was not the case. All Respondent could be expected to have known was that the Union believed that it did not have some sort of information that the Union thought it needed.

My conclusion is that Respondent violated Section 8(a)(5), notwithstanding the ambiguity of the Union's requests.

For one thing, in cases involving imprecise union requests for information, the Board has concluded that such imprecision does not entitle the employer to ignore the requests. E.g., Postal Service, 276 NLRB 1282, 1285 (1985).

A more basic consideration is that the Act requires an employer to operate "in good faith" when bargaining collectively. That requirement of good faith surely also applies to the attitude with which an employer considers a union's requests for information. And as I add up the facts, Respondent would in the very least have advised the Union of its confusion about Layman's December and January requests had Respondent's attitude been one of good faith, of wanting its relationship with the Union to be characterized by "constructive, open discussions." H. K. Porter Co., 397 U.S. 99, 103 (1970).

Two other points remain for consideration.

One concerns the obstacle to communication presented by Layman's personality. But while it is understandable that Respondent found it difficult to deal with Layman, there has been no showing that Respondent had any basis for concluding that it would have been futile to ask the Union for clarification. See Postal Service, above.

The second point involves Layman's 11 February letter to Kraft. That letter fails to mention any of the kinds of information to which the complaint refers (rehires, reinstatements, and layoffs). It could thus be argued that the letter amounted to a withdrawal by the Union of its requests for the kinds of information that are the subject of the complaint, thereby ending any obligation on Respondent's part to provide such information. But for two reasons I think that that letter does not excuse Respondent's failure to respond to the Union's requests of 7 December and 8 January. First, Respondent had an obligation to respond in a timely fashion to those requests. Aeolian Corp., 247 NLRB 1231, 1243–1244 (1980). By 11 February, therefore, Respondent had already violated the Act. Second, French, not Kraft, was responsible for providing the Union with information. But French did not learn of Layman's 11 February letter until the hearing. Thus, that letter provides no justification for French's failure to respond to the Union's requests.

THE REMEDY

Attaching a remedy to Respondent's violation of Section 8(a)(5) is awkward in that the violation is a peculiar one: Respondent's only wrongdoing was its failure to communicate with the Union about Respondent's lack of understanding of the Union's information requests. Moreover, Respondent did provide the information that the Union wanted as soon as the Union requested the information unambiguously. Under the circumstances the recommended Order will not require that Respondent furnish information to the Union (which is the typical order in cases involving information requests by a union). Rather, the recommended Order will require Respondent to: (a) cease and desist from failing to respond to requests by the Union for information; and (b) respond in timely fashion to future union requests for information.

The recommended Order will, in addition, require Respondent to post a notice advising of the Board's action.

On these findings of fact and conclusions of law and on the entire record, I issue the following recommended[17]

ORDER

The Respondent Interstate Food Processing Corporation, Fort Fairfield, Maine, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall

1. Cease and desist from

(a) Failing to bargain collectively with Local Lodge No. 1198, District Lodge No. 99, International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers, AFL–CIO by failing to respond to requests by the Union for information.

(b) In any like or related manner interfering with, coercing, or restraining employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them by Section 7 of the Act.

2. Take the following affirmative action necessary to effectuate the policies of the Act.

(a) Respond in a timely fashion to requests by the Union for information.

(b) Post at its facility in Fort Fairfield, Maine, copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix."[18] Copies of the notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 1, after being signed by Respondent's representative, shall be posted by Respondent immediately upon receipt and maintain for 60 consecutive days in conspicuous places including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Respondent shall take reasonable steps to ensure that the notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(c) Notify the Regional Director in writing within 20 days from the date of this Order what steps Respondent has taken to comply.

IT IS FURTHER RECOMMENDED that the complaint is dismissed insofar as it alleges violations of the Act not specifically found.

[17] If no exceptions are filed as provided by Sec. 102.46 of the Board's Rules and Regulations, the findings, conclusions, and recommended Order shall, as provided in Sec. 102.48 of the Rules, be adopted by the Board and all objections to them shall be deemed waived for all purposes.

[18] If this Order is enforced by a judgment of a United States court of appeals, the words in the notice reading "Posted by Order of the National Labor Relations Board" shall read "Posted Pursuant to a Judgment of the United States Court of Appeals Enforcing an Order of the National Labor Relations Board."

24 March 1987

DECISION AND ORDER

BY CHAIRMAN DOTSON AND MEMBERS JOHANSEN AND STEPHENS

On 11 August 1986 Administrative Law Judge Richard J. Linton issued the attached decision. The Respondent filed exceptions and a supporting brief.

The National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the decision and the record in light of the exceptions and brief and has decided to affirm the judge's rulings, findings,[1] and conclusions[2] and to adopt the recommended Order,[3] as modified.

ORDER

The National Labor Relations Board adopts the recommended Order of the administrative law judge as modified below and orders that the Respondent, United Steel Erectors, Inc., Tulsa, Oklahoma, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall take the action set forth in the Order as modified.

Substitute the following for paragraph 2(c).

"(c) Notify the Regional Director in writing within 20 days from the date of this Order what steps the Respondent has taken to comply."

Ruth Small, Esq., for the General Counsel.
David E. Stretcher and Katie J. Colopy, Esqs. (Conner & Winters), of Tulsa, Oklahoma, for the Respondent.
Gerald Ellis, Business Manager, Operating Engineers Local 627, of Tulsa, Oklahoma.

DECISION

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

RICHARD J. LINTON, Administrative Law Judge. In this refusal-to-bargain case I find that the members of a contractors association privately agreed their assignments of bargaining rights to the Association would be nonbinding. However, because I find Respondent clothed the Association with apparent authority to act on its behalf, I find that Respondent unlawfully refused to sign the 1985–1987 contract reached 9 May 1985 between the Union and the Association. I order Respondent to sign the contract and to give effect to its terms retroactive to 1 June 1985.

This case was tried before me in Tulsa, Oklahoma, on 31 March and 1 April 1986 pursuant to the 12 February 1986 complaint issued by the General Counsel of the National Labor Relations Board through the Regional Director for Region 16 of the Board. The complaint is based on a charge filed 31 December 1985 by International Union of Operating Engineers Locals 627A and 627B, AFL–CIO (Union, Local 627, or Charging Party) against United Steel Erectors, Inc. (Respondent or USE).[1]

In the complaint the General Counsel alleges that Respondent violated Section 8(a)(5) of the Act by refusing to execute a contract reached between it and the Oklahoma Commercial and Industrial Builders and Steel Erectors Association (Association or OCIBSEA) on 9 May.

By its answer Respondent admits certain factual matters but denies violating the Act.

On the entire record, including my observation of the demeanor of the witnesses, and after due consideration of the briefs filed by the General Counsel[2] and the Respondent, I make the following

FINDINGS OF FACT

I. JURISDICTION

An Oklahoma corporation with an office in Tulsa, Oklahoma, USE is engaged in the business of crane rental, rigging, and structural steel. During the past 12 months, USE purchased and received at its Tulsa (Oklahoma) facility goods and materials valued in excess of

[1] In adopting the judge's decision, we make the following correction: the second par. of sec. III,A,4, of the decision should refer to the term of the negotiated collective-bargaining agreement as "1985–1987."

[2] In its exceptions, the Respondent contests the Union's status as the exclusive collective-bargaining representative of its employees. In the supporting brief, the Respondent notes that the Union was certified by the Board on 11 July 1986, then solely asserts, with respect to the Union's representative status, that "nothing alleged or argued in this case is intended to waive its right to contest the certification in Case No. 16–RC–8814." In agreeing with the judge's conclusion that the Union is the exclusive representative of the Respondent's employees in an appropriate unit, we note that the Respondent has raised no issue or argument in its exceptions or brief that would cause the Board to reexamine the decision made in the representation proceeding.

We agree with the judge's finding that the Respondent clothed the Oklahoma Commercial and Industrial Steel Erectors Association (the Association) with the apparent authority to act on its behalf and, in so doing, conclude that this case is distinguished from Crane Sheet Metal, 248 NLRB 75 (1980), enf. denied 675 F.2d 256 (10th Cir. 1982). We note that here the Respondent signed a form stating that it assigned to the Association "all of his or its rights to bargain collectively in the negotiations for a new labor agreement with the International Union of Operating Engineers Local 627," knowing that regardless of whatever private understanding it had, the Association would or might furnish the form to the Union. We find this to be overt conduct on the part of the Respondent showing an apparent intent to clothe the Association with the authority to negotiate on its behalf a binding collective-bargaining agreement. Such an overt course of conduct was not present in Crane Sheet Metal.

[3] The Respondent's request for oral argument is denied as the record, exceptions, and brief adequately present the issues and the positions of the parties.

The judge granted the General Counsel's request that the order include a visitatorial clause authorizing the Board, for compliance purposes, to obtain discovery from the Respondent under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure under the supervision of the United States court of appeals enforcing the Order. We have concluded that under the circumstances of this case such a clause is not warranted. We shall modify the recommended Order accordingly.

[1] All dates are 1985 unless otherwise indicated.

[2] The General Counsel included a proposed notice to employees and order with her brief.

$50,000 directly from sources located outside Oklahoma. Respondent USE admits, and I find, that it is an employer within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

II. THE LABOR ORGANIZATION INVOLVED

Respondent admits, and I find, that International Union of Operating Engineers Locals 627A and 627B, AFL–CIO are labor organizations within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

III. THE ALLEGED UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES

A. The Evidence

1. Background

Merle D. Martindale is president of USE. In October 1979 Martindale signed a one-paragraph document by which USE agreed to be bound by the then current collective-bargaining agreement (CBA) between the Union and the Oklahoma Chapter-Builders Division, the Associated General Contractors of America, Inc. (AGC), plus any renewal contracts (1:24–25; 2:253;[3] G.C. Exh. 2).

Martindale never signed any document canceling his 1979 agreement with the AGC. On the other hand, Martindale never signed any subsequent similar agreement (2:253) even though the Union's practice was to send them to all the steel contractors whenever a new contract was reached every 2 years (2:198). USE was never a member of the AGC (2:253).

Since 1979 Respondent has paid the wage rates and the benefit fund contributions specified in the AGC contracts (1:31),[4] and this includes up to the time of the hearing (1:51–52; 2:254). The latest AGC contract expired on 31 May 1985 (1:104).

William H. Noble is president of Builders Steel Company, Inc. (1:102). In early 1985, Noble testified, the AGC announced that it would not negotiate renewal contracts with the unions in Oklahoma (1:102). The AGC's then current contract with Local 627 was set to expire about 1 June 1985 (1:27, 104).

Martindale testified that the AGC's notice of dissolution included a suggestion that the employer members send a notice to the unions canceling their assignments of bargaining rights (1:27). By letter dated 25 February Martindale, on behalf of USE, notified Local 627 of the AGC's dissolution, that USE terminated its CBA effective 1 June, offered to meet and negotiate a new CBA, and advised the Union that Martindale was the only person authorized to bargain on behalf of USE (G.C. Exh. 3).

2. Formation of OCIBSEA

Thinking it wise to form a new association to deal with the Operating Engineers and the Iron Workers, Noble wrote letters inviting various contractors to attend a meeting on 13 February to discuss becoming a part of the new association (1:103). Noble's letter to USE, to Martindale's attention, is dated 28 January (G.C. Exh. 5). Martindale received the letter and, along with some nine other contractors (including Noble), attended the first meeting (13 February) of what became the Association (1:32–34; 2:255–257; R. Exh. 1).

Noble testified that the purpose of the meeting was for the contractors to get together to see if they had a mutual interest in negotiating with the Union (1:119), and Martindale testified that such was his understanding also (2:260–261, 281). At this initial meeting the attendees discussed a wide range of topics on what it would take to be competitive, including rates for wages, health coverage, and pension benefits (1:35). Although formation of a new association was briefly discussed, including having a committee to negotiate, no express decision was made to form one, and Martindale was not asked to join one (2:258–259, 281–282).

Noble concedes that at the first meeting he did not ask anyone to assign bargaining rights, and he did not say anything about the attendees being bound to any agreement the group might negotiate (1:141–142).

Either at the meeting or in a telephone conversation, as Martindale testified, Noble requested the contractors to put in writing what they thought it would take to make them competitive in the market (1:119; 2:262). By letter dated 20 February, Martindale sent Noble a list with seven numbered suggestions or ideas (2:262, 283; G.C. Exh. 12). Martindale did not intend his 20 February letter to constitute an assignment of bargaining rights (2:263). Five days after this letter Martindale, as we have seen, wrote the Union and offered, on behalf of USE, to meet and bargain for a new contract to begin when the current one expired 1 June (G.C. Exh. 3).

Before the second meeting, Noble sent those he thought would be attending, including Martindale, the following note of 8 March (1:142–143; R. Exh. 2):

> This note is a reminder for the meeting next Wednesday at Builders Steel at 1:30 p.m. to review the Operating Engineers contract and bring everyone up-to-date on the Iron Worker and Operating Engineer negotiations for this spring as several things have transpired since our meeting last month.
> I've received letters from two of the individuals in our meeting however everyone was going to put their thoughts in written form concerning where they thought the salaries and fringe benefits should be, so try to have something written by the time the meeting starts as we are very interested in everyone's input concerning the 1985 Union Contracts.
> See you Wednesday afternoon.

On Wednesday, 13 March, Noble and seven other contractors attended the second meeting (1:120, 144). Martindale was not present, and neither were a couple of others who had attended the first meeting. One company[5] was represented at the second meeting which had not been represented at the first meeting (1:144–146; R. Exhs. 1, 3). At the second meeting the attendees discussed the union contract in detail, including the changes the group thought would be needed. Nothing was said about any binding effect of whatever was negotiated (1:146–147).[6]

[3] References to the two-volume transcript of testimony are by volume and page.

[4] In fact, as Martindale testified, USE has made these payments for the 19 years USE has been in business (1:52; 2:252).

[5] National Steel Erectors, represented by R. Jack Holland.

Although Noble testified it was at the first meeting he was elected president of the new Association (1:129), he concedes there are no formal documents prepared for the Association (1:165–166). He also testified that a negotiating committee was elected, consisting of Jim Ulmer, of Jim's Crane Service, Jack Holland, of National Steel Erectors, and Noble, of Builders Steel, but that he did not recall at which meeting they were elected (1:106, 151, 172). I note that Holland was not an attendee at the first meeting (R. Exh. 1), but he did attend the second meeting (R. Exh. 3). I find that it was at this second meeting, not the first one, when the Association was formed, Noble was elected president, and a three-member negotiating committee was elected.

By letter dated 15 March Noble wrote members of the group to bring everyone up to date (1:147). The copy to Martindale reads (R. Exh. 4):

> Dear Merle,
> This letter is to review what our plans are at the present time concerning negotiations with the ironworkers and operating engineers. A general consensus was obtained during the last two meetings, February 13 and March 13, 1985 of our group which informally will be called the Oklahoma Steel Erectors Association as follows:
> It is our intent to join in with the AGC Contracting members that desire to negotiate with the two above mentioned unions. We do not feel that we will benefit the position of the employer by negotiating alone and feel that by adding to the AGC Contractors we can provide them with more numbers and make the negotiating job simpler for the union and management negotiating teams. We have discussed the areas in which we feel there is some concern and possible changes that would be advantageous to the employer and the employee. At the same time we have discussed in general where we feel wages should be in order for us to be competitive in today's market place and also be able to continue as employers with union labor. At the next meeting, which will be held on Wednesday, April 10, 1985 at Builders Steel's office in Tulsa, we will discuss the operating engineers contract in detail. Please bring with you at that time or mail to me ahead of time your comments and expectations insofar as any changes you feel might be included in the negotiations this spring. I will try to get out a letter on April 5 concerning our April 10 meeting. I appreciate the attention and time that each of you have spent on this project and hope that you feel that it is beneficial towards the operation of your business.
> Sincerely,
> /s/ Bill
> W. H. "Bill" Noble
> President[7]

Noble broke a leg in early April, and he is uncertain whether a meeting was held on 10 April as scheduled in his letter, and he has no attendance roster for any meeting on that date (1:120, 149). Martindale attended no meeting that date.

On 9 April Noble wrote to Business Manager Gerald Ellis of the Union that nine named firms desired to meet and bargain for a new CBA (1:104, 117–118, 173). Clayton Walker, a business representative of Local 627 for over 25 years, testified that the Union received the letter and that USE was one of the companies listed (2:181). The 9 April letter, which does not mention the Association, reads (G.C. Exh. 6):

> Dear Gerald:
> This letter is to serve official notice that the following companies wish to negotiate with you to place in effect a contract that will continue after the present contract expires on June 1, 1985. We wish to negotiate for every Classification that we presently have in our work forces. We anticipate that negotiations should start somewhere around April 25, 1985. Any subsequent meetings that would need to transpire would then be set at the conclusion of each succeeding meeting.
> The following companies are presently interested in negotiating with the Operating Engineers: Jim's Crane Service, Oklahoma City, Chowning Logan, Logan and Company, Coffeyville, Kansas, Bennett Steel Erectors, Sapulpa, Okie Steel Inc., Bartlesville, National Steel Erectors, Muskogee, Copeland Steel, Tuloma, Inc., United Steel Erectors, and Builders Steel Co., Inc., of Tulsa.
> Please contact me as soon as possible in order that we will be able to start negotiating for a new contract.
>
> Sincerely,
> /s/ W. H. Noble
> W. H. "Bill" Noble

Some 9 days later, by date of 18 April, Noble sent letters on plain stationery to the contractors informing them of meeting dates scheduled with the unions. Attached to the 18 April letter was a copy of the 9 April letter which Noble had sent to Local 627 (1:105, 126). The copy of Noble's 18 April letter to USE reads (G.C. Exh. 7):

> Dear Merle:
> This letter is to keep you informed concerning the negotiations with the Operating Engineers and [6] Noble concedes that nothing was said about any binding effect until the meeting of 7 May (1:152, 160).

[7] As the letter is on the stationery of Builders Steel (the Association had no stationery, 1:165), the "President" reasonably refers to Noble's position at his company rather than with the Association. His previous letters were written in the same fashion, including his letter of 28 January—which well predates formation of the Association.

Iron Workers. As of this date the first meeting with the Iron Workers will be Tuesday, April 23, at 1:30 p.m. at the apprentice hall which is located about one mile East of the Iron Workers hall on 46th Street. We also have a meeting with the Operating Engineers for April 25, Thursday, at 1:30 p.m. at their Union hall on East Skelly bypass, just East of the 11th Street exit.

If you have any questions concerning this please do not hesitate to give me a call.

Everyone is invited to these negotiations, however I would like to know if you're going to attend as I can then let the Unions know how many people we will have in attendance and tell you where and when we need to meet before each meeting. From time to time they request that we have no more at the negotiating table than they do.

Look forward to seeing you Tuesday and Thursday.

Sincerely,
/s/ W. H. Noble
W. H. "Bill" Noble
President

Martindale testified that even though he did not authorize Noble to list USE in the 9 April letter, he voiced no objections about Noble's 9 April letter to the Union because he knew he had not signed anything that would obligate USE. Martindale was unconcerned because Noble several times had said the contractors needed to present a show of force, and Martindale considered the 9 April letter as part of that show of force (2:266–267, 283).

The Association and the Union held three bargaining sessions before reaching a contract (1:106). The first meeting was held 25 April, the second on 2 May, and the last on 9 May (1:107, 121, 134; 2:231).

Martindale apparently did not attend any of the three bargaining sessions (1:106, Noble). At the first session Business Manager Ellis asked the members of the Association's bargaining committee whether they had authority to bargain for everyone named in the letter of 9 April, and the members answered that they did (2:219–220).

Apparently not satisfied, Ellis raised the subject again at the second meeting of 2 May. It appears that he told Noble he needed something more specific on whom the Association represented, and he asked about assignments of bargaining rights. Noble said he was inexperienced at bargaining, that Okie was not bound and any contract with Okie would have to be negotiated individually, that Tuloma was in bankruptcy, and that Copeland had no operating engineers (2:234–235).

Apparently after the 2 May bargaining session Noble checked with Representative Don Zippert of the AGC who informed Noble that written assignments of bargaining rights were necessary (1:108, 138–139).[8]

This brings us to the crucial meeting of the contractors at a Furr's Cafeteria in Tulsa on 7 May.[9]

3. The 7 May 1985 meeting; the "Gentlemen's" agreement; and the assignment of bargaining rights

On 7 May 1985 the Association held a last meeting before agreement was reached with the Union for a new CBA. From six to nine firms were represented (1:49, 111, 122, 2:269). Martindale was there representing USE. Leon Potts, a witness in this proceeding, attended on behalf of Tuloma, Inc.[10]

The meeting was at Furr's Cafeteria in Tulsa. The group began their discussion there after lunch. When the meeting ended most or all of those present, including Martindale, went to a bargaining session with the Iron Workers (1:169). The cafeteria meeting was devoted chiefly, but not completely, to the bargaining session which was to follow the cafeteria meeting.

At the Furr's Cafeteria meeting Noble distributed forms for the contractors to sign by which they would assign their bargaining rights to the Association.[11] The copy in evidence is that signed by Martindale (1:46; 2:268). The document provides (G.C. Exh. 9):

ASSIGNMENT OF BARGAINING RIGHTS

The undersigned employer hereby assigns to the Collective Bargaining Committee, Oklahoma Commercial and Industrial Steel Erectors Association, all of his or its rights to bargain collectively in the negotiations for a new labor agreement with the International Union of Operating Engineers Local 627.

This assignment and the authority herein granted is limited solely to the undersigned employer and is not intended to be a general grant of assignment affecting the bargaining rights of any subsidiary or affiliated firm, partnership or corporation.

It is understood and agreed that the undersigned employer will remain a party to the collective bargaining unit until an agreement is signed or until released from this assignment, in writing, by the Oklahoma Commercial and Industrial Steel Erectors Association. The undersigned employer further agrees not to enter into any separate negotiations or agreements with the above designated union and agrees to accept the terms and conditions of the agreement negotiated by the Collective Bargaining Committee

[8] Although Noble dates that conversation in late April (1:108, 138–139), I find it far more likely that it occurred following the bargaining session of 2 May.

[9] The contractors, or the Association, also held a meeting on 2 May, the same day a bargaining session was held (1:107). An attendance roster shows a signature for Martindale (G.C. Exh. 8). Although Martindale thought he had attended only two of these meetings of the contractors, he nevertheless identified the signature as his (1:43–44; 2:269). The record contains no description of the discussion at the 2 May meeting of the Association.

[10] There is no dispute that at all relevant times Tuloma was involved in its bankruptcy proceedings. A senior vice president of Tuloma, Potts, joined Respondent's staff on 1 July (2:288, 304).

[11] Noble testified that preceding the 7 May meeting he mailed a letter to the contractors in which he enclosed copies of the assignment forms and requested the contractors to sign (1:107, 109, 153). No copy of that letter is in evidence.

of the Oklahoma Commercial and Industrial Steel Erectors Association.

THUS DONE AND SIGNED on this _____ day of _____, 1985.
EMPLOYER: United Steel Erectors, Inc. [Handwritten.]
BY: /s/ Merle D. Martindale

There is no question that at the 7 May cafeteria meeting Potts said that Tuloma could not sign anything because of its bankruptcy proceeding. The critical point in dispute is whether, on Martindale's request, either Noble or the group joined in a "gentlemen's" agreement that the assignments, or at least Martindale's, would not be binding, but would be used only for a show of strength. Of the six to nine contractors in attendance at the meeting, only three (Noble, Martindale, and Potts) testified.

According to Martindale, before signing the form he asked Noble whether it was binding, for if it was he would not sign. Noble said Martindale would need to ask an attorney.[12] Martindale responded by offering to sign if there was a "gentlemen's" agreement that the document would not be binding. Noble turned to the others and asked if they wanted to consent to the form not binding USE and the others voiced their consent (1:48–49; 2:270–273, 284).

The testimony of Leon Potts is essentially the same as that of Martindale, although there are a couple of differences. Thus, Potts recalls the "gentlemen's" agreement applying to everyone (2:298). On a second point, Potts testified that Noble said the form pertained to negotiations with the Operating Engineers (2:296).[13]

Noble testified that after Martindale signed the assignment he asked, "Am I bound by this?" Noble replied he was not a lawyer and could not give legal advice, but if he signed it he would feel bound by it (1:111, 123, 161, 164). Noble at first testified he did not recall saying anything about a showing of solidarity, and that he believed he would recall if he said it (1:118), but he later testified he could have said it (1:168). He concedes that at some point in the meeting someone mentioned the phrase "gentlemen's" agreement, but he does not recall who said it or in what context (1:122–123, 166). To his knowledge there was no discussion, in conjunction with the phrase, that a signed assignment would not be binding (1:123–124). Noble denies turning to the rest of the group and asking them if they wanted to agree that the assignment would be a nonbinding gentlemen's agreement (1:124, 163, 172). As previously noted, none of the other members of the group, who might be considered neutrals,[14] testified.

Noble's admission that the phrase "gentlemen's agreement" was used, in a context he cannot recall, tilts the evidence in favor of the Martindale-Potts' version of the critical discussion at the cafeteria meeting on 7 May. Therefore, I find the Association agreed that the assignment form would be nonbinding and used only for the bargaining tactic of presenting a united front to Local 627.[15]

4. New contract reached; USE never signs

At the third and final bargaining session on 9 May, the Association and the Union agreed on a CBA effective by its terms from 1 June 1985 to 1 June 1987 (1:112; 2:231; G.C. Exh. 11 at 1, 11). Either before the session, or at that 9 May session, Noble furnished the Union copies of the executed assignments of bargaining rights (2:182, 230–231).

Attached to the 1984–1987 CBA is a "Designation of Agent" paragraph in which the Labor Relations Committee of the Association warrants that "the contractors listed below have assigned their bargaining rights" to OCIBSEA and that the contractors agreed to be bound by the negotiated agreement.[16] Six contractors are named, including USE and the three companies (Builders Steel, Jim's Crane Service, and National Steel Erectors Corp.) whose representatives (Noble, Ulmer, and Holland) were on the Labor Relations Negotiating Committee of the Association.

After the new CBA was typed, reviewed by the Union and the Association's committee, and signed, copies were mailed around 1 June (the execution date) to the contractors, including USE (1:122–113). Martindale left for a 3-week trip to Alaska about mid-May (2:274–275). Martindale testified that about 7 June, the day after he had returned and examined the new CBA, he telephoned Noble and notified him that he could not live with the conditions set forth in the CBA. Noble made no claim that USE was bound, but told Martindale "You do what you have to do." (2:275–276)

Despite the CBA's inclusion of USE's name as one of the contractors bound to the contract, it appears that Martindale did not call or write the Union and disavow the CBA and inform the Union that the Association never had any authority to bargain on his behalf. Indeed, [12] When called as the General Counsel's first witness, Martindale testified that he recalled no statement that he should check with his attorney to see whether the assignment would be binding (1:50). After hearing Noble testify that he answered Martindale by saying he was not an attorney but would feel bound if he signed (1:111, 123, 164), Martindale (when called later as Respondent's witness) testified that Noble said something about Martindale's needing to ask a lawyer (2:270).

[13] Noble testified he distributed assignment forms for both the Operating Engineers and also the Iron Workers for those who had not brought their forms and that Martindale signed the former but not the latter (1:110, 163). According to Martindale, he received only the one form (for the Operating Engineers) at the cafeteria meeting, he did not read it, and he thought it pertained to the Iron Workers because they had been talking about the bargaining session to be held that afternoon with the Iron Workers (1:147; 2:272, 274, 283). Although Respondent has employed iron workers in the past, at no relevant time here has it done so (1:47; 2:286). I credit Noble on this, and I find that Martindale knew that the form pertained to the Operating Engineers.

[14] Leon Potts works for Martindale. It is clear that Martindale, even though he pays the wages and benefits called for by the new CBA, does not want to be bound by that contract. Although Martindale testified that Noble's Builders Steel is a competitor of USE (2:255), Noble explained that there is not much competition because USE does mainly renting of cranes whereas Builders Steel works mainly in steel fabrication and erection (1:128).

[15] As previously noted, Business Manager Ellis testified that Noble explained at one of the first bargaining sessions that he was inexperienced in collective-bargaining matters (2:233).

[16] The new CBA names the Association as the "Oklahoma Commercial and Industrial Builders and Steel Erectors Association" (emphasis added). The assignment of bargaining rights form, in evidence as G.C. Exh. 9, names it without the word "Builders."

Martindale concedes that USE adopted the pay scale set forth in the new CBA, and USE has continued to pay into all contractual benefit funds (1:31, 51–52; 2:254, 275–277, 280; G.C. Exh. 10). USE does so, Martindale testified, in order to keep its operators, and to avoid problems with the Union, and not because it feels legally bound to do so (2:254, 276–277).

Noble testified that about early July, while he and Martindale were in a telephone discussion on another matter, he asked Martindale whether he had signed the CBA. Martindale said, "No." Noble did not pursue the matter then. In a similar conversation with Martindale in August Noble asked if he was going to sign and Martindale replied that he would take care of that with Clayton Walker, a business representative of the Union (1:114–115). Following this conversation, Noble informed Walker of Martindale's statements, and at that point Noble ceased pursuing the matter with USE (1:115).

I credit Noble concerning the timing and general substance of his conversations with Martindale after 1 June. I find it unlikely that Martindale, who supposedly did not consider himself bound, initiated a call to Noble as his first order of business after returning from Alaska. In any event, USE never signed the new contract.

There is a substantial amount of evidence concerning additional events. Clayton Walker testified to having about four conversations with Leon Potts beginning after Noble called him in midsummer and informed him that USE had not signed the contract (2:183, 213). Walker initially dated his first call to Potts as occurring in May. In this he was in error, for Potts did not join USE until 1 July.

I find Walker's description of events, including not only the timing but also the contents, of his conversation with Potts,[17] to be rather unreliable. However, to a limited extent I credit Walker. Although Martindale testified that no one ever asked him to sign the new CBA (2:277), I credit Walker that, when his conversations began with Potts about August, he asked for USE to sign the new CBA but Potts kept putting him off by saying he (Potts) would have to talk with Martindale on the matter and get back with Walker. When Potts called Walker back that day or the next he would say "We will get with you and take care of it." (2:184, 199–201.) This continued into October when Walker finally lost patience and reported the situation to Business Manager Ellis (2:185, 199–200).[18] Ellis testified that USE was the only contractor who had not signed the new CBA (2:221).

[17] According to Walker, in May and later Potts said USE was part of the Association. Walker concluded from Potts' statements then and later that USE would be bound by the new CBA (2:183, 193–195, 201–202).

[18] I do not credit Potts that Walker called only once, in July or August, and that was to request that USE meet to negotiate a CBA. Nor do I credit Potts, after checking with Martindale when he returned to the office, that Martindale said to arrange a meeting on neutral grounds, and that Potts conveyed that information to Walker. Finally, I do not credit Potts' denial that Walker ever requested that USE sign the CBA the Association had negotiated (2:299–300). To the extent that Potts' testimony about meeting to negotiate a contract is consistent with Walker's version of events in October-November then I credit Potts. Indeed, Martindale dates the request to Potts as mid-October, shortly before Martindale was to leave again for Alaska (2:278).

5. The election and Case 16–RC–8814

Business Manager Ellis decided that in these circumstances, and because of perceived problems arising under Section 8(f) of the Act, it would be wise to obtain certification (2:227–228, 241). He and Walker discussed the matter (apparently by telephone because Ellis was out of the State, 2:242), and they decided that certification of the Union might encourage Martindale to go ahead and sign the CBA (2:185). Ellis instructed Walker to obtain the assistance of a Board agent at the Tulsa Resident Office and to file an election petition (2:227, 242).

Walker did so on 22 October with the assistance of Board Agent Paul Blackwell; it was the first petition Walker had ever filed (2:185–186, 202–203).

In the ensuing election which was conducted on 12 December, the vote was 4 to 3 in favor of the Union.[19] USE filed objections, a hearing was held,[20] and the matter is pending before the Board on USE's request for review (1:84).

The parties dispute the significance of certain statements either made, or assertedly made, by the Union's representatives during the preelection and postelection period. Respondent contends that they, particularly Ellis, told employees that if the Union won the election it would negotiate a contract with Respondent. In the Union's response (served 12 February 1986) to USE's exceptions to the hearing officer's report on objection, the Union wrote at 13 (R. Exh. 7):

> It would appear in the present case that the company seeks only to delay the time when it must begin negotiations with the union. During this time, it is using the process of administrative delay to discredit the union that was lawfully elected to represent the employees. Through this process, the company must anticipate that it will gain additional leverage to avoid any good faith collective bargaining.

At no point in the foregoing response does the Union assert that USE was bound to the 1985–1987 CBA. Respondent argues that the Union's statements during the preelection and postelection period and, indeed, the petition which it filed,[21] demonstrate a belief on the Union's part that Respondent was never bound by the CBA (Br. 29–32).

Respondent never makes clear why that asserted fact is significant. It possibly could bear on the credibility of Walker's testimony concerning his conversations with Potts. (I already have found much of Walker's testimony concerning those conversations to be unreliable.) However, the implied thrust of Respondent's argument seems to suggest that if the Union believed USE was never bound, that belief somehow nullifies the General Counsel's refusal-to-bargain allegation.

[19] On 31 December the Union filed the instant refusal-to-bargain charge.

[20] Respondent asserts that the hearing was held on 6 January 1986 (Br. 14).

[21] For some reason, the Union's petition has no answer in the spaces provided for the questions on the petition asking whether there is a recognized bargaining agent or a collective-bargaining agreement (G.C. Exh. 13). Respondent emphasizes (Br. 30) that it recognizes a union's right to seek certification even when it is a party to a CBA. Duke Power Co., 173 NLRB 240 (1968); General Dynamics Corp., 148 NLRB 338 (1964). But Respondent points to the blank spaces on the petition as admissions by the Union that it never thought Respondent was bound to the CBA.

There is no evidence that the Union was ever told the assignment forms, copies of which were furnished to the Union on or before 9 May, were signed under a "gentlemen's" agreement that they would be nonbinding. The executed CBA carries USE's name as one of the contractors bound to the CBA, and Martindale never telephoned or wrote the Union disavowing the listing of his name on the CBA. Indeed, USE implemented the terms of the new CBA. Accordingly, I find no legal significance here in any statements by the Union several months after the fact in Case 16–RC–8814.

There is yet another reason I see no need to resolve the disputed statements made by or attributed to the Union in Case 16–RC–8814. The Union filed the refusal-to-bargain charge in the instant case on 31 December. It there charges a refusal to bargain by Respondent's "refusing to sign a collective bargaining agreement negotiated by a multi-employer association to which the Employer had assigned its collective-bargaining rights." Thus, regardless of whatever Ellis told the employees during the election campaign, and whatever he wrote in Case 16–RC–8814, it is clear that in the midst of it all he filed the refusal-to-bargain charge. Accordingly, I find the evidence concerning events surrounding Case 16–RC–8814 to be irrelevant.

B. Analysis and Conclusions

1. Applicable law

A multiemployer bargaining relationship is established when employers manifest an unequivocal intention to be bound by group bargaining and the union assents and enters into negotiations with the group as a unit. Hillsdale Inn v. NLRB, 764 F.2d 739, 743 (10th Cir. 1985); NLRB v. Beckham, Inc., 564 F.2d 190, 192 (5th Cir. 1977); Acropolis Painting, 272 NLRB 150, 154 (1984). An employer indicates the unequivocal intention to be bound by the results of group bargaining if he gives a multiemployer association either actual or apparent authority to negotiate and execute on his behalf with the union as part of the multiemployer unit. Hillsdale Inn, supra at 743; Beckham, supra at 194; Acropolis Painting, id.

Quoting from one of its earlier cases, the court in Hillsdale Inn states:

> To establish that an agent had apparent authority to bind its principal it must be shown that the principal knowingly permitted the agent to exercise the authority in question, or in some manner manifested its consent that such authority be exercised. [Emphasis added.]

Where the agent is clothed with apparent authority, the agent may bind the principal even though the agent misrepresents to third parties crucial facts pertinent to the basis or extent of his authority. Crane Sheet Metal, 248 NLRB 75, 76 (1980), enf. denied on other grounds 675 F.2d 256 (10th Cir. 1982).

2. Discussion

As I have found, the Association misrepresented to the Union the important fact that the assignment form USE had signed was not what it purported to be, for at a meeting on 7 May the contractors had agreed that the form would be nonbinding.

Notwithstanding that misrepresentation, I find that USE is bound to the new CBA because the course of all events reflect that USE clothed the Association with apparent authority to act on its behalf. USE's conduct in this regard is shown particularly by its failure to voice any objection when Noble named USE in Noble's letter of 9 April to the Union. By his silence, Martindale allowed the Union to rely on the assertion in that letter that USE was one of the companies interested in negotiating with the Operating Engineers. It is true Noble does not mention the Association in the letter. Even so, Martindale said nothing and permitted Noble to continue his correspondence and contacts with the Union.

Against this background (not even to count the additional background of his earlier assignment to the AGC and his implementation of the terms of all AGC contracts over several years) Martindale allowed Noble to take his signed assignment knowing that Noble would, or might, furnish it to the Union. It will not do for USE to rely on a private agreement that the form was nonbinding when Martindale knew, or should have known, that all other facts indicated that the Association's negotiating committee had USE's express authorization to bind USE. Respondent, I find, clothed the Association with apparent authority to act in its behalf. To paraphrase Lord Byron's verse about Julia, although Martindale insists that he never consented, his actions reflect not only that he did consent, but also that he allowed the Union to believe he had consented.[22]

All the contractors named in the CBA's attachment signed the CBA except one—USE. Then when Martindale received the executed CBA he did nothing[23] (except implement the terms of the new CBA), and he continued to let the Union, as well as the Association, believe that USE was bound. Finally, as I have found, beginning in early August Leon Potts repeatedly assured the Union that USE would "take care of" signing the contract. It never did. By its failure and refusal to sign the CBA reached on its behalf, USE violated Section 8(a)(5) of the Act.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. USE is an employer within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

---

[22] Byron, Don Juan, canto I, stanza 117 (1818), quoted in The Poetical Works of Byron (Cambridge ed., 1975) at 761:

> A little still she strove, and much repented,
> And whispering 'I will ne'er consent'— consented.

[23] Even under his own version (which I have discredited), Martindale called only Noble—not the Union.

2. Operating Engineers Locals 627A and 627B are labor organizations within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

3. The following employees constitute a unit appropriate for the purposes of collective bargaining within the meaning of Section 9(b) of the Act:

> All employees of USE who operate such equipment as cranes, winch trucks, forklifts, oilers, maintenance mechanics and apprentices, excluding all other employees, office clerical employees, guards, and supervisors as defined in the Act.

4. At all times material the Union has represented a majority of the employees in the unit described above.

5. By virtue of the 1985–1987 collective-bargaining agreement between the Association and the Union, at all times since 1 June 1985 the Union has been the exclusive collective-bargaining representative of the employees in the unit described above within the meaning of Section 9(a) of the Act.

6. By refusing since early August 1985 to sign the 1985–1987 CBA negotiated by the Association and the Union, USE has violated Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act.

7. The unfair labor practice affects commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

THE REMEDY

Having found that Respondent has committed the unfair labor practice as alleged,[24] I shall order it to cease and to take affirmative action designed to effectuate the policies of the Act.

In the suggested notice to employees and order which she has submitted, the General Counsel proposes that Respondent not only be ordered to sign the 1985–1987 CBA, but also be ordered to "abide by and adhere to" the terms of the CBA. Although the record indicates that Respondent apparently has implemented all terms of the CBA relating to wages and benefit payments, I shall leave to the compliance stage the determination of whether there are any provisions of the CBA Respondent has not implemented, and I shall order Respondent to give effect to the CBA retroactive to 1 June 1985. On these findings of fact and conclusions of law and on the entire record, I issue the following recommended[25]

ORDER

The Respondent, United Steel Erectors, Inc., Tulsa, Oklahoma, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall

1. Cease and desist from

(a) Failing and refusing to sign the collective-bargaining agreement, effective by its terms from 1 June 1985 to 1 June 1987, between the Oklahoma Commercial and Industrial Builders and Steel Erectors Association and Operating Engineers Locals 627, 627A, and 627B.

(b) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them by Section 7 of the Act.

2. Take the following affirmative action necessary to effectuate the policies of the Act.

(a) Sign the 1985–1987 CBA and give effect to its terms retroactive to 1 June 1985.

(b) Post at its Tulsa, Oklahoma plant copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix."[26] Copies of the notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 16, after being signed by the Respondent's authorized representative, shall be posted by the Respondent immediately upon receipt and maintained for 60 consecutive days in conspicuous places including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by the Respondent to ensure that the notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(c) Notify the Regional Director in writing within 20 days from the date of this Order what steps Respondent has taken to comply. For the purpose of determining or securing compliance with this Order, the Board, or any of its duly authorized representatives, may obtain discovery from the Respondent, its officers, agents, successors, or assigns, or any other person having knowledge concerning any compliance matter, in the manner provided by the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. Such discovery shall be conducted under the supervision of the United States court of appeals enforcing this Order and may be had upon any matter reasonably related to compliance with this Order, as enforced by the court.

[24] The sole violation alleged is Respondent's refusal "to execute a written contract embodying the agreement." Complaint par. 16.

[25] If no exceptions are filed as provided by Sec. 102.46 of the Board's Rules and Regulations, the findings, conclusions, and recommended Order shall, as provided in Sec. 102.48 of the Rules, be adopted by the Board and all objections to them shall be deemed waived for all purposes.

[26] If this Order is enforced by a judgment of a United States court of appeals, the words in the notice reading "Posted by Order of the National Labor Relations Board" shall read "Posted Pursuant to a Judgment of the United States Court of Appeals Enforcing an Order of the National Labor Relations Board."

APPENDIX

NOTICE TO EMPLOYEES
POSTED BY ORDER OF THE
NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD
An Agency of the United States Government

The National Labor Relations Board has found that we violated the National Labor Relations Act and has ordered us to post and abide by this notice.

WE WILL NOT fail and refuse to sign the collective-bargaining agreement (CBA), effective by its terms from 1 June 1985 to 1 June 1987, between the Oklahoma Commercial and Industrial Builders and Steel Erectors Association and Operating Engineers Locals 627, 627A, and 627B.

WE WILL NOT in any like or related manner interfere with, restrain, or coerce you in the exercise of the rights guaranteed you by Section 7 of the Act.

WE WILL, on request of the Union, sign the 1985–1987 CBA, and WE WILL give effect to its terms, retroactive to 1 June 1985, covering our employees in the following appropriate bargaining unit:

> All employees of USE who operate such equipment as cranes, winch trucks, forklifts, oilers, maintenance mechanics and apprentices, excluding all other employees, office clerical employees, guards, and supervisors as defined in the Act.

UNITED STEEL ERECTORS, INC.

Wagner, a Division of Cooper Industries, Inc. and United Steelworkers of America, AFL–CIO–CLC. Case 26–CA–11690

25 March 1987

DECISION AND ORDER

BY MEMBERS JOHANSEN, BABSON, AND STEPHENS

On 2 December 1986 Administrative Law Judge Richard J. Linton issued the attached decision. The Respondent filed exceptions and a supporting brief, and the General Counsel filed an answering brief.

The National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the decision and the record in light of the exceptions and briefs and has decided to affirm the judge's rulings, findings,[1] and conclusions[2] and to adopt the recommended Order.

ORDER

The National Labor Relations Board adopts the recommended Order of the administrative law judge and orders that the Respondent, Wagner, a Division of Cooper Industries, Inc., Tullahoma, Tennessee, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall take the action set forth in the Order.

[1] The Respondent has excepted to some of the judge's credibility findings. The Board's established policy is not to overrule an administrative law judge's credibility resolutions unless the clear preponderance of all the relevant evidence convinces us that they are incorrect. Standard Dry Wall Products, 91 NLRB 544 (1950), enfd. 188 F.2d 362 (3d Cir. 1951). We have carefully examined the record and find no basis for reversing the findings.

[2] In agreeing with the judge that the Respondent violated Sec. 8(a)(1) of the Act by coercively interrogating employee Walls, we note that his conclusions are in accordance with the principles set forth in Rossmore House, 269 NLRB 1176 (1984), affd. 760 F.2d 1006 (9th Cir. 1985). See also Sunnyvale Medical Clinic, 277 NLRB 1217 (1985).

DECISION

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

RICHARD J. LINTON, Administrative Law Judge. Questions and statements purportedly made in three conversations are alleged here as unlawful in three paragraphs of the Government's complaint. I find merit to the first two allegations, and I dismiss the third.

I heard this case in Manchester, Tennessee, on 17 September 1986 pursuant to the 5 August 1986 complaint issued by the General Counsel of the National Labor Relations Board through the Regional Director for Region 26 of the Board. The complaint is based on a charge, subsequently amended, filed 3 July 1986 by United Steelworkers of America, AFL–CIO, CLC (Union or Steelworkers) against Wagner, a Division of Cooper Industries, Inc. (Respondent or Wagner).[1]

In the complaint the General Counsel alleges that Respondent violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act when Anthony L. Sutton, warehouse supervisor, second shift, interrogated one employee (Stephen R. Walls) on 20[2] and 27[3] February, and again in May[4] when Sutton interrogated a second employee (Jeffrey W. Cunningham) and, during the conversation, "conditioned a permanent job for the employee upon a promise by the employee not to engage in union activities," and "threatened to discharge employees who talked about the Union."

By its answer Respondent admits certain factual matters but denies violating the Act.

On the entire record, including my observation of the demeanor of the witnesses, and after due consideration of the briefs filed by the General Counsel and Respondent, I make the following

FINDINGS OF FACT

I. JURISDICTION

A corporation with a place of business in Tullahoma, Tennessee, the facility herein, Respondent packages and distributes automotive parts. During the 12 months ending 31 July Respondent sold and shipped from its facility products and materials valued in excess of $50,000 directly to points outside the State of Tennessee. Respondent admits, and I find, that it is an employer within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

II. LABOR ORGANIZATION INVOLVED

The parties stipulated that the Union is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act (1:6).[5]

III. THE ALLEGED UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES

A. Background

Howard K. Tucker is the manager of employee relations at Respondent's Tullahoma facility (1:63). Tucker testified that the facility serves as the distribution center for Wagner. It replenishes the inventories of Wagner's zone warehouses throughout the country. In addition to its large warehousing operation at Tullahoma, Wagner has a customer service function there plus a planning office. Respondent employs some 250 employees at the facility, with about 150 being classified as hourly and the other 100 as salaried (1:63–64).

[1] All dates are for 1986 unless otherwise indicated.
[2] Complaint par. 7(a).
[3] Complaint par. 7(b). This subparagraph also alleges that Sutton ordered the employee (Walls) to report on the union activities of other employees.
[4] Complaint par. 7(c).
[5] References to the one-volume transcript of testimony are by volume and page.

As Tucker described, in addition to its own employees, Wagner uses a number of employees whom it obtains under a contract with N. R. Temps, a firm which refers temporary workers. Tucker testified that such workers are employees of N. R. Temps and not employees of Wagner (1:65–66; R. Exh. 1). During the relevant time, Respondent paid N. R. Temps for the services of some 8 to 12 workers (1:73).

At the hearing the General Counsel called two witnesses: Stephen R. Walls and Jeffrey Wayne Cunningham. The Union called no witnesses. Wagner called two witnesses: Manager of Employee Relations Howard K. Tucker and Warehouse Supervisor Anthony L. Sutton.

Formerly employed in the warehousing operation under the supervision of Sutton, Walls worked at Wagner from November 1984 to mid-August (1:9, 20). Although Cunningham worked in the warehouse under Sutton from 10 February to his layoff around 1 June, Cunningham at all times was an employee of N. R. Temps (1:38–40, 45–48).

Sutton concedes that he spoke twice with Walls about the Union,[6] but he contends it was Walls who approached him and volunteered information. Sutton gave similar testimony regarding the alleged May 1986 conversation between himself and Cunningham.

Cunningham had difficulty with the timing of the alleged conversation, first placing it the day before his layoff (1:43), but later testifying he could be mistaken and that it could have been a couple of weeks earlier (1:54), and finally conceding that in his pretrial affidavit he placed the event as a month before his layoff—a timeframe he then rejected (1:58–59). Respondent introduced certain evidence bearing adversely on Cunningham's credibility (R. Exhs. 1 and 2). Because I find Cunningham to be an unreliable witness, I shall dismiss complaint paragraph 7(c).

B. The Two Conversations Between Stephen Walls and Supervisor Sutton

1. The conversation in the men's restroom

As he was working in the warehouse one day in late February, Stephen R. Walls testified, Supervisor Sutton approached and engaged him in conversation (1:10, 24–25). Expressing the opinion that he thought they were friends, Sutton said he wanted to ask Walls something as a friend.[7] Sutton then asked if Walls was aware of any union activity. Although Walls had attended a union meeting a few days earlier (1:25), he replied that he knew nothing of any union activity (1:11, 25). Walls never wore any union insignia and never gave any outward expression of support for the Union (1:33). He and Sutton had never previously talked about a union or about organizing (1:26).

Sutton stated that attendees at a management meeting had learned of recent union activity, and that Walls had been named as one of the leaders along with employees Paul Crabtree, Lynn Byrum, Danny Brewer, Ricky Tawwater, and Nancy Almacher (1:11, 24). Sutton asked whether any of the employees he named were involved in union activity, and Walls replied that he did not know of any such activity by them (1:11, 24). Walls testified that some of those named by Sutton had not been at the union meeting (1:27).

As Sutton prepared to leave, he asked Walls to assure him one more time that Walls had nothing to do with the union, "and you'll be taken care of. I'll assure the management, if a meeting occurs again, that you don't have anything to do with it." Walls so assured him (1:12–13, 26–27).

This conversation is the subject of complaint paragraph 7(a).

Sutton's version is quite different. Sutton testified that about early March, as he made one of his rounds by Walls' work station, Walls said he needed to speak to Sutton in private. Sutton suggested his office, but Walls wanted to meet in the restroom.[8] About 5 minutes later they met in the men's restroom (1:78–81).

According to Sutton, Walls reported that the name of Walls had been mentioned as being involved in some union meetings which were being held. "Before we go any further," Sutton interposed, "why don't you go to Bruce [Bruce Nemec, director of distribution] or to Howard [Howard K. Tucker, manager of employee relations]?"

"No," replied Walls, "I just want you, as being part of management, to let them know that I'm not involved, because I don't want . . . my name [mentioned as] being involved in any kind of union attempt, to my mother." (1:82, 84) It is Sutton's understanding that Walls' mother, a clerk in the CDC department, is opposed to the Union (1:82–83).[9]

Testifying further, Sutton asserts that Walls confided that he had attended one union meeting out of curiosity. When Sutton again said Walls needed to discuss this matter with someone else, Walls replied that he wanted to tell him and for Sutton to notify management that Walls was not involved in any union activity. Sutton said he would do so, and that concluded the restroom conversation. Sutton denies that he, Sutton, listed the names of several employees during the conversation (1:84).

Sutton testified that he thinks he gave Walls the impression, during their conversation, that Sutton did not believe Walls, for Walls produced a blank union card and said, "Hey, here it is, it's here." (1:87–88) According to Sutton, rumors of union organizing are rather frequent (1:88), and in fact there was a previous organizing cam-

[6] The Union made an earlier organizing effort in September-October 1984 (1:100). The record is unclear whether either the 1984 or 1986 efforts reached the election stage. Whatever stage they reached, the organizing efforts apparently were unsuccessful.

[7] Although Walls and Sutton had discussed horses on previous occasions, they did not socialize outside work (1:19–20, 76–77, 99). Walls came to the second shift about the same time, April 1985, that Sutton was promoted from a quality inspector to second-shift supervisor (1:74–76).

[8] Sutton's office is enclosed by walls of clear glass (1:80).

[9] Although I overruled the General Counsel's objection to Sutton's "understanding" of the mother's views (1:83), I consider Sutton's "understanding," possibly based on hearsay, as simply his explanation of why he thought Walls would not want his mother hearing that the son was supporting a union.

paign (unsuccessful, apparently) in September-October 1984 (1:100). At that time Sutton was a nonsupervisory employee who actively opposed the Union (1:100).

2. The conversation in Henninger's office

Walls testified that about 2 to 3 weeks after the restroom conversation Sutton came to him at his work station (on the second shift) and asked him to go to the office of Richard E. Henninger (1:14). As the pleadings and testimony establish, Henninger is a zone manager (1:14, 85).[10] Presumably this was after the office staff had departed for the day. In any event, Walls testified that only he and Sutton were present in Henninger's office (1:14).

In the office,[11] Walls testified, Sutton informed Walls that management had held another meeting regarding a union, that Walls' name had been mentioned again, and he again asked whether Walls had anything to do with a union. When Walls denied any involvement, Sutton said that he had heard Walls' name listed as one of the union ringleaders along with 8 or 10 others, including Paul Crabtree, Lynn Byrum, Sue England, Tom England, Nancy Almacher, Ricky Tawwater, and David York (1:14–15).

Replied Walls, "No, I don't have anything to do with it; I don't know what they have to do with it." Sutton kept asking if there was any union activity Walls could tell him about, that he would appreciate any information. He asked Walls to inform him if Walls heard of any union activity, saying he would appreciate Walls' telling him.[12] Sutton finished by asking whether Walls was sure he had nothing to do with the union activity, and Walls answered that he did not have anything to do with it (1:15).[13] Walls testified that after this conversation Sutton seemed to avoid him, and that 3 to 4 weeks would pass before Sutton would even speak to him (1:20).

Sutton's version, as with the restroom conversation, is significantly different. According to Sutton, when he was making one of his normal rounds of the warehouse a couple of days after the restroom conversation, Walls asked whether Sutton had "taken care of that," and Sutton answered yes. Walls asserted that he really needed to talk with Sutton again. This time Sutton suggested the men's room. Walls vetoed that location, but agreed to Sutton's next suggestion of Henninger's office (1:85). Sutton went ahead and a few minutes later Walls joined him there.

Inside Henninger's office, Walls, who appeared "distraught," began by reporting, "Somebody dropped a bunch of union cards off at my house." Walls said he was going to return them, but "I can tell you who it is." "Steve, I don't want to know," Sutton responded. Nevertheless, Walls said he could tell him, and he named Paul Crabtree as the employee who delivered the cards (1:87).

Having named Crabtree, Walls offered to name all those attending the union meetings. Sutton replied that he really did not need to know, but if it would make Walls feel better, he could do so, although "I really don't need to know this." (1:87)

"Before I could stop him," Sutton testified, Walls began listing the names, reported they were meeting every 2 weeks, and gave the number of votes they had (1:87). Sutton stated that he had already told his boss that Walls had insisted he was not involved. Sutton told Walls not to worry about the matter. "I don't need to know all this other junk you're trying to run by me," Sutton advised Walls, and the meeting ended (1:89).

Sutton denies asking Walls to report to him about union events, and he insists that on the two occasions he and Walls talked about union matters, Walls volunteered the information (1:89–90).

Conclusions

Walls testified with a favorable demeanor and I credit him and his version of the two occasions when Sutton interrogated him.

Walls was not an open supporter of the Union, and Sutton's questions were probing and asked in a coercive context and in a coercive manner. I find that Respondent, by Sutton's conduct, violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act as alleged.[14]

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. Respondent Wagner is an employer within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

2. The Union is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

3. Respondent violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act when Supervisor Anthony L. Sutton about late February to early March 1986 twice coercively interrogated employee Stephen R. Walls about his union activities and those of other employees, and when Supervisor Sutton, during the second interrogation, requested employee Walls to report the union activities of other employees.

4. Respondent did not, as alleged in complaint paragraph 7(c), violate Section 8(a)(1) of the Act in May 1986 by, nor engage in the conduct of, coercively interrogating contract employee Jeffrey Wayne Cunningham, by promising him a permanent job conditioned on unlawful considerations, or by illegally threatening to discharge employees.

5. The unfair labor practices found affect commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

THE REMEDY

Having found that Respondent has engaged in certain unfair labor practices, I find it necessary to order it to [10] Sutton testified that he currently reports to Henninger (1:5). It is unclear whether he reported to someone else during February-March 1986.

[11] The conversation in Henninger's office is the subject of complaint par. 7(b).

[12] Complaint par. 7(b) alleges both an interrogation and that Sutton "ordered" Walls "to report on the union activities of other employees." It is clear that Sutton requested rather than ordered.

[13] Although Walls, at the hearing, reported that his answer to Sutton was "No," his overall testimony makes clear that the sense of his answer was as I have summarized.

[14] As earlier noted, Sutton requested, not ordered, Walls to report back on any union activity he learned about. The distinction is without any material difference as far as the nature of the violation.

cease and to take certain action designed to effectuate the policies of the Act.

On these findings of fact, conclusions of law, and the entire record, I issue the following recommended[15]

ORDER

The Respondent, Wagner, a Division of Cooper Industries, Inc., Tullahoma, Tennessee, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall

1. Cease and desist from

(a) Coercively interrogating any employee about union support or union activities.

(b) Requesting any employee to report to supervision/management about union activity by other employees.

(c) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them by Section 7 of the Act.

2. Take the following affirmative action necessary to effectuate the policies of the Act.

(a) Post at its Tullahoma, Tennessee facility copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix."[16] Copies of the notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 26, after being signed by Respondent's authorized representative, shall be posted by Respondent immediately upon receipt and maintained for 60 consecutive days in conspicuous places including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by Respondent to ensure that the notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(b) Notify the Regional Director in writing within 20 days from the date of this Order what steps Respondent has taken to comply.

IT IS FURTHER RECOMMENDED that complaint paragraph 7(c) is dismissed.

APPENDIX

NOTICE TO EMPLOYEES
POSTED BY ORDER OF THE
NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD
An Agency of the United States Government

The National Labor Relations Board has found that we violated the National Labor Relations Act and has ordered us to post and abide by this notice.

Section 7 of the Act gives employees these rights.

To organize
To form, join, or assist any union
To bargain collectively through representatives of their own choice
To act together for other mutual aid or protection
To choose not to engage in any of these protected concerted activities.

WE WILL NOT coercively question you about your union support or activities.

WE WILL NOT request you to report to supervision/management on the union activities of your fellow employees.

WE WILL NOT in any like or related manner interfere with, restrain, or coerce you in the exercise of the rights guaranteed you by Section 7 of the Act.

WAGNER, A DIVISION OF COOPER INDUSTRIES, INC.

[15] If no exceptions are filed as provided by Sec. 102.46 of the Board's Rules and Regulations, the findings, conclusions, and recommended Order shall, as provided in Sec. 102.48 of the Rules, be adopted by the Board and all objections to them shall be deemed waived for all purposes.

[16] If this Order is enforced by a judgment of a United States court of appeals, the words in the notice reading "Posted by Order of the National Labor Relations Board" shall read "Posted Pursuant to a Judgment of the United States Court of Appeals Enforcing an Order of the National Labor Relations Board."

25 March 1987

DECISION AND DIRECTION

BY MEMBERS JOHANSEN, STEPHENS, AND CRACRAFT

The National Labor Relations Board, by a three-member panel, has considered determinative challenges in an election held 26 November 1985 and the hearing officer's report recommending disposition of them. The election was conducted pursuant to a Stipulated Election Agreement. The revised tally of ballots shows 183 for and 181 against the Petitioner, with 10 challenged ballots.[1]

The Board has reviewed the record in light of the exceptions and briefs and has adopted[2] the hearing officer's findings and recommendations as modified.

The Petitioner challenged Wayne Winsett's ballot, contending that he has not worked for the Employer for several years due to a disability, and that he has no reasonable expectation of returning to work. The hearing officer found Winsett ineligible to vote because he has not worked in 3 years and has no estimated date of when he may return to work. The Employer contends that the hearing officer applied an incorrect legal standard in sustaining the challenge to Winsett's ballot. The Employer argues that an employee on sick leave is presumed eligible to vote absent evidence that the employee has been terminated or has resigned. The Employer submits that there is no such evidence and, therefore, Winsett is an eligible voter. We agree with the Employer.

Winsett has worked for the Employer for 20 years, and worked in a unit position until approximately 3 years before the election, when he left work due to a disability. Although his physician has not yet declared him well enough to return to work, Winsett intends to return as soon as he is able to do so. Winsett draws Social Security benefits and also receives a monthly disability benefit from the Employer's insurance carrier. The Employer continues to pay for Winsett's health insurance. Winsett has not retired from work, nor has the Employer terminated his employment. Winsett is in regular monthly contact with the Employer concerning his health condition.

The Employer's credit manager, who handles the disability program, testified that it is the Employer's policy to carry a disabled and nonworking employee on its employment rolls until that employee retires. The credit manager described the case of an employee who was disabled for approximately 11 years, but who was considered to be an employee during his period of disability.

We recently restated the Board's rule concerning the voting eligibility of an employee on sick or maternity leave. In Red Arrow Freight Lines, 278 NLRB 965 (1986), we stated that such an employee "is presumed to continue in such status unless and until the presumption is rebutted by an affirmative showing that the employee has been discharged or has resigned."[3] Here the evidence shows that Winsett did not retire, nor was he discharged, before the election. Accordingly, we overrule the challenge to Winsett's ballot and direct that it be opened and counted.

DIRECTION

IT IS DIRECTED that the Regional Director shall, within 10 days from the date of this Decision and Direction, open and count the ballots of Eddie Bailey, Maudie Bauknight, Jack Carr, Edgar Blanton, Chris Wisniewski, and Wayne Winsett, and prepare and serve on the parties a second revised tally of ballots. Thereafter, the Regional Director shall issue the appropriate certification.

[1] The original tally of ballots showed 181 for and 165 against the Petitioner, with 34 challenged ballots. The Regional Director directed that 18 ballots be opened and counted and that the challenges to 6 ballots be sustained. With respect to the 10 remaining challenged ballots, the Regional Director found that the challenges raised issues which could best be resolved by a hearing. He ordered that a hearing be held if the 10 challenges remained determinative after the other 18 ballots were opened and counted. Since the revised tally of ballots showed that they were, in fact, determinative, a hearing was held.

[2] Absent exceptions, we adopt, pro forma, the hearing officer's recommendations that the challenges to the ballots of Joann Diaz, Paul Wiley, and Walt Roberson be sustained. At the hearing, the parties stipulated that the ballot of Clarence Kemp should not be opened.

[3] 278 NLRB at 966.

Member Stephens agrees that the eligibility of employee Winsett is governed by the holding in Red Arrow Freight. He was not a member of the panel in that case, however, and he observes that even under the test that Member Babson would have applied, Winsett would be eligible to vote because he possessed a reasonable expectation of future employment.

DECISION AND DIRECTION

BY CHAIRMAN DOTSON AND MEMBERS JOHANSEN AND STEPHENS

The National Labor Relations Board, by a three-member panel, has considered determinative challenges in an election held 21 March 1986 and the hearing officer's report recommending disposition of them. The election was conducted pursuant to a Stipulated Election Agreement. The tally of the ballots shows 3 for and 0 against the Petitioner, with 4 challenged ballots.

The Board has reviewed the record in light of the exceptions and briefs, and has adopted the hearing officer's findings and recommendations, only to the extent consistent with this Decision and Direction.[1]

The hearing officer found that Stephanie Sung is a supervisor within the meaning of Section 2(11) of the Act and recommended that the challenge to Sung's ballot be sustained. The Employer excepts, contending that Sung neither exercises independent judgment in connection with her duties nor possesses any of the indicia of supervisory status as enumerated in Section 2(11) of the Act. We find merit in the Employer's exceptions.

It is well settled that the possession of any one of the indicia of supervisory authority specified in Section 2(11)[2] of the Act, provided that such authority is exercised with independent judgment on behalf of management, is sufficient to confer supervisory status on an employee. Commercial Fleet Wash, 190 NLRB 326 (1971); Indiana Refrigerator Lines, 157 NLRB 539, 550 (1966). However, isolated or sporadic exercise of this authority is insufficient to predicate a supervisory finding. See George C. Foss Co., 270 NLRB 232 (1984); Teamsters Local 574, 259 NLRB 344 (1981). Further, employees who are merely conduits for relaying management information to other employees are not true supervisors. George C. Foss Co., supra; Bowne of Houston, Inc., 280 NLRB 1222 (1986); Hydro Conduit Corp., 254 NLRB 433 (1981).

The burden of proving supervisory status rests on the party alleging that such status exists. Tucson Gas & Electric Co., 241 NLRB 181 (1979); St. Alphonsus Hospital, 261 NLRB 620, 624 (1982); Hydro Conduit Corp., supra. As shown below, we find that the Petitioner has not met that burden.

The Employer is a wholesale beer distributor with offices in San Francisco and San Jose, California. The San Francisco office employs various sales, warehouse, and delivery persons, along with seven office clerical employees, six of whom work in the front office. The Employer's president and general manager, Edward Derry, and its sales manager, Peter Marino, are located at this office. Controller Mark Blair has his office at the San Jose facility. Sung is the most experienced employee, having worked for the Employer for 14 years, and in 1985 Sung was given the title of office manager.

In finding that Stephanie Sung is a supervisor, the hearing officer relied mainly on the testimony of clerical employee Janet Davis, the only clerical employee who has been hired since Sung became office manager. Davis testified that she had two interviews, both with Sung. In the first interview, Sung asked about Davis' general employment history and background. In the second interview, Sung and Sharon Hom showed Davis what type of work she would be doing. Within a week of the second interview Sung called Davis and told her she was hired.[3] From this testimony, which he characterized as "pivotal and persuasive," the hearing officer concluded that Sung had hired Davis or effectively recommended that Blair hire her.

In addition, the hearing officer also found that because Sung talks with Blair daily and "lets him know how the office is running," she has become his "eyes, ears, and mind in the San Francisco office." In making these reports to Blair, the hearing officer reasoned that Sung was using independent judgment.

The hearing officer also pointed to Sung's title[4] and higher salary[5] as further indicia of her supervisory status. While he accepted the Employer's explanation that both are merely functions of her years with the Company, he stated that through

[1] In the absence of exceptions, we adopt pro forma the hearing officer's finding that Anna Cardinale is a confidential employee. We need not pass, therefore, on the Employer's contention in its exceptions that Cardinale is also a managerial employee.

[2] Sec. 2(11) of the Act states:

> The term "supervisor" means any individual having authority, in the interest of the employer, to hire, transfer, suspend, lay off, recall, promote, discharge, assign, reward, or discipline other employees, or responsibly to direct them, or to adjust their grievances, or effectively to recommend such action, if in connection with the foregoing the exercise of such authority is not of a merely routine or clerical nature, but requires the use of independent judgment.

[3] Davis was hired on 30 July 1985.

[4] The hearing officer noted that other persons outside of the office clerical unit who have used the title of "Manager" on their business cards were allegedly supervisors.

[5] Sung receives several hundred dollars per month more than any of the other office clericals.

her tenure she also has accumulated "authority" and is increasingly relied on "to keep the front office operating smoothly."

The hearing officer's analysis is critically flawed. The hearing officer in his report failed to recount and completely ignored the testimony of the Employer's witnesses, much of which was corroborated and uncontradicted. This testimony, as we show below, refutes that relied on by the hearing officer to establish Sung's supervisory status.

Stephanie Sung testified as follows about her duties in the hiring process. In an initial meeting Sung reviews the written application and gathers more information orally from the applicant. Sung or Sharon Hom may also show the prospective employee around the office. Sung then calls Blair and relays the information to him and asks whether he wants to schedule an interview. Ultimately, Blair makes the decision whether or not to hire the applicant and then has Sung inform the person of the decision.[6]

Mark Blair's recounting of the hiring process confirmed Sung's description. Blair testified he never relies solely on Sung's review of an applicant, but makes a decision only after he conducts his own independent investigation.

Blair and Sung testified that this procedure was followed when Janet Roberts was hired,[7] and there is no reason to believe that this was not also the case when Janet Davis was hired. In this regard, we note that Davis' testimony does not contradict that of Blair and Sung. Davis testified that Sung conducted the interviews and informed her that she was hired, not that Sung made the decision to hire her. The hearing officer failed to recognize that Davis lacked any personal knowledge of who made the decision to hire her.

In regard to Sung using independent judgment in making her reports to Blair about employee performance, the hearing officer again ignored Blair's and Sung's uncontroverted testimony. They both testified that Blair's usual practice when a new employee is hired is to call several office clericals and talk about the employee's performance. He often received such reports from Sharon Hom, Viola Hom, and Janet Roberts, all three of whom voted in the election and admittedly are not supervisors.

As to the hearing officer's reliance on Sung's title, the hearing officer ignored the fact that three of the six front office employees, including Sung, have some managerial title. Sharon Hom has the title of computer supervisor and Janet Roberts has the title of credit manager. Both of these women voted in the election and admittedly are not supervisors. In addition, as noted by the hearing officer, the uncontradicted testimony of the Employer's witnesses shows that Sung received the title of office manager because of her long service to the Employer.

Further uncontradicted testimony reveals that Sung possessed none of the indicia of supervisory status. The six front office employees perform routine office work, which includes typing, phone work, filing, invoicing, and computer input. The work is repetitive and, as Derry testified, very little supervision is needed. Sung performs the same work as the other office employees and has only two unique duties: keeping track of employee absences and gathering and maintaining payroll records. Her duties in this regard are clerical; she simply records the information given to her by an employee, and she has no authority to change the information. Also, Sung is on the same pay scale and receives the same benefits as the other clerical employees. Both Edward Derry and Mark Blair testified that the office manager has no authority to hire, fire, discipline, suspend, lay off, recall, promote, evaluate an employee for a change in compensation, approve overtime, or grant vacation time or time off. Blair further testified that he alone makes all the office clericals' work assignments and reassignments.

As to hiring, Sung and Sharon Hom have conducted some second interviews with Blair. However, as Blair testified, they did so only at his request and only to answer questions about the office duties. Although Sung has voiced an opinion on whether an applicant should be hired, Blair testified that he never relies solely on her opinion in making a decision. Also, other employees have made recommendations or voiced an opinion regarding an applicant. Peter Marino testified that Janet Roberts has recommended two applicants, including Pam Howe, and Laurie Romero has also recommended an applicant. Neither Roberts nor Romero are supervisors.

In the event of a discharge, Blair testified that he conducts an investigation. He talks with the office clericals and may observe the employee himself before making a decision. According to his uncontradicted testimony, this procedure was followed in the discharge of Pam Howe. Blair talked to Janet Roberts,[8] Viola Hom, and Sung about Howe's performance. In order to correct the problem, he had Sung explain to her what the correct procedure was. When Howe's performance did not improve, he had Sung tell her she was fired. There is no evidence that Sung was anything other than a conduit for Blair's instructions.

[6] During the hearing the Petitioner's counsel asked Sung to define the word "hire." Sung replied that "hire" means that she is to inform the applicant that they have a job, after Blair has told her to do so.

[7] Sales Manager Marino testified that Blair, before deciding to hire Roberts, called her former employer.

[8] By Peter Marino's uncontradicted account, Roberts has also recommended that a sales employee be discharged. She was receiving complaints from customers about the salesperson and went to Marino to suggest that the person be fired.

With regard to evaluating employees' performance, both Blair and Sung testified that Sung has done only one evaluation. When Janet Roberts complained about the delay in getting her evaluation and raise, Blair directed Sung to give Roberts a 3-month evaluation. They had discussed which boxes Sung should fill in on the form, and Sung followed Blair's instructions. Sung was not the office manager at this time.

According to uncontroverted statements by Derry and Blair, Sung cannot grant a wage increase. A request for a raise must be approved by Derry or a higher company official.[9] In Janet Roberts' case it was Derry who authorized her raise.

Both Derry and Sung testified that Sung has no authority to grant time off,[10] but merely acts as a conduit relaying information. Because of the small number of employees, the front office is "close-knit," and management allows the office employees to schedule their own vacations and time off. The employees merely report to Sung when they are going to take time off. She in turn reports to Derry, who routinely signs off on the absence form.

The record is devoid of any evidence that Sung has authority to grant overtime. The record is also devoid of any evidence that Sung has any authority to discipline workers. Rather, the power to discipline is vested in Derry, Marino, and Blair. According to the uncontradicted testimony of Derry and Peter Marino, Roberts has twice been reprimanded for tardiness, once by Derry and once by Marino.

With respect to the handling of employees' grievances, there is no evidence that Sung has authority to adjust or correct grievances. Blair testified that he generally handles all grievances through his constant contact with the San Francisco employees, either by phone or in person.

For the above reasons, we conclude that the Petitioner has not met its burden of establishing that Sung is a supervisor as defined by the Act. In analyzing the various incidents of alleged exercise of supervisory authority, we find that in each instance the evidence fails to establish that the authority exercised was anything more than of strictly routine nature, not involving the use of independent judgment.

With regard to hiring, firing, evaluating employee performance, granting time off, and adjusting grievances, the evidence shows that Sung merely receives and relays information to and from Blair and thus acts only as a conduit and not a true supervisor. See Hydro Conduit Corp., 254 NLRB 433 (1981); Chicago Metallic, 273 NLRB 1677, 1688–1694 (1985). With regard to the remaining indicia of supervisory status, the record is devoid of any evidence to establish that Sung was a supervisor. See Bowne of Houston, Inc., 280 NLRB 1222 (1986).

The record is clear that Sung's responsibilities did not confer on her supervisory status; rather, the record establishes that she performs the same work, receives the same benefits, and is on the same pay scale as the other office clerical employees. Further, neither Sung's title nor her ability "to keep things running smoothly" is sufficient to confer on her supervisory status. Marukyo U.S.A., Inc., 268 NLRB 1102 (1984); Hydro Conduit Corp., supra at 438.

We therefore find, contrary to the hearing officer's recommendation, that Sung is not a supervisor within the meaning of the Act, and we overrule the challenge to her ballot. Accordingly, as this ballot is sufficient in number to affect the results of the election, we shall direct the Regional Director to open and count her ballot, to prepare a revised tally of ballots, and to issue the appropriate certification.

DIRECTION

IT IS DIRECTED that the Regional Director, within 10 days from the date of this decision, open and count the ballot cast by Stephanie Sung and prepare and cause to be served on the parties a revised tally of ballots. Thereafter, the Regional Director shall issue the appropriate certification.

---

[9] Roberts testified that it was her understanding that Sung has the authority to grant her a raise. This "understanding" was based on a statement made by Sung during Roberts' evaluation, i.e., that Sung would give Roberts $50 more. However, Roberts later admitted that she was unaware of who actually granted her the raise. Furthermore, in her initial attempt to secure a raise she went to Peter Marino and not Sung, who was not the office manager at that time. When she complained about the delay in getting her evaluation and raise, Viola Hom, who was then office manager, told her to contact Blair in order to remedy the situation.

[10] According to Janet Davis' own testimony, when she was selected for jury duty, it was Davis herself who decided whether or not she would attend and, after the decision was made, Davis told Sung how she intended to change her work hours.

Kargard Industries, Inc. and Local 696, International Brotherhood of Boilermakers, Iron Ship Builders, Blacksmiths, Forgers and Helpers, AFL–CIO. Case 30–CA–9366

25 March 1987

DECISION AND ORDER

BY CHAIRMAN DOTSON AND MEMBERS JOHANSEN AND CRACRAFT

Upon a charge and amended charge filed by the Union 20 October and 25 November 1986, the General Counsel of the National Labor Relations Board issued a complaint 25 November 1986 against the Company, the Respondent, alleging that it has violated Section 8(a)(5) and (1) and Section 8(d) of the National Labor Relations Act. Although properly served copies of the charge and complaint, the Company has failed to file an answer.

On 5 January 1987 the General Counsel filed a Motion for Summary Judgment. On 7 January 1987 the Board issued an order transferring the proceeding to the Board and a Notice to Show Cause why the motion should not be granted. The Company filed no response. The allegations in the motion are therefore undisputed.

The National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

Ruling on Motion for Summary Judgment

Section 102.20 of the Board's Rules and Regulations provides that the allegations in the complaint shall be deemed admitted if an answer is not filed within 14 days from service of the complaint, unless good cause is shown. The complaint states that unless an answer is filed by 9 December 1986, "all of the allegations in the Complaint shall be deemed to be admitted to be true and shall be so found by the Board." Further, the undisputed allegations in the Motion for Summary Judgment disclose that counsel for the General Counsel, on 19 and 18 December 1986, notified the Company and its counsel, respectively, that unless an answer was received immediately, a Motion for Summary Judgment would be filed.

In the absence of good cause being shown for the failure to file a timely answer, we grant the General Counsel's Motion for Summary Judgment.

On the entire record, the Board makes the following

FINDINGS OF FACT

I. JURISDICTION

The Company, a Wisconsin corporation, engages in the manufacture, nonretail sale, and distribution of pressure vessels and related products at its facility in Marinette, Wisconsin, where it annually purchases and receives products, goods, and materials valued in excess of $50,000 directly from suppliers located outside the State of Wisconsin. We find that the Company is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act and that the Union is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

II. ALLEGED UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES

Since about 1962 the Union has represented a unit of all production and maintenance employees, including stockroom clerks, but excluding office clerical employees, professional employees, watchmen and guards, quality control employees, and supervisory employees employed at the Respondent's Marinette, Wisconsin facility. Successive collective-bargaining agreements, the most recent effective from 23 March 1986 to 23 March 1991, embody this representative status. The Union by virtue of Section 9(a) of the Act is the exclusive representative of the unit for the purposes of collective bargaining.

The latest collective-bargaining agreement contains provisions for life, accident and dismemberment, and long-term disablity insurance for members of the unit. Since about 19 August 1986 the Respondent has failed and refused to make payment for the insurance premiums as required by the collective-bargaining agreement. The failure to make the insurance premium payments led to a cancellation of the insurance coverage on 31 August 1986 by the insurance carrier.

The Respondent failed and refused to make the payments set forth above without the agreement of the Union. By these acts the Respondent unilaterally modified its collective-bargaining agreement with the Union.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. By unilaterally discountinuing insurance premium payments as required by the collective-bargaining agreement without the agreement of the Union, the Company has engaged in unfair labor practices affecting commerce within the meaning of Section 8(a)(5) and (1), Section 8(d), and Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

REMEDY

Having found that the Respondent has engaged in certain unfair labor practices, we shall order it to cease and desist and to take certain affirmative action designed to effectuate the policies of the Act.

Having found that the Respondent has unlawfully made unilateral changes in the employees' terms and conditions of employment, we shall order that the Respondent restore the status quo ante by reinstating the life, accident and dismemberment, and long-term disability insurance coverage for its employees in the unit as required by the collective-bargaining agreement. We shall further order that the Respondent make whole employees for any expenses or losses incurred as a result of the unilateral changes. The amounts paid to employees to make them whole for any losses they may have suffered as a result of the Respondent's unlawful unilateral action shall include interest to be computed in the manner prescribed in Florida Steel Corp., 231 NLRB 651 (1977). Additionally, the Respondent shall be ordered to cease and desist from implementing unilateral changes in contractual terms and conditions of employment for unit employees without the agreement of the Union. We deny as unnecessary the General Counsel's request for a visitatorial provision.

ORDER

The National Labor Relations Board orders that the Respondent, Kargard Industries, Inc., Marinette, Wisconsin, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall

1. Cease and desist from

(a) Refusing to bargain collectively with Local 696, International Brotherhood of Boilermakers, Iron Ship Builders, Blacksmiths, Forgers and Helpers, AFL–CIO, as the exclusive representative of its employees in the following unit, with respect to rates of pay, wages, hours of employment, and other terms and conditions of employment:

> All production and maintenance employees, including stockroom clerks, but excluding office clerical employees, professional employees, watchmen and guards, quality control employees, and supervisory employees as defined in the Act.

(b) Changing insurance coverage or other contractual terms and conditions of employment of employees in the unit without the agreement of the Union.

(c) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them by Section 7 of the Act.

2. Take the following affirmative action necessary to effectuate the policies of the Act.

(a) Reinstate the life, accident and dismemberment, and long-term disability insurance coverage for employees in the unit as required by the collective-bargaining agreement.

(b) Make whole, with interest, all employees for any expenses or losses incurred as a result of the unilateral termination of life, accident and dismemberment, and long-term disability insurance coverage.

(c) Preserve and, on request, make available to the Board or its agents for examination and copying, all payroll records, social security payment records, timecards, personnel records and reports, and all other records necessary to analyze the amounts due under the terms of this Order.

(d) Post at its facility in Marinette, Wisconsin, copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix."[1] Copies of the notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 30, after being signed by the Respondent's authorized representative, shall be posted by the Respondent immediately upon receipt and maintained for 60 consecutive days in conspicuous places including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by the Respondent to ensure that the notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(e) Notify the Regional Director in writing within 20 days from the date of this Order what steps the Respondent has taken to comply.

CHAIRMAN DOTSON, dissenting.

For the reasons set forth in my dissent in Rapid Fur Dressing, 278 NLRB 905 (1986), I dissent from the majority's finding that the Respondent violated Section 8(a)(5) by failing to make premium payments pursuant to its contract with the Union. There is no evidence that the Respondent has engaged in conduct reflecting a repudiation of the collective-bargaining agreement in any way tantamount to a violation of the Act or has otherwise refused to bargain. By finding a violation in these circumstances, the Board is once again allowing itself to be used as a collection agency for the Charging Party. Accordingly, I would deny the Motion for Summary Judgment.

[1] If this Order is enforced by a judgment of a United States court of appeals, the words in the notice reading "Posted by Order of the National Labor Relations Board" shall read "Posted Pursuant to a Judgment of the United States Court of Appeals Enforcing an Order of the National Labor Relations Board."

NOTICE TO EMPLOYEES
POSTED BY ORDER OF THE
NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD
An Agency of the United States Government

The National Labor Relations Board has found that we violated the National Labor Relations Act and has ordered us to post and abide by this notice.

WE WILL NOT refuse to bargain collectively with Local 696, International Brotherhood of Boilermakers, Iron Ship Builders, Blacksmiths, Forgers and Helpers, AFL–CIO, as the exclusive representative of our employees in the following unit, with respect to rates of pay, wages, hours of employment, and other terms and conditions of employment.

All production and maintenance employees, including stockroom clerks, but excluding office clerical employees, professional employees, watchmen and guards, quality control employees, and supervisory employees as defined in the Act.

WE WILL NOT change insurance coverage or other contractual terms and conditions of employment of employees in the unit without the agreement of the Union.

WE WILL NOT in any like or related manner interfere with, restrain, or coerce you in the exercise of the rights guaranteed you by Section 7 of the Act.

WE WILL reinstate the life, accident and dismemberment, and long-term disability insurance coverage for employees in the unit as required by the collective-bargaining agreement with the Union.

WE WILL make whole, with interest, all employees for any expenses or losses incurred as a result of the unilateral termination of the life, accident and dismemberment, and long-term disability insurance coverage.

SUPPLEMENTAL DECISION AND ORDER

BY CHAIRMAN DOTSON AND MEMBERS JOHANSEN AND STEPHENS

On 9 August 1977 the National Labor Relations Board issued its Decision and Order in this proceeding.[1] The administrative law judge had found that the Respondent's Code of Ethics and General Office Rules, unilaterally promulgated with their constituent penalties, constituted mandatory subjects of bargaining. On exceptions to that decision, the Board affirmed in part and reversed in part the administrative law judge's conclusions. Thus, the Board agreed that the Respondent was obligated to bargain over its General Office Rules, and that its refusal to do so was violative of Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act. Consistent with the Board's decision in the Capital Times[2] case, however, a panel majoirty concluded, contrary to the administrative law judge, that the Respondent's Code of Ethics, as a whole, did not affect terms and conditions of employment so as to constitute a mandatory subject of bargaining, but that the Code's "penalty provision, in and of itself, directly affects employment security and, therefore, is a mandatory subject of bargaining." In the majority's view, certain portions of General Office Rule 11, like the substantive provisions of Respondent's Code of Ethics, were "essentially based on ethical considerations designed to enhance the credibility of Respondent's newspaper." Thus the cited portions of General Office Rule 11 (231 NLRB at 245) were excepted from the Board's Order requiring the Respondent to bargain over the General Office Rules, but were treated together with the Code of Ethics in finding that the Respondent was obligated to bargain only to the extent of a penalty provision for violation of such rules.

On a petition for review by the Guild, the Charging Party, and an application for enforcement of its Order by the Board, the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit on 13 August 1980, issued its decision in the consolidated cases.[3] The court agreed with the Board that "protection of the editorial integrity of a newspaper lies at the core of publishing control" (636 F.2d at 560), and concluded that in order to preserve these qualities, a news publication may, subject to certain constraints, establish reasonable rules designed to prevent activity by employees which would "directly compromise their standing as responsible journalists and that of the publication for which they work as a medium of integrity." (Id. at 561.) However, the court deemed inadequate the rationale used by the Board majority to address the "problems presented by the tension between the employees' right to bargain collectively and the right of the owner of a newspaper to safeguard the credibility of his publication from injury through improper conflicts of interest." (Ibid.) The court also found, contrary to the Board majority, that constituent penalties for violation of rules cannot reasonably "be separated for Labor Act purposes from the substantive provisions which they are designed to enforce." (Ibid.) Accordingly, the court remanded this proceeding to the Board for determinations on the issues in light of the principles enunciated by the court.

On 19 November 1980 the Board, through its Executive Secretary, notified the parties that pursuant to the remand by the court of appeals, all parties might file statements of position with respect to the issues raised by the remand. Thereafter, the Respondent, the General Counsel, and the Newspaper Guild each filed a statement of position.

The National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

On further examination of the issues presented in light of the entire record, including the court's opinion and the parties' statements of positions, the Board has decided to modify its earlier Decision and Order in this proceeding.

First, our consideration of the issues leads us to conclude, in agreement with the court, that, as a general principle, rules and their constituent penalties should not be artificially severed from each other for purposes of collective bargaining under the Act. This is so because the attachment of express or implied penalties for breach of the substantive content is what transforms rules or codes of conduct from mere expressions of opinion or aspiration into terms and conditions of employment. Also, we are convinced that the impracticality of requiring parties to attempt to bargain over fragments, rather than the issues as a whole—i.e., in a vacuum—is not conducive to promoting stability or effectiveness in collective-bargaining relationships.[4]

We reaffirm the view that protection of the "editorial integrity of a newspaper lies at the core of publishing control,"[5] and that in order to preserve such, a news publication is free to establish reasonable rules designed to prevent its employees from engaging in activity which would "directly compromise their standing as responsible journalists and that of the publication for which they work as a medium of integrity," without necessarily being required to bargain initially. It follows from this privilege—which is directly incident to a newspaper's integrity—that the newspaper will be similarly exempt from mandatory bargaining about disciplinary action for employee breach of the basic rule.[6] It must be emphasized, however, that "[t]he degree of control which may be exercised by a publication in this regard is not open-ended, but must be narrowly tailored to the protection of the core purposes of the enterprise." (Id. fn. 36.) In light of the above, and keeping in mind the language of the court, we deem it appropriate at this point to indicate the general standards under which such unilateral action is to be considered.

The concept of "terms and conditions of employment" is itself a broad one—and deliberately so, for Congress intended it to be broad.[7] Thus, rules or codes of conduct governing employee behavior with constituent penalty provisions for breach necessarily fall well within the definitional boundaries of "terms and conditions" of employment. In determining whether an employer may nevertheless impose such a term and condition of employment without prior bargaining, we begin with the principle that "labor law presumes that a matter which affects the terms and conditions of employment will be a subject of mandatory bargaining."[8] In order to overcome this presumption, therefore, it is clear initially that the subject matter sought to be addressed by the employer must go to the "protection of the core purposes of the enterprise." When that is the case, the rule must on its face be (1) narrowly tailored in terms of substance, to meet with particularity only the employer's legitimate and necessary objectives, without being overly broad, vague, or ambiguous; and (2) appropriately limited in its applicability to affected employees to accomplish the necessarily limited objectives.

Turning to the provisions at issue in this case, we have reexamined the Respondent's General Office Rules and Code of Ethics under these criteria and in light of the court's opinion, and we find that the Ethics Code as a whole, as well as the General Office Rules promulgated by the Respondent, do not withstand such scrutiny and must be rescinded in their entirety. First, in affirming our holding as to the Office Rules (other than those portions of Rule 11 treated with the Code of Ethics) we reiterate our finding that they directly affect terms and conditions of employment, and the conclusion that nothing contained therein is "properly excludable from bargaining as being inherently in the exclusive" prerogative of management such as would exempt it from the normal requirements of mandatory bargaining. (See id. at fn. 38.)

With respect to the Code of Ethics, we note that the court deemed it necessary to distinguish between > those provisions of the Code which, while central to the Mercury's interest in the preservation of its legitimate managerial prerogatives, affect the employees only minimally, and those which, although not essential to the publication's freedom to conduct its business, do have a significant impact on the employees. [Id. at 561.]

> Moreover, when there is a conflict between an employer's freedom to manage his business in areas involving the basic direction of the enterprise and the right of the employees to bargain on subjects which affect the terms and conditions of their employment, a balance must be struck, if possible, which will take [into] account [the] relative importance of the proposed actions to the two parties." [Id. at 562, citing Machinists Local 1304 (Fibreboard Corp.) v. NLRB, 379 U.S. 203 at 223 (1964), and Chemical Workers v. Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co., 404 U.S. at 179.][9]

[4] Accordingly, our earlier decision in this case and the decision in Capital Times, supra, are overruled to the extent that they are inconsistent with our holding here.

[5] Although there may be exceptions to this general proposition (see, e.g., the court's opinion at fn. 33), we see no indication that such are involved here.

[6] As noted by Judge MacKinnon, there may be exceptional cases where an excessive penalty renders a rule mandatorily bargainable.

[7] See discussion at sec. VI of the court's opinion, and accompanying fn. 39–41.

[8] Id. at sec. VI; see Chemical Workers v. Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co., 404 U.S. 157 at 178–179 (1971).

[9] With respect to the former statement, it is clear there are multiple permutations depending on the number and complexity of the variables used. Thus, a simple matrix using just the two suggested by the court, i.e., placing the essentiality or nonessentiality to preservation of the employer's interest on one axis, and the resultant minimal or significant impact of the rule on employees on the other, would generate four combinations which can be summarized as follows: (1) nonessential to employer: minimal impact on employee; (2) nonessential to employer: significant impact on employees; (3) essential to employer: minimal impact on employees; (4) essential to employer: significant impact on employees. Where, as here, the penalty for breach of a rule consists of discipline including discharge (either discretionary or automatic) it is clear that the Assessing the Respondent's Code of Ethics under the framework discussed above, we find it unnecessary at this time to decide specifically which, if any, of the ethics code provisions may be deemed restricted to subject matter necessary to the "protection of the core purposes of the enterprise" so as to overcome the initial presumption of mandatory bargainability. For assuming arguendo that they would overcome the presumption, we conclude that the Code as actually promulgated by the Respondent must fall in any event because it is deficient in other respects. Thus, the entire Code, together with the office rules of which the Code was deemed a part, applies on its face to "all employees," without appropriate limitation to designated categories of employees (e.g., reporters and editorial personnel as well as maintenance and circulation employees) as to which requirements differ. Moreover, each employee, with no prior requirement or opportunity for bargaining by the employees' representatives, is required by the Code's "Pledge" section to "make himself known now and state his reasons," in the event the employee does not "wholly and fully subscribe" to the tenets of the Code, in effect requiring the employee to bypass the collective-bargaining representative and bargain directly with the Employer. In addition the code provisions are in our view substantially overly broad as promulgated rather than narrowly tailored in terms of their content to meet with particularity what may be legitimate objectives of the Respondent. Also, like the court, we perceive significant differences between a gift from a news source which is designed to influence news coverage on the one hand, and a "freebie" given relatively indiscriminately—particularly so when as frequently occurred at the Respondent, such freebies or tickets were actually distributed by the editor. Similarly, where an employer wishes to address the subject matter of an employee's secondary employment, we deem it incumbent on the employer to distinguish between employment which would constitute a clear and improper conflict of interest, and that which does not. We find no such distinction made here by the Respondent.

With respect to the Respondent's attempts to curtail other outside activities of its employees, i.e., "political involvement, holding public office, service in community organizations," or failure to "conduct their personal lives," outside the office hours so as not to reflect adversely on the Respondent or cause "loss of business or patronage," we concur in the court's pointed comment that such regulation "interferes substantially with the civil and economic rights of the employees (and indeed their private lives)." (Id. at 563.)[10] The preservation of editorial integrity does not necessarily dictate a requirement of employee abstention from political participation or service in community organizations. Nor is there evident a need for a general directive aimed at regulating the employees' conduct of their personal lives, with its inherent potential for "misuse against those with whose political, social, religious, or union beliefs a publisher may disagree," (ibid. at fn. 50), or a prohibition of activities such as an "iffy" ban that hangs like a sword and squarely presents "inescapable" constitutional problems.[11] In the instant case, we find that Respondent has not demonstrated on the record that its regulation of such areas was supported by "clearly defined, directly necessary compensating benefits in terms of the employer's legitimate concerns." Id.

These deficiencies of overbreadth are in our view further compounded by the open-ended nature of the Rules and Code as written by the Respondent. The General Office Rules (of which the Code became a part) stated:

> These rules include, but are not limited to, all of the office rules for your department. Your department head may add to these rules more specific rules which apply to your department. Violation of office rules may be deemed cause for discharge except in the case of those rules where discharge is automatic.

Thus, in addition to the other infirmities discussed above, the Respondent in its rules purported to invest itself with the sole discretion to later impose additional rules subjecting employees to discipline, including discharge, without regard to their content or the presumptive requirements of mandatory bargaining. This caveat—itself unilaterally promulgated without bargaining, which we have previously ordered rescinded—cannot in our view serve to justify a subsequent avoidance of the presumptive requirements of bargaining about terms and conditions of employment, including the delicate and sensitive matters encompassed within the Code's provisions.

We also note that the Code of Ethics provisions here contain some vagueness and certain ambigumatter affects the "terms and conditions" of employees, and also that the impact is "significant." Hence none of the code provisions involved here fall in the third category. Combinations one and two would also appear eliminated because matters not essential to the Employer's direction of the enterprise would not in any event overcome the initial presumption of mandatory bargainability. Thus, it would seem that the court was contemplating only the fourth combination above in its statement concerning "balancing."

ities, as well as possibly conflicting requirements. For example, paragraph 4 of the "ETHICS" section provides in part that "Newspaper people will seek news that serves the public interest, despite the obstacles." Section 2 under "FAIR PLAY," on the other hand, provides that "The news media must guard against invading a person's right to privacy." Without intruding into a debate concerning what constitutes "the public interest" in this context (a term which we note is not defined in the Code), or seeking to define what best "serves" that end, we find it unclear from the Code itself whether the "obstacles" which must be overcome under the "ETHICS" section exclude or encompass the "right to privacy" which must be guarded under section 2 of "FAIR PLAY." Nor is it clear whether either or both of the above is intended to be subordinate to paragraph 1 of "ACCURACY AND OBJECTIVITY" which provides: "Truth in all things is our ultimate goal." Paragraph 3 of the latter section asserts: "There is no excuse for inaccuracies or lack of thoroughness," while "FAIR PLAY," section 4, states that "It is the duty of news media to make prompt and complete correction of their errors"; thereby potentially presenting employees with a "Hobson's" choice: i.e., promptly correct an error and be subject to discharge, since there is "no excuse for inaccuracies," or not do so and be likewise subject to discharge for failing to make a "prompt and complete correction" of the error. We find it likewise unclear whether the "public's right to know of events of public importance and interest" as the "overriding mission" of the Respondent's publication, is intended to include an obligation to report stolen documents, or whether there is any limitation on the assertion in the "ETHICS" section that newspaper people must be free of obligation "to any interest other than the public's right to know," or to what extent employees must acknowledge the ethic of protecting confidential sources of information. We note also that what may be deemed to have "news value" by one publisher may be considered "insignificant" or pandering to "morbid curiosity" by another.

Infirmities such as these may be deemed tolerable where an employer wishes merely to announce its own goals as an adjunct to attempting to improve the quality of its publication or enhancing its credibility. But they are not acceptable where, as here, an employer seeks unilaterally to impose such imprecision on employees in the form of rules which affect their terms and conditions of employment, and for breach of which the employees may be subject to discharge. In the latter situation, where the impact on employees is self-evident and significant, the necessary remedy is rescission. Accordingly, we shall revise our prior Order in this proceeding, as set out in full below, to require that the provisions of the Code of Ethics, as well as the General Offices Rules, be rescinded in their entirety.

We wish to make it clear that our decision does not preclude the Respondent from establishing completely new ethics code and rules provisions subject to the standards set forth above, where the content of such rules is necessary to the credibility of the institution and/or the quality of its product, and the rules themselves are narrowly tailored, unambiguous, and designate the category of employees to whom applicable; provided, however, that such statements of ethics and rules requirements do not improperly impinge on the relevant rights of the affected employees.

ORDER

The National Labor Relations Board orders that the Respondent, Peerless Publications, Inc. (Pottstown Mercury), Pottstown, Pennsylvania, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall

1. Cease and desist from

(a) Refusing to bargain collectively with the Newspaper Guild of Greater Philadelphia, Local 10, on request, about terms and conditions of employment embodied in the Respondent's General Office Rules and Code of Ethics, including their penalty provisions.

(b) Unilaterally promulgating or changing rules or codes of conduct, including any penalty provisions, which affect wages or terms and conditions of employment, or enforcing such unilaterally promulgated rules or penalty provisions, without giving the Union notice and the opportunity to bargain.

(c) Unilaterally implementing the penalty provisions of the present Code of Ethics by warning letters.

(d) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them by Section 7 of the Act, or interfering with the Union's efforts to bargain collectively with it with respect to the following appropriate unit:

> All employees in the Editorial, Circulation, Maintenance, Telephone Operator and Advertising Departments, but excluding the managing editor, city editor, circulation manager, confidential secretary to the Publisher, county string correspondents, commission advertising salesmen, and the national, display and classified advertising managers.

2. Take the following affirmative action necessary to effectuate the policies of the Act.

(a) Rescind in writing the General Office Rules and the Code of Ethics, including the penalty provisions.

(b) On request, bargain with the Union concerning terms and conditions of employment to be contained in any revised General Office Rules or Code of Ethics, including any penalty provisions, and, if an agreement is reached, embody it in a signed agreement.

(c) Rescind and withdraw from personnel or other files maintained by the Respondent copies of or references to the warning letters issued to employees Dougherty and Smith dated 16 May 1974, and rescind any other disciplinary actions which resulted from enforcement of this penalty provision, notify the employees in writing that this has been done and that the discipline will not be used against them in any way, and make employees whole for any losses they may have suffered by reason of the enforcement of these penalty provisions in the manner set forth in the remedy section of the Board's decision in this proceeding, reported at 231 NLRB 244 (1977).

(d) Preserve and, on request, make available to the Board or its agents for examination and copying, all payroll records, social security payment records, timecards, personnel records and reports, and all other records necessary to analyze the amount of backpay due under the terms of this Order.

(e) Post at its place of business in Pottstown, Pennsylvania, copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix."[12] Copies of the notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 4, after being signed by the Respondent's authorized representative, shall be posted by the Respondent immediately upon receipt and maintained for 60 consecutive days in conspicuous places including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by the Respondent to ensure that the notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(f) Notify the Regional Director in writing within 20 days from the date of this Order what steps the Respondent has taken to comply.

MEMBER STEPHENS, concurring.

I concur in the result.

[12] If this Order is enforced by a judgment of a United States court of appeals, the words in the notice reading "Posted by Order of the National Labor Relations Board" shall read "Posted Pursuant to a Judgment of the United States Court of Appeals Enforcing an Order of the National Labor Relations Board."

SUPPLEMENTAL DECISION AND ORDER

BY MEMBERS JOHANSEN, BABSON, STEPHENS, AND CRACRAFT

On 14 December 1984 the National Labor Relations Board issued a Decision and Order in this proceeding[1] in which it found that the Respondents violated Section 8(b)(4)(i) and (ii)(B) of the Act by picketing on behalf of independent contractor taxicab drivers who had a dispute with the Charging Parties over the terms of their leases. On a petition for review and a cross-application for enforcement of the Board's Order, the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit on 13 June 1986 vacated the Board's Order and remanded the case to the Board for further proceedings consistent with the court's opinion.[2]

The Board thereafter accepted the court's remand and notified the parties that they could file statements of position. The General Counsel and the Respondents have filed statements of position.

We have carefully reviewed the record in this case, as well as the statements of position, and, for the reasons discussed below, we have decided to overrule our prior decision in this case and dismiss the complaint. Specifically, we agree with the court's finding that the picketed companies were not neutral parties to the dispute and therefore the Respondents' picketing was primary activity which does not fall within the proscriptions of Section 8(b)(4).

The relevant facts, which are not in dispute, are as follows. Checker Taxi Company and Yellow Cab Company own about 80 percent of the licensed taxicabs in Chicago. Each Company operates both "lease" cabs driven by independent contractors (LCDs)[3] and "commission" cabs driven by union-represented employees.[4] Both Companies operate many more lease cabs than commission cabs.[5] The LCDs lease the cabs for periods ranging from half a day to 1 week, with daily leases being the general practice. Six of Yellow's seven garages house only lease cabs; the remaining garage houses cabs operated by commission drivers. Similarly, Checker maintains four garages with cabs operated exclusively by LCDs and one garage with cabs operated by both LCDs and commission employees.

By 1980 the LCDs had become increasingly dissatisfied with the terms of their leases and began to band together to deal collectively with the Companies under the leadership of an LCD, the Reverend Joseph McAfee. In early July 1980 McAfee consulted with officials of the Respondents, and by the end of the month the Respondents created the "Leased Taxicab Drivers Division" within their organizations. McAfee had enlisted about 1200 of the Companies' approximately 3126 LCDs in his effort, and the Respondents began signing up the LCDs and collecting initiation fees and dues. On 8 August 1980 the Respondents requested the Companies to recognize and bargain with them on behalf of the LCDs, but the Companies refused to do so.

On 12 August 1980 the Respondents and some LCDs began picketing and handbilling at the Companies' garages. Except for one brief incident on the first morning of the picketing, the Respondents and LCDs confined their picketing to garages that housed only cabs operated by LCDs.[6] The various picket signs read: "Please do not lease a cab until an agreement is signed regarding your working conditions"; "Lease Cabs on Strike Production Workers Union Local 707"; and "Lease Cab 707 Drivers 707 on Strike Yellow & Checker Taxi Cab Company." The picketing was effective in reducing the number of cabs leased by the LCDs from the Companies, and during the picketing some of the Companies' suppliers refused to make deliveries. There is no evidence that any customer declined to use the Companies' cabs during the picketing.

In its prior decision in this case, the Board observed that in enacting Section 8(b)(4), Congress had the dual objectives "of preserving the right of labor organizations to bring pressure to bear on offending employers in primary labor disputes and of shielding unoffending employers and others from pressures in controversies not their own," quoting from NLRB v. Denver Building Trades Council, 341 U.S. 675, 692 (1951). The Board held that since the LCDs were independent contractors, the Respondents' efforts on their behalf fell neither within "the rights of labor to organize to better its conditions"[7]

[2] 793 F.2d 323 (D.C. Cir. 1986).

[3] The lease cab drivers' status as independent contractors was determined in Seafarers Local 777 v. NLRB, 603 F.2d 862 (D.C. Cir. 1978).

[4] The commission drivers are represented by Seafarers Local 777.

[5] At the time of the hearing, only 340 of Yellow's 2166 cabs and 200 of Checker's 1500 cabs were operated by commission drivers.

[6] On that first morning the Respondents established a picket line at Yellow's garage which houses only employee-operated cabs. Within 30 minutes, a Seafarers Local 777 official went to the garage and advised the Respondents that no lease cabs were operated out of that garage. The Respondents promptly removed their pickets and never resumed picketing at that location. We shall discuss this incident below.

nor "the right of labor organizations to bring pressure to bear on offending employers in primary labor disputes."[8]

Further, the Board found no evidence that Congress intended that picketing on behalf of independent contractors is to be considered within the proviso to Section 8(b)(4) protecting primary activity. Accordingly, the Board found that the Respondents' "goal, that of causing the interruption of leases between the [cab companies] and the LCDs, in the absence of a primary labor dispute, was clearly within the scope of the broad proscription of Section 8(b)(4)(ii)(B)."[9] 273 NLRB at 1181.

In addition, the Board concluded that the Respondents' brief picketing at Yellow's garage housing cabs used only by commission drivers violated Section 8(b)(4)(i)(B). The Board stated that there was no evidence that the Respondents could not have learned that no LCDs used the garage before commencing their picketing.

Contrary to the Board, the D.C. Circuit held that Section 8(b)(4) does not prohibit union involvement in all picketing by or on behalf of independent contractors. Instead, the court asserted that Section 8(b)(4) bars only "'secondary activity': union attempts to involve neutral third parties in disputes not their own."[10] The court determined that the picketing at the LCD garages was not unlawful because it was directed against only the cab companies, who were not neutral parties, but rather were "directly and intimately involved in the underlying dispute." Thus, the court decided that Congress intended "primary activity" to include all picketing against nonneutral parties, whether by independent contractors or by anyone else. The court emphasized that a neutral is a third party "wholly unconcerned" in a dispute between two other parties, and that "Yellow and Checker are not at all neutral in this sense; the LCD's dispute over contract terms lies precisely and only with the cab companies." Accordingly, the court remanded the case to the Board for application of the correct standard, i.e., that Section 8(b)(4) proscribes only picketing against neutral parties.[11]

We now agree with the court's findings that picketing against a neutral party is a necessary predicate to finding a violation of Section 8(b)(4) and that in this case there were no neutral parties subjected to picketing. Although the picket signs appealed to LCDs to cease doing business with the Companies, the picketing was directed against the Companies, which were the only parties with whom the Respondents had a dispute. The picketing occurred only at the cab companies' premises, and the picketing concerned only the Respondents' dispute with the Companies. The Respondents did not appeal to potential customers of the LCDs or to customers or employees of other persons who do business with the Companies. In this regard, we note that we are constrained to accept the court's factual finding that the LCDs were essentially a monolithic group united in a dispute with the Companies and uniform in their definition of their mutual self-interest.[12]

That the dispute here did not concern statutory employees is not determinative of whether the picketing was primary or secondary activity. Rather, the key factor is whether the picketing was applied against a neutral party that Section 8(b)(4) is intended to insulate from labor disputes. Thus, the Board's prior decision erred by focusing exclusively on the status of the LCDs as nonemployees, and disregarding the nonneutral status of the cab companies. In this respect, we conclude that the following statement by the Supreme Court in International Rice Milling, supra, is applicable here:

> By § 13, Congress has made it clear that § 8(b)(4), and all other parts of the Act which otherwise might be read so as to interfere with, impede or diminish the union's traditional right to strike, may be so read only if such interference, impediment or diminution is "specifically provided for" in the Act. . . . No such specific provision in § 8(b)(4) reaches the incident here.[13]

As the Respondents picketed no neutral party in this case, we find that the picketing was primary activity. Accordingly, we overrule our prior decision and find that the Respondents' picketing at the LCD garages did not violate Section 8(b)(4)(ii)(B).

We also reverse our previous finding and dismiss the 8(b)(4)(i)(B) allegation concerning the Respond-

[9] As a threshold matter, the Board had reversed an administrative law judge's finding that the Board lacked subject matter jurisdiction because the case did not involve statutory employees. The Board stated that it was well established that statutory labor organizations, such as the Respondents, are subject to the proscriptions of Sec. 8(b)(4) "whether or not their activities concern statutory employees." The D.C. Circuit upheld this aspect of the Board's decision.

[10] 793 F.2d at 327.

[11] In view of the remand on this ground, the court found it unnecessary to address the Board's finding that the one-time picketing at Yellow's commission drivers' garage violated Sec. 8(b)(4)(i)(B). The court, however, noted a reservation about the Board's conclusion that the picketing at that garage was an attempt to cause the commission drivers to stop work. See infra.

[12] The finding that all the LCDs shared the same interests distinguishes this case from prior cases in which the Board has found unlawful picketing and other pressure directed against neutral independent contractors, rather than engaged in on their behalf. See, e.g., Teamsters Local 814 (Santini Bros.), 208 NLRB 184 (1974), enfd. 546 F.2d 989 (D.C. Cir. 1976), cert. denied 434 U.S. 818 (1977); Musical Artists (Washington School of Ballet), 157 NLRB 735 (1966).

ents' picketing of the Yellow garage housing only cabs operated by the commission drivers. As noted earlier, this conduct occurred on the first morning of the picketing, lasted for at most 30 minutes, and ceased as soon as the pickets were informed that no LCDs were present. Thus, the record indicates that the employee garage was picketed only because the Respondents mistakenly believed that LCDs also used that garage. In these circumstances, we are not persuaded that the General Counsel has shown that this picketing had the necessary forbidden secondary object.[14]

DECISION AND ORDER

BY MEMBERS JOHANSEN, STEPHENS, AND CRACRAFT

On 27 December 1985 Administrative Law Judge Jerrold H. Shapiro issued the attached decision. The Respondent filed exceptions and a supporting brief, and the Charging Party filed an answering brief. The General Counsel filed limited exceptions and a supporting brief.[1]

The National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the decision and the record in light of the exceptions and briefs[2] and has decided to affirm the judge's rulings, findings, and conclusions only to the extent consistent with this Decision and Order.

The judge found that the Respondent violated Section 8(b)(4)(i) and (ii)(B) of the Act by picketing Chipman Freight Services with an object of interrupting the business relationships between Chipman and its independent contractor subhaulers, but did not violate Section 8(b)(4)(i) and (ii)(B) by picketing Chipman with an object of forcing or requiring Chipman to recognize or bargain with the Respondent as the representative of the subhaulers. For the reasons stated below, we find that the Respondent's picketing of Chipman Freight Services with either of these objectives did not violate Section 8(b)(4)(i) and (ii)(B) of the Act. Accordingly, we shall dismiss the complaint.

Chipman uses 22 subhaulers or owner-operators to transport containers to and from the Oakland dock area. The Respondent concedes that the subhaulers are independent contractors and not employees of Chipman. The subhaulers were required to sign a uniform subhaul agreement in order to do business with Chipman. That agreement was subject to immediate cancellation by either party by giving the other party written notice.

In July 1985[3] Chipman drafted a new subhaul agreement to replace the old one. The new agreement specifically states that the subhauler is an independent contractor and not an employee of Chipman. On 29 July Chipman's general manager Tucker notified all the subhaulers that their old subhaul agreements were canceled and told them that they would have to sign the new agreement in order to do business with Chipman. Only two subhaulers signed new agreements 29 July; two others signed 26 August.

In attempting to regain work from Chipman, some of the subhaulers sought the assistance of the Respondent, which had in June and July already begun efforts to organize the approximately 400 owner-operators in the Oakland area.

On 30 July Alex Ybarrolaza, the director of the Teamsters owner-operater division, attempted to convince Tucker to reinstate the old subhaul agreements and to recognize the Respondent as the representative of the owner-operators. Tucker refused.

On 6 August Ybarrolaza wrote to Chipman that the Respondent represented Chipman's subhaulers and enclosed a blank copy of a recognition agreement. He also sent similar letters to other companies in the area.

On 7 August Ybarrolaza met with most of Chipman's subhaulers. He suggested that the subhaulers sign the new agreement but attach a cover letter prepared by the Respondent stating that the agreement does not accurately define the subhaulers' employment status, and it was not the subhaulers' intent to redefine their status. The subhaulers rejected this course of action because they wanted to work under the old agreement.[4] They voted to picket Chipman, and the Respondent agreed to support the picket line until Chipman took back all the subhaulers under the old agreement. On 7 August the Respondent began picketing Chipman with signs reading, "CHIPMAN FREIGHT SERVICES—UNFAIR TO OWNER OPERATORS—TEAMSTERS LOCAL 70."

The four subhaulers who signed new agreements with Chipman have not performed work at Chipman because of the picketing. Some of Chipman's customers have also refused to cross the picket line.

On 13 August Tucker responded to the Respondent's 6 August request for recognition by refusing to recognize the Respondent because the subhaulers are not Chipman's employees, but independent contractors.

On 15 August the Respondent responded that while it would like to gain recognition at Chipman, the picketing was for the sole purpose of returning

[1] The Respondent, the General Counsel, and the Charging Party also filed supplemental statements of position.

[2] The Charging Party has requested oral argument. The request is denied as the record, exceptions, and briefs adequately present the issues and the positions of the parties.

[3] All dates are in 1985 unless otherwise indicated.

[4] The new agreement, among other things, provided for a different method of compensation.

all Chipman subhaulers to their jobs and not for the purpose of gaining recognition, and that the subhaulers would return to work if Chipman would not require them to sign the new subhaul agreement.

On 16 August Tucker wrote to the subhaulers that he was still interested in meeting with them to negotiate new contracts.

On 22 August Ybarrolaza wrote that the subhaulers had selected a committee of three subhaulers to discuss a new contract with Chipman and that the Respondent would not participate in those discussions that could begin as soon as the subhaulers were allowed to resume work under the old agreement.

On 23 August Tucker replied that he would not reinstate the old contracts and that he was not willing to meet with groups of owner-operators because of potential antitrust ramifications.

In finding that the Respondent violated Section 8(b)(4)(B) of the Act by picketing with an object of forcing independent-contractor subhaulers to cease doing business with Chipman, the judge found that the ultimate object was to force Chipman to do business with the subhaulers under the old, rather than the new, subhaul agreement.

The judge rejected the Respondent's contention that the picketing was primary. The judge relied on the Board's decision in Production Workers Local 707 (Checker Taxi), 273 NLRB 1178 (1984) (Checker I),[5] which held that a union is not engaged in primary activity when it brings economic pressure against a company to cause a cessation of business between the company and its independent contractors, where the union has no dispute concerning the company's own employees. The judge concluded that here the Respondent was not engaged in primary activity because the Respondent picketed Chipman to cause a cessation of business with Chipman's independent contractor subhaulers absent a dispute concerning Chipman's employees. Thus, the judge found that the picketing violated Section 8(b)(4)(i) and (ii)(B) of the Act.

Following the issuance of the judge's decision in the instant case, however, the D.C. Circuit vacated the Board's Checker I decision and remanded that case to the Board. Production Workers Union of Chicago v. NLRB, 793 F.2d 323 (D.C. Cir. 1986). The court disagreed with the Board's premise that Section 8(b)(4) of the Act prohibits union involvement in all picketing on behalf of independent contractors. Rather, the court held that Section 8(b)(4) bars only secondary activity, which the court defined as "union attempts to involve neutral third parties in disputes not their own." 793 F.2d at 327. The court found that the picketing was not unlawful because it was directed against the cab companies, nonneutral parties, who were directly and intimately involved in the underlying dispute. The court remanded the case to the Board for application of the proper standard.

Following the remand, the Board reconsidered its Checker I position, and in Production Workers Local 707 (Checker Taxi), 283 NLRB 340 issued today (Checker II), the Board agreed with the D.C. Circuit that Section 8(b)(4) of the Act prohibits only picketing against neutral parties, those "wholly unconcerned in the disagreement." 793 F.2d at 328. Applying that standard to the facts in Checker, the Board found that because the underlying dispute was with the cab companies, the cab companies are not neutrals. Thus, the Board found that the picketing against the cab companies is primary activity and does not violate Section 8(b)(4) of the Act.

We believe that Checker II controls the instant case. Here, the complaint alleges that the Respondent violated Section 8(b)(4)(i) and (ii)(B) of the Act by picketing Chipman with an object of interrupting the business relationships between Chipman and its subhaulers and with an object of forcing Chipman to recognize the Respondent as the subhaulers' representative. Chipman, however, is not a neutral party but is directly and intimately involved in the underlying dispute. The subhaulers' dispute was solely with Chipman, and the Respondent's picketing on behalf of the subhaulers was directed against Chipman. As Chipman is not a neutral, the Respondent's picketing against Chipman, with either of the alleged objectives, is primary activity that does not violate Section 8(b)(4)(B) of the Act. Accordingly, we shall dismiss the complaint.

ORDER

The complaint is dismissed.

Rony Clements and Barbara D. Davison, for the General Counsel.

John M. Skonberg and Patricia A. Shepherd (Littler, Mendelson, Fastiff & Tichy), for the Charging Party.

[5] Checker I involved taxicab companies that lease cabs driven by independent contractors (LCDs). Some of the LCDs became dissatisfied with the lease arrangements offered by the companies. They approached the union, which formed a "Leased Taxicab Drivers Division" within the union. The union began collecting dues and initiation fees from the drivers, and sought recognition and bargaining from the companies on behalf of the LCDs. When the companies refused to recognize the union, the union and the LCDs began picketing and handbilling at the companies' garages. The picket signs stated that the LCDs were on strike and requested, inter alia, that the drivers refuse to lease cabs until an agreement was signed. The Board found that the picketing violated Sec. 8(b)(4)(i) and (ii)(B) of the Act because picketing on behalf of independent contractors was not lawful primary activity.

DECISION

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

JERROLD H. SHAPIRO, Administrative Law Judge. The hearing in this case held 30 October 1985 was based on an unfair labor practice charge filed in Case 32–CC–1025 on 7 August 1985 by Chipman Freight Services, and an amended complaint issued 4 October 1985 on behalf of the General Counsel of the National Labor Relations Board, by the Board's Regional Director for Region 32, alleging that Teamsters Local 70 (Respondent) was engaging in unfair labor practices within the meaning of Section 8(b)(4)(ii)(B) of the National Labor Relations Act. The amended complaint, as amended at the hearing, alleges that Respondent violated Section 8(b)(4)(ii)(B) of the Act by picketing at Chipman Freight's facilities and by picketing Chipman Freight's trucks at the facility of Sea-Land Services with an object of forcing and requiring Sea-Land and other persons to cease doing business with Chipman Freight, and with an object of forcing and requiring Chipman Freight to recognize and bargain with Respondent for the subhaulers with whom Chipman Freight was doing business.[1] Respondent filed an answer denying the commission of the alleged unfair labor practices.

On the entire record, from my observation of the demeanor of the witnesses, and having considered the posthearing briefs filed by the parties, I make the following

FINDINGS OF FACT

I. JURISDICTION

Chipman Freight, a California corporation, is engaged in the transportation and transhipment of freight and operates two terminals in Oakland, California. Its Oakland terminals, during a 12-month period material to this case, earned more than $50,000 from transporting freight in interstate commerce and as a link in commerce.

Sea-Land, a New Jersey corporation, is engaged in the international and interstate transportation of freight by water and operates a facility in Oakland, California. Its Oakland facility, during a 12-month period material to this case, earned more than $50,000 from transporting containerized cargo in interstate commerce and as a link in commerce.

During the time material to this case Chipman Freight, at its Oakland terminals, used the services of 22 truckdrivers, who owned their own trucks, to perform drayage and other trucking services. The relationship between Chipman Freight and these 22 owner-operators (subhaulers) will be described in detail infra. Respondent admitted for purposes of this litigation that the subhaulers are independent contractors and not employees of Chipman Freight.

Chipman Freight and Sea-Land are employers engaged in commerce and in an industry affecting commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act and Chipman Freight, Sea-Land, and each of the above-described subhaulers has been a person engaged in commerce and in operations affecting commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

II. THE LABOR ORGANIZATION INVOLVED

The Respondent, Brotherhood of Teamsters and Auto Truck Drivers, Local 70 of Alameda County, affiliated with International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen and Helpers of America, is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

III. THE ALLEGED UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES

A. The Evidence

Chipman Freight operates two terminals in Oakland, California, where it provides warehouse space and facilities for transloading cargo being shipped into or out of the Port of Oakland in marine containers. Freight is transported to and from these terminals by drivers employed by Chipman Freight, by drivers employed by Chipman Freight's customers, and by the independent contractor subhaulers.

Chipman Freight employs approximately 25 employees at its Oakland terminals, including managerial and supervisory employees. The rank-and-file employees—truckdrivers, warehousemen, hostlers, and freight handlers—are represented by the Diversified Transportation Specialist Union. Their terms and conditions of employment are established by a collective-bargaining contract between that union and the employer.

In addition to its employee-drivers, Chipman Freight uses the services of the 22 independent contractor subhaulers to move containers to and from the Port of Oakland dock area, and in some cases to make deliveries away from the Port of Oakland. Most of these subhaulers are owner-operators; that is, they own, maintain, and drive their own trucking equipment used to haul containers for Chipman Freight. Five of the subhaulers, however, own one or more trucks used by Chipman Freight, which are driven by employees of the subhauler. Prior to the events in this case all the subhaulers, including the owner-operator group, were required to sign a uniform "sub-haul agreement" in order to work for Chipman Freight. This agreement refers to the subhaulers as independent businesspersons, and obligates them to "provide transportation services for such shipments as [Chipman Freight] may from time to time tender." The drivers' compensation under the agreement was computed on the basis of a percentage of the rates charged by Chipman Freight. The subhaul agreement was subject to immediate cancellation by either party "by giving the other party written notice."

[1] The amended complaint contained an 8(b)(4)(ii)(B) allegation based on an unfair labor practice charge filed in Case 32–CC–1026 by Sea-Land. The parties at the start of the hearing represented that they had agreed to a settlement of the complaint's allegation encompassed by that charge. Accordingly, I granted the General Counsel's unopposed motion to sever the charge in Case 32–CC–1026 from this proceeding and to remand it to the Board's Regional Director.

In July 1985[2] Chipman Freight's general manager, Jon Tucker, drafted a new uniform subhaul agreement to replace the existing one. The new uniform agreement entitled "Sub-haul Agreement With Independent Contractor" changed the existing agreement in two significant respects. The old one was silent about the subhauler's independent contractor status, whereas the new one specifically stated that the signatory subhauler was an independent contractor and not an employee of Chipman Freight, and further stated that the subhauler would in all respects direct the operation of the equipment he used to perform under the agreement, and described in detail the authority and responsibilities of the subhauler in this respect. Also, whereas under the old subhauler agreement Chipman Freight agreed to pay the subhauler 70 percent of the rates charged customers by Chipman Freight, the new uniform agreement proposed that Chipman Freight and the signatory subhauler negotiate flat rates for the subhauler's services according to the particular hauls.

On 29 July General Manager Tucker notified each of the Company's 22 subhaulers that effective immediately their subhaul agreements were canceled. On that day and the days immediately following, Tucker met with each of the subhaulers individually. He showed them a copy of the new uniform subhaul agreement, explained the Company's reasons for changing the old agreement, stated that the terms of the new proposed agreement and rate schedule were negotiable, and offered to negotiate with the individual subhaulers. Tucker also told the subhaulers that they would have to sign a new subhaul agreement before being allowed to do business with Chipman Freight. In fact, none of the subhaulers were allowed to continue to work for Chipman Freight until they entered into a new subhaul agreement. Only 4 of the 22 subhaulers, at the time of the 30 October hearing, had negotiated new subhaul agreements; Tyrone Searcy Trucking and Max Lopez Trucking on 29 July, Hunter Trucking and Cliffs Trucking on 26 August.

In June and July, prior to 29 July, Respondent's owner/operator division was conducting a campaign to organize the approximately 400 owner-operators in the trucking business in the Port of Oakland and vicinity. Alex Ybarrolaza, the director of Respondent's owner/-operator division, was in charge of this campaign. Prior to 29 July Ybarrolaza conducted several organizational meetings which were each attended by between 100 and 200 owner/operators. He told the owner/operators that Respondent wanted to represent them in order to improve their rates and conditions of employment and asked them to sign cards authorizing Respondent to act as their collective-bargaining representative. Some of Chipman Freight's subhaulers attended these meetings.

On 30 July Ybarrolaza visited General Manager Tucker. He told Tucker that the subhaulers "terminated" by Chipman Freight on 29 July had signed cards authorizing Respondent to represent them. Ybarrolaza asked Tucker to reinstate the subhaul agreements which were canceled 29 July and to put all the subhaulers back to work. He explained to Tucker that Respondent was in the process of formulating new proposals or programs for the subhaulers, which Respondent wanted to discuss with Chipman Freight, but they were not quite ready for presentation and, in the meantime, Ybarrolaza wanted Chipman Freight to return to the "status quo." Tucker responded by advising Ybarrolaza to contact Chipman Freight's attorney.

On 5 August Respondent filed an unfair labor practice charge (Case 32–CA–7414) with the Board's Regional Office. It alleged that Chipman Freight violated Section 8(a)(1) and (3) of the Act by discharging 18 named individuals on 29 July because of their participation in concerted activities.[3] The 18 individuals named in the charge were, for the most part, the subhaulers whose subhaul agreements on 29 July had been canceled by Chipman Freight. The record reveals, however, that 3 of the 18 were employees of subhauler Clifford Reich d/b/a Cliffs Trucking.

On 6 August the director of Respondent's owner/-operator division, Ybarrolaza, wrote Chipman Freight that Respondent represented all of its subhaulers and enclosed for Chipman Freight's signature a blank copy of an "Owner-Operator Division Recognition Agreement." This agreement stated in substance that the signatory company agreed to recognize Respondent as the exclusive bargaining representative of its owner-operator truckdrivers based on the Company's acknowledgement that the owner-operators were employees within the meaning of the National Labor Relations Act and that the Company also agreed to begin bargaining about the terms and conditions of employment of the owner-operators and to expeditiously conclude the negotiations.

On the morning of 7 August Ybarrolaza met with a majority of Chipman Freight's subhaulers whose subhaul agreements had been canceled. The meeting took place at the subhaulers' request and was held at Respondent's headquarters. Ybarrolaza suggested that each of the subhaulers return to work under the terms of the new uniform subhaul agreement being proposed by Chipman Freight, but that when they signed this agreement that they also give to Chipman Freight a signed copy of a letter which Ybarrolaza had prepared for the subhaulers' signatures. Ybarrolaza circulated copies of this letter, which reads as follows:

> Gentlemen:
> As directed by you, I have signed your "Independent Contractor Agreement." I signed this Agreement in compliance with your directive, which indicated that I would be terminated or no longer allowed to work for you unless I signed this Agreement. This Agreement, however, does contain several misrepresentations and does not accurately define our relationship nor the manner in which your work is performed or allocated. It is not my

[2] All dates hereinafter refer to the year 1985, unless otherwise specified.

[3] The Board's Regional Director for Region 32 found the charge to be without merit because the 18 individuals involved were not entitled to the protection of the Act as they were independent contractors. Respondent's appeal to the General Counsel's Office of Appeals was denied for the same reason.

intention to redefine my present employment status by signing this Agreement.

This letter has been prepared for me by Teamsters Local 70 at my request. I have authorized them to represent me in this matter, and you should contact them if you have any further questions.

Very truly yours,

Ybarrolaza's recommended course of action was discussed and rejected by the subhaulers, a majority of whom indicated they wanted to return to work under the terms of the old uniform subhaul agreement which had been canceled by the Company. Ybarrolaza then indicated that he thought the subhaulers should vote on whether they wanted to picket. He explained that if they voted in favor of picketing, that Respondent would support the picket line until Chipman Freight took them back to work under the terms of the old subhaul agreement, and further explained that the picketing would continue until each of the subhaulers was put back to work. The subhaulers voted to picket.[4]

On 7 August Respondent began picketing Chipman Freight's Oakland terminals. The picket signs read: "CHIPMAN FREIGHT SERVICES—UNFAIR TO OWNER OPERATORS—TEAMSTERS LOCAL 70." Also on 7 August through 9 August the pickets followed Chipman Freight's trucks to numerous facilities in the Port of Oakland and picketed with the above-described picket signs at a gate reserved for Chipman Freight's trucks at Sea Land's Port of Oakland facility. On 30 October, the date of the hearing in this case, Respondent's picketing at Chipman Freight's Oakland terminals was still in progress.[5]

The four subhaulers, who, as described supra, signed new subhaul agreements with Chipman Freight, have not made any pickups or deliveries for Chipman Freight at the picketed terminals because the employees of these subhaulers and/or the subhaulers themselves have refused to cross Respondent's picket lines. Also the record shows that truckdrivers employed by Chipman Freight's customers, or by agents of the customers, have refused to cross the Respondent's picket lines at Chipman Freight's terminals to make pickups or deliveries and that this has prompted some of Chipman Freight's customers to threaten Chipman Freight with the loss of their business.

On 13 August General Manager Tucker rejected Ybarrolaza's 6 August demand that Chipman Freight recognize Respondent as the bargaining representative of Chipman Freight's subhaulers. Tucker explained to Ybarrolaza that the demand was inappropriate because the subhaulers were not Chipman Freight's employees, but were independent businessmen.

On 15 August Ybarrolaza wrote Chipman Freight's attorney, in pertinent part, as follows:

> In our telephone conversation of July 30, 1985, and on two other occasions prior to August 3, 1985, we discussed the matter of Chipman Freight Services' termination of its owner-operator drivers, and on each occasion I indicated to you that we were simply asking Chipman Freight Services to return to the status quo that existed on July 29, 1985. That all the Chipman owner-operator drivers be allowed to return to work under the terms and conditions of their respective contracts then in effect. We also outlined this position to Mr. Jon Tucker at Chipman Freight Services Warehouse on July 30, 1985, and this still remains our position.
> In the event you are under the misconception that our position has changed, please be advised that it has not. I specifically told you on August 2, 1985, that while we would like to gain recognition at Chipman it was not required, and that the owner-operators would be willing to return to work as long as Chipman would not compel them to sign the new "Independent Contractor Agreement," and was willing to accept the return of all of the owner-operators that it had terminated on July 29, 1985; that we would deal with the question of recognition later as our program on behalf of all of the owner-operators operating on the waterfront [was] not designed for just Chipman or any single company, but for all of the companies involved in the hauling of containers. Letters requesting recognition were sent by us to 35 companies whose employees, owner-operators or non-owner drivers, have indicated a desire to be represented by Local 70. All these letters were sent out at about the same time. Chipman was the only company picketed. Our picketing Chipman Freight Services is for the sole purpose of returning all of the Chipman owner-operators to their jobs and not for the purpose of gaining recognition.

On 16 August Tucker wrote identical letters to some of the subhaulers. He informed them, among other things, that Chipman Freight was still interested in meeting with them to negotiate new contracts, that the only substantial change in the contract which it had proposed was in the rates, that this change was favorable to the subhaulers, and explained that if there were provisions in [4] Ybarrolaza and subhaulers Reich and Levasseur testified about this meeting. The above description of what occurred is based on Ybarrolaza's testimony. Ybarrolaza's testimonial demeanor was good, whereas Reich's and Levasseur's was poor. Moreover, Ybarrolaza's testimony was corroborated by Reich's in a number of significant respects, whereas there was a sharp conflict between Reich's and Levasseur's testimony. Levasseur's testimony that Ybarrolaza suggested the subhaulers sign the old subhaul agreement, rather than the new one, was contradicted by Reich, who corroborated Ybarrolaza's testimony in this respect. Likewise, Reich's description of the contents of the cover letter which Ybarrolaza suggested that the subhaulers give to Chipman Freight, corroborates Ybarrolaza's description and contradicts Levasseurs'.

[5] On 13 August the Board's Regional Director in Oakland sought a temporary injunction of this picketing under Sec. 10(l) of the Act in the United States District Court for the Northern District of California, pending disposition of this proceeding. The Regional Director's petition was denied by the court on 22 October. However, the parties in their posthearing briefs have advised me that on 15 November the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit issued an order, pursuant to the General Counsel's motion, enjoining Respondent from picketing Chipman Freight or its customers pending an appeal of the district court's order denying injunction or until the Board issued a final decision in the matter, whichever occurred first.

the new contract which a subhauler desired to change, that Tucker would be happy to consider the subhauler's proposed changes.

On 22 August Ybarrolaza wrote Chipman Freight's attorney and with respect to Tucker's 16 August letter, in pertinent part, stated:

> We are glad to hear that Chipman is very interested in meeting with the owner-operators, and on our recommendation they have selected a committee of three who would meet with Mr. Jon Tucker to review and discuss a new contract. The owner-operators further indicated that these discussions could begin as soon as Chipman allows all of their owner-operator drivers to return to work and the talks could be held after normal working hours. Teamsters Local 70 would not participate in these discussions. Pending final resolution for a new contract, they would also agree to continue to work as they had in the past and under the terms of their respective past agreements and either the old or more favorable rates than Chipman seems to be offering, all of which Local 70 is not a party to.

On 23 August Tucker wrote Ybarrolaza in response to Ybarrolaza's 22 August letter. With respect to Ybarrolaza's proposal concerning the negotiation of a new contract by and between the subhaulers and Chipman Freight, Tucker wrote the following:

> We are still not willing to return to the prior contracts while we discuss revisions in those contracts. Nor are we willing to meet with groups of owner-operators to discuss rates. As I am sure you are aware, the joint discussion of such rates could have serious anti-trust ramifications for both the company and the owner-operators.
> As I said before, we are, however, willing to meet at any time, individually, with the owner-operators to work out satisfactory contracts.

B. Discussion and Conclusions

I.

The amended complaint, as further amended at the hearing, alleges Respondent violated Section 8(b)(4)(ii)(B) of the Act by picketing Chipman Freight at Chipman Freight's Oakland terminals and at the entrance reserved for Chipman Freight at Sea-Land's Oakland facility, with an object of forcing or requiring Chipman Freight to recognize and bargain with Respondent on a collective basis for the independent contractor subhaulers with whom Chipman Freight was doing business. I shall recommend the dismissal of this allegation for the reason that the record does not establish that an object of Respondent's picketing was to force or require Chipman Freight to recognize or bargain with Respondent as the representative of Chipman Freight's subhaulers.

On 7 August, when the subhaulers voted to picket Chipman Freight, Ybarrolaza, the director of Respondent's owner/operator division, explained if they voted to picket that Respondent would support their picketing until Chipman Freight took all of them back to work under the terms and conditions of the recently canceled subhaul agreements and also promised that the picketing would continue until Chipman Freight put all of them back to work.[6] Subsequently, on 15 August, Ybarrolaza wrote Chipman Freight advising it that Respondent's picketing was not for the purpose of gaining recognition, but the picketing's sole purpose was to return all of Chipman Freight's subhaulers to their jobs. In his 15 August letter Ybarrolaza also advised Chipman Freight that Respondent would end its picketing if Chipman Freight took back all the subhaulers under the terms and conditions of the recently canceled subhaulers agreements.[7] The legend on the picket signs was consistent with Ybarrolaza's stated purpose. In view of the foregoing circumstances, I am persuaded the General Counsel has failed to prove that an object of the Respondent's picketing was to force or require Chipman Freight to recognize or bargain with Respondent as the representative of Chipman Freight's subhaulers. I therefore shall recommend the dismissal of this allegation.

In reaching this conclusion I have considered that on 6 August, the day before the start of the picketing, Ybarrolaza asked Chipman Freight to acknowledge that the subhaulers were Chipman Freight's employees and to recognize and bargain with Respondent as the subhaulers' collective-bargaining representative. I also have considered that at his 7 August meeting with the subhaulers, Ybarrolaza recommended a course of action which included a letter to Chipman Freight stating, among other things, that Respondent represented the subhaulers. The subhaulers, however, rejected this recommendation and, as described supra, it is clear from what occurred later during the 7 August meeting when the vote to picket was taken, that the decision to picket and Respondent's decision to sponsor the picketing was unrelated to Respondent's efforts to represent the subhaulers for collective-bargaining purposes.[8] I also note that Ybarrolaza's 15 August letter to Chipman Freight explained that Respondent's 6 August demand for recognition and bargaining had been made in the context of Respondent's campaign to organize all the subhaulers doing business in the Port of Oakland companies whose employees and subhaulers had expressed a desire to be represented by Respondent. Also, Ybarrolaza's letter further explained that Chipman Freight was the only com-

[6] As described supra, Ybarrolaza, before the subhaulers voted to picket, suggested a different way for them to solve their problem. His recommendation involved, among other things, Chipman Freight's recognition of Respondent as the subhaulers' representative. The subhaulers, however, rejected Ybarrolaza's recommendation and voted to picket instead.

[7] "In considering a union's motivation for striking or picketing, [the Board and] courts have found it useful to ask what concessions the company would have to make to abate the union activity [cases cited]." NLRB v. Union de Empleados (National Packing Co.), 455 F.2d 1248 (1st Cir. 1972).

[8] The record fails to establish that when Respondent asked Chipman Freight to return all of these subhaulers back to work under the terms and conditions of the recently canceled subhaul agreements, that Respondent was seeking to represent the subhaulers in the negotiations with Chipman Freight for the terms and conditions of the new subhaul agreements. As a matter of fact, Ybarrolaza's 16 August letter to Chipman Freight expressly states that "Teamsters Local 70 [Respondent] would not participate in these discussions."

pany picketed, and that the picketing had nothing to do with Respondent's request for recognition, but would end if all of Chipman Freight's subhaulers were allowed to return to work under the terms and conditions of the recently canceled subhaulers agreements.

II.

The amended complaint, as further amended at the hearing, alleges in substance that Respondent violated Section 8(b)(4)(i) and (ii)(B) of the Act by picketing Chipman Freight at Chipman Freight's Oakland terminals and at the entrance reserved for Chipman Freight at Sea-Land's Oakland facility, with an object of forcing or requiring the independent contractor subhaulers to cease doing business with Chipman Freight. I am persuaded for the reasons set forth hereinafter that this allegation is meritorious.

Although Section 8(b)(4)(B) prohibits classic "secondary boycotts"—when a union brings economic pressure against a neutral employer to obtain economic leverage against another employer who is engaged with his employees in a primary dispute—that phrase is not used in the statute, and the statute is not limited to addressing that wrong. See Maritime Union v. NLRB, 346 F.2d 411, 416–417, fns. 8, 11, 12 (D.C. Cir. 1965). Congress did not by the passage of Section 8(b)(4)(B) seek to ban only some forms of secondary conduct; rather, Congress recognized that "illegal boycotts take many forms" and "purposefully drafted [Section 8(b)(4)(B)] in [the] broadest terms." Longshoremen v. Allied International, 456 U.S. 212, 225 (1982). Thus, the statute comprehends not only "the familiar patterns of a secondary boycott" but "variations from those patterns." Maritime Union v. NLRB, supra, 346 F.2d at 417 fn. 8, quoted in Soft Drink Workers Local 812 v. NLRB, 657 F.2d 1252, 1259 (D.C. Cir. 1980). Accordingly, "[w]here . . . act and object fall comfortably within the letter of the statute, the Board's hand is to be stayed only upon a pervasive showing that they are beyond its spirit." Soft Drink Workers Local 812 v. NLRB, supra, 657 F.2d at 1259. See also Longshoremen v. Allied International, supra, 456 U.S. at 225 (1982).

In the instant case, as described in detail supra, Respondent picketed Chipman Freight in order to persuade the independent contractor subhaulers to cease doing business with Chipman Freight, with the ultimate object of forcing Chipman Freight to do business with the subhaulers under the terms and conditions of the subhaul agreements recently canceled by Chipman Freight, rather than under the terms and conditions of the new subhaul agreements being proposed by Chipman Freight. This picketing satisfies the standards of prohibited "act" and prohibited "object" of Section 8(b)(4)(B). For it is settled law that picketing constitutes "induce[ment] or encourage[ment]" within the meaning of Section 8(b)(4)(i)[9] and also "coerc[ion] or restrain[t]" within the meaning of Section 8(b)(4)(ii) (see for example Electrical Workers IBEW Local 501 v. NLRB, 341 U.S. 694, 701–704 (1951); NLRB v. Teamsters Local 85, 454 F.2d 875, 878 (9th Cir. 1972)) and that a disruption of the neutral party's business satisfies the "cease doing business" requirement of Section 8(b)(4)(B). See for example Longshoremen v. Allied International, supra at 222–226 fn. 21 (1982). Respondent contends, however, that its picketing was primary and thus not encompassed by Section 8(b)(4)(B). As discussed below, this contention is without merit.

The Board indicated in Teamsters Local 814 (Santini Bros.), 208 NLRB 184 (1974), affd. in relevant part 512 F.2d 564, 566–566 (D.C. Cir. 1975), and Musicians Local 16 (Bow & Arrow Manor), 206 NLRB 581, 581–582 (1973), enfd. 512 F.2d 991 (D.C. Cir. 1975), and expressly held in Production Workers Local 707 (Checker Taxi), 273 NLRB 1178 (1984), that a union is not engaged in primary activity—and therefore violates Section 8(b)(4)(B)—when it brings economic pressure against a company to cause a cessation of business between the company and independent contractors with whom it does business, where the union has no dispute concerning the company's own employees. In such circumstances, be the independent contractors employers themselves (see Musicians Local 16, supra) or self-employed persons (see Teamsters Local 814, supra, and Production Workers Local 707, supra), the picketing union satisfies the "act and object" language of Section 8(b)(4)(B) and is not involved in a primary labor dispute with the picketed company.[10] Moreover, this result is unaffected by the legiti-

[9] Respondent's picketing took place at Chipman Freight's Oakland terminals where Chipman Freight's employees, represented by another union, were employed. Also employees of the subhaulers and of Chipman Freight's customers picked up and delivered at these terminals.

[10] I recognize that Chipman Freight is not a "wholly unconcerned" or "neutral" party in the dictionary sense but, in fact, is involved in the dispute herein. However, such terms as "neutral" and "wholly unconcerned" are terms of art in 8(b)(4) adjudication and must be understood in light of the statutory objectives. As the court explained in Carpet, Linoleum, Soft Tile Local 419 v. NLRB, 467 F.2d 392, 400–401 (D.C. Cir. 1972):

> [T]he mere fact that the relationship between two parties involves some economic interdependence is not sufficient in and of itself to cause one of the parties to lose its "secondary" status, for section 8(b)(4)(B) purposes, vis-a-vis the other party. This conclusion is dictated by the very nature of secondary boycotts. It is intuitively obvious that a union which is engaged in a labor dispute with one party will not endeavor to enlist the support of another party, unless ...ere is some relationship present, direct or indirect, between the two parties. This most frequently involves an economic relationship. Without the presence of some interrelationship between the two parties, it would be an exercise in futility for the Union to seek the aid of the second party, since it would necessarily have no possible means of providing meaningful support for the union. It is therefore logically apparent that something more than mere economic interdependence between two parties is required before one loses its "secondary" status with respect to the labor disputes of the other.

Chipman Freight's status as a neutral does not derive from a complete lack of involvement in the dispute, but from its noninvolvement in a primary labor dispute. Similarly, the fact that Chipman Freight possesses the power to end the picketing by agreeing to the Respondent's demands does not render the dispute "primary"; for, as indicated in Carpet Layers, supra, it is not unusual for a secondary employer to possess the power to resolve—or substantially aid the resolution of—a labor dispute. Yet that power has never been deemed sufficient to convert the secondary employer into a primary. See Electrical Workers IBEW Local 399 (Illinois Bell), 235 NLRB 555, 555–556, 559–562 (1978), enfd. 601 F.2d 593 (7th Cir. 1979).

macy of the union's ultimate goal. Production Workers Local 707 (Checker Taxi), 273 NLRB 1178. See also Musical Artists (Washington School of Ballet), 157 NLRB 735, 741–742 (1966); Federation de Musicos Local 468 (Pat Mills & Co.), 246 NLRB 782, 785–787 (1979). Because Respondent engaged in just such secondary conduct here—picketing Chipman Freight to cause a cessation of business with their independent contractor subhauler,[11] in the absence of a dispute concerning Chipman Freight's employees—the General Counsel has established, as alleged in the complaint, Respondent violated Section 8(b)(4)(i) and (ii)(B) of the Act. Production Workers Local 707 (Checker Taxi), supra.[12]

[11] It is clear that a natural consequence of Respondent's picketing was the cessation of business between Chipman Freight and the independent contractor subhaulers. Respondent had every reason to foresee that the subhaulers, in deference to the picket line, would not resume doing business with Chipman Freight until the ultimate object of the picketing was accomplished. Under the circumstances, a prohibited cease-doing-business object was necessarily subsumed with Respondent's ultimate object for picketing, and Respondent necessarily had this subsidiary object regardless of its ultimate object. Also, with respect to the picketing's ultimate object—requiring Chipman Freight to do business with the independent contractor subhaulers under the terms and conditions of the subhaul agreements recently canceled by Chipman Freight, rather than under the terms and conditions of the new agreements being proposed by Chipman Freight—it required Chipman Freight to change its method of doing business with the independent contractor subhaulers in significant respects, thus satisfying the "cease doing business" requirement of Section 8(b)(4)(B). See NLRB v. Operating Engineers Local 85, 400 U.S. 297 (1971). Chipman Freight was faced with the option of suffering a severe disruption of its business, including a loss of customers, or doing business with the independent contractor subhaulers under the terms and conditions dictated by the Respondent's picket line, rather than under the terms and conditions of the new subhaul agreements being proposed by Chipman Freight.

[12] I agree with the General Counsel and Chipman Freight that the facts in the instant case fall squarely within the rule set forth in Checker Taxi. There, two taxicab companies employed drivers who leased cabs from the companies. The drivers were independent contractors. The respondent unions demanded that the companies recognize the unions as the leased cab drivers' bargaining representative and negotiate an agreement establishing uniform conditions regarding the leasing of cabs. The companies rejected this demand and the Unions picketed the companies' garages used by the leased cab drivers, with picket signs stating that the leased cab drivers were on strike and asking that they not lease cabs until an agreement was reached regarding their working conditions. It was disputed that the unions picketed in order to persuade the independent contractor leased cab drivers to cease doing business with the companies, with the ultimate goal of forcing the companies to recognize and bargain with the unions. The Board found that "[b]y picketing the Charging Parties with an object of interrupting the leases between the Charging Parties and the leased cab drivers . . . the Respondents have violated Section 8(b)(4)(i) and (ii)(B) of the Act." In the instant case, as I have found supra, Respondent picketed Chipman Freight with picket signs informing the independent contractor subhaulers that Chipman Freight was unfair to them. Respondent picketed in order to persuade the subhaulers to cease doing business with Chipman Freight, with the ultimate object of forcing Chipman Freight to do business with the subhaulers under the terms and conditions of the subhaulers agreements previously canceled by Chipman Freight, rather than under the terms and conditions of the new agreement being proposed to the subhaulers by Chipman Freight. Plainly, one of the objects of Respondent's picketing—requiring Chipman Freight to do business with the independent contractor subhaulers only under the terms and conditions of the canceled subhaul agreements rather than under the new agreements being proposed by Chipman Freight—was similar in significant respects to "an object of interrupting the leases between the Charging Parties and the leased cab drivers" found by the Board in Checker Taxi to have constituted a prohibited cease-doing-business object.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. Respondent Brotherhood of Teamsters and Auto Truck Drivers, Local 70 of Alameda County, affiliated with International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen and Helpers of America is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

2. By picketing Chipman Freight Services with an object of interrupting the business relationships between Chipman Freight Services and the independent contractor subhaulers, the Respondent has violated Section 8(b)(4)(i) and (ii)(B) of the Act.

3. These unfair labor practices affect commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

THE REMEDY

Having found that Respondent has engaged in certain unfair labor practices, shall recommend that it be ordered to cease and desist and take certain affirmative action designed to effectuate the policies of the Act.

I have granted the General Counsel's request for a broad remedial order because in Teamsters Local 70 (Department of the Navy), 261 NLRB 496 (1982), the Board found that respondent violated Section 8(b)(4)(i) and (ii)(B) of the Act and remedied the violation with a broad remedial order inasmuch as respondent's proclivity to violate Section 8(b)(4)(B) had been established. Id. at 502–503. Respondent here urges that a broad remedial order is not appropriate because it had legitimate grounds for believing that its picketing was not prohibited by Section 8(b)(4)(B) of the Act and because of the lapse of time between its picketing and the Board's order in Department of the Navy. I disagree. As I have indicated supra, any doubt that a union is not engaged in primary activity when it brings economic pressure against a company to cause cessation of business between the company and independent contractors with whom it does business, when the union has no dispute concerning the company's employees, was removed by the Board's decision in Checker Taxi, which was issued approximately 6 months prior to the Respondent's picketing. And, with respect to the lapse of time between the Respondent's picketing herein and the broad remedial order issued against Respondent in Department of the Navy, the order which issued 29 April 1982 was not based merely on the 1981 picketing involved in that case, but on other picketing of Respondent which violated Section 8(b)(4)(B) engaged in during the 1960s, the 1970s, and the 1980s.[13] In view of these circumstances, I am not persuaded that the approximately 3 years which elapsed since the Board's order in Department of the Navy and Respondent's illegal picketing herein, constitute a sufficient lapse of time so as to make a broad remedial order inappropriate.

[Recommended Order omitted from publication.]

[13] The broad remedial order issued in Department of the Navy was based on respondent's proclivity to violate Sec. 8(b)(4)(B) of the Act as was evidenced by Board orders issued in 1969, 1971, 1978, and 1981 as well as by Respondent's illegal conduct found in that case. Teamsters Local 70, supra, 261 NLRB at 502–503.

26 March 1987

DECISION AND ORDER

BY MEMBERS JOHANSEN, BABSON, AND STEPHENS

On 1 April 1986 Administrative Law Judge Bernard Ries issued the attached decision.[1] The Respondent filed exceptions and a supporting brief,[2] and the General Counsel filed an answering brief.[3]

The National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the decision and the record in light of the exceptions and briefs and has decided to affirm the judge's rulings, findings,[4] and conclusions and to adopt the recommended Order.

ORDER

The National Labor Relations Board adopts the recommended Order of the administrative law judge and orders that the Respondent, Burkart Foam, Inc., Cairo, Illinois, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall take the action set forth in the Order.

[1] The judge issued an erratum to his decision on 15 April 1986.

[2] The Respondent has requested oral argument. The request is denied as the record, exceptions, and briefs adequately present the issues and the positions of the parties.

[3] The General Counsel filed a motion to strike certain portions of the Respondent's supporting brief. In view of our disposition of this case, we find it unnecessary to pass on the General Counsel's motion.

[4] We note that no exceptions were filed to the judge's use of 25 February 1985 as the date the economic strike converted into an unfair labor practice strike.

Keltner W. Locke, Esq., for the General Counsel.
Donald E. Egan, Esq. (Katten, Muchin, Zavis, Pearl & Galler), of Chicago, Illinois, for the Respondent.
Harold P. Lorenz, of Bridgeton, Missouri, for the Charging Party.

DECISION

BERNARD RIES, Administrative Law Judge. This matter was tried in St. Louis, Missouri, on 17 September 1985, on a charge filed on 7 June 1985 and a complaint issued on 24 July 1985. The complaint alleges that Respondent has violated Section 8(a)(5) of the Act: (1) since about 20 February 1985, by refusing to reduce to writing a full and complete agreement that it had reached with the Charging Party, and (2) since about the same date, by refusing to provide the Charging Party with certain information requested at that time. The complaint also asserts that a strike among Respondent's employees that began on 5 September 1984 was prolonged by the alleged unfair labor practices.

Briefs were filed by the General Counsel and Respondent on 5 November 1985.[1] My consideration of the entire record, the briefs, and the demeanor of the parties leads me to the following conclusions.

I. THE FACTS

Respondent and the Charging Party have engaged in collective bargaining for a number of years, covering a unit now consisting of nearly 500 production and maintenance employees. Their last 3-year bargaining agreement expired on 4 September 1984. Negotiations for a new agreement began in August 1984, and a total of six sessions were held, the last two began on 1 and 4 September, in the presence of a mediator from the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service.

The chief spokesman for the union negotiators throughout the bargaining was David M. Garner, the directing business representative of District 111. Present at all sessions for Respondent was its personnel manager, Lawrence A. Davis; although Davis had been the recognized chief spokesman for Respondent in the 1981 negotiations, John W. Noble Jr., a Chicago attorney, testified that in 1984 he had been appointed by Respondent to head its 1984 negotiating team. Noble further testified, without contradiction, that at the first session he told Garner that Respondent's division head had given Noble "complete authority to negotiate the contract."

On 1 September, Respondent gave the Union a nearly complete written proposal, except for the final version of the wage appendix that was given to the Union on 4 September. On the latter day, Respondent made a last economic offer of a 10-percent decrease in the first year, a "recouping" of half of the decrease in the second year, and a 7-1/2-percent increase in the third year. It also provided some new language about combining jobs, and revision of some old language. Personnel Manager Davis, an unreliable witness, testified, when called by the General Counsel as an adverse witness, that Respondent had made "no offer" to the Union either on 1 or 4 September, and that Noble had simply told the Union that the company negotiators were there "to listen." Later that day, however, in his second appearance as Respondent's witness, Davis not only conceded that the Company had made a "complete offer for a labor agreement" as of 4 September ("as far as I know, yes"), but also that he knew that the Union was going to take the proposal to its membership for a ratification vote that same day.[2]

The membership rejected the offer and went on strike at 12:01 a.m. on 5 September.

The next negotiating meeting was called by the mediator on 31 October. When he asked if either party had

[1] By letter of 6 November, Respondent requested an opportunity to file a reply brief, which request was opposed by the General Counsel and the Charging Party and denied by my order denying request filed 18 November 1985.

[2] The Union's two very credible witnesses, Garner and Local Lodge President Gwendolyn Agnew, both testified to the effect that Noble had said, as Garner put it, "We had their proposal and to take it back to the membership."

changed position, Noble stated that "the Company had not changed its position from the September 4th offer." Garner responded that "the Union's position had changed in one respect," that "upon the settlement of the strike we would want the Company to lay off all employees and to recall by seniority." Noble replied that "that was not going to happen."[3]

On 7 February 1985 the strike was still on and the mediator called the parties together again. The Union made some new proposals, which the Company rejected. Noble said that "the Union had not given the Company any reason to change its offer . . . and that the offer made on September 4th, 1984, was not going to be changed one iota."

The union membership met again on 10 February, and again voted down Respondent's 4 September offer. However, soon thereafter, a circulated petition came to Garner, asking the Union to "accept the contract and call off the strike," and the grand lodge representative for the area thereafter received written authorization from a union general vice president in Washington to "sign . . . the company's best and final offer."

On 19 February 1985 a decertification petition was filed with the Regional Office.

On 20 February 1985 Garner and two other union representatives went to Davis' office. Although Garner thought that the first thing he did was to hand Davis a letter, dated 20 February, stating, inter alia, that "[e]ffective immediately," the Union "unconditionally accepts Burkart Foam, Inc.'s, final offer," apparently, judging from Davis' markings on the letter, Garner did not do so until the end of the meeting, about an hour later. Davis nonetheless agreed that Garner opened the meeting by saying that "the Union had accepted the contract unconditionally as it was at the end of the last meeting in February."

Garner had brought with him two clean copies of a complete contract that he had prepared, and he asked Davis to check over the drafts to see if they corresponded to Respondent's own understanding of its final offer. With Davis going over his own notes, they found 11 passages in the 37-page agreement in which Garner's draft did not dovetail with Davis' version of the offer. Garner thereupon changed his draft in accordance with Davis' understanding of the discrepancies, and they both initialed each modification on Garner's draft. The process took an hour or so.[4]

When Garner asked Davis (who would have signed the agreement had it been signed; he had been the sole company signatory to the preceding agreement) to execute the agreement, Davis said that "he would have to get with Mr. Noble on arranging a date for the signing of the contract." Davis' account was essentially the same: "I was not going to sign the contract without Mr. Noble being there." Garner was left with the impression that "Davis was going to contact Noble to arrange a date on which to sign it."

Another part of the letter Garner handed to Davis before he departed stated, "The employees will return to work on Thursday, February 21, 1985. Those not put to work will be on a preferential recall list." The remainder of the letter requested certain information, a subject that will be discussed in more detail below. On leaving, Garner told Davis, according to the uncontroverted testimony of the latter, that he was going to have his secretary prepare on her word processor a completed contract in accordance with the changes they had made.

Garner heard nothing more from Davis, and called him on "two or three occasions between February 20th and February 27th, trying to get from him some sense of when people would be returned to work and when we would be signing the agreement."[5] On 27 February, Garner wrote Davis reminding him of the Union's 20 February acceptance of the Company's offer and its expressed desire to sign a bargaining agreement. He went on: "At that time you declined, stating that you needed to seek advice from the Company's attorney, and in subsequent phone conversations, including one this morning, you continued to decline signing the agreement."[6] Garner reiterated the Union's desire to sign that agreement and, among other things, said "Also, we wish to reitterate [sic] the availability and willingness of our membership to return to work."

Noble was in the hospital on 20 February, and heard about the Union's acceptance at some brief, but unidentified, time thereafter. After Davis forwarded to him a copy of Garner's 27 February letter, Noble wrote a lengthy letter to Garner on 6 March, referring to both the Union's 20 and 27 February letters. Noble said, inter alia, that he was, as the Union knew, the "sole spokesman" for Respondent; that, based on the membership's two rejections of "what you refer to as the Company's 'best and final offer'" and "the 80 percent of working employees who support a decertification proceeding," Respondent "maintain[ed] a good faith doubt that Lodge 1076 is the representative of its employees" and believed that question "best left to a resolution by the National Labor Relations Board"; that his reading of the Union's constitution and bylaws "suggests" that membership ratification was necessary to commit the employees to a "new, 3-year agreement" (Noble asked Garner for clarification of this point); and that, in response to Garner's purported "request [for] notification concerning the procedure by which unconditional application may be made by nonworking employees to return to work," Respondent had provided and would continue to provide strikers the opportunity to return where vacancies existed.

On 18 March Garner wrote Noble, declaring, among other things, that "this Union was within its rights in ac-

[3] Agnew thought that this exchange occurred at the next meeting.

[4] Working from a draft contract, which Respondent itself had prepared after the 4 September meeting, Davis made two changes in that draft, which brought Garner's draft and Respondent's draft into exact correspondence, according to Davis.

[5] Davis agreed with the first part, but did not mention the second.

[6] Garner testified that these words did not accurately reflect the tone of his earlier conversations with Davis. He explained that he gave a general outline of the letter to his secretary over long-distance telephone while he was in Washington (the signature on the 27 February letter is clearly not Garner's) and that she failed to properly portray Davis' initial reaction. Davis himself implicitly confirmed that he had said nothing to Garner on 20 February about needing to "seek advice" from Noble; as shown above, he testified that he merely said that he "was not going to sign the contract without Mr. Noble being there."

cepting the Company's best and final offer . . ."; that, in writing in his 27 February letter about employees returning to work, Garner was simply attempting to have the Company put in writing Davis' statement to him on 20 February that the strikers could not all return on 21 February and that "he would call them in as needed"; and that (quoting Noble) while the issue of whether Respondent entertained a "good-faith" doubt of majority status was "best left up to the National Labor Relations Board," "[i]n the meantime, you are under obligation to execute the already agreed upon collective-bargaining agreement," and the Union awaited Respondent's suggestion of a time and place for that transaction.

II. THE REFUSAL TO SIGN THE AGREEMENT

A. Davis Had No Authority to Bind Respondent

Section 8(d) of the Act specifically defines the duty "to bargain collectively" to include "the execution of a written contract incorporating any agreement reached if requested by either party." On brief, Respondent advances five separately stated arguments to explain why the section does not apply to Respondent in this case.

The claim that "Davis had no authority to bind the Respondent" misses the point. The testimony clearly shows that by 4 September 1984 Respondent had made a complete contract offer to the Union, one which Noble himself reaffirmed and saw no reason to "change . . . one iota" at subsequent meetings on 31 October 1984 and 7 February 1985. On 20 February, the Union was quite willing to accept what it thought was Respondent's offer, and when it learned from Davis that it had misunderstood the offer in certain respects, it was still prepared to, and did, accept Respondent's offer as clarified. In so clarifying, Davis was not, as Respondent asserts on brief, "negotiating." He was simply an expert witness to the negotiations who understood the terms of Respondent's offer and was making them available to the Union; nowhere in Noble's testimony or elsewhere does he challenge the accuracy of Davis' understanding, as expressed on 20 February, of the terms offered by Noble during the bargaining.

Because there is in fact no question as to what terms constituted the Respondent's final offer; because there is no question that Respondent never changed that offer and in fact twice reaffirmed it; and because there is no question that Respondent became aware of the Union's acceptance of the offer at the time that Garner notified Davis, Respondent became obligated to abide by that agreement and, by vitue of Section 8(d), to execute a written contract incorporating the terms of that offer as reasonably promptly as possible.[7]

B. No Binding Agreement was Reached Between the Parties on February 20, 1985

Noble testified to a melange of what he referred to as "open issues" which precluded the possibility of agreement being reached on 20 February. The nature of the arguments as to each such issue is not uniform.

1. Reinstatement of strikers

Noble testified that the Union made a "new proposal" "which had not been taken off the table" when, on 31 October, Garner stated that "[T]he Union's position had changed in one respect, and only one respect, and that was since the Company had hired replacement employees, that upon the settlement of the strike we would want the Company to lay off all employees and to recall by seniority." Assuming arguendo that this was intended to be a modification of the Union's proposals (although, in the position of the Union, one can hardly suppose that the Union had any great expectations about its prospects of success), it makes no difference. For one thing, Noble immediately rejected the notion, saying that "that was not going to happen." The dispositive point is, however, that the Respondent did not modify its contract offer throughout the material period, and the Union had a right to accept it on 20 February, abandoning, if it wished, any "new proposals" of its own.[8] On brief, Respondent argues, "The contention that the Charging Party accepted the Respondent's last offer could not constitute a withdrawal or resolution of this issue." (Emphasis in original.) One wonders why not; acceptance of the Respondent's "last offer" presumably constituted a withdrawal or resolution of many proposals of its own that the Union had advanced.[9]

2. Absenteeism clause

At the hearing, Noble stated:

> There was also, as I looked over [the draft contract mutually corrected by Garner and Davis], a great inconsistency between the language of I think Section 34, which relates to absenteeism, and Section 9.10 of the contract, which makes mention of unexcused absences. I say that because all through negotiations I told Mr. Garner that there was no such thing as unexcused absences that did not go on

[7] In Pepsi-Cola Bottling Co., 251 NLRB 187, 189 (1980), the Board held that an offer remains viable and subject to acceptance "unless expressly withdrawn prior to such acceptance, or defeased by an event upon which the offer was expressly made contingent at a time prior to acceptance." In enforcing the decision, Pepsi-Cola Bottling Co. v. NLRB, 659 F.2d 87, 89-90 (8th Cir. 1981), the court approved a similar formulation with the additions of (1) the requirement of acceptance being made "within a reasonable time" and (2) the absence of "intervening circumstances which make it unfair to hold the offeror to his bargain." The Board has adopted the "reasonable time" consideration, Crown Cork & Seal Co., 268 NLRB 1089 (1984), but there is no basis here for concluding that an unreasonable amount of time had elapsed before the Union's acceptance. As discussed, on 7 February 1985, only 13 days before the Union capitulated, Respondent reaffirmed that its offer was still on the table and would not be changed "one iota."

[8] Shawn's Launch Service, 261 NLRB 836, 839 (1982) (even if union's inquiry amounted to "counterproposal," it does not amount to rejection of employer's offer, which was never withdrawn).

[9] The fact is that the Union clearly was not making a "new proposal" in this and subsequent references to reinstating the strikers. Garner obviously was simply attempting to promote an idea to take place "upon the settlement of the stike," which was "never intended to be a contractual provision," Georgia Kraft Co. v. NLRB, 696 F.2d 931, 934 (11th Cir. 1983), enfg. 258 NLRB 908 (1981). It might be emphasized that in his 6 March letter, Noble construed the Union's request for striker reinstatement as merely a "request [for] notification concerning the procedure by which application may be made by nonworking employees to return to work."

the employee's absenteeism record, and there is still a reference to unexcused absences there.

The Charging Party's corrected draft contract recites in article 9 ("Overtime") that when employees are scheduled for a sixth day of overtime, absences on that day "without a reasonable excuse will be counted as an unexcused absence and will be handled in accordance with Article 34 of this Agreement . . . ." Article 34 ("Absenteeism") of the Union's corrected draft, while making no reference to the term "unexcused absence," does refer to absences for illness of 3 days or more, which require a "doctor's excuse" and clearly preclude disciplinary action if such "excuses" are precluded; the granting of time off for "serious reasons" where "reasonable advance notice" is given; and the concept of an "approved leave of absence," which exempts an employee from reporting his absence from work on a daily basis. Thus, there plainly are circumstances in which an employee scheduled for a sixth day of overtime in a week may be effectively "excused" or not, and if not, his case will be subject to the "progressive discipline for absenteeism" set out in article 34.[10]

More importantly, the record shows that the complete written company proposal made to the Union on 1 September and unchanged (except for wages) on 4 September contained precisely the same alleged inconsistency as appeared in the Union's final draft: the use of the term "unexcused absence" in article 9.10 and the omission of any such term in article 34. If, as he testified, Noble did say to Garner "all through negotiations . . . that there was no such thing as unexcused absences that did not go on the employee's absenteeism record," Noble, who was presumably closely conversant with the terms being offered by Respondent, evidently did not understand that any "great inconsistency" existed, since he sought to change the terms neither on 1 September, 4 September, 31 October, or 7 February. Indeed, as I read article 34, it is not at all inconsistent with the notion that "there was no such thing as unexcused absences that did not go on the employee's absenteeism record." Respondent consciously set the term; there is no facially fatal inconsistency between them; and the Union accepted them. The matter need not be pursued further than that.

3. Effective dates of the agreement

The expired contract term had been 5 September 1981–5 September 1984. The Respondent's 1 September 1984 offer proposed a 5 September 1984–5 September 1987 term.[11] Davis was asked on cross-examination whether the "proposal the Company had on the table September 4th ha[d] the effective date and duration of the agreement?" and he volunteered in his answer, "Yeah, it's September 5th, 1984, to September 5th, 1987, in contemplation of an acceptance at that time." Davis did not say whether this was his own opinion or whether it had been the subject of discussion at the bargaining table.[12]

Respondent now contends that because no new agreement was reached by 5 September 1984, "the submitted contract dates were effectively withdrawn" on that date. No precedent for this contention is cited. Respondent's construction would mean that the complete contract proposal, first presented to the Union on 4 September, was effectively intended to expire (or at least the duration clause thereof) the next day if not ratified by then. But this is contradicted by Noble's statements on 31 October and 7 February that "the offer made on September 4th, 1984, was not going to be changed one iota." It seems clear from these statements that Respondent did not believe—and certainly did not communicate to the Union—that the effective dates of its proposal had simply evaporated on 5 September.[13]

4. Wages

Respondent writes on brief that because, on 5 September 1984, it implemented the proposed first-year 10-percent decrease, it expects the General Counsel to "suggest . . . that the Charging Party accepted Respondent's last wage proposal and that the Respondent intended the wage proposal to have a September 5th anniversary date throughout the term of the agreement." Respondent's explanation for the decrease effected on 5 September is that it believed it would have violated the law had it instituted a wage increase greater than the last one offered to the Union.

The General Counsel points out that on 3 September 1985 Respondent also raised employee wages by 5 percent, in consonance with its final offer. The General Counsel goes on to argue that "Respondent may hardly be heard to assert that the parties had not reached agreement regarding effective dates, when it already had implemented the wage scale of its final offer, and when the Union unequivocally accepted this final offer, with 'no strings attached.'"

I do not find much worth discussing here. The fact that Respondent's post–4 September 1984 changes in its wage scale tracked part of its original offer might have some meaning in a case in which the issue presented is a factual dispute over whether one of the negotiating parties actually accepted the offer of the other. That is not the question here, where the uncontroverted evidence shows that Respondent made a full-fledged proposal

[10] On brief, counsel for Respondent asserts that art. 9 of the union draft "was not reviewed and initialed by Davis and Garner." The article is not "initialed" because the two men made no changes in the typed copy; whether it was "reviewed" is not clear from the record.

[11] Respondent's brief states that these dates were "submitted to the Charging Party at the initial bargaining session August 16, 1984," but there is no evidence in the record to that effect.

[12] With only this evidence to rely on, Respondent's brief perches on a slim reed when it argues that the 5 September 1984 commencement date "was proposed only in the event an agreement was reached without a work stoppage."

[13] In Mercedes-Benz of North America, 258 NLRB 803 (1981), cited by Respondent, the Board found that no commencement date for the contract had ever been discussed and the parties "did not reach a meeting of the minds on that issue." Here, a commencement date had been offered and was, eventually, accepted. That the acceptance came after the proposed commencement date seems irrelevant, given my conclusion, as stated above, that Respondent could not sensibly have anticipated only a 1-day life for its proposal and that it demonstrated so twice thereafter by Noble indicating that the offer was open and unaltered.

never disavowed it, twice confirmed it, and the Union finally accepted it.

5. The withdrawal of recognition

As shown above, by letter of 6 March 1985, Respondent, expressing a "good-faith doubt," withdrew recognition from the Union as the collective-bargaining agent of the employees "[p]redicated upon the total fact situation, including but not limited to the substantial number of employees requesting a decertification vote." Noble did not further define the "total fact situation." Other "facts" mentioned in Noble's letter were: that the membership had rejected Respondent's "best and final offer" (Noble's language) on 4 September and 10 February; that at membership meetings, substantial fines had been threatened against resigned members who had crossed the picket line since 5 September (the record contains no direct evidence of such threats and Noble did not mention them in his testimony); "last week the Company received notice that in excess of 80 percent of Burkart's working employees supported" a decertification petition; Noble's "reading" of the union constitution as requiring membership ratification of a "new 3-year agreement,"[14] and a request from the Union for information setting out the names of current working employees, dividing them into categories of replacements and exmembers.

In Dresser Industries, 264 NLRB 1088, 1089 (1982), the Board overruled earlier precedent and held that "the mere filing of decertification petition will no longer require or permit an employer from bargaining or executing a contract with an incumbent union." Even if Respondent here had something more of substance to rely on than "notice" that a decertification petition was assertedly "supported" by over 80 percent of "Burkart's working employees,"[15] so as to bring it out from under one of the operative phrases in Dresser ("mere filing"), it would not be clear that withdrawal of recognition could be permitted here. The Union accepted Respondent's offer on 20 February; at that time, a fully developed bargaining agreement, albeit unsigned, came into being. As Noble's 6 March letter seems to say that the Company did not receive "notice" of the petition until "last week" (which would have been the week of 24 February–2 March), it would have been, under prevailing law, too late to withdraw recognition. See NLRB v. Burns Security Services, 406 U.S. 272, 290 fn. 12 (1972); Pioneer Inn Associates v. NLRB, 578 F.2d 835, 838–839 (9th Cir. 1978).

In any event, aside from the filing of the decertification petition, there is in this record no basis for claiming a "reasonably grounded doubt of the Union's continuing majority status." Terrell Machine Co., 173 NLRB 1480, 1481 (1969).[16]

In conclusion, I find that Respondent's contract offer was outstanding and capable of acceptance on 20 February 1985; that the Union did accept the offer on that day; and that by refusing thereafter to acknowledge its contractual commitment and to embody it in a written agreement, Respondent violated Section 8(a)(5) and (1).[17]

III. THE REFUSAL TO FURNISH INFORMATION TO THE UNION

In his letter of 20 February handed to Davis, Garner requested "a list of the names, addresses, phone numbers and seniority dates of the employees hired on or after September 4, 1984 . . . [and] a separate list of the employees who returned to work during the strike setting forth the same information as well as the dates they returned to work . . . ." Garner explained that the information "is necessary so that my records can be complete of the people we represent." Finally, he requested the same information about those employees "not put to work on Thursday, 21 February 1985, as well as the reason[s] they are not put back to work." In his letter of 27 February, Garner repeated his request for these items and asked that they be supplied "immediately."

Respondent's only reply to these requests is found in Noble's 6 March letter, which states:

> Your February 20 letter requests the reporting of names of current working employees, dividing them into newly-hired employees and those strikers who have resigned union membership and crossed the picket line since September 5, 1984. The request would appear to have been made for the sole purpose of enabling Lodge 1076 to identify those resigned members it has consistently threatened to discipline and fine. The Company will not participate in that scheme, especially in the light of recent rulings by the NLRB finding such union conduct unlawful.

Noble's letter did not address the other two categories of information sought by Garner's 20 February letter. On 18 March, Garner replied to Noble and, about this particular issue, wrote:

> [W]e simply asked for information that we are entitled to by law and your assertion that our request for this information is to enable us to identify those members who crossed the picket line makes as little sense as the rest of your letter. I assure you that we know each and every one of the members who crossed the picket line as well as when they crossed and when they finally resigned from the Union. We did not ask for and do not need the information for that purpose. If that is your sole concern, let me assure you that we would accept the information requested with everyone listed together so long as

[14] The constitution was not offered in evidence.

[15] The Board holds that striking employees are also to be counted for purposes of assessing the majority status of a union. Sanderson Farms, 271 NLRB 1477, 1481 (1984).

[16] The complaint does not separately allege the 6 March withdrawal of recognition to be violative of the Act.

[17] By its terms, the agreement will be subject to expiration on 5 September 1987.

> you give us their names, addresses, phone numbers and dates of hire.[18]

Garner and Local President Agnew testified, without contradiction, that the Union has not been provided with the information requested by Garner's 20 February letter.

The Board has held that the names and addresses of bargaining unit employees are presumptively relevant information that an employer must generally furnish to a union on request. Armstrong World Industries, 254 NLRB 1239, 1244–1245 (1981). It has further expressly held that unions are entitled to the names, addresses, and seniority dates of strike replacements as well as information relating to the reasons for terminating strikers and relating to their recall. Southern Florida Hotel Assn., 245 NLRB 561, 591–592, 608 (1979); Georgetown Associates, 235 NLRB 485 (1978); Florida Steel Corp., 242 NLRB 1333 (1979).

Presumably due to the foregoing authority, Respondent's brief makes but a single argument in this area: that "[s]ince the inception of the strike, the Charging Party threatened to impose excessive fines and reinstatement fees on these individuals who had crossed the picket line" and thus Respondent was excused from releasing information about the exmembers "to protect its employees from harassment by the Charging Party." It should first be noted that the only testimony in the record that even remotely has a tendency to show either that the Union actually did "threaten to impose excessive fines and reinstatement fees" on former members who worked during the strike, or that any member of Respondent's management had so heard, is found in Noble's 6 March letter, which, as set out above, alludes to a belief that this portion of the request was aimed at "identify[ing] those resigned members it has consistently threatened to discipline and fine."

Thus, Respondent has provided no evidence at all that it had a basis for a good-faith belief that the Union intended to "harass" the resigned members. Moreover, as the Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit stated in United Aircraft Corp. v. NLRB, 434 F.2d 1198, 1207 (2d Cir. 1970), "In determining whether a disclosure of addresses to a union violates the employees' right of privacy, the crucial factor appears to be the likelihood of a clear and present danger to the employees involved." The only "clear and present danger" that Respondent even speculates on is an attempt by the Union to fine resigned members who worked during the strike and, at the time in question, the ability of the Union to do so was very much in doubt. See Machinists Local 1414 (Neufeld Porsche-Audi), 270 NLRB 1330 (1984).

The Union's request for information about a separate list of the employees who returned to work seems, at first, a curiosity, but further conjecture affords legitimate explanation aside from Respondent's assertion that "a reasonable man would necessarily conclude that the Charging Party wanted a separate list of former members in order to carry out its previous threat to fine these individuals." It is just as plausible that the Union simply wanted current information about those employees with whom it had not had contact for several months and whom it still represented even though they might have resigned their union membership.

The only reservation I have here relates to the Union's request for the "dates they returned to work." As shown above, Garner subsequently wrote Noble, on 18 March, that he was not trying to identify those members who had crossed the picket line: "I assure you that we know each and every one of the members who crossed the picket line as well as when they cross and when they finally resigned from the Union. We did not ask and did not need the information for that purpose." Accepting that statement at face value, I must conclude that the Union had no need for the information sought in the 20 February letter regarding "the dates [the returning employees] returned to work." Otherwise, I conclude that Respondent violated Section 8(a)(5) of the Act by not timely furnishing the information requested by the Union in its 20 February letter.

IV. THE ALLEGED UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICE STRIKE

Respondent's unlawful refusal to commit its accepted proposal to writing unquestionably converted the economic strike into an unfair labor strike. On 22 February, the Union changed its picket signs from "On Strike Machinist's Union 1076" to "Employer Has Refused To Sign The Agreed Upon Contract." In doing so, the Union acted rather hastily, as both Garner and Davis testified that on Wednesday, 20 February, Davis did not say that Respondent was refusing to sign the agreement. Given that the contract needed some typing revision and the parties needed to arrange a date for signing, it would seem that a reasonable time for concluding that Respondent's refusal became effective was Monday, 25 February. I shall adopt that date as the one on which the conversion of the strike legally occurred.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. The Respondent is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

2. The Charging Party is a labor organization within the meaning of Section (5) of the Act.

3. All production and maintenance and inspection employees employed at Respondent's Cairo, Illinois plant, excluding office employees, professional employees, laboratory technicians, salaried chemists, superintendents, plant protection employees, executives, department foremen, and other supervisors with authority to hire, promote, discipline, or otherwise effect changes in the status of employees or effectively recommend such action, constitute a unit appropriate for the purposes of collective bargaining within the meaning of Section 9(b) of the Act.

4. The Charging Party is, and has been at all material times, the collective-bargaining representative of the employees in the aforesaid appropriate unit within the meaning of Section 9(a) of the Act.

5. By after 20 February 1985, refusing to acknowledge and reduce to writing the collective-bargaining agreement reached on 20 February 1985 by virtue of the Charging Party's acceptance of Respondent's outstanding contract offer on that date, Respondent violated Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act.

[18] While Garner did not here refer to "seniority dates," it would appear that "dates of hire" was meant to convey the same thought.

6. By about 25 February 1985, and thereafter, refusing to furnish to the Charging Party the names, addresses, telephone numbers, and seniority dates of all unit employees hired about 25 February 1985 and, thereafter, refusing to furnish to the Charging Party the following information: the names, addresses, telephone numbers, and seniority dates of (1) all unit employees hired on or after 4 September 1984, (2) all employees who returned to work during the strike that commenced on 5 September 1984, and (3) all employees not returned to work on 21 February 1985, as well as the reasons they were not returned to work, Respondent violated Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act.

7. The strike in which the employees of Respondent in the appropriate bargaining unit were engaged from 5 September 1984 was prolonged by Respondent's unfair labor practices effective about 25 February 1985, and was thereafter an unfair labor practice strike.

8. The foregoing unfair labor practices affect commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

9. Other than as concluded above, Respondent has not violated the Act as alleged in the complaint.

THE REMEDY

Having found that Respondent has engaged in certain unfair labor practices, I shall recommend that it be ordered to cease and desist therefrom and to take certain affirmative action found necessary to effectuate the purposes and policies of the Act.

Having found that Respondent violated Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act by failing and refusing to execute in writing an agreement reached with the Union, I shall recommend that Respondent be ordered to cease and desist therefrom and sign the agreement forthwith, if the Union so desires. H. J. Heinz Co. v. NLRB, 311 U.S. 514 (1941). It shall be recommended further that Respondent be required to give effect to the terms of the agreement retroactive to 20 February 1985, the date the agreement became effective, and that employees shall be made whole for losses they may have suffered by reason of the failure to honor and sign the agreement since that date.

Backpay shall be reduced by interim earnings and computed on a quarterly basis as prescribed in F. W. Woolworth Co., 90 NLRB 289 (1950), and all monetary redress, including backpay, shall bear interest as authorized by Florida Steel Corp., 230 NLRB 651 (1977). See generally Isis Plumbing Co., 138 NLRB 716 (1962).

Having also concluded that Respondent acted unlawfully by refusing to furnish to the Union certain information, I shall recommend that it be required to make such information available to the Union, if the Union still so desires, in as current a form as the Union requests (with the exception, as discussed above, of the times at which members and/or former members crossed the picket line; this exception does not, however, also allow Respondent to omit the other requested data about these individuals).

Although I have concluded above that the strike was converted into an unfair labor practices strike about 25 February 1985, the complaint and the record give no indication that any unfair labor practice strikers were thereafter denied reinstatement rights. I shall, however, include in the recommended Order a provision covering such a possibility, and any remedial relief required shall be based on the traditional remedy exemplified by Sanderson Farms, supra, 271 NLRB at 1482.

On the foregoing findings of fact and conclusions of law, I issue the following recommended[19]

ORDER

The Respondent, Burkart Foam, Inc., Cairo, Illinois, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall

1. Cease and desist from
